EDITORIAL

Beginning Volume Forty Eight

Because of the particular occasion we, your official church paper, have persuaded the editor to let us have a chat with our readers. (But we had to promise him to use the "editorial we," as he is accustomed to do.) The occasion is our completion of forty-seven years of history and the entering upon our forty-eighth year of service. Forty-seven years seem a long time, almost a half century. We do not feel old, however, and of course we are not, if we do not think we are. It is said of people that they are no older than they think they are, and we claim the same applies to church papers, too. For you must remember that church papers really do think, and they have life and growth. If those fifty years were now up, instead of only forty-seven, we would not think ourselves old, for fifty years is not considered a long time now-a-days. Neither men nor magazines (especially the church paper type) are old at that age. We have many church paper friends who have been in service very much longer than that, some of them more than a hundred years. And they seem more vigorous and active, more alive and powerful than when they entered upon their careers. The fact is, church papers do not become old and decrepit unless the denomination they serve becomes feeble and vanishing. They grow in strength, in influence and in breadth of vision with the years, as the church grows in numbers and power.

As our church has grown, we have grown with it. As it has added new homes, we have entered those homes with our messages of instruction, inspiration and Kingdom progress. As new congregations have been established, we have given our assistance by securing the cooperation of widely scattered churches, and by working for the encouragement and unity of the little mission nucleus. When foreign mission work was looked upon with diffidence and doubt, we gave our voice of conviction and assurance. When the importance of education was little understood, we carried the need and urgency of it to every home. Gradually in all these and in many other ways, our people grew in vision, in sympathy, in power and activity, and as they grew, we also grew in effectiveness of voice and in breadth of influence. In the last decade especially has our growth been rapid and substantial, following closely the growth of the church. Neither the church nor the church paper are weak and vanishing institutions, but are vigorous and progressive, and so we have come to this period in our history with satisfaction and hope. We know our influence is much restricted in comparison with many other church papers, because our church is much smaller than many others. But we are not discouraged by either of these facts, for we started from a much smaller beginning. We started as the mustard seed of Holy Writ, and our growth has been as encouraging as the teaching of that sacred parable would lead one to expect. So we are not discouraged, but face the new year with hope and confidence. We believe in the loyalty of our many friends, and we are determined to make our weekly visits so much worth while that we shall surely receive their continued cooperation.

During our history we have been in charge of some noble and gifted men as editors. With all of them we got along quite well, but if any one man deserves mention above all others, it is Dr. A. D. Gnagey, whose worthy talents directed our course for many years. We would not dare mention any more, else we should feel obliged to name them all, and that we could not do without referring to our files. As for the present editor,—well, we get along quite peaceably, at least, we are on good terms with him now. He is inclined to be—rather, well, somewhat—particular,—but we won't say much about that here, for it might not get past his censorship. We will say, however, that we like his idea of making the official organ representative of the thought of the brotherhood by enlisting as writers the leadership, both lay and ministerial, from every section. He also aims to make our pages ring true to the historic ideals and teachings of our church, and also loyal to every denominational interest and movement. Such a policy is quite satisfactory to us as we have always been accustomed to being a servant to the church in all the various ways in which a publication might be called upon to serve. And we want to continue to serve as long as the church lives and has a mission to perform, and we hope that will be to the end of time.

A Fiftieth Anniversary

We started out by saying that we lacked only three years of completing a half century mark, and we think it would be fitting and it might possibly open the way for larger service, to have a celebration of the occasion. We made the suggestion to the editor, and he was taken with the idea and has promised to present the matter to the Publication Board when that august body meets during General Conference next August. If the idea meets with their approval, and we think it will, because they are all wise and appreciative men, we will invite every one of our readers to join us in the celebration. We hope to have a joyful time dealing with reminiscences and prophecies. And by the way, when we were talking this matter over with the editor, he suggested that if you would surprise our business manager with an unusually large offering at the coming PUBLICATION DAY, the last Sunday in this month, it might be that he would be encouraged to press for a complete liquidation of the debt on our publishing house by the time we celebrate our fiftieth anniversary. That would be a great feature of the celebration, if it could be done. It would greatly relieve the financial strain on the business manager and enable him to purchase still more equipment which he would like very much to have, and it would rejoice the heart of our editor because he could then make a better paper, and also help to build up some much needed permanent literature. And we dare say our Sunday school editor would find such added financial strength greatly to his advantage. Anyway, The Evangelist thinks that the anniversary idea is a good one and is anxious to have such a celebration with its many friends. What do you think? And in order to give you a chance to think, we will close right here and get busy on our work for volume forty-eight.

Our New Special Features

We promised our readers some special features that are calculated greatly to increase the interest in our pages, and with this first number of this new volume we are beginning two of them. First is the "leading article" which is regularly to begin on page four and to be accompanied with the writer's picture. And each week we hope to have a special message from a different person so far as possible for that space, a message to which he has given much thought and which he considers important for the brotherhood to have. President Jacobs supplies the first of the series, which is well worthy the careful reading of every subscriber. Also, this week we begin a series of ten articles on the Holy Land by Brother Herbert H. Tay, who spent several months in that land and has kindly consented to share his observations and study with our readers. Don't let a single installment slip by unread. Other new features are soon to begin. And we believe not only the special features will be worthy of your appreciation, but the regular, tried, and valued departments—the sermons, devotionals and other articles of general interest, and clear on through to the end of the paper. All in all we believe this will be the most interesting and profitable year of our conduct of the Evangelist. It will surely be so if you are prepared to appreciate the splendid articles that shall come from the representative men and women of the brotherhood as much as we shall enjoy sending them to you. If you like any particular feature of the paper, or if you should have any criticism to offer, we shall be glad to hear from you, for it will help us in our planning for the greatest efficiency and service of our beloved Evangelist.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Pastors needing material for missionary sermons may secure same by writing to the Foreign Board's headquarters at Long Beach. See notice and address under "Announcements."

Brother Egydio Romanenghi, student in Ashland College, gives us another installment of interesting facts concerning the native workers connected with our South American mission.

A letter comes from Reliance, Virginia, where a few Brethren are endeavoring to hold the fort in spite of a steadily decreasing number. They deserve credit for their courage. Brother S. P. Fogle has been ministering to these people for a goodly number of years.

The church has suffered the loss of a valued member of the Brethren Home Board in the person of Brother Jesse A. Garver, of Dayton, Ohio, who passed away December 29th, 1925, and in behalf of whom the officers of the Board offer resolutions of sympathy.

We learn from the correspondent of the Bethel church near Berne, Indiana, that a Gospel Team from Ashland College conducted a successful evangelistic campaign there during the Thanksgiving vacation, which resulted in eight confessions, and the welding of the friendship of the Berne church more closely to the college.

In a communication from Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor at Bryan, Ohio, we learn that they had a most excellent Christmas service and all services largely attended. He also states "there seems to be a fine spirit in our church and a willingness to work." That is the condition that will ensure success.

Brother Porte's "Tract Corner," always interesting, contains one of the most practical suggestions he has made. Read it and see for yourself. How easy it would be to carry your copy of THE EVANGELIST to some one who has none, after you have read it, or some other printed message of the Truth!

Dr. Teeter in his Business Manager's Corner calls attention to the approaching Publication Day, the fourth Sunday in January, when an offering should be taken in every church to help pay the debt for the purchase of the Publishing House. Last year you did splendidly—some of you—and possibly this year you can do still better. Let every church lift its share and the load will be light.

Brother Charles W. Mayes, pastor at Lanark, Illinois, reports twenty additions to the church as a result of the evangelistic campaign recently conducted by Dr. Charles A. Bame of Ashland. Co-operation on the part of the local schools was said to have been excellent. Brother Mayes is now engaged in a similar campaign at Springfield Center, Ohio, where Brother Leslie Lindower is the aggressive young pastor.

Brother Frank G. Coleman reports his change in pastorates from Sunnyside, Washington, to Flora, Indiana. His four years of labor with the Sunnyside congregation proved both fruitful and pleasant and he left with a fine spirit existing between pastor and people. The work at Flora is responding to his leadership in a splendid way and the various departments are gaining strength, particularly the Sunday school. A White Gift offering of one hundred dollars is reported. Brother Coleman is conducting Sunday afternoon services at the Brethren Home, located at Flora.

Brother I. D. Bowman reports his evangelistic campaign at Gatewood, West Virginia, where twenty-seven confessions were received and twenty-two received into the church. It was a splendid success gained in spite of hindering circumstances. A pastor was secured for this church in the person of Brother J. S. Bowman, a brother to the evangelist. Brother I. D. Bowman states that he is open to further calls for evangelistic and Bible conference work.

Mrs. Hester A. Reisinger calls our attention to, and wishes correction made of, three confusing typographical errors, which occurred in her article of December 23rd issue. Under division II, section 2, in fourth line, it should read, "Back to your divinely appointed work" instead of "wish." In section 3 below, the sixth line, it should say, "Take them with you to the house of God," instead of "To be there with you, etc." And under 6, further down, first line, it should be, "One would gather from the hortatory portion of most sermons," instead of "the short story portion of mock sermons." We are very sorry for the errors and hope our readers will take time to make corrections in their papers and get the correct reading of this splendid article.

Recently we published the pastor's report of the dedicatory and evangelistic services at Fremont, Ohio, and this week we have an article by the officiating minister and evangelist. Brother Starn calls it a victory, and such it truly was, both from the standpoint of the dedication and the revival, and he proved himself very capable of both tasks, as we had occasion to observe on a recent visit to Fremont. We inadvertently omitted comment on Brother Henderson's report last week, and we wish now to commend him and his good people for the victory which they have achieved. The spirit of unity and of willingness to give and work was everywhere manifest during these months of building, and the pastor was a worthy leader in their manual labor as well as spiritual. They have a very well equipped and satisfactory little plant, a wonderful improvement over the old and increasing their chances of success many fold. May God keep them united and active, and lead them into larger things.

We have reports in this issue from both the pastor and evangelist, concerning the campaign recently held at Des Moines, Iowa, where forty-four were added to the church. The personnel of the converts is also significant, as noted by the reports. Brother B. T. Burnworth, the evangelist, proved himself a man used of God, and Brother W. E. Kemp, the energetic pastor, proved a worthy co-laborer. This mission point is most promising, and under the continued blessing of God and the faithful shepherding of the pastor, it is destined in due time to become a self-supporting church. But let not the brotherhood, as Brother Burnworth suggests, expect this child of the church to be thrown entirely upon its own resources too soon. Our mission points generally should be urged to become self-supporting churches at the very earliest possible moment consistent with their best good, but young churches should not be made to bear too heavy burdens suddenly. It is wiser that they should become accustomed to the strain gradually. The brotherhood should understand this, and should give with a generosity that will make possible the wise and proper support of our established mission points, the while new points are being opened up.

When the "Office Secretary" of the Foreign Board asks, "Have we done our utmost to rescue these perishing for whom Christ died?" she asks a question that probably gets under the conscience of most of us. For how many—if indeed there are any—have really done their utmost to advance the cause of Christ in the foreign lands or the home? Indeed, how many there are who do next to nothing! And how many who give only of the "left-overs" after every personal desire has been supplied! If something should overtake us that would cause us all to do all we can for the advancement of God's kingdom, what we are now doing for missions at home and abroad, for education, for the printing of religious literature, for the care of the poor and the infirm, and for the discharge of every obligation of the church, would look like child's play in comparison. The bare fact is, we have not begun to touch the limit of what we are able to do, and we shall never come any ways near doing this until after we have first brought to the Lord that which we owe him by the right of his ownership and our stewardship. It will not only help missions, but every other interest of the church, if pastors and other religious teachers shall give more attention to the teaching of the requirements of faithful stewardship.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Teacher is Greater than the Temple

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

The teacher is an architect, not a bungler. He is a builder, not a butcher.

The title of this article is suggested by the incident of Jesus when he said, "Behold, a greater than the temple is here." He was standing before a structure which symbolized to the Jew his whole national life,—government, religion, and education. There it stood, historic, magnificent. But there also stood the Teacher, clothed in frail flesh. He gave utterance to words, which had, of course, no ontological but only a phenomenal existence. But the temple, that was material, gold, stone, and cedar. Yet the temple is gone while the words of the Teacher have been ringing down the centuries ever since.

The personality of the teacher is all important. It is so in the public schools, the Sunday schools, and the colleges. It is even more true in the pulpit. I can illustrate this by suggesting some of the defects in what have been so often called, "agencies other than the schools, which educate." These agencies all play an important role but they lack the touch of the living teacher. I can show this best by mentioning two such agencies, viz., the press and the theater.

Two errors may result. First, there may go undetected, error of fact. It is commonly said that "practice makes perfect", but it comes far from that. It only makes automatic, and error conned over and over may easily become a part of one's mental equipment. The able and earnest teacher who is present with the learner may correct that, at least, that is a part of his business.

But, in the second place, there is the danger of the learner forming a wholly wrong philosophy of life. The same truth may mean several things to different people. There is an outstanding example of that in the case of a certain church dignitary who recently was brought to trial for heresy. He went over to Marxism, outdoing Karl Marx himself. This minister frankly admitted that he had never read the writings of Marx until he was well past fifty years of age and was wholly captivated by them. It is a safe venture that if this man had come into possession of this matter through the personality of an able and consecrated teacher, he would not have gone over to a philosophy, which now is regarded by thinking men, as inadequate to deal with the facts of which it treats.

This latter point, namely, the forming of right lines of thinking, is by far the most important function of the teacher and preacher. Take for example the indiscriminate press, which floods our desk with certain kinds of pamphlets. Every cause is represented.—labor, capital, socialism, Russellism, evolution, anti-evolution, railroad disputes, athletics, peace propaganda, preparedness, war, defenses of the Bible, attacks on the Bible, Seventh day Adventists' doctrines, breakfast foods, criticism of the government which borders dangerously near on treason, etc.

I suppose all this is within the limits of civil liberty, but certainly one must take care how one reads. Such matter falling into the hands of the uninitiated and unfortified, may prove to be exceedingly dangerous. Feeding upon such material, the common man often comes to the most astonishing conclusions and develops what I once heard the late Professor James, call "an individualistic philosophy,"—queer, biased, and oftentimes wrong.

If the indiscriminate press, unguided by a teacher, proves untrustworthy as an educative agency, we can no more trust the theater or the moving picture under like conditions. We hear a great deal these days about the "educational value" of the moving picture, but this is greatly overdone. The facts are, that the moving picture is almost purely for entertainment and not for instruction at all. Some plays have an educational value and some have a legitimate entertainment value, but the real instructional element, is an ava raris.

Take a glance over the list of both the producers and the actors and see about how much attention they are paying to "education." The plays themselves are all too often erotic, exaggerated, impossible and not seldom coarse. The sweating, swashbuckling hero is a hero because he can take a running jump and land on the back of a small horse. The heroine all too frequently is a heroine because of an unsavory matrimonial past. The play meanwhile is exploited in the most outrageous English as teaching a "great moral lesson", while the facts are that it teaches nothing of the kind, nor is that what it was produced for.

Education must be something finer than this. One can not be called educated simply because he has seen certain pictures, because he has traveled a certain number of miles or because he has read certain books. It has been estimated that no man can possibly hold the contents of more than 400 books in his mind, read as he will. It is not the contents of the books nor the travel, nor the experience alone, but rather deeper and subtler elements which educate. And to these elements the teacher makes the most dominant contribution.

It is said that Plato held his head to one side. His pupils held their heads to one side for they wanted to be like their teacher. I dare say that in college, at least, the teacher has a larger part in forming attitudes of mind than all the books the student may read in his four years' course.

If this is at all true, what kind of a man ought a teacher to be, especially in a Christian denominational college? The pay is poor but the opportunity for service is great. In such a school, the integrity of the Bible ought to be above reproach and the ideals of Christianity ought to be secure. Such a college ought to stand as a challenge and oftentimes as a rebuke to certain colleges in which these things are overlooked. The one clear aim, that of developing Christian character as it results when founded upon a scrupulous regard for the authority of the Bible, must never be lost sight of but should grow clearer with the years. I am confident that this result may come through and only through the personality of the teacher. And what has been said about the college teacher can as well be said with certain modifications, about the Sunday school teacher.

Jesus, apart from his divine authority, must have impressed his own personality upon his followers. Men worshipped him, children clung to him, and even Pilate was held by the magnetism and charm of his presence. He cleansed the temple by his presence, evil spirits fled before him, and the very thief upon the cross was converted to him.

You say this temple is wonderful? That it represents the dwelling place of God on earth, where men may meet him and know him? Behold a greater than the temple is here,—Jesus the Christ, the Chosen of God. And so it is today. Jesus is greater than the church which represents him, more righteous and perfect than we can imagine him, and more zealous for the complete salvation of men than we are ourselves.

Thou Galilean Teacher, wilt thou our teacher be,
Until we learn thy lessons all, Teacher of Galilee.
Ashland, Ohio.

Jesus was the Great Teacher. Christianity is teaching religion. We must keep it so. Teaching is the basis upon which preaching must be done. New ideas must be properly placed if the life is to be of most value. Preaching without teaching leads to degeneracy of religion. No group needs the teaching ministry more than we do. It may not be the most spectacular ministry or the most popular, but it will do the Lord's cause the most good in the long run.—Christian Recorder.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

By Herbert H. Tay

(Article No. 1)

Palestine at a Glance

Tourists to Palestine are invariably impressed with the diminutive size of the land. Sitting in his room in this country, and reading the accounts in the Scriptures of the events which happened in Bible lands, one forms the impression that Palestine must be a large country. So many are the incidents, so numerous are the place names, that it must require a large country to contain them all. Jerusalem, Bethlehem, Hebron, Shechem, Nazareth, Capernaum—these names bring back a host of memories. Surely no land on earth has played such a remarkable part in the history of the world, as this. Yet the land of Palestine is no larger than many of the counties in some of our western states. From Dan to Beersheba, and from Jordan to the sea, the area of Palestine is about equal to that of the little state of Massachusetts. It is literally a country that can be seen at a glance.

We had the opportunity to see Palestine at a glance, while in Shechem, where we had gone to attend the Samaritan Passover. The city of Shechem, or Nablus, as it is now called by the Arabs, lies in a narrow valley between the twin mountains of Ebal and Gerazim. Gerazim is the more famous, but Ebal is higher, and affords an excellent view of the entire land of Palestine. We shall climb to the top of this mountain, which is slightly over three thousand feet above the sea, and see Palestine "at a glance."

The ascent from Nablus, the Biblical Shechem, is steep and rocky, and on a hot day is anything but comfortable. Yet the prospect from this lofty eminence is well worth the effort spent in getting there. From this spot, one can see the entire land of Palestine.

Looking off to the south over the mass of Gerazim rising in the immediate foreground, we see the rugged, treeless crests of the Judean hills. Indeed, the entire intervening country, as far as Jerusalem, presents the appearance of the tossing waves of a troubled sea. In the foreground the crests of the waves are light gray in color, caused by the bleaching rocks upon the barren hillsides. But distance lends enchantment, and the somber landscape fades out into a beautiful delicate blue, and is finally obscured entirely by the purple haze of the distance. Though the Holy City itself is not visible from this point, yet one can faintly discern far to the south, a cluster of buildings upon a barren hilltop. That is En Nebi Samwil, ancient Mizpah, and it is but five miles from Jerusalem. The hills are bare and rocky, and only here and there do we see a tree, the last survivor of the ravages of time, the elements, and the destructive hand of man.

Turning slightly to the west, the hills gradually fade out into the level plain. It appears to be level from the eminence upon which we are standing, but in reality it is gently undulating. Now the bare gray of the hills, gives way to the delightful green of the fields of growing grain. This quiet pastoral scene stretches away to the south, as far as the eye can reach. From Gaza, far to the south, it continues northward to a point slightly north and west of us, where the Plain of Sharon is abruptly intercepted by the long ridge of Carmel. Though the fields are rich with ripening grain, yet they too are almost devoid of trees, save where some Jewish colony of picturesque tile-roofed houses is surrounded by its grove of fast growing eucalyptus,

Beyond the plain lies the sea. Its blue waters are sparkling beneath the warm sun. Upon the seacoast to the southwest lies Jaffa, the principal freight port of Palestine. From Jaffa northward to Carmel, along the seashore stretches a strip of glistening white sand from a mile to three miles wide. Across this strip of sand, and almost directly west of us, lie the ruins of Caesarea, the ancient capital of Palestine in the times of the Romans. A little farther to the north are the ruins of Athlit, perhaps the most extensive ruins of Crusader times to be found in the land. Then still farther north, the headland of Carmel juts abruptly out into the sea, and our view of the coast further to the north is obscured from this point.

The long ridge of Carmel is in striking contrast to the surrounding country. While the country round about is almost entirely devoid of trees, Carmel is a tangled mass of shrubs and underbrush. The oak, or terebinth, and the carob predominate, though trees of many varieties grow there in profusion. In the winter and spring, and long after the flowers of other parts of Palestine have disappeared in the summer, the flowers are beautifying this mountain with their presence, and filling the air with their fragrance. Carmel is well named, "The Garden."

At the east end of the mountain, a narrow pass connects the Plain of Sharon with the Plain of Esdraelon. It is called the pass of Megiddo. It is through this pass that the traffic of the centuries and even of the millenniums has streamed back and forth from the nations of the north and east, to the great nation of Egypt on the south.

The Plain of Esdraelon stretches from the Mediterranean eastward, and with the Vale of Jezreel, continues to the Jordan. It breaks the backbone of hills known as the Central Range, which traverses the entire length of Palestine except for this one place. The plain itself is quite fertile, and it too is covered with fields of green grain, gently waving in the breeze.

Beyond the plain, and almost directly north of us, rise the hills of Galilee. Upon the first ridge of these hills, but partially obscured from view by the fact that it lies in a small basin in the hills, we can distinguish the village of Nazareth. The villages of Galilee beyond are obscured by the rugged hills. The Sea of Galilee itself is out of sight. But towering majestically above all surrounding hills, and crowned with eternal snows, stands Mt. Hermon, that silent guardian of the north.

Stretching away to the south and east of Hermon, lies the great plain of the Hauran, the granary of Syria, and also of a great part of Palestine. South of the Hauran, the mountains of Gilead, Ammon, and Moab rise abruptly from the Jordan valley, standing like a grim, impenetrable wall in the purple haze. Between us and them lies the deep trench of the Jordan. We cannot see the floor of the valley, but so abruptly does it drop away, that we feel as if we were standing upon the verge of a mighty cleft that sank into the very bowels of the earth. The impression which this mighty cleft makes upon one, cannot adequately be described. Far to the southeast, though still obscured in the bottom of its sub-terranean chamber, lies the Dead Sea. When viewed from the Mount of Olives on the east of Jerusalem it seems that the Almighty Artist could not have painted it a more beautiful blue, if he had dipped his brush in the azure skies of the cloudless heavens above, yet it lies there below us, bearing mute testimony to the certain fate of one who always receives, but never gives—dead!

We have seen the Holy Land. And again the question arises, "How can such a small land, have exerted such a great influence over the affairs of men throughout all generations, and in every clime?" I shall answer by asking you to look down below us, to where the narrow valley in which the city of Shechem is situated, opens out into a small plain. There, almost at our feet, lies the "parcel of ground that Jacob gave to his son Joseph. Now Jacobs' well is there." Upon that well there sat one day, One who said, "He that drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but he that drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." The experiences of men throughout nineteen centuries are testimony to the truth of those words. These experiences have proven to men that he who spoke those words was the Son of God. Palestine is the Holy Land, because it was pressed by the footprints of the Son of God. That is reason sufficient for the influence of this small land over the lives of men for centuries gone by.

Brethrenism and Modern Religious Demands

By Willis E. Ronk

(Address delivered at Ohio Conference, Smithville, and voted by that assembly to be published in THE EVANGELIST. Published in parts. Part I.)

In the very beginning, it must be evident to all, that the speaker has undertaken no small task in attempting to speak on this subject. If the subject were of his own choosing, he would consider the attempt presumptuous, to say the least. The magnitude of the task may be seen, when we remember that the subject presents a three-fold task. First, Brethrenism is to be defined or at least a definition must be given; in the second place, Modern Religious Demands must not only be known, but also stated; and finally, a relation must be shown between these. The speaker does not expect his hearers to agree with all that he shall say; nor if they do agree, to the wisdom of saying what he shall say; nor does he expect to entirely exhaust the subject. If our minds shall be stirred into action, the task will be well done. The speaker has found no beaten path before him; but has been trying to think his own way through on this subject. He has arrived at some very definite conclusions.

Brethrenism

As I begin I am well aware that the very term "Brethrenism", is very distasteful to a great many of our people. In fact, I myself have always disliked the term and have very carefully avoided its use. In my mind "ism" has always been associated with some "sect" having a false doctrine or practice. The word has been almost synonymous with evil and we have thought of it as a thing to be abhorred. When however, we leave all preconceived ideas and turn to the dictionary, we will find that ism is a good English word. And not only so, but in everyday usage the word is used in a good sense. There is no reason why we should permit any false sect to have full claim to it. An ism is a doctrine or system of—, therefore, I feel justified in defining Brethrenism as the doctrine or system of The Brethren. I have been unable to find any other word or term that will convey this idea. We usually speak of the Brethren Plea, but the Plea is only a part of what is comprehended in Brethrenism. Therefore we will use the word with this definition in mind.

If I might stop with the above definition of Brethrenism, my task would indeed be an easy one. But the comparison implied in the subject demands that we go farther into the matter. For after all, what is that system or doctrine of Brethren? Where shall I find an answer? One might well hesitate before going farther. Our traditional policy SEEMS to have been "not to define" our position. To all questions, we have one answer, "The Bible, The Whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." And many times we have placed the emphasis on "Nothing But the Bible." I am not so sure, but maybe one of the chief reasons for our slow growth, is our refusal to be definite. Whether we will or not, we must define our position. We are defining it every day. We have been doing so from the very beginning. Of late years we have been doing most of our defining individually and privately; nevertheless we have been defining our positions. I am presuming to give a public definition. For the sake of convenience, I will consider Brethrenism as made up of two parts only, doctrine, and with the doctrine I consider the ordinances which have their roots in doctrine; and church government.

Let us notice first our government. We are congregational in government, and we have carried the idea, in some instances, to extremes never originally intended. There has been a growing disposition to "teach what I please" regardless of what others do or say. Speaking of the Convention of 1887 at Ashland, Holsinger says in his History (page 545), "At the convention it was defined that the Apostolic idea of congregational government, relates alone to incidental affairs of the congregation, and not to doctrinal practices, which must be universal." From this statement (and there are others which I might quote) it will be clear that a limit was intended to congregational authority. It was only natural that a people, who had just witnessed such an abuse of central authority, would swing to the other extreme; and yet they in their day did not go as far as we in our day have gone. May I repeat what I have said elsewhere. "In my humble opinion, we have swung too far and it is time to turn in the other direction. We are too loosely organized and after a while we will begin to realize it." Of course, we Brethren, and especially we preachers, are exceedingly jealous of our liberties. And yet the greatest amount of restlessness and dissatisfaction among our people is due not to doctrinal controversies; but to a growing conviction that through our policies or lack of policies, we are predestined to either remain at our present size or to disappear as a Brotherhood. It is useless to shut our eyes to facts. Sufficient evidence, if any were needed, is the assigning of certain subjects for Conference discussion as, "Are We a Disappearing Brotherhood"? "Is the Brethren Church Growing as She Ought"? or the one under discussion now, "Brethrenism and Modern Religious Demands." Further evidence might be found in the fact that we are not building new churches as fast as the old ones die. Death in many cases is due to utter discouragement. That some of our ministers are utterly discouraged is easily seen in the drooping shoulders, turned down mouth and hopeless eyes,—to say nothing of a continual exodus from the church. The morale is by far too low. I have already hinted that this discouragement is found not only among ministers but laymen as well. It frequently happens that Brethren people live in a town where there is a Brethren church and yet attend the services of other churches, teach in Sunday schools and wholly neglect their own. What is the reason? Either they are ashamed of their own church, or completely pessimistic as to the outcome. One may also at times find some of the best people we have, or have had, completely inactive so far as churches are concerned, because they have given up hope, and yet are too much Brethren to change churches, or to hurt their own by attendance elsewhere.

The cause of this discouragement many times may be traced directly to our lack of Church Government. This lack may be seen in the fact that it is many times next to impossible to administer church discipline. In many cases the minister who undertakes this in his own congregation is simply cutting off his own head, so far as progress in the Brethren Church is concerned. Although, he may succeed locally, it is possible for one or two persons who are disgruntled, to spread the most unfavorable reports over the brotherhood—to the discredit of the minister. And to our shame we roll the scandal under our tongues as a sweet morsel. "So and so" is having trouble."

The weakness of our government is also seen in the placing of pastors. Of course, we have government by congregations; and each local unit has a right to choose their own pastor. The truth of the matter is that most of our Churches, especially the medium sizes and smaller ones know no more about our preachers, their character and abilities than they do of Hammurabi. And truth to tell, we preachers know very little about one another. All we know is what we hear, or what we see at our conferences; and many of our men will appear far better among their own people, than when on exhibition. Most of our pastors are placed by recommendation, and how utterly unprepared most of us are to give true recommendations. It has been no unusual thing for a church to get two or three men in a line, who were misfits, to put it mildly. The results are that the preacher kills the church, or the church kills the preacher. If we had some way to put the right man in the right place at the right time, then many of these misfits would be avoided!

We are living in an age of great industrial development and the business world has found it necessary to have organization. If the average large business concern would attempt to run their business as the Brethren Church runs hers, they would last about two weeks. And believe me or not, it is mighty hard to explain our methods of doing things to men who are accustomed to some system. Rules or laws are absolutely essential to good business, or good government. Have I said too much on this subject? Well, let me repeat,—we are too loosely organized, for the age in which we live.

"Mister, Mister, Come and Help Us"

By Rev. Arthur F. Ragatz, D.D. Secretary Western Agency of American Bible Society

"Mister, Mister!" It was a shrill little voice that called. And many faces on the crowded walk turned to see a little girl, hatless and out of breath, trying to stop a man nearly half a block away.

The man also heard; and when he turned around, one could see by the twinkle in his eye and his pleasant smile, that he did not resent being called "Mister, Mister," by a little urchin. In fact, one would think he really enjoyed the experience; for he set down his heavy suitcases and smiles a welcome to the little girl who came running to him.

Those who were near and expected to hear the little girl tell some startling news were disappointed; for all she said was, "Mister, I saw you go by that store over there, and Ma wants you to come to our home tonight and bring your Bibles." Carefully he took her address and promised to be there at the appointed time.

For several weeks this colporteur had been working in one of the most needy and neglected quarters of the city. His lodgings were at the very edge of the slums. Every time he went to or from his room, he had to make his way through crowds of children.

He was so different from most men who walked those streets, that the children soon recognized in him a friend. Several times he had stopped and watched them at their play, and had helped them even, and once at least had been an arbiter in what threatened to be a free-for-all battle.

Nearly ten days before this incident, he had talked with this little girl, and on parting had given her a penny Gospel. Several days later he asked her if she had read the little book. The look on her face answered the question before her words were spoken. "Yes," she said; "I've read it to all the neighbors—but they can't understand." Little by little he got her story. Her family and neighbors were Italian. The Gospel was English. She had learned enough in school to be able to read; but they did not know enough of the English to be able to understand what it all meant. Out of his stock he took another Gospel,—this one in Italian,—and giving it to her asked that she take it home to her mother. She took it home. Her mother could read and understand. Soon the neighbors heard about "the little Gospel in Italian," and for days, the girl's home had neighbors in it all the while, reading to one another, talking over what they had read, and reading more.

There were many things they could not fully comprehend. Promises that their hearts yearned to believe, but ever and anon the question, "Is this truly God's Word," and "Are these promises for us? Can we have these blessings without a priest or without going to mass, or without paying for them?"

Finally, they decided that some one should be called in to make plain to them—but who? The little girl, hearing this, presently told them if she were looking for some one to help her, she would go to that kind man who had given her the little books. They all agreed that she was right, and sent her out to find the man, if possible, and invite him to call at their home.

Thus the invitation was given. The man was found and at the appointed time arrived. The humble home was filled with expectant neighbors. Some were there to hear the good news; others to take issue with this man, who dared to do things so differently than they had been taught to believe they should be done.

On the whole it was an attentive group, and he read the Word and expounded it, while the Holy Spirit bore witness to the truth. Many questions were asked and answered until late into the night. When he left, invitations to return were pressing, and, for many nights following, he met various groups in different homes.

Bibles were freely bought, many hearts were refreshed, and the whole life of some was changed. Today more than a score of these people are members of a Protestant mission. The colporteur has long since gone to other fields; but the heaven is still at work. The cottage meetings for the study of God's Word have become an established arrangement. From the giving of a penny Gospel a work of righteousness has begun which promises the ultimate regeneration of this entire foreign colony.

It is easy to believe that all the harvests of wheat came from one seed. That seed spread its multiplying harvests from acre to acre, until now the world is full of the music of the sickle. In this normal way, our Lord wants to spread the harvests of his truth—from man to man, from family to family, from neighborhood to neighborhood. You are impatient with that process? You want the city changed from top to bottom as by the waving of a wand? Whatever you desire, whatever your dream, the city will be changed when each man is changed and each woman is changed. When the individuals are regenerated, the city will be regenerated. Salvation is not social first and then personal, but personal first and then social, as the units of saved individuals multiply and their influence becomes controlling. If society is to be redeemed, it will be done by the addition of redeemed men and women, one by one, man by man. This is our Lord's way and it is the only way.—"The Harvest Is White."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"Buried Alive"

By A. E. Thomas

TEXT: I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God who loved me, and gave himself for me.--Galatians 2:20

I am crucified with Christ and it is no longer I that live but Christ liveth in me, and the life I now live in the flesh, I live in the faith of the Son of God who loved me and gave himself up for me. Note the word up. That means that his sacrificial death was voluntary. He gave himself up and if you do not believe that you're lost.

Christianity is not an experiment, it is an experience. Experiment is something that you are trying to find out whether it is right; experience is knowledge gained by trial. Christianity is Christ in the center. He is the center of our faith. Now is Christ the center. He is the center of our faith. Now Paul says I have had an experience. It was Victor Hugo who said there are two great roads that will go down in history. The Road to Calvary and the Road to Damascus.

What is salvation? Two-thirds of the church could not give a definition of salvation if their salvation depended upon it. Paul says, I have been crucified with Christ; first of all, there must be a death. Christ died for me. In the Bible there are two creations, the natural life and the spiritual life. You have the death of the sinner and then you have the death of Christ and then the resurrection. You cannot be resurrected until you die. You have to die before you can have a resurrection.

In Ephesians 4:22—That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts. It tells to put a thing off and you have to put off the old man and you can't put the old man off unless you kill him. Christ does it. Where have you put him? Bury him.

Colossians 2:20—Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances.

You can never have the resurrection until you die.

Romans 6:1—What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?

Now we have died to sin. That means that sin is not the matter in the life any more. You have died to sin, "Now I am crucified with Christ." Salvation is a new life. There must be a death first and you cannot have a new life until there is a death. Christ saves us through his atoning blood. It begins at the Old Rugged Cross. You can be crucified yet not saved. It is Christ's death that saves. We must die to the old life. The old man must die. Now here he is. He is corrupt. That man is contented the minute he sees that Christ did not die to condemn; he came to save that which was lost. Now then, I am crucified with Christ and I die and having been buried with Christ, I am risen with Christ. The man who lives in Christ lives above the world, dead with Christ, buried with Christ and risen with Christ. God looks; God hears; God sees, not you but Christ in you. I am crucified in Christ, nevertheless I live. I live and I am still subject to the things of this world but the life I now live in the flesh, I do not live, but Christ liveth in me.

All through the Ephesian letters, he says, I am what I am because Christ is in me. We have redemption through his blood. He has bought us with a price. I belong to Jesus Christ because he paid the price and now I lose myself in him, and when I lose myself I stand in the name of Jesus.

Salvation is wonderful and adequate to save this old world from sin. Now look, I am crucified in Christ; the life I now live I live because Christ now liveth in me, in whom we have redemption through his blood. Redemption through the precious blood of God Almighty himself. This is the price of redemption. Now see, in Christ Jesus in whom we have redemption in his blood, the forgiveness of sin. When Christ lives in you, you are sealed with the power of God. Sealed by his power. Christ living in me, means that I am joint heir with him. We have a 50-50 proposition with Jesus Christ. It isn't a fire insurance to keep people out of Hell. I no longer live but Christ liveth in me. How do we know Christ live in me? We get it through the redemption price which he paid. The just shall live by faith. But what is faith? Faith is taking a leap in the dark, positively sure.

Our Worship Program

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

LOVING AND GIVING—Matt. 5:43-6:4.

An old Spanish writer, once said, "To return evil for good is devilish; to return good for good is human; to return good for evil is godlike." It is godlike because it is so hard to do. And it is about as difficult to give without advertising it. But the doing of such hard things is what makes the Christian different.

TUESDAY

PRAYER AND FASTING—Matt. 6:5-18.

A "Stage Prayer" by a Christian is no more effective than the prayer-wheel of the Indian devotee, and to make a show of fasting is to "add insult to injury." Outward forms are not to be decried, but the more they are employed, the more deeply and genuinely must devotion be felt or they are a positive injury.

WEDNESDAY

SINGLENES OF AIM AND SERVICE—Matt. 6:19-24.

He whose heart is motivated by a single purpose and whose eye is envisioned by single aim will not be wasting time and energy in a fruitless effort to serve two masters, but will be decisive and whole-hearted in the service of the object of his love.

THURSDAY

ANXIETY FORBIDDEN—Matt. 6:25-34.

It is not a reckless neglect of the future that is here enjoined, but a wholesome trust in the providence of God, and an avoidance of worry and fretting, which accomplishes nothing, but rather weakens one's chance and reflects upon God.

FRIDAY

JUDGING OTHERS—Matt. 7:1-6.

The folly and injustice of judging others rests in the meagerness of our knowledge of them. It is impossible to judge the whole life of even our most intimate friends by the little bit we know of them, and to attempt it is to cast judgment upon ourselves.

SATURDAY

PERSEVERING PRAYER AND RIGHT CONDUCT—Matt. 7:7-14.

The Christian has every encouragement to determined, persevering prayer, but he who prays thus will find his answer in no small degree in his ability to love and treat his neighbor as himself, and to walk the straight and narrow way.

SUNDAY

THE TEST OF FRUIT—Matt. 7:15-23.

"This is the infallible test," says Peloubet. In the Parliament of Religion the theories of religion were presented and seemed so beautiful, but the real test of their value would have been in bringing together the people made by religion, the practical results. When some one said to Wendell Phillips that Hindooism was as good as Christianity, he replied, "India is the answer."—G. S. B.

you will get into the arms of God. It is a leap for the Cross.

How do I know I am saved? I know it because Christ dwells in me. It is his faith and my faith that links up together and then it is one great powerful experience. I live by faith in the Son of God who loved me. He loved me. The greatest love in this world is that Christ loved me. He gave himself. God could have sent an angel but he gave himself. He took upon himself my sins. He loved me and gave himself up for me.

Paul says, I am crucified with Christ, I am dead and not only dead but buried. The old life is gone and in place of it is the new life; the new life in him. Then having been crucified having been buried, you rise again. Now look at yourself risen in Christ. Christ living in you! You begin as a child again. So do we all. We are babes in Christ. After a while, we come out of the baby stage. After childhood comes the youth. There is the time of uncertainty. There is the time of asking questions. Then we come to the middle age. The time when these things have been settled. Then finally when it is through, we walk up in the other world in the likeness of Jesus Christ.

In Christ Jesus we have a victorious life and all we need to do is to live by faith in the Son of God. Temptations you will have; temptations will come that will worry you.

Salvation is the grandest and the greatest thing in all the world. It is not something cheap. It is something when you got it, you can keep through the power of Jesus Christ.

I am a child of God; I am in his love; I am living by faith. Think, are you a real child of God, living in his love? What is it? Accept Jesus Christ. Then when you come and accept Jesus Christ as your personal Savior, he intercedes for you.

Salvation is not feeling. Salvation is faith. So faith in Jesus Christ is the first step in the acceptance of Jesus Christ as your Savior.

He loved me—ah, what love! How marvelous, how wonderful is the Savior's love for me. He gave himself up—ah, be sure you see the uplifted Christ, Not the life of Jesus, but the Uplifted Christ. I look to that lone hill far away and see the Blood of Christ, spilled for me—for me. Deny that and my faith is gone. O dear perplexed heart, sin has found its Master in the Christ of Calvary. Look up to him and live. There is life, there is healing in the uplifted Christ.

"There is life for a look at the Crucified one.

There is life at this moment for thee.

Then look, sinner, look unto him and be saved—

Unto him who was nailed to the tree."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Generous Soul

By O. E. Sibert

OUR SCRIPTURE

I covet no man's silver or gold or apparel. Ye yourselves know that these hands ministered unto my necessities; and to them that were with me. In all these things I gave you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20:33-36, A. R. V.).

OUR MEDITATION

These words were spoken by a truly generous soul. The great apostle Paul was on the return voyage of his third missionary tour. He had stopped at Melitus for a few days to bid farewell to the elders of Ephesus. The words of our scripture lesson are the closing remarks of his final message. It is a message to all who profess the name of Jesus Christ. It is a challenge to the Christian world today. Are we meeting that challenge

"I covet no man's silver, or gold, or apparel." His chief concern in life was not that of worldly goods. He was not interested in the treasured millions which his neighbors possessed. His supreme aspiration was to gain heavenly treasures, spiritual securities and divine possessions. My dear brother or sister in Christ Jesus, what is your chief aim and aspiration in life? Do you covet the worldly goods of others about you? Or, do you covet most the spiritual treasures of the apostle Paul.

Consider with me the words of Jesus, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust consume, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth consume, and where thieves do not break through and steal; for where your treasure is there will your heart be also" (Matt. 6:19-21, A. R. V.). "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon" (Matt. 6:24, A. R. V.).

Christians, then, must serve God. This service should be given out of the generosity of the soul and not for earthly rewards. Paul says, "These hands have ministered unto my necessities and to them that were with me." Far too many Christians today feel that something should be received for every service rendered and that something is measured wholly by material values. St. Paul says, "In all these things I have given you an example, that so laboring ye ought to help the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, that he himself said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

Giving one's all, in sacrificial service to humanity is the road to true wealth. The rewards are eternal. Remember again the words of Jesus. "Then shall the king say unto them at his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world; for I was hungry and ye gave me to eat; I was thirsty and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me. Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we thee hungry and fed thee? Or athirst and gave thee drink? And when saw we thee a stranger and took thee in? Or naked, and clothed thee? And the king shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even the least, ye did it unto me" (Matt. 25:34-40, A. R. V.).

In view of these teachings of the Son of God and the great apostle Paul, cannot you and I afford to lay greater emphasis upon our sacrificial life? If I have interpreted these teachings rightly it is the generous soul who shall inherit the eternal rewards in the kingdom of God. May we, with the help of God, strive to cultivate a generous soul that we may inherit these everlasting rewards mentioned by these great teachers.

OUR PRAYER

Our most gracious and divine Father who art in heaven, we praise thy holy name. We thank thee for thy revealed word and the sacrificial life of thy Son, Jesus Christ. May we, thy humble servants, put aside the material considerations of life. May they become the secondary things of life. Give us we pray thee, the generous soul of the Apostle Paul or of thy Son, Jesus. Use us, we pray, for the furtherance of thy kingdom here on earth. Forgive us wherein we have failed to be generous in the past and we will give thee praise forever. In his name, we pray. Amen.

This is the meaning of worship: that one comes consciously and deliberately into the presence of God with such acts of adoration, thanksgiving, and petition as are the expressions of one's attitude to the Heavenly Father. Jesus and Nicodemus

Devotional Reading—John 3:31-36.

Scripture Lesson—John 3:1-17; 19:38-42.

Golden Text—God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life.—John 3:16.

Selected Comments

During the passover feast, after the cleansing of the temple and after Jesus had wrought some miracles (John 2:23), Nicodemus came to talk alone with him. All we know of him is recorded here and in John 7:50 and in 19:39, which implies that at last he became a disciple. A ruler of the Jews. A member of the Sanhedrin (John 7:50), or council, the chief governing body of the Jews, consisting of the high priest, as president, and seventy other members. He came by night, secretly, not really as a coward, but as one careful not to burn his bridges behind him until he was sure of the direction it was best to go. After a rather vague complimentary greeting by Nicodemus, Jesus immediately presents the problem of the new birth. Nicodemus seems to have rather affected a misunderstanding, for surely a man of his rank and education (v. 10) would know that no physical birth was meant.

5. Born of water and of the Spirit. Born of water refers to John's baptism of repentance, saying that he must be cleansed from his past sins and confess publicly his renunciation of his past life. Born of the Spirit refers to a new spiritual life. Without public confession he cannot enter the visible kingdom; without a new heart he cannot become a real member of the kingdom of God.

6. Born of flesh, etc. By flesh is meant all the bodily appetites and desires, as well as the body itself. It is the whole equipment with which nature fits a man for life in this world. In natural birth like breeds like, and forever determines much that has important bearings on his person and character. But to belong to a spiritual kingdom it is as essential to be born of the Spirit as to be born of the flesh is essential to entering upon the natural earthly life.

8. The wind bloweth where it will, according to its own laws, absolutely beyond human knowledge and control. The word "wind" here is the same word as "spirit" in previous verses. Thou hearest the voice thereof. You see the results, but you cannot tell the causes, which are beyond your reach.

10. Art thou the teacher of Israel. The well-known Rabbi, to whom so many thousands look for spiritual guidance. And understandest not these things? "It was the business of every member of the Sanhedrin, as Christ understood it, to understand above everything else just such spiritual mysteries as he had been talking about. They should have been his dream, his delight, the constant subject of his thought and his speech. That would have been the case with the prophets of old, or with John the Baptist; but it was far otherwise with the Pharisees."

14. As Moses, etc. (See Num. 21:4-9).

16. For God so loved. The emphasis is on the so. The proof and the measure of this love is given in what follows. So loved the world. This sinful, wicked, rebellious world; this world that rejected him; this world full of hate, war, crime, ignorance, perversity. This is the wonder of the universe. His only begotten Son. The one nearest to himself, the only one who holds this peculiar relation; so that it was really a giving of himself for man; it was not a throwing off the burden on another. There is no other certain proof of God's perfect love for all men than this. Nature gives us many hints of God's love; but there is so much which is terrible, which seems contrary to love, that we cannot be sure that God loves us except by this gift of his Son.

Twice more in the Gospel do we read of Nicodemus. We have no hint from this chapter that he accepted Jesus as his Master. In John 7:45-52 we read of his brave words to the Sanhedrin in Jesus' behalf; yet he is not even accused by his fellows of being his disciple; not even as much as they had accused the officers who had failed to arrest him. But in John 19:38-42 there is a distinct implication that he had by that time, become a disciple, for he provided rich store of spices for the embalming of Jesus' body.—The Standard Quarterly.

Lesson Lights

The New Birth. Our Savior here declares that there are two elements or factors in the new birth; one the putting away the old life, the washing or cleansing from sin, of which water is a symbol. The other, the receiving of the new life of the Spirit, which is typified by the outward baptism.

The Kingdom of God "is the individual and social life that Christ came to inaugurate, the reign of love to God and man in human hearts and in all human relationships. It is a kingdom because God is at the head of it, supremely honored and implicitly obeyed, the source of all its power, happiness and prosperity. The new birth is the necessary entrance into this kingdom because without this union with the Holy Spirit our wills are not God's will but contrary thereto, and so we cannot be loyal citizens of his kingdom." The word "born" implies that this new life from above is at first but the beginning of a process of growth. There has begun the child-life of the kingdom which, through the continued influence of the Spirit, will grow into "the perfect man in Christ Jesus" and through stress and storm and battle become at last complete.

The Spirit's Methods we cannot know, but the facts of the new life are as plain and certain as that the strong wind bends the forest trees. We may not know the day nor the hour when we are born again, but we may know the facts by the fruits. The impartation of life to man, to animal and to plant is still, even in the brightest light of science, as great a mystery as ever. But the fact of life is a certainty.

Faith is not arbitrary, but is the necessary condition of salvation. It is no more a hindrance than the stairs are a hindrance to coming out of a burning building, or a road a hindrance to reaching a place. Faith is a way to salvation, a means of attaining it.

God So Loved the World that he made provision ample enough to provide salvation for every individual who would ever be born into the world.

"Saved, that is, if it chose, not saved by compulsion. It would be no real salvation if Christ merely forced sinners into heaven; they would not belong there or be happy there. The only possible salvation is the kind he offers, based on repentance of sin, hatred of it, a longing for goodness and love of and faith in the Savior."

Rendering Help to South Africa

It is the policy of the Field Committee of the World's Sunday School Association for one of the Staff Secretaries to visit the various countries where there are national Sunday School Associations or where such organizations may be promoted that the largest measure of help may be rendered in carrying on the most effective work in each nation. For at least three years the South African National Sunday School Association have been begging for a deputation visit from one of the Secretaries. These appeals began when Mr. Charles Francis, of New York City, a member of the World's Executive Committee, visited South Africa when returning from the World's Convention in Tokyo which was held in 1920. The 33 delegates from South Africa who were at the Glasgow Convention in 1924 renewed the appeal with a document signed by the entire delegation.

Plans are now being completed for Dr. W. G. Landes, General Secretary of the World's Association, to begin a series of meetings under the direction of John G. Birch, Secretary of the South Africa Association, on Easter, 1926, when the annual convention of that Association opens in Cape Town. Conventions, institutes and conferences will be held in other parts of South Africa and every possible help rendered while Dr. Landes is in that country. Other work will be cared for by this Sunday School Secretary while en route.

A Conversational Prompter

By Ida Charlotte Roberts

"Yes, I enjoyed my visit with Alice while with her, but as soon as I had left her I was overcome with a feeling of disappointment; my visit hadn't been satisfying," confessed Emily Sawyer to Lois Hanson one afternoon when the two were comparing notes on their recent vacations.

"What was the cause of your vexation of spirit?" Lois asked.

"Oh, there were so many things I wanted to talk about and hear Alice talk about, and I forgot to bring them up. I wanted to know Alice's views on the work of art she had written me she was reading. I wanted to hear how her new scheme for increasing membership in the Village Improvement League had worked out. I wanted to know whether she took the correspondence course she was planning to take and whether it had come up to her expectations. Alice always talks helpfully, not preachily, and sanely about matters. There were oodles of things I wanted to talk over with her, but my brain didn't call them up."

"Wasn't there time?"

"We talked continually, but there were usually others present and many interruptions. I let others guide the conversation, and in doing so I forgot to bring up my pet subjects."

"Why didn't you make a list before you went to visit your friend?"

"A list? What do you mean? Like a shopping list?"

"Yes. Before you left home, if you had jotted down any matter you wanted to discuss with your friend and taken your jottings with you, you might not have come away dissatisfied. You know our family is scattered to the four winds; and when we have a gathering of the clan, as we try to do every year, each of us carries a list of subjects to talk over. You can't think how well the plan works. We used to feel as you do—provoked with ourselves because we hadn't thought to bring up this matter or that. Now one of us armed with a list brings up a subject which is threshed out; then another trots out a subject on his list, and so on. Oh, yes, we wander from the subject in hand, the association of ideas often carrying us far afield; but that only adds to the fun. We do have such delightful talkfests, and always feel as if we were leaving a feast of reason and a flow of soul when we go."

"What a sensible plan!" Emily exclaimed. "Tell me some more."

"Just before we separate we each tell the name of the book we've read since we met, the one that we liked best, and tell our impression of it. Sometimes we tell of the music we've enjoyed most, and we end by telling the funniest story we've heard, which, by the way, helps us over the parting. You'd be surprised to know how much we get out of these visits together."

"When we are reading a book during the year, we think of it in a critical frame of mind—I don't mean an unkind frame; when we hear music or see a good picture, we try to carry away something of it to give to our family. I'm sure our minds have become more alert and our tongues more cunning in

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for January 17)

When to Say "No" to Ourselves Matthew 16:24

A leaf hung on the topmost bough of a big tree. A breeze came from the west and it swayed with it. Then it rained and the tears dripped from the leaf's downcast face. Dark clouds passed over the sky and the leaf lost all its bright color. Always it moved and changed as Mother Nature changed her disposition. Why did the leaf not keep a smiling, joyful countenance all the time? Because, it did not know how to say "No." It did not have a mind to think and a will by which it could carry out the plans it thought of like we, Juniors, have. It may be easier to move first one way and then another, whisked about by every changing mood and thought, but there are times when it is better to say "No" to ourselves and master this temptation toward weakness.

Jesus once went out in the desert all by himself to plan his life work. He knew that he was to become King of men and different ideas came to him as to how he might do this. He considered becoming rich and powerful, owning all the country in sight, as he viewed it from a big high mountain. The people then would have believed him a rightful ruler because he would have been more wealthy than anyone else in the land. But, Jesus did not give in to this thought. He said, "No" to it in very strong words. He even used Bible verses to show that this was not the way in which he should become King of men. Another idea then came to Jesus' mind. He thought about surprising the people by performing a great miracle. He thought about jumping from a big high tower. Then the crowds would have believed him to be unusual and to be One who could do things which they could not and the people would have worshipped him. But again Jesus said "No" for this would have been using his power in the wrong way. Still a third idea came to Jesus about using his power and for the third time he said "No," for when he thought over all these things he realized that they were not worthy uses for the Son of God to make of his power. Jesus said this little word that is sometimes so hard to say to everyone of his temptations. Let us, Juniors, form the habit of considering carefully the plans which come to our minds and if they are plans which will not be helpful to others, let us say "No" to them. Jesus, later in his life, used his power to perform miracles, his power to do things other men couldn't do, but he did not use that power for himself. Instead, he used that wonderful power to help others, to cure the blind and heal the sick.

There were times when Jesus said "No" to the thoughts which came to his mind. I wonder if there aren't even more times when we, Juniors, need to use this little negative word. If you read the Bible references for the week you will find when some of these times are. One of these verses tells us to deny ourselves and follow Jesus. Do you know what this means? I'll tell you what I think it means. I think it means for us to do just like Jesus did. When he was tempted to gain power for himself he denied himself, said "No" to himself, and instead helped others. One time when we are to say this word to ourselves is when we are tempted to do things for ourselves instead of doing things for others. Do you remember the story about Solomon? One time God told Solomon that he could have any one thing he would ask for. Solomon might have asked for wealth or power for himself but he said "No" to these thoughts and asked for wisdom that he might rule his people in the right way, for he was a King. Do you know about the reward he received? Because he desired to help others more than himself, God gave him wisdom and gave him riches and power, too. There will surely be a reward for those Juniors who learn to think of others first and then of themselves.

Another very important time to say "No" is when we are tempted to hide behind others. It is so easy to let things look like someone else is to blame for something that we had a big share in, ourselves. Let's learn to say "No" when the temptation comes to deceive people in order to escape blame for things we have done.

One of our Scripture verses gives us a very happy promise if we learn to say "No" whenever we are tempted. It says if we endure temptation, that is, learn to say "No," we shall be blessed and shall receive the crown of life. Then let us learn to think things through that we may know when to say "No" and may receive this precious reward which our Heavenly Father promises.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

As this letter should reach its readers about the end of the year I will begin by wishing one and all a happy New Year and a year full of blessings and the joy of service. Here we have just celebrated Thanksgiving. This is not an Argentine holiday as the date comes here in the spring instead of the fall, and there is no corresponding festival in the fall although Easter comes at about the corresponding date.

This year we had a very happy Thanksgiving as we had with us Brother Sickel and family and Brother Yett and family and Brother Istueta, our native pastor in Laboulaye. The latter brought for us a fine turkey, the gift of one of the believers in Laboulaye. This is well worth mentioning for such gifts to pastors down here are far more rare than Thanksgiving days, but the people are learning the gospel spirit more and more and some day no doubt the evangelical Christians will secure a general observance of a day of thanksgiving.

However, I fear that many who observe the day do so by indulging self rather than consecrating their substance to God. The Thanksgiving offerings to the poor and to missions are pitifully small compared with the total spent in feasting on this day. The church needs a revival of the apostolic custom of fasting on occasions. Only thus will it escape the general spirit of frivolity of the age.

In regard to our work in Argentina there are as always both encouraging and discouraging things. The chief of the latter is that the native worker in charge of the Bible coach on its last tour has not proven satisfactory and as the other worker will probably have to spend a year in military training beginning in February, and the motor of the auto has had a serious break, we feel obliged to drop this work for a little while. We ask the prayers of all that the Lord may soon open the way for the continuation of this work, which with proper workers is very important. The coach has been in use five years and the body of it, with slight repairs, seems to be good for a life time, but the motor is showing its age. The roads are better than they used to be, and there are prospects of getting hard surfaced roads by and by.

Our work in general is encouraging. Since last reports I have baptized three converts in Alejandro where Brother Reina has an excellent Sunday school and a good group of believers. Those baptized are from the upper class families of the town and there are a number of candidates who hope to be ready by Christmas.

In Cabrera also and in Laboulaye there are candidates for baptism but the pastors in these places are extremely careful to make sure that the candidates are thoroughly converted and faithful before being baptized. They are men of consecrated lives and are building their work on good foundations.

Here in Rio Cuarto we have had five baptisms in October and six in November with a number more candidates in preparation. More members have moved away but some believers of other denominations have come in. Our Sunday school is once more around the six hundred mark. We are having extremely hot weather and considerable sickness.

In Buenos Aires we have a chance to sell our lot at a good profit for cash, but we do not want to sell. We want to build and we ask the prayers of the home folks that the way may open soon for a proper building and a good North American pastor in that great city. There are some missions there to be sure, but only one for every twenty thousand inhabitants and none of them are teaching the whole gospel doctrine as do the Brethren.

We are having a meeting of the Field Council to consider our problems and make our plans and we feel very much the need of divine guidance in our work. The ignorance of the gospel is still very great and we encounter prejudices on every hand. We appreciate the prayers and help of the brethren and trust that we may constantly prove more worthy of them.

Have We Done Our Utmost?

"The Sky Parlor, Long Beach, Calif.
 Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

"I watch, and am as a sparrow, along upon the house-top."

Your Office Secretary, in answer to her first message to you through "The Evangelist," received a very precious letter from a kindred spirit, in which "That O. S." was referred to as "the sparrow of the Sky Parlor."

That is a wonderful story our Lord and Savior told about the Father's care of the sparrow, in Matthew 10:29-31, and his concluding words ("Fear ye not therefore: ye are of more value than many sparrows") make our sometimes-trembling hearts to thrill with the joy of perfect peace and safety!

"Truly, he is our 'hiding place';
 'A convert from storm and from rain,'
 'Under the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice!'"

But sometimes surely the great loving heart of our Father God must be grieved at our selfishness. Do you know John 3:16? Do you truly know it? "God so loved the world that he gave his Only Begotten Son." "And he is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

What then of those superstition-bound, priest-ridden people of South America—those folks down there who do not know our "Hiding Place," but who are trying to find peace and safety through the Virgin Mary and through their patron saints, when the Lord himself said, "I am the Way ... No man cometh unto the Father but by Me."

What about those dark-skinned people in Africa, for whom Christ died, who, in their ignorance of the Father God Who gave "the Son of his love" that they might live, still are in the heathen night of idol and devil worship?

Have we done our utmost to rescue these perishing, for whom Christ died? Or is our Savior waiting, at the right hand of the Father,—waiting for us to reach these "other sheep ... not of this fold"? May not our failure in giving and going be delaying his Coming, for he said, "Them also I must bring."

O, dear Members of the F. M. S., as we look forward to the anniversary of our Lord's Resurrection, when we seek to honor him with our gifts to foreign missions, may we not search our hearts as never before and be sure that we appreciate God's love-gift of his dear Son for the redemption of the world, and may we give "heartily, as unto the Lord, and not unto men"!

Yours in the Master's Service,
 THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

The Workers of the Argentine

PART II

By Egydio Romanenghi

Our Workers Constitute a League of Nations

Anton is an Argentine, but his father is French and his mother German. He does not like grammar very well, but can make himself understood in Spanish, in French, in German, and even in English. When Brother and Sister Boardman reached Buenos Aires, he went to meet them at the boat. Without knowing them, and even with a very limited knowledge of English, he was able to find them and help them out. Brother Jose Anton is only 28 years of age.

Adolfo Zeeche is also an Argentine. His parents are German. He is 25 years of age. He knows his Spanish well and is a good speaker. He talks German in his family, and knows a little French and English as these languages are taught in the College.

Dominga Reina is a Spaniard. His parents are also Spaniards. He came to the Argentine when he was very young. To talk to him about grammar is like talking to a mender of shoes about sculpture. He does not believe that statement in Logic which says that we reason better when we know our language better. Reina says, "You may use your rhetoric and long words that you have to look up in dictionaries, but let me use simple language which even the children can understand." Reina has learned a few sentences in English and thinks it is a great accomplishment. He is twenty-five years old.

Ricardo Egea is a Spaniard, from the province of Catalonia. He is thirty-five years old. His parents are also Spaniards. He knows the language well. One might call Egea a natural physician. He came to the Argentine over fifteen years ago.

Juan Istueta, or "Don Juan" as he is called, is a Spaniard. He came over many years ago. He is now thirty-four years old. He talks Spanish very well and with the Vascoe accent.

Federico Sotola is a Czechoslovakian.

Besides knowing his own language, he knows Spanish very well and also German. He came to the Argentine when he was very young. He is thirty-six years old now.

Besides these workers, we have now an Italian, Luis Siccardi.

I am a Brazilian, which makes one nationality more. Therefore I think I am not far wrong in saying that our workers might be called a league of nations.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

GATEWOOD, WEST VIRGINIA

I closed a two and a half weeks' meeting at Gatewood, West Virginia, November 15.

This is the fourth meeting I have held at this place within the last five years. There have been peculiar hindering causes at this place every time I came. This year they had no pastor and had been disappointed in not getting the evangelist that had promised them. The weather also was bad over half of the time. These hindrances made it hard at the beginning.

The last week the power of the Holy Ghost fell. We closed in the very height of interest with twenty-seven confessions.

We baptized 19 in the Oak Hill baptistry of the Brethren church the last day of the meeting.

Quite a crowd went Sunday afternoon over 10 miles where we had a splendid baptism. Three also came that had once been baptized.

Twenty-two were added to the church with five not baptized. Two of these may go to another church and I hope the other three will soon be baptized. We closed with many near the Kingdom, with interest at white heat. I think the best of all we succeeded in getting them a pastor.

My Brother, J. S. Bowman, living at Jordan Mines, Virginia, was with us over the last Sunday and has consented to come and give them three sermons a month.

He has been a successful pastor and evangelist, also a school teacher for 30 years.

We received a number of bright school children into the church, also some in mid-life, and some of the most influential in this community that are older.

If the weather had been good and we could have stayed two weeks more, I believe we could have doubled this number. If they will have the proper care and leadership this will become a strong country church.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN,

Leesburg, New Jersey.

P. S.—I am now home again after being absent for ten weeks. Wife and I being alone I cannot leave home for a long period at one time, but would be glad to accept calls for evangelistic work or Bible Conferences—either Doctrinal, Prophetic, or Higher Life.

Could not stay from home at most more than six weeks at a time. I. D. BOWMAN.

THE FREMONT VICTORY

Yes, I call it a victory and I know you would also if you were conversant with the facts that surround the erecting of the practically new plant at Fremont. It is modern in every respect, nothing extravagant, yet substantial, cozy, neat and attractive in type.

Brother Henderson has described the building more in detail, so we will say no more about it. It will be a privilege for the members of the Ohio Conference to assemble in session in this new building next October.

We consider it an honor and a privilege to have been called to dedicate this sanctuary of God. On Sunday afternoon, November 29, an enthusiastic crowd assembled in this building to have a part in dedicating it to the service of the Church's Founder—Jesus Christ. The Sunday school orchestra rendered special music along with several vocal solos which was enjoyed by all. Pledges were received at both morning and afternoon service and while there is some debt remaining, the burden will not be overpowering. We feel the good Brethren have done fine in a financial way. Most of them are day laborers and paying for their homes, yet this did not cause them to forget their allegiance to the Lord.

A very impressive part of the afternoon service was the dedication of the pulpit to the memory of Elder S. M. Loose, the founder of the Fremont church. This splendid pulpit is the gift of Professor Charles Anspach of Ashland College, a grandson of Brother Loose. This pulpit will long serve to commemorate the unselfish service that Brother Loose gave to this church.

On dedication evening we began a two weeks' revival meeting. The church was rather disorganized owing to the absence of a regular place in which to worship while the building was under construction. But the Brethren were not slow in taking hold of the task. The attendance was good from the beginning and fine interest manifested. The difficult task was to get the unsaved to attend, which is true generally today. We did our best, feeling that the Lord would reward our efforts somehow. We were not disappointed, for the second Sunday morning when the invitation was given, nearly all the members came forward for reconsecration and six others made the good confession. This increased the interest for the last week of the meeting which finally resulted in three more uniting with the church, making a total of nine. We regretted that we could not remain with them another week, but our leave of absence with our own people had expired.

Fremont is a mission point and I feel one that deserves help. At present there is no sign of it becoming a large congregation such as the other large churches in the city. But if the coming generation is conserved there is no reason why Fremont should go back. One of the large factors in the future of the church there is the economic. So long as the men have work the church will continue and all indications point to the likelihood that the manufacturing plants will continue. It looks to us to be a good project and a wise move in erecting the new building.

It need not be denied that much of the future progress at Fremont will depend largely upon the pastor. It takes a leader to keep up inspiration as well as education. Practically all of the men are busy in the shops and much devolves upon the pastor in planning and carrying out the plans. The Brethren there are very willing to work all they can as evidence shows. I do not hesitate to say that Brother Henderson is meeting necessary qualifications splendidly. Several times we beheld him in his laborer's cloak which shows evidence of having been worn while the wearer was at work in some deep ditch, too narrow for such a (small?) man as Brother "Sam." He is interested in the education of his people and is striving to serve them the best he knows how. In all our visiting with the members we did not hear a single word of discontent concerning the pastor. We hope he will continue to serve these people as we feel confident that the work will continue to progress under his wise leadership. We certainly enjoyed our stay at his home with his good wife and children. We could not have been treated better even though they made the attempt to make an English tea drinker out of us. If you like good tea just go to Fremont among these good English folks and you certainly will get it.

We left Fremont with a song in our heart for the victory that had been won and a prayer on our lips for the continued faithfulness of the pastor and his flock. May God continue to bless them in their mission.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

December first we closed our work at Sunnyside, Washington, and came to Flora, Indiana, to take charge of the work vacated by our Brother B. T. Burnworth. The four years spent in Sunnyside were very profitable years indeed, and passed all too quickly. We found a strong and loyal church at Sunnyside and we trust that our four years' ministry among them did not leave them less loyal or true to the "Faith." We were privileged to see every department of the church advance and many precious souls won for Christ and his u. roe.hhl h nh Wtfohserrircvbgkqjmcfwpy church. When the call came from Flora we were under contract to remain at Sunnyside, but when we asked them to release us for the work here they very kindly consented to do so. As we were in the east at the time, doing evangelistic work we were spared the ordeal of saying good-bye to a people that we had learned to love. This to me is the hardest part of the pastor's work—saying good-bye to those whom you have baptized, married and with whom you "have fought the good fight." At this Christmas time dozens of cards are coming to us from Sunnyside Brethren and with them a flood of pleasant memories. As we look back over those years of work and fellowship with the Brethren in the "Sunny West," we can see nothing to mar the remembrance of it all. Sunnyside knows how to take care of their pastor. They have a seven-roomed bungalow parsonage nicely furnished and heated. They are careful to share with their pastor whatever good things come their way. Fruit and provisions are received almost daily at the parsonage and somehow turkeys always found their way to the parsonage on Thanksgiving and Christmas. At the time of our resignation J. C. Beal was acting pastor and the church has called him to finished the unexpired year which ends September 1st, 1926. We covet for our brother the same loving cooperation as was accorded to us, and may the Lord richly bless them and lead them on to greater things for him. As we write we are at Flora, Indiana, having taken up the work here December 1st. On our first Sunday, December 6th, a great day had been planned. An all-day meeting with a basket dinner in the basement; Rally Day, and reception for the pastor. A fine program had been prepared, the pastors of the city invited and everything done to make us feel that we were indeed welcome to the Flora family. Flora had been without a pastor for two months and the effect is very noticeable in the attendance of the services. However, things are already looking up; we are pleased to see the school jump up to the two hundred mark and one Sunday go to 225. We got our prayer meeting organized with twenty out the first meeting and thirty the second. The Sunday night services have doubled since the first night, and we trust will do some more doubling before it stops. January tenth we will hold our own revival with J. Basil Long and wife assisting in song. Evangelism has not been on the increase in Flora during the last few years and we are asking that the Brethren remember us daily at the throne that the Holy Spirit may overturn things here and bring glory to our Lord Jesus. Our White Gift Christmas program was a success in every way, the offering will be around one hundred dollars for missions. We have been visiting at the Brethren's Home each Sunday afternoon and bringing the folk there a short inspirational service. We wish that every member of our beloved brotherhood might visit this home and see what a wonderful institution it is. We have eight inmates at this time and they are as happy as possible in this beautiful place. The Superintendent and Matron are fine home makers and give every attention needed. Well, Brethren, again we ask to be remembered and promise to report to you anything of interest to our church. May the Lord keep us all faithful and doing the things he has for us to do.

Flora, Indiana. FRANK G. COLEMAN.

Money makers are in constant danger of letting it cost too much.

DES MOINES, IOWA

The Brethren at Des Moines are rejoicing today because of the revival just closed. Brother B. T. Burnworth came to us November 29th and for three weeks has led us in a great revival.

Brother Burnworth is a real preacher, preaching the old time Gospel that saves, in a way that convinces men that Jesus saves.

His preaching not only brought many additions to the church but he made hundreds of friends while here that will be a great help to us, and I believe he will be called back to Des Moines to conduct a union revival some time next summer.

teen young people, and nine children. These include three complete families—44 in all.

Results—six fathers, eleven mothers, eigh-

This makes us ninety-four active working members, besides several who are not very active, but we believe that we can bring them back to the fold.

As near as I can tell we lost ten or twelve the last year who moved away.

Brother Burnworth will always be remembered by the Des Moines people and we pray that he can continue as an evangelist as he is surely a builder of permanent results.

W. E. KEMP.

DES MOINES, IOWA

The pastor has reported the meeting and I want to just give you my observations of the work there. First I take pardonable pride in the fact that just when it looked as though they were about to start the work in a basement or a little tabernacle or some other temporary way, I held out for the purchase of the present splendid church building which was purchased and since has been redecorated within and now is commodious and adequate. The location is growing better every day, for they are nearer one of the great main arteries of traffic in the city, a thoroughfare that has been extended and widened and makes the church accessible in considerably shorter time. From a real estate point of view this property is increasing in value. But despite all this to establish a work in a city of many churches is not easy and when Brother Kemp, the present pastor, took this work eighteen months ago it really was in a state of coma, and the most faithful were asking, "Is there any hope?" In these days of "Isms" people did not know what kind of a little crank religious concern had sprung up over night there, as the Dutch Reform had moved on, then the United Brethren, and then the Brethren, and no one knew who we were. Well, as Kemp says, he told them he was a "foot washing dunkard." He had a good meeting last winter which he conducted himself. This time I helped him and preached one night on the faith and practice of the Brethren church, so I think we are fairly understood now. All the time some new ones were being interested and the Sunday school they inherited with the church building was growing and when I arrived there were the Knipfer children as I had known them at Pleasant Grove, grown into splendid young men and women and are at once the leaders and inspiration of the C. E., which takes every prize that the city of Des Moines offers to Endeavorers, taking a cup while I was there for 100% attendance at a big mass meeting. These same young people comprise the choir, in fact, this is a young people's church, for there is not to my knowledge a single member that can be said to be aged.

Whole families were received in the meeting reported which added man power and mother power by 17 and 27 younger people, making a total of 44. It looked at times as though we would get more and sometimes as though it would be considerably less. In twenty years I have never preached to the same sized audiences with such good results. Among the fine folk that helped us throughout the meeting who belonged to other churches was Dr. Calkins, a splendid scholarly retired Methodist preacher, who is an inspiration to every service and whose life is ripening into its full fruition. I must not attempt to enumerate the faithful ones who stood by us all the way through, but I love them and you can't be there long until you know who they are. The Mission Boards must not gather by this report that they do not longer need your help, in fact, it would be nothing short of a calamity to let them drift now, but a little while with the same progress and we will have a splendid church there. I close by saying that the Kemps are very popular as pastor and wife and universally loved and their biggest work is yet to be done.

We closed the meeting in six inches of snow being whipped about in a typical Western blizzard, but they responded nobly in the free will offering for the evangelist, accompanied him to the train, presented him with a pair of Pullman slippers and started him home happy indeed. I thank my friends at Des Moines.

RELiance, VIRGINIA

I want to send again a few lines from the Mount Zion church, as some seem to think we are dead, but dear Brethren, it is not the loudest bell that tolls the greatest death. We have nothing to boast of save our Lord Jesus Christ. We know we live in the pine hills, but we know God is no respecter of persons. Rich and poor alike must come to him in their poverty.

We are not dead, but it will be only a few years until most of our number will be counted among the loved ones gone before, and there will be only a few of us younger of the older ones to keep the home fires burning. We are not able to say what we would have done had it not been for the great sacrifice of dear Brother Fogle, who has served us for the last eleven years. Then he gave it over to Brother Wimor, and then to Bowman. In Brother Rinker's death the church suffered a hard blow, but it is not dead yet. There are forty-seven who have their membership on the Mount Zion church roll. We are making a struggle. But now our sick and afflicted and widows are being neglected. I think there is need for missionary work right here.

May God's blessing be with us all everywhere till we are called to receive our reward. Dear Brethren of the Evangelist family, pray for our church that they say is dead, that it may revive, and pray for our poor widows, of whom I myself am one.

POLLIE STEELE,

Reliance, Virginia.

BETHEL CHURCH, BERNE, INDIANA

During the Thanksgiving vacation at Ashland College we had four young men from there who labored with us to the honor and glory of our Heavenly Father. One of the results of this meeting was the winning of 8 souls to Christ. Our church has a deep love for the Gospel Team and oh, how they and we did dread the departing hour. You may guess that we invited them to come back at any time. I think that they were also instrumental in securing a closer relationship between the college and us.

Our Sunday school attendance for the closing year will average a little better than 111. And last year it was a little better than 98. Our Thanksgiving offering amounted to $262. We gave a Christmas program on Christmas Eve which was entitled "God's Gift of Love." I should rather have said it was a pageant. Our church will hold the annual business meeting on New Year's day, so this may be my last report. CLARK SIPE.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY

By

The Board of Trustees of the Brethren's Home of Flora, Indiana, on the death of Jesse A. Garver, which occurred at Dayton, Ohio, December 29th, 1925

WHEREAS, it has pleased the Almighty to remove from our midst by death our esteemed brother and co-laborer, Jesse A. Garver, who since 1912 has been a member of the Board of Trustees of the Brethren's Home, and who for so many years has occupied a prominent rank in our church, maintaining under all circumstances a character untarnished and a reputation above reproach:

Therefore, Be it resolved, that in the death of Brother Garver we have sustained the loss of a co-worker, whose fellowship it was an honor and a pleasure to enjoy; that we bear willing testimony to his many virtues, of his unquestioned probity and his fine Christian manhood; that we offer to his bereaved family and his friends, over whom sorrow has hung her sable mantle, our heart-felt condolence and pray that the Great Comforter may bring speedy relief to their burdened hearts and inspire them with the consolations that hope in futurity and faith in God give, even in the shadow of the tomb.

RESOLVED, that a copy of this resolution be spread on the minutes of the Brethren's Home; that a copy be presented to the bereaved family of our deceased brother and a copy be given to the Evangelist for publication.

Respectfully submitted,

J. ALLEN MILLER, President.

LIFE AT LANARK

It has been our purpose for some time to broadcast a bit of news to our Evangelist friends. Our revival with Dr. Charles A. Bame as preacher was a great success. Although the weather was very bad a part of the time and so good at other times that corn pickers had to take advantage of it. Still our crowds were good. Several nights the High School attended in a body and the cooperation on the part of the High School from both faculty and students was noteworthy.

Brother Bame was greatly used of the Lord in the preaching of his unsearchable riches. Brother Bame preaches an uncompromising Gospel. He holds that truth owes no apology for its existence and never seeks how the Gospel will be received. The preacher of the Word of God is to preach the Gospel, not necessarily defend it.

Dr. Bame gave his lecture, "Remaking America" before four audiences in or near Lanark. It was always received with great enthusiasm.

As a result of our revival twenty have already been added to the church by baptism and a few others are expected to come by the time the writer returns from Springfield Center. One important re-consecration of life caused great rejoicing on the part of those who have prayed diligently for months.

We have recently purchased a new piano for the Christian Endeavor Society which will soon begin to make rapid progress. New hymn books have also been added to the equipment. These last two additions meet a real need.

The pastor is now at Springfield Center, Ohio, where he is conducting a series of special meetings for Brother Leslie Lindower. More will be said later about this meeting.

New York City has eleven fire boats; Chicago has four, and other cities with navigable streams have several. These boats, which are capable of throwing as much water as twenty fire engines, cost about a quarter of a million dollars, but they pay for themselves in the damages from fire which they prevent. They are equipped with several thousand yards of hose, so that they can be used even if the fire is several blocks from the shore.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

SHAYER-LICHTY—At the John Lichty home in Falls City, Nebraska, on December 26, 1925, was solemnized the marriage of Miss Esta Marie Lichty of this place and Winnet D. Shaver, of Detroit, Michigan. At the appointed hour, in the presence of the family of the bride and to the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March, the wedding party entered the spacious parlor of the Lichty home, which was tastefully decorated with plants and cut flowers for the occasion. Being unattended, the groom took his place before the altar, while the bride entered upon the arm of her eldest brother, Albert E., who gave her away. The ring ceremony of the Brethren church was used and pastor of the bride pronounced them husband and wife.

A reception followed the ceremony in which close friends of the family participated. After this the happy couple entrained for Detroit, where they will be at home. The bride is a talented lady, coming from an excellent family, known to the brotherhood. She is a graduate from Ashland College, also did post graduate work in other schools and for some time was teacher of language in Lombardy College. The groom is known as coming from the well-known Shaver family of Virginia. He spent some time in Ashland College and later was connected with the Mullen people as a sales manager and now holds a similar position with another large firm. The best wishes of friends go with them into their wedded life's journey.

IN THE SHADOW

BAYLES—Dora Edith Bayles, daughter of Lewis and Olive Bayles, was born July 25th, 1907. She departed from this life at the home of her parents near Roann, Indiana, on December 21st, 1925, aged 18 years, 4 months and 23 days. She leaves to mourn because of her departure, a father, a mother, one brother—Walter, a sister—Nellie, and other relatives and with these a host of friends.

Miss Bayles united with the Brethren church at Roann on Wednesday evening, December 16th. At that time she seemed to be enjoying the best of health, and was much elated over her noble decision. She became ill on Friday, December 18th while in the school room. Miss Bayles was a leader in her class work. This was her last year in high school and she was joyously looking forward to her graduation in the spring. From our midst has been taken one who was loved and held high in esteem by all who knew her.

The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock in the Enterprise Brethren church. Elder Orva C. Lemert, assisted by Elder Geo. Swihart officiating.

RINKER—Mary Susan Rinker went to her eternal rest December 3rd, 1925, aged 64 years, 7 months and 20 days. She was the widow of the late Jacob C. Rinker who preceded her just 77 days. The writer preached her funeral on Sunday, December 6th, in the Mt. Zion Brethren church, Reliance, Virginia. Text: John 13:36—"Whither I go, thou canst not follow me now; but thou shalt follow me afterwards." Her body was laid to rest beside the newly made grave of her husband. The church was again full of loving and sympathizing friends to share their loss with her ten dear children and twelve grandchildren, three sisters and three brothers. She was a faithful wife and mother, and a sister in the church to the end. And we beg all her loved ones to prepare to meet father and mother Rinker some sweet day when life is over.

THOMAS—Mary C. Dillon was born near Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, March 28, 1850, daughter of Andrew and Sarah Dillon, and one of a family of eleven children, of whom one brother and four sisters remain.

Mary C. Dillon and Samuel Thomas were united in marriage on April 13, 1869. To this union six children were born. The marital relations were broken by the death of Samuel Thomas on August 2, 1898. Two daughters and a son also preceded the mother in death.

Early in life Mary Dillon united with the Evangelical church and at the time of the organization of the First Brethren church, of Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, she cast her lot with the Brethren. Her interests were broader than merely the confines of her own home or church, and her passing will leave a void in the life of the community.

The translation from scenes terrestrial to joys celestial came on Tuesday morning, November 3, 1925, at the age of 75 years, 7 months and 5 days, bringing to a close the earthly pilgrimage of a life marked by continued interest and thoughtfulness for the welfare of others. One son, two daughters, 32 grandchildren and 49 great grandchildren remain to cherish the memory of an unselfish and kindly loved one.

Funeral obsequies were conducted at the First Brethren church of Mt. Pleasant on November 5, in the presence of an audience that filled the building, which betokened the esteem in which she was held by those who knew her best. Assistance in the services was given by Elder A. J. Begghy, pastor of the local Church of the Brethren, and the body was laid to rest in Greenlick cemetery beside that of her husband to await the Master's summons. Services were in charge of the undersigned by request in the absence of Elder H. S. Myers, who was detained by illness.

DYOLL BELOTE.

MAUST—Elias A. Maust departed this life July 24, 1925. Brother Maust was one of the pioneer settlers in this section, as well as one of our members of the Falls City Brethren church. He was a Pennsylvanian by birth, being born, reared and married near Meyersdale. With many others he came to seek his fortune in the West. He took up land and engaged in farming for many years. Later he entered the elevator business which developed into a large business. He was a regular and consistent member of the Brethren church. During the writer's pastorate, he would frequently come into the home and talk over interests pertaining to the church and also we would talk of people and scenes in old Pennsylvania, the writer's native state. He was preceded in death by his faithful companion by several years. He leaves two sons, Albert and Irwin, both of this place. Funeral services by his pastor, the writer, from the church. His body was laid to rest in the Silver Creek cemetery.

FRICKER—William Oscar Fricker was born May 13th, 1856, in Wheeling, West Virginia, and peacefully departed this life, at his home, Fort Scott, Kansas, on Tuesday morning, December 15th, 1925, at the age of 69 years, 7 months and two days.

He had been in failing health for some years and his condition had been critical for some weeks. The writer had the pleasure of baptizing him into the Brethren Mission of this city on August 16th, 1908, he being the first one baptized into this church.

A few days before he died he told me that he was still in the faith of the whole gospel, which I had preached to him many years ago.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Clemmie Fricker, and three sons,—W. O. Junior, of Ennis, Texas; Edward T. of Monett, Missouri; and Henry G., at home; also two daughters, Lucy, at home, and Mrs. R. C. Send of Warren, Ohio. One son preceded him by several years, and the writer was with the family at that time also.

No one who knew Brother Fricker would question his faith in Christ, nor the seriousness with which he received the Bible. The funeral was conducted from the Brethren church of Fort Scott, Kansas, on December 17th, by the writer. Many beautiful floral offerings were made, and the body was laid to rest in the Lath Branch Cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

FOX—John M. Fox, son of Jacob J. and Sarah Jane (Dillman) Fox, was born in Miami County, Indiana, September 27th, 1858. He departed this life at the Central Hospital in Indianapolis, Indiana, December 16th, 1925, being 67 years, 3 months and 11 days old. He was united in marriage September 17th, 1880, to Barbara Ellen Cunningham. This loving companion preceded him in death November 9th, 1924. His entire life was spent in Miami County, with the exception of nine years in which time he was engaged in the ministry of the Gospel. Having felt the call of God at the time death entered their home to claim a two-year-old son, Andrew Jacob, who died in 1893. He was a charter member of the Loree Brethren church and helped to organize and establish the First Brethren church in Loree and was one of its few remaining charter members. He was always active and interested in the welfare and progress of this cause and was ever willing to sacrifice for its advancement. Remaining in the faith until death released his spirit. He is survived by the following children—Lloyd A., of Monrovia, California; Mrs. Walter A. Gable of Miami County; Carl E., of Cass County; Daniel A., and Charles E., of Kokomo, Indiana. Also the following brothers and sisters, George, of Charleston, Mississippi; David of Sacramento, California; Martha Meyers and Elizabeth Soataber of Peru, Indiana, besides other relatives and friends.

The Holiday Rush

The annual recurrence of the Christmas season is a delight to the children, but it is doubtful if grown folks look forward to its return with anything like glad anticipation.

The Christmas idea has been commercialized by the business world to the extent that its religious significance has been almost entirely obliterated. The question is not, How much has the spirit of Christ been manifested? but, How has this Christmas trade compared with the trade of last year?

One may not be able to determine whether the spirit of rush that prevails during the pre-Christmas days is contagious or infectious, but every one knows it is catching. The churches, Sunday schools, etc., catch this spirit and it is passed along until it reaches even the publishing houses of the churches.

Our usual rush came on with full force, and in our endeavors to get all orders for Sunday school supplies filled before Christmas we were obliged to neglect some of the other features of our work.

The mailing list of the Evangelist had to be neglected for a few weeks, because there are not enough of us to do everything at the same time; but by neglecting this among other things, we were able to get EVERY order for Sunday school supplies that was received in regular form filled and in the mails the day before Christmas.

We hope they were all received in good time for use, and now we are devoting our time to catching up with the mailing list of the Evangelist. As there are not sufficient hours during the day to do this we are coming back to our office in the evening and working late into the night to try to catch up.

We trust those who have sent in their renewals and also lists of new subscribers will be patient with us and give us an opportunity to get the new year started off in good order.

We have received a number of renewals from our Honor Roll churches, but we will not take time to mention them individually just now.

A Great Day Coming

There are many great days in the life of a church, some are greater or of more importance than others. It might be considered presumptuous if I were to designate one certain day as the greatest day in the year for the Brethren church, but I do not believe I will need to pray the prayer, "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins," if I say the greatest day in the year for The Brethren Publishing Company is PUBLICATION DAY, the one day when all the churches are given the opportunity to help the company pay for the building purchased a few years ago.

A Special Number

Next week we expect to get out a special number of the Evangelist to make an urgent appeal for this offering which is to be taken on Sunday, January twenty-fourth, for this purpose. Our readers will find a special slip, or supplement, included with this week's paper, and we would like to have each reader consider this matter both carefully and prayerfully.

If you will think over this matter and then really pray over it we are not worried about the results. For we know that when people pray they also PAY toward the support of such causes.

We do not want to make this communication too long, as we want to have you willing to give more heed to the things others, as well as myself, will have to say in next week's paper.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

"Making the Grade"

In the early days of the auto it was common to see cars stalled part way up a steep hill. They were able to make the easy grades but not so the hard and steep ones.

Most of us are like those cars. Occasionally, if not often, we find ourselves at the foot of the steepest grade and no courage to go on.

There is no common cause for this failure of our spirits. In the case of some, it may be hard work. In the case of others, sickness or age, or disappointment, or trying circumstances. We hesitate before the steepest part of the grade for various reasons.

But there is a common remedy for this hesitation. What all of us need is a religious faith. We need to remember that we can do all things through Christ. Take the printed message to some unsaved person, to a shut-in, and in helping others over the grade, you help yourself along the rugged way of life.

EDITORIAL

A God-Confidence for the New Year

We would like to suggest that the proper spirit in which to engage the work of the new year is that of dependence upon God. We would like to emphasize it and say that such a spirit of dependence should be very pronounced, that it should be the outstanding characteristic of our lives, that we should realize that of ourselves we can do nothing. Few things are more important to those who believe in the almightiness of God and in the accomplishing power of prayer than just that, for it is only when we are made conscious of human impotence and inability that we are brought to rely upon the inexhaustible resources of divine strength and wisdom.

We almost feared at first to put forward such an emphasis, lest some one should grasp at the idea of dependence, and allow it to instill the spirit of weakness and helplessness into his life. Such a spirit is a positive injury and has proven the dead weight to many a soul that otherwise had much of latent power and promise. We would not purposely say a thing that would pre-dispose any one to a fearful, hopeless, fatalistic attitude toward the tasks and oppositions of life. Too much harm has been wrought by it. Many an undertaking has failed for the want of earnest, honest, determined effort; many a life has been unsuccessful and has ended in disappointment and defeat because of a lack of faith in the power of achievement; many a battle against the antagonistic forces of sin has been lost because of the creeping into the heart of a paralyzing fear that filled the soul with despair and destroyed the power of resistance. Every day witnesses a sad and needless waste of talent and opportunities, and even of life itself, because so many people are accustomed to weakly submitting to surmountable obstacles, and to entertaining a feeling that man is the helpless victim of blind fate. This feeble, ineffective, helpless attitude is an enemy to the best and noblest in life. We need more of the spirit of confidence and strength, more of hope and courage, more of high purpose and daring.

But our confidence as Christians should not be in ourselves, but in God. And just here has been our weakness, and very often it has been the secret of our failures—we have placed too much confidence in self. And the leadership of a group is even more susceptible to this prevailing human weakness than the less assertive rank and file. How prone we are to be conceited, vain, proud, boasters, flatterers of self, depending on our own wit and wisdom, our own strength and purpose, our own talents and skill! This exaltation of self is constantly resulting in our undoing, and yet we persist in it. How slowly and unwillingly we learn the lesson of human insufficiency and the non-dependability of carnal nature! If we were wise and believing we would not need to pass through the disappointing experience in order to learn the lesson, for we have preserved for our instruction the experience of Paul, who said, "For I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing; for to will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good I find not." But when he turned his eyes off of self, the truth dawned upon him and he shouted with ecstatic joy, "I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord!" Whatever the hardship or duty that faced him he was able to say, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." And that assurance never left him. "I know whom I have believed," said he, "and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day." In the face of such a testimony, how foolish are we, that we should place such confidence in self and be so proud of our own powers and attainments!

In theory we believe in and trust the power of the Lord Jesus, and give him the glory, but in practice we fall far too often into the error of the Unitarians whose teachings we vigorously criticize for their exaltation of "human responsibility for human salvation; the control of human destiny by human agencies; and the direction of the human future by human hands." They give no place in their thinking to a divine Savior, but boldly declare, as did Dr. Horace Westwood of Toledo, last September at the fifth annual convention of the Unitarian Layman's League, held at Lenox, Massachusetts, that "Salvation is the gift of God only in so far as the powers that are within men are divine gifts." Continuing with his bombastic glorification of self-sufficiency, he said, "We must declare to a world that to a large extent has lost faith in the human spirit, the complete adequacy of human powers to meet human needs." Such statements stir our hearts to vigorous protests, accustomed as we are to the most orthodox teachings concerning the person and work of Christ, and as well, concerning man's lost condition. Notwithstanding the correctness of our thinking, how genuine are we in our practice? How truly and faithfully do we depend on him? How conscious and certain are we that we can do nothing of ourselves, that in him we live and move and have our being, that by his grace alone are we saved and sustained and only by the indwelling power of the Holy Spirit are we empowered for service? Is our trust in him, or in our proud selves.

To be wholly dependent upon God does not mean that we are released from responsibility. Let not this teaching deceive us on that point, nor cause us to feel ourselves excused from all effort. We are not to sit idly and lazily by waiting for God to bring his spiritual victories before us all done and served up on a platter. God expects and requires human cooperation. We are to be workers together with him. And the two ideas are not incompatible—God-dependence and human responsibility. In the building of his great spiritual kingdom, we are indeed God's fellow-workmen, and he holds each one of us personally responsible for the doing of the tasks assigned to us. And we must not expect him to do for us in some miraculous way what we can by a little effort do for ourselves. We are his fellow-workmen, and workmen are to work. We are stewards of the manifold grace of God, and "it is required of a steward that a man be found faithful." But the planning and direction are his; he is the Master Builder. He knows and he has the power and the resources. We can do nothing without him; we are wholly dependent upon him. Let us realize it.

That Publication Day Offering

If you have kept up with the calendar for the church year, you are now ready to make plans for a generous offering for the Publishing House to apply on the debt we owe on the building in which we do our work. The date for the offering is set for the fourth Sunday in January and it is hoped that it will be widely observed. In fact, every church in the brotherhood is under lasting obligation to their Publishing House and it ought to be looked upon as a privilege to show fitting gratitude for the inestimable service which it has been rendering through the years. Don't let the time pass without doing what you can. If you should find it inconvenient to take the offering on the Fourth Sunday, the last Sunday, or even a later one, will do. But do not fail to do something, as soon as you can.

A number of the members of the Publication Board make appeal in this issue for your support and it is hoped that you will read every message in a prayerful, interested spirit. The one thing we wish to emphasize, and which we have said again and again, is that a satisfactory church literature cannot be made for a constituency the size of ours without a subsidy or an endowment. It is difficult to find among the larger denominations a publishing house that is making any money on its own periodicals alone, and even the strongest of them would soon go bankrupt if they were wholly dependent upon the receipts from the sale of their own publications. This is no exaggeration. Practically all the church publishing houses have great buildings which they own, largely through the church's generosity, a large commercial printing trade and a book business, and in addition, many of the churches make large annual contributions to meet the deficits that have mounted up on certain publications. Church papers are never self-supporting, at least, in our investigations we have never discovered one such. And yet no church will attempt to get on without one or more church papers, nor without at least one publishing house, and a whole line of Sunday school literature. In addition to these, they insist on having their own distinctive books and tracts, many of which are published at a loss. But they will not do without the service that is thereby rendered to their brotherhoods. They are putting vast sums into printing equipment and the creation of literature each year, and they do it gladly. They do not consider money wasted that goes into the printed page, for by means of it, they in large measure have become what they are.

It is interesting to note that on the whole the size of a denomination can be fairly accurately determined by the building of publishing houses and church literature. Wherever a church or other religious institution has flourished, invariably we have found that large attention has been given to the printing of the sacred page.

Three facts ought to cause us to become awakened to our responsibility to an institution that has been all too widely neglected. Some have had eyes to see the need, and have responded generously, but many others have not. The Publishing House is not asking for a "donation," but for a chance to serve the brotherhood in a larger way and to make possible a larger growth of our beloved fraternity. The appeal is not made on behalf of any man or group of men, who are particularly interested in the advancement of our publishing interests, but on behalf of the larger future of our denomination. The Publication Day offering is as vital as that, and every one who has caught the vision can hardly explain away any neglect to do what he can to encourage generous and wide-spread giving to this most vital institution. Remember, pray and talk for Publication Day, and let the spirit of God lead you in making your personal gift.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Is some one waiting for you to give them the key? Read the Tract Corner.

The Business Manager unites his voice with the rest in behalf of the Publication Day Offering. Read what he says on page 16.

Dr. C. A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church, recently left for an evangelistic campaign in the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Dr. E. E. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, gives us another installment of interesting news items concerning men and events connected with the college.

Our readers will appreciate the interesting account of the experience of one of our Portis, Kansas girls in mission work among the Jews in Los Angeles, found on Mission page.

Brother Homer Anderson, who is in charge of the church near Mulvane, Kansas, reports the work there in a favorable condition. It seems evident that some of his good parishioners are determined to see to it that their pastor and family do not go hungry.

The conceited man is never a successful preacher of the Gospel, however great an orator he may be.

Some one says, "A true gem remains a gem even when it is dropped into the mud." Very true, but he must wash his hands who goes into the mud after it.

Brother J. Wesley Platt, pastor of our Manteca, California, church has been reappointed post master of his thriving little city, as you will notice by the clipping from his town paper.

The material in behalf of Publication Day takes the place of the "leading article" this week and Brother Tay's second article on "Walks and Talks in the Holy Land" was crowded out, but will appear next week.

Some one wonders why so many church members who have been successful business men are so ready with valuable suggestions at a business men's club but are like "Simple Simon" at a church business meeting. In some cases it may be that they have stocked up with methods that would not square with church ideals.

Dr. Martin Shively, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, gives a White Gift offering report that is quite encouraging. Some schools and churches have done exceedingly well. However the goal lacks considerable of being covered, and it is important that many more good reports shall be made. Send your report as promptly as possible.

Brother Hugh C. Marlin, who was recently ordained to the ministry and elected to the pastorate of the Pleasant Hill, Ohio, church, is proving himself a hard-working pastor. This is necessarily so, because in addition to his pastoral duties, he is publishing a daily paper at Covington nearby. The work is holding up nicely under his leadership. A number of interesting and successful events are reported.

Brother B. H. Flora, always hard at work, finds plenty to do in the three churches which he is seeking to serve, and in all of them he finds reason for encouragement. Hard work always produces results, and is somewhat contagious. New Paris has a habit of doing things in a fine way and is noted for its generous giving. Brother J. L. Kimmel recently conducted a revival at this place. Ardmore is also an active and loyal people and is said to have a very fine outlook as a congregation. Dutchtown, a country church, he thinks, though neglected, is a field of some promise.

It has been a long time since we heard from Brother E. B. Shaver, the pioneer minister of the Virginia valley, and who is more than eighty years young and active in the ministry, but he favors us with a brief message in this issue. He is pastor of the country congregation near Bethlehem, Virginia and is leading these people forward with the vigor of a young man. The church house was recently enlarged to make more adequate provision for the Sunday school and the entire cost of $3,000, was paid before dedication.

Our correspondent from the church at La Verne, California, reports pastor and people both busy for the Lord. Brother Tay, aside from his work for his own congregation, finds time to assist in Christian Endeavor rallies and other general work, from which some splendid virtual results are tabulated. The church is showing excellent signs of growth in various ways. In this letter we have the first public announcement of the approaching wedding of two of our splendid young people in the African mission force—Chauncy Sheldon, whose home church is La Verne, and Miss Hatie Cope, a graduate of Ashland College.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, reports a most successful evangelistic campaign in his church with Dr. W. S. Bell, of Dayton, Ohio, as the evangelist. Long and thorough preparation for the campaign was had, during which time eighteen souls made the confession, largely through the instrumentality of the work of "The Seventy," a company of volunteer personal workers. During the campaign proper fifty-one confessions were received. Fifty-six new members have been added to the church. All departments of the work are moving forward in splendid style.

How to Make Your Money Talk

By Dr. W. S. Bell, President Publication Board

This is not a figurative statement, but a literal truth. I want to take just a few minutes of your time to show you how it is done. The great spokesman for our church is THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST, which is supplemented by our Sunday School Literature and other publications. In order for these to function we must have a building in which to house them. We must have machinery in the way of publishing equipment. We must have paper, type, ink, management, editors, printers and helpers. THESE THINGS AND THE MEN TO MAN THE HOUSE REQUIRE MONEY.

The Brethren Evangelist carries the message of the church to thousands of our homes. Our Sunday School literature carries the message of God's Word to thousands of children, youth and adults. Our tracts take the message of the Gospel to thousands who are in need of it. THE BRETHREN PUBLISHING HOUSE IS A TALKING AND PREACHING BUSINESS. IT TAKES MONEY TO RUN IT AND THE MONEY INVESTED IN IT SIMPLY TALKS AND TELLS THE MESSAGE OF A REDEEMING LORD AND HERALDS THE GLAD TIDINGS OF THE GOSPEL OF THE SON OF GOD. EVERY DOLLAR YOU INVEST IS THE PUBLISHING HOUSE IS GOING TO TALK.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE IS MARVELOUS

We have today a modernly equipped Publishing House and produce work that is creditable to any of the publishing houses of our size. With practically old and broken down machinery ten years ago, under the able management of R. R. Teeter and his worthy helpers the present plant has been the result. We have struggled along, making every dollar reach the farthest possible. Many of our men have been under-paid and it has been the next thing to "making brick without straw"; as we have not burdened the church at large for aid. We have stepped aside for the other interests of the church, not because we had to, neither did we feel that the Publishing House was of secondary importance (for it is of first importance). We simply did this because we figured we could get through and give other interests that had more pressing needs the field.

A PLAIN SIMPLE DUTY

We are not begging, or coaxing for money, but we do feel that every church in the brotherhood should feel duty bound to help pay off the debt on our building. Not in a way that is burdensome, but by giving THE MEMBERS AN OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE A FREE WILL OFFERING ON PUBLICATION DAY, JANUARY 24, 1926 FOR THIS PURPOSE.

We have a building that is approximately worth $50,000.00 with about $16,000.00 indebtedness. We are not asking for money to run the business, but TO PAY OFF THE DEBT. EVERY DOLLAR GIVEN ON PUBLICATION DAY WILL BE APPLIED TO THE DEBT.

DO YOU KNOW?

Do you know that we publish the Evangelist at a financial loss on account of our small subscription?

Do you know what it would mean to us as a church, if we had no publication house?

Do you appreciate the sacrifice made by our men in past years in giving to us a church literature, receiving in return smaller salaries than most of our ministers?

Do you know the greatest agency and power in the church today is the printed page?

LET YOUR MONEY TALK ON PUBLICATION DAY AND TELL YOUR INTEREST IN THIS GREAT INSTITUTION. LET NO PASTOR FAIL TO PRESENT THIS MATTER TO YOUR CONGREGATION AND GIVE YOUR PEOPLE AN OPPORTUNITY TO SHARE IN THIS WORK.

The Press and the Church

By R. F. Porte, Member Publication Board

There are two indispensable institutions connected with a forward moving church; they are, the college and the publishing interests. The college is the institution to call forth and develop the talents and powers of our people and

Our Presses

This illustration represents our two Babcock Optimus, two revolution cylinder presses, carrying nine and eleven rollers respectively.

These presses were both purchased since we moved into our new building, being necessary to care for the class of work we have been called upon to do. They are both fully paid for and are in no wise connected with the appeal we are making for funds to clear up the indebtedness on the building, except to demonstrate the progress the Publishing House can make when once this indebtedness is lifted.

the publishing interests are the broadcasting influences of those trained men and women. The press is vitally related to the pen. It is unthinkable that we should do without the printed page. The church without a successful publishing house is a slow growing church. The press is the agent of progress and development and whoever has anything worth teaching the world must turn to the service of the press.

It has been the duty of the writer of this article to stimulate among our people greater interest in the use of Brethren tracts as a vehicle to the spread of our plea and doctrine. How can this work be done without the press? It could not be done in a way to meet present needs. We cannot do without our own press as a church. Without it we would be as efficient as a person deprived of speech trying to communicate through another person. There is nothing which adds to our success in spreading our teaching as having our own well equipped Publishing House.

If the foregoing be true it becomes necessary for the church to provide a proper publishing plant. This has been done but the job is not quite finished. There is a debt which we can soon raise if each one gives a dollar on next January 24. I challenge anyone to try to estimate the good, the increased good, our Publishing Company can do in preparing the Brethren tracts we wish published and distributed. A very tidy sum is annually taken out of the earnings of this company to pay interest. Brethren, if you help pay the remaining indebtedness on our Publishing Home we will be able to use a liberal portion of the profits for better equipment and more tract printing and distribution. What you give in this next Publishing Day Offering is not a gift but an investment in a better Publishing Company. The church will receive more than she gives to this growing institution. This obstacle of indebtedness must be removed and the interest money used for definite publishing work.

The Brethren people have reason to be proud of this fine home for our Publishing Company. I hear someone saying, "Why did the Publishing Company buy this building and go in debt"? It has been said that the building and the location is not an asset to better printing. In the first place I wish to call the attention of the Brethren to the two fine new publishing houses built by two denominations within a few blocks of the business section and high rent section of Dayton. Why did not these two denominations referred to, build their publishing houses in some out-of-way place where it would be cheaper? Do business men locate in an expensive locality merely for the sake of paying high rent? The policy of our company is sound. The purchase of this publishing building was a business dealing of sound judgment. The Brethren should be proud of what we have and help pay for it as other churches have done. The present location and building furnishes convenience to trade, transportation and the office help and editorial staff.

In conclusion I wish to appeal to our people for a friendly attitude toward our Publishing Company. It is an institution of the church. It is an asset and not a liability. The removal of the debt will simply mean that profits now spent for interest will be spent for the good of the Brethren church. The sooner you pay the debt on your Publishing House the sooner your Publishing House will be able to pay a liberal dividend back to your church. On January 24 the Brethren Church can do a great piece of work for a greater Brethren Church by helping to free the Brethren Publishing Company home from debt. Now let's do it.

Free Our Publishing House of Debt

A Message to the Mid-West District Churches

By A. B. Cover

We as members of the Brethren church, enjoy and appreciate the excellent contribution the Publishing Company is constantly making to the successful development of our church. In every department of our work we are aided by the printed matter from our publishers. The plant has grown from a struggling little affair to the present well equipped and adequately housed Brethren Publishing Company. We are proud of the achievement. Our literature is constantly improving and has reached the place where we compare favorably with larger denominations. But general advancement in the various lines of activity, demands of the church a like advancement. So we MUST expand the efficiency of the interest which records our advancement. May it be our slogan that we place this, OUR PUBLISHING COMPANY, on an adequate basis. We can do this by lifting the indebtedness on the building. So may the need of this make its appeal to you in terms strong enough, that we free the Publishing House from this burden. May we realize that the interest money paid upon the indebtedness would help materially in improving the quality of the work as well as aid in securing the publishing of books that would illumine the pathway of Brethrenism and make for extension in the Lord's kingdom.

May we take as seriously this debt as though it were personal. In the real sense it is, for the Publishing Company is OURS. So brethren, let us take advantage of this opportunity that comes to us on Publication Day and make possible the raising of the encumbrance upon the excellent building and make it all our own. Will we do it?

Brethrenism and Modern Religious Demands

By Willis E. Ronk

(Address delivered at Ohio Conference, Smithville, and voted by that assembly to be published in THE EVANGELIST. Published in parts. Part II)

Let us give our attention next to Brethren Doctrine. Here we have been exceedingly slow in defining our position. And there is a sense in which this is the correct attitude. An interpretation of the Bible must be, (in a broad way) inferior to the Bible itself. The changing years will bring changing conditions and changing interpretations; so the next generation—if a choice is to be made—would better have the Whole Bible than our views of the Bible. But will there be a coming generation of Brethren? It certainly must be evident, that if there is no defining of our doctrinal position; there will be a gradual disintegration of our forces and we will certainly be "A Disappearing Brotherhood." If our only distinctive claim is that we refuse to define our position; then our claim is our weakness. If any of our churches want to give up Feetwashing and the Lord's Supper or want to receive members by single Immersion, who dares to object? There are other denominations, who have as their Plea, "The Bible, The Whole Bible and Nothing But the Bible," or one very closely related thereto. Does not the battle cry for another denomination for the year sound strangely familiar? "The Whole Bible for the Whole Church for the Whole World." There are other preachers who can say quite as glibly as Brethren preachers, "The Bible is our sole rule in faith and practice," and yet in spite of all of this—, their beliefs and practices are not what we have been accustomed to think of as Brethren. They do not practice Triune Immersion, or observe the ordinances of Feetwashing and the Lord's Supper. From this it will be seen that our Plea must mean more to us than to others. Then we must say what that MORE is. In other words we must define our doctrinal position. To go to the world with our Plea without any definition is simply to put ourselves on an equal basis with these other churches.

Moreover, such an interpretation of our Plea is inconsistent with our practices. I have already stated that we are and have been defining our position every day. Every time a preacher preaches a sermon or a Sunday school teacher teaches a lesson they are interpreting the Bible. If, we go back to the beginning of the Tunker movement in Germany, we will discover that Alexander Mack and his co-workers were called upon to define their position; and they did so. They did so first in practicing Triune Immersion and observing or keeping the Love Feast; and other beliefs and practices. This defining through their practices cost them much suffering by way of ridicule and persecution; and therefore is not to be discounted. They also defined their position in answering the forty questions submitted to them by certain church leaders of their day; and in publishing both the questions and answers. In Mack's Book, in which the above mentioned questions and answers may be found; there is also "A Conversation Between a Father and Son", which is merely a statement of the belief of Brethren on such subjects as: Baptism, The Lord's Supper, Ex-communication, Oaths, Love, Marriage, and other subjects. Coming now to the conference of 1882 which was held at Ashland, certain Declaration of Principles were adopted. Among them this one is found: "Resolved, that it is the sense of this convention that, as we are the true conservators of the doctrines of the Brethren Church, and have never strayed from the church founded by our fathers, nothing done in this meeting, shall be construed as secession or departure from the original church organized in Germany, in 1708, or from the principles of the Gospel as 'INTERPRETED' by our fathers, until the intervention of human traditions and usurpation of authority by men in control on Annual meeting. In every principle of non-conformity to the world and the practice of the Gospel ordinances, we stand where we have always stood, and by the grace of God always will stand." What is this but a re-affir- mation of original beliefs and practices, and the recognition of the need of interpretation. I have only called attention to a few of the statements which have been made during our history; but enough for the purpose in view. The statement of the Brethren Ministers has been criticised not so much as to the content of the statement; but as to the fact of the statement itself. Any statement would be obnoxious to some. But some such statement was inevitable. Through our history, we have been defining our position, and we must continue to do so from time to time; if we are to exist as a Church.

We are sometimes erring in our interpretation of that part of our Plea, which says, "Nothing But the Bible." In the strict sense of the term, we cannot live up to that. Are we literally to have nothing but the Bible? Then we are inconsistent with the facts of life. Here is my personal Christian experience, does it mean nothing to me? Here is my reason—, shall I give it no place? Verily, I must give them place for they are a part of me. Here is Church Government, shall I give it no place? But, we must have government. However, if I over-emphasize my experience to the exclusion of all else, I become a mystic. If my reason is not checked, I become a rationalist.

Church government given full sway, leads to a self-centered hierarchy. This hierarchy was the fly in the ointment in 1881-82. The Bible alone will lead to a dead formal religion. Men DO run riot with their experiences, with their reason, and with their authority, and they must be held in check. My experience, reason, and authority must be tested in the light of the Bible. Others may believe that the church, or reason, or experience are supreme; but for us the Bible is ABOVE ALL ELSE. Nothing must contradict it nor supercede it. Whatever does not agree with it is error, or else we do not properly understand the Word. Something of this nature must have been in the minds of the Brethren in 1882 when they passed a certain section of the Declaration of Principles. Let us read, "We hold that in religion the Gospel of Christ and the Gospel alone, is a sufficient rule of faith and practice; and he who ADDS TO the Gospel, takes from it, or in any WAY BINDS upon men anything different from the Gospel, is an infidel to the Author of Christianity and a usurper of Gospel rights." I hold that from time to time it is necessary to define our position, or else the inconsistency of beliefs and practices in different congregations will be our undoing. But, NEVER, NEVER, must we permit our definition or statement of Faith to supercede nor in any wise contradict the Bible. Our Plea must still be "The Bible, the Whole Bible and nothing but the Bible." And thus each succeeding generation will have the rights which we cherish—the right of interpretation. And, yet it must not be forgotten that no generation stands as a unit in itself. Each succeeding generation builds upon the foundation of the one preceding. To reject the wisdom of other generations, because it is not our own, is the height of folly. We are building upon the foundations laid by Alexander Mack and his co-workers; may we also leave a doctrinal foundation for those with their right of interpretation.

For the purpose of the comparison, which this subject implies, some doctrinal statement is necessary. Of all the statements which one might present, I am of the opinion that none could be found as agreeable to as large a body of our people as "The Message of the Brethren Ministry." I believe that it pretty accurately defines the position of a large percentage of Brethren. It hardly seems necessary to read the statement, yet for the purpose in mind I believe it will be best to do so. It reads:

The Message which Brethren Ministers accept as a Divine Entrustment to be heralded to a lost world, finds its sole source and authority in the Bible. This message is one of Hope for a lost world and speaks with finality and authority. Fidelity to the apostolic injunction to preach the Word demands our utmost endeavor of mind and heart. We, the Members of the National Ministerial Association of the Brethren Church, hold that the essential and constitutional elements of our Message shall continue to be the following declarations:

1. Our Motto: The Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible.
 2. The Authority and Integrity of the Holy Scriptures. The Ministry of the Brethren Church, desires to bear testimony to the belief that God's supreme revelation has been made through Jesus Christ, a complete and authentic record of which revelation is the New Testament; and, to the belief that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as originally given, are the infallible record of the perfect, final and authoritative revelations of God's will, altogether sufficient in themselves as a rule of faith and practice.

3. We Understand the Basic Content of our Doctrinal Preaching to Be:

- (1) The Pre-existence, Deity, and Incarnation by Virgin Birth of Jesus Christ, the Son of God;
- (2) The Fall of Man, his consequent spiritual death and utter sinfulness, and the necessity of his New Birth;
- (3) The Vicarious Atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ through the shedding of His Own Blood;
- (4) The Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ in the body in which He suffered and died and His subsequent Glorification at the Right Hand of God;
- (5) The Justification by personal faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, of which obedience to the will of God and works of righteousness are the evidence and result; the resurrection of the dead, the judgment of the world, and the life everlasting of the just;

- (6) The Personality and Deity of the Holy Spirit Who indwells the Christian and is his Comforter and Guide;
- (7) The Personal and Visible Return of our Lord Jesus Christ from Heaven as King of Kings and Lord of Lords; the glorious goal for which we are taught to watch, wait, and pray;
- (8) The Christian should "be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of the mind," should not engage in carnal strife and should "swear not at all;"
- (9) The Christian should observe, as his duty and privilege, the ordinances of our Lord Jesus Christ, among which are (a) baptism of believers by Triune Immersion; (b) confirmation; (c) the Lord's Supper; (d) the Communion of the Bread and Wine; (e) the washing of the saints' feet; and (f) the anointing of the sick with oil.

The acceptance of this statement seems to make us a Conservative Brotherhood. We certainly are a conservative people, and it does not take this statement to make us so. Our Plea, "The Bible, The Whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible," is a conservative plea in itself, if taken seriously. If we do not want to be considered conservative in matters of doctrine, the only consistent thing to do is to change our plea.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"Uncommon Christians"

By A. E. Whitted

TEXT: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly."— John 10:10 b.

Jesus the blessed Son of God came to bring light and life into this world of darkness and sin. Before his coming the whole world verily sat in darkness, but out of that darkness has arisen a Day-star for every one who will believe. The gift of the Spirit of life dwells in those who are united to Christ in a fullness more abundant than was ever revealed before. And what is this gift we are speaking of? It is not some power or principle, but rather a person, yea, a very true Person which dwells within every believer. This is the regeneration for which all ages waited till the Word was made flesh and dwelt with us. Herein can we see a part of this great promise, the fullness of life given to us by the personal indwelling of the Holy Spirit, and besides this, the gift of life is abundant.

It seems to me that Christ could foresee two possible results of his redemptive work. In the first place the producing of disciples who have life in the common, ordinary sense, and in the second place, those who have life above the ordinary. Two classes of Christians, the common and the uncommon. It is concerning the latter that I wish to speak. Of course it is the desire of the Christ that all receive the abundant life and thereby reach the uncommon class. Look about you and test men by the standard of Christ and I am quite sure you will become somewhat discouraged. Thousands profess to have life but what about the abundant life that is spoken of in the promise? Who are these uncommon Christians?

I. In the first place the uncommon Christian is the one who takes the Bible, the Book, as his creed, his rule of faith and practice. Many profess to do this but are not living up to their profession. Many are theorizing in this matter and we well know it is not theory but practice that counts. "To obey is better than sacrifice." "If you love me, ye will keep my word." So long as you hold to the theory that the words which God has given are Spirit and life and do not go about to practice them as such in your life you will not be able to rise out of the ordinary place to that extraordinary one God means that you should fill. The uncommon Christian not only reveres God's Word but will use it, study it, meditate upon it, obey it. If you would attain unto that uncommon position get the dust off the covers of the old Book and delve into its sweetness, for therein shall ye find LIFE.

II. Again the uncommon Christian is one who lives his life with no confidence in the flesh. His confidence is in the Spirit. He knows with Paul that, they that are after the flesh do mind the things of the flesh, but they that are after the spirit do mind the things of the spirit. For to be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace. Because the carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God. The Holy Spirit dwells within him, interpreting the word, restraining from all evil, pointing to that which is good. Yes, those greater things that Christ promised, the uncommon Christian can do because of the power of the indwelling Spirit.

III. The uncommon Christian is one also, who when he accepts Jesus Christ as his Savior, crowns him also as his Lord. Our text suggests that Christ might occupy two possible relationships with man. I think that experience also proves these two relationships. Many accept Christ as their Savior but are not willing to crown him Lord in their lives, to make him absolute sovereign, one who has the right of rule and direction in their every walk of life. But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear: having a good conscience; that whereas they speak evil of you, as of evil doers, they may be ashamed that falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ (1 Peter 3:15, 16). But there are so many that do not know the blessing of thus exalting their Lord. Instead of being Christ-managed, they try to pose as being self-managed, and take pride in it. The result of such living is disastrous. The real aim of life is lost; life's song is lowered to a minor key. Life is lived but without the joy and blessing of fruitfulness. On the other hand the Christian that crowns his Christ Lord has a joy that is unspeak-able and full of glory. In the midst of the common things of life he has been raised to that uncommon position with his Lord.

IV. The uncommon Christian is one who has a heavenly vision. He has mounted to higher ground. The new height that he has attained through prayer has lifted him above the hindering things of earth and has caused him to catch a gleam of the beauties of heaven. Satan's darts cannot reach him, his faith is planted firmly on the Rock. It is said that those who fly, learn to see a great distance and to talk of things in a big way; much more the man who has risen to "sit in heavenly places" with his Lord. He is one who can truthfully sing from the depths of his heart the strains of this old song:

"I'm dwelling now upon the heights,
Of Beulah land, sweet Beulah land;
In all its joys my soul delights,
In Beulah land, sweet Beulah land.
I feel his loving presence near;
The music of his voice I hear,
And nearer does my home appear,
From Beulah land.

Here richest pleasures I have found,
In Beulah land, sweet Beulah land;
Here rivers of delight abound,
In Beulah land, sweet Beulah land.
His grace and mercies never cease;
Each day my hopes and joys increase;
He gives me freedom, gives me peace,
In Beulah land.

My heart is fixed, my faith is clear,
In Beulah land, sweet Beulah land;
Content until my Lord appear,
In Beulah land, sweet Beulah land.
Then when the shadows of the night
Shall reach me on this lofty height,
My soul to him shall take its flight
From Beulah land.

V. And again the uncommon Christian is one who gives his life to God in service for others. To do this it is not necessary to become a minister or a missionary, although those who have thus consecrated themselves should without question be in the uncommon class. I mean the one who realizes what it means his high calling to fulfill, whatever God's plan or place for his life. In business, in the professional life, as a servant—in whatever calling, "faithful as unto Christ." Whatever his task, he has but one end in view, that he might in his service work to the glory of God and for the good of his fellowmen. With such the common life becomes uncommon. He has unconsciously lifted himself to the rank of an uncommon Christian. I read a story recently of a scrub woman who by hard and persistent effort succeeded in laying by a mite and was supporting as many as thirty Bible women across the sea. Of her kind the Master will say, "she hath done what she could." Though unconsciously and unseen by men, such as she quietly slip out of the ordinary into the extraordinary. Such do verily become Christians.

VI. Lastly I would say that the uncommon Christian is one who in the midst of the joys and blessings of earth, amid the favors heaped upon him by the world, remembers that his true portion is in heaven. Whose true hope is found in waiting the coming of the King. But it is possible for even Christians to allow their blessings to be turned to curses. They plan to pray; they plan to pay; they even plan the greatest of sacrifices, but as they plan they become so enamored with their blessings that they forget the Blessor. They would rather hear most any other word than, "Behold, I come quickly." The uncommon Christian walks with his head erect, his eyes lifted, his gaze fixed. Busy, yes about the Master's business—occupied, yes, with the task of helping to meet the needs of humanity and to bring men into the narrow way. Yet he ever patiently waits to see the face, to hear the voice of the one he loves and serves.

Strive to be classed with the uncommon Christian, that you might be able to shout with assurance,

"I shall be ready to welcome the Savior,
I may behold him descend from on high,
Clothed in his garments of heavenly splendor;
O what a day, when the King shall draw nigh!"

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Giving

By Margaret Shearer

OUR SCRIPTURE

My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways (Prov. 23:26).

Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee turn not thou away (Matt. 5:42).

Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, east out devils: freely ye have received freely give (Matt. 10:8).

For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul (Matt. 16:26).

Jesus said unto him, If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come and follow me (Matt. 19:21).

A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another (John 13:34).

I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, It is more blessed to give than to receive (Acts 20:35).

So then neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase (1 Cor. 3:7).

Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver (2 Cor. 9:7).

OUR MEDITATION

It being the season of giving, carrying over from Thanksgiving, and Christmas, it occurred to me that it might be profitable to consider in a general way the theme of giving. Speaking of Thanksgiving reminds me of a little girl who asked what Thanksgiving was, and another little girl replied, "Why, you give somebody something, and that's the giving part, and they say 'thanks', and that's the thanks part, and putting them together you have Thanksgiving." And do you know, Thanksgiving means just as little as that to some people, for many of us do not thank our heavenly Father for what he has given us, nor do we give anybody anything that they might thank us for.

The word Give, next to Love, that is, Divine Love, is one of the most embracing words in the English language. Its meanings are so wide and varied that it can not be limited. All life is made up of giving. Just as we see love manifested in all God's creations and in man's make-up, so we also note that in the natural order of things is the process of giving. The most common meaning of the word give is to bestow without receiving a return. That is the true meaning as given in Webster's dictionary, but we have come to modify its meaning somewhat to this: to bestow with the expectation of receiving a return.

To further show the strength of the word, let us just add a word or two to form a phrase with give as the principal word, and see the different traits and actions which can be brought out. Thus, to give back, means to return. To give chase—to pursue. To give ear—to listen. To give forth—to publish or tell. To give up—to despair of attaining that which is desired, whether something to possess, or a state of mind or heart. Give over—to yield or abandon. To give way—to withdraw or give place, or, to yield to force or pressure. To give in to—to yield assent. To give out—to expend all one's strength. This may not mean anything, but I thought it might help to just bear in mind as we study the word, that more is implied than merely offering somebody something.

Do we realize then, that consciously or unconsciously, we are constantly giving? From the mere act of breathing, in which we give off the impure air in exchange for the pure, to the greatest act we can do, we are giving. In our labors, we give our service, our strength, ourselves. In our mingling with one another, we give our friendship, our sympathy, our love. In conversing or otherwise communicating with each other, we are giving our thoughts and ideas. An author gives us his writings; an inventor, his ideas; anyone who gives himself up to a profession to which he devotes himself for the advancement of mankind, gives what represents a life-time.

In this respect however, the word give differs from love. We can give either good or evil. For instance, if we give someone a drink containing that deadly foe, alcohol, or offer our young friend a cigarette, we are giving that which will injure instead of benefit. What a wonderful world we would have if everyone would strive to imitate God in that they would give nothing except that which would be for the benefit of mankind. And we might sum up by saying, we give an influence, either for good or evil. Have you ever ridden on a ship and stood at the back and noticed the path it left on the water as far back as you could see? While attending the State C. E. Convention at Pittsburgh, we took a boat ride down the river one afternoon and a lady in our crowd called attention to this path left in the water by the boat and remarked, "That reminds me of our life." Though we pass on, we leave a line of influence behind, and should we not strive to make that a blessing rather than a curse?

Now, we have been considering in a way the things we are giving; let us look at it in another way and think of some of the things we have been given.

First, it has been truthfully said that we who are living in this present day are the heirs of all the ages gone before. I wonder if we appreciate that fact fully.

Take for example, from an educational standpoint, the free access we have to the best books. Do we think when we read a book that it is the product of some man's thought? Years of experience and study were necessary for a man to write a book, yet we pick it up and with apparently no effort at all, and in a short space of time, the contents are ours. And the value of books, at the head of which of course stands the Bible, can not be estimated. Yet, they have been handed down to us.

And then consider our country. Do we appreciate its peace, its freedom, and its government, and do we think that it meant hardship, struggle, yes, war, to obtain these? These have been given us by our forefathers. Why, so lately as in the beginning of our country's history was it necessary to go to church armed. We can go to church now unmolested, but rather than accept that privilege, we jump in our cars and go away from our churches.

And consider what has been given us in the mode of travel. In the early settlement of our country, the mail was carried on horseback and in mail coaches, and if we lived many miles apart, days and weeks were necessary to get a letter to our friends. Now, we have our fast mail trains and airplane service which makes it possible to send a letter across the continent in several days. Or better still, we can communicate with a friend by wire in several minutes, or even hear the sound of their voice over the telephone. Do we consider that through the deep thought and hard work of some one gone before us, we have been given these things? We could go on and on, naming the things which have been given us, by our earthly friends, but let us next look to the original Giver of all things from not only the beginning of our country, but of Time.

The commonplace things—do we consider the air we breathe, the sunshine we enjoy, the beautiful flowers, our food—everything necessary for our existence in the flesh, even our enjoyment? God gave them all. But he did not stop there. He wanted us to have another, a better and higher life, and so he gave us that greatest of all gifts, his Son, through whom, by faith if we will confess him, we may receive eternal life. Christ was willing to give up all that we might receive salvation. Should we not then give ourselves and all we have to him? Indeed, if we could do this we would be sure to give the right things in the right way to our fellowmen.

And, if we could only believe that his word is true when it says that it is more blessed to give than to receive! We do receive a great blessing in giving a satisfaction, a peace, which passeth understanding, and added to that, we suffer no material loss. We can not expect to receive in some mysterious way, $100.00 if we give $10.00, but you have repeatedly heard people say in giving to the church or a charitable cause, that they did not see how they could afford it, but they just did, and never missed it. Do you think that can be explained in any other way than that it was God's mercy manifested just as truly as in the incident of the measure of meal in the Old Testament, with which we are all familiar?

Now as the Christmas season has passed, let us continue its giving and seek to be dominated by Christ's spirit in our giving; and all the year around, let us give Christ his way in our life; that he through us may give such as will lift up our fellowmen rather than push them downward.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father, let us at all times give first ourselves to thee to be used as thou seest fit, that through us the gospel might be given to all the world, and the knowledge of him might cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Amen.

Our Worship Program

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE TWO FOUNDATIONS—Matt. 7:24-29.

Obedience to the words of Jesus is the only foundation on which one can afford to build his hopes for eternity. Self-righteousness and human wisdom are as shifting sand.

TUESDAY

CURE OF A LEPER—Matt. 8:1-4.

Sin, like leprosy, is deadly, loathsome and unclean, separates men from God and makes them unfit for heaven and the society of all that is pure and holy.

WEDNESDAY

THE PALSY OF HELPLESSNESS—Matt. 8:5-13.

The impotence of man in physical affliction finds its healing and strength by faith in him who came from heaven clothed with all authority and power.

THURSDAY

PETER'S MOTHER-IN-LAW AND OTHERS—Matt. 8:14-17.

The Great Physician meets all conditions of weak, suffering and diseased humanity with his renewing grace, and immediately sets the renewed life to work ministering to others.

FRIDAY

TESTS OF SINCERITY—Matt. 8:18-22.

The lives of some people in turning to Christ seem to be touched only superficially, as the winds ruffle the surface of the sea, and when the breath of sentimental appeal is passed, it is discovered that the strong and deep currents of sin remain unchanged.

SATURDAY

STILLING THE STORMS—Matt. 8:23-27.

The Word of God is still as powerful and prevailing over every phase of life and nature as it was when Jesus stilled the tempestuous sea of Galilee, and no one is in danger of shipwreck except he in whom the Word slumbers by reason of his own unawakened condition.

SUNDAY

THE CURE OF MADMEN—Matt. 8:28-34.

Jesus started a revival and devils were expelled as the souls of men were changed. But as soon as it began to effect the business of certain men, they wanted it stopped and sent the evangelist away. How modern!—G. S. B.

Jew and Samaritan

Christ's clothing and language would both show him to be a Jew. He was on his way from Jerusalem (though she probably did not know that), and she doubtless thought that he was a Judean. It was an old quarrel, going back to the importation of Assyrians to take the place of the exiled Jews, and to the refusal of Zerubbabel to allow the mixed race that resulted, with their heathen tendencies and practices, to join in the rebuilding of the temple. This antagonism was intensified by the doctrinal peculiarities of the Samaritans, their acceptance of the Pentateuch only as true Scripture. The disciples, to be sure, had gone to Sychar, to buy food from Samaritans, but they were from Galilee, and the Galileans were less strict in this matter than the Judeans.

Thirsts of the Soul

Every person is full of wants, longings, desires, hopes, both of the body and of the soul. There are the thirsts for pleasure, for power, for money, for respect, for love, for knowledge. There are thirsts for the friendship and love of God, for forgiveness, immortal life, holiness, happiness, usefulness, heaven, a larger sphere and broader life. The larger the soul, the more and greater are its thirsts. The greatness of any being is measured (1) by the number of his desires and thirsts; (2) by their quality; (3) by their capacity, intensity. All growth of the soul is by means of these hungers and thirsts, and their satisfaction. It is a sickly soul that has no appetite. Education, civilization, progress, goodness, always increase the thirst of the soul. And no temporal, worldly, bodily thing, wealth, power, pleasure, can really satisfy the desires of the soul. Seeking true satisfaction in this world is like trying to quench the thirst by drinking the salt waters of the sea. The more we drink the thirstier we are.

Living Water

A fountain or a lake which does not give out of its waters becomes stagnant, dying, not living, and bringing death to others. If we are not ready to let the living water flow freely to others we soon lose it ourselves; it either dries up, or becomes fouled. It is the nature of a real Christian to impart this blessing to others. It is not always possible for one to speak, or to preach to others. There are some who cannot speak of the things which they value the most; the deepest things of their hearts are inarticulate. I have in mind one who is considered extremely talkative, and ready to tell all she knows, or thinks, or feels, to her friends and neighbors. But I happen to know that any really deep feeling is never spoken of; there have been thoughts and feelings in her heart which, when once her confidence was given to one of her closest friends, gave that friend an almost diametrically opposite idea of her real character—inside. And yet even to her she had not told all. But if it is inarticulate the possession of this living water does produce results that will help those around. It must do so in some way, or cease to be living.

True Worship

(1) God wants all men to worship him, because thus they become like him, near to him.

(2) Thus every heart may become hallowed ground.

(3) Worship must be spiritual rather than formal. (4) It must be sincere. (5) It is the fruit of love rather than fear. (6) True worship cannot be separated from morality, while formal worship can. (7) Worship is essential to the religious life. (8) Forms and rites are valuable only as they aid the spirit in its worship. (9) It is not necessary to renounce forms (for some form is necessary in public worship), but to fill the forms with the true spirit.

(10) Sir Matthew Hale found that prayer gave a "tincture of devotion" to all secular employments; that "it was a Christian chemistry, converting those acts which are materially natural and civil into acts truly and formally religious." He discovered in habitual devotion what Herbert calls "the elixir of life."

"Look on the Fields"

The disciples pressed food on their Master, whom they had left too wearied to go farther. But the glorious work he had been doing in the conversion of the sinful woman had so filled his soul with joy that he had no need of material sustenance. He had meat to eat of which his disciples did not know. And when they asked him in surprise what that food was, and who had brought it to him, Christ answered plainly, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

"If Jesus had depended for spiritual food on the human appreciation of the men he served, what a poor, beggared, starved life would have been his! But his patience, charity and forgiving love never gave out; and the reason was in the fact that his food was received from a heavenly source." "The lesson which Jesus wished to give his disciples, and which is our lesson today, is the satisfying joy which lies in duty."—The Illustrated Quarterly.

Christian Endeavor and Missions

By Miss Grace Yoder, Missionary Secretary

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise him that I will strive to do whatever he would have me do. I will make it the rule of my life to pray and read the Bible, to support the work and worship of my church, and to take a part in the meetings and other activities of this society. These things will I do unless hindered by conscientious reasons, and in them all I will seek the Savior's guidance." This is the pledge that every active member of the Christian Endeavor must sign and live up to. We need but to read it over to be impressed with the spirit that runs through it—it is the spirit of service. Every Christian Endeavorer is a servant of Christ, and in serving Christ we must serve our fellowmen.

The missionary spirit is a spirit of service and sacrifice. It is because we love Christ that we are anxious to serve him, to preach him to others, to work for him, to sacrifice self for the furtherance of his cause. Therefore a successful Christian Endeavor is really missionary in spirit, as its objective or purpose is service. To be efficient it must encourage and be a promoter of that work.

There are many ways in which this missionary spirit may be promoted. One of these would be the organization of a missionary committee in each society. This committee should have in charge the preparation of a missionary program to be given every month or so. Some societies have already effected such an organization with very good and helpful results. Another way of promoting this missionary spirit would be to hold a correspondence with the missionaries on the foreign fields, as well as with some of the native converts themselves. These letters could be read during the Christian Endeavor hour, perhaps at the missionary meeting. Such a correspondence would prove to be of benefit and a real blessing to the society as well as to those on the field. The study of missionary books is always very helpful. The Women's Missionary Society and the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha are now undertaking such a study, but not all Christian Endeavor members belong to one or the other of these societies.

There are a great many missionary books that are worthy of study. Among them might be mentioned the following: "The Lure of Africa," by G. G. Patton; "Looking Forward with South America," by Stanley High; "South American Neighbors," by Homer C. Stuntz; "The Unity of the Americas," by Robert E. Speer; "The Emergency in China," "Hudson Taylor; and the "China Inland Missions," and many others. Missionary books are written in story form, and it would be well for every Endeavorer to make it a practice to read a certain number of missionary books each year. Perhaps a report of some missionary book at the Christian Endeavor meeting would be interesting as well as helpful.

There are many other ways in which the missionary spirit might be promoted, but perhaps the most important of these is by means of prayer. The spirit of service runs through our pledge, but likewise the spirit of worship. Prayer and Service go hand in hand, and they should not be separated. Definite prayer for our missionaries and their work, will accomplish much more than service without prayer. We should pray that we might find out God's plan for our lives, and then for strength and guidance in carrying out his work.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for January 24)

Radio Messages from Mexico

There was once a very pretty little girl named Lolita. She had black hair and real dark snappy eyes. Her skin was darker than ours a little bit. She was a little Mexican girl, just the kind we like to play with. And like other little boys and girls, this little Mexican girl liked to play with other children. There was one little boy, named Luis, whom she particularly liked to play with but he liked to tease her, and would often run away where the other children were, leaving her to play without him. One day when Luis ran away Lolita got angry because she could not play the games she wanted to without him and she decided she would show him that he could not run off that way. She was a very naughty little girl, and she thought of something that the most of us would not even have thought of. The next day, she got a chance to carry out her plan. There was a small stream near the place where these boys and girls played with a rather light board across it. Lolita watched very carefully and one time when Luis was running a little carelessly across it with his back toward her, she slipped up and tilted the board, planning to dump him in the water. Just as it often happens when children, or grown-ups either, are planning something unkind, more happened than Lolita had planned. Luis fell in the water all right, but when he fell his arm hit a rock and when he got up he was crying loudly, for he had broken his arm. Lolita was very much frightened, for Luis was a brave little boy who hardly ever cried. She was sorry then for what she had done, but it was too late. The time that she should have thought about what might happen was before, not afterwards.

Now there are several things for us to think about in this story. If this little Mexican girl had known about Jesus and how he loves little boys and girls, she would not have wanted to hurt anyone. She did not know about our Savior who loves little boys and girls so well that when he was on earth he told the mothers to bring them to him and then he would bless them. Don't you wish you could have told this little girl how to be a Christian and learn to love others. We, Junior Christian Endeavorers, are taught by our parents that Jesus wants us to return good for evil and not to be unkind to others just because they are unkind to us. There are lots of Mexican children who are not Christians like we are and need to be told the story of Jesus' love, like Lolita needed it. There are some forms of religion in Mexico, but there are not very many people who know about Jesus as we do. Long years ago, the Spaniards brought a kind of Christianity into this country but the leaders and teachers of this religion have become so wicked that they do not teach it truly any more. There are many children as well as grown people in that country that need to know Jesus. Let us try to get the message about him to them.

In one of our Bible references for the week, the one named Success, the great preacher Paul, tells us how we should talk with and feel toward those we wish to help. Paul, you remember, was a very great teacher. He traveled about and preached to many people about Jesus and so we can well accept his advice and learn from him the best way to give people the message of God's Love. In this particular Scripture, he is telling one of his churches, to which he had reached in his travels, how he came to them. First, he says, that when he went to that church he did not try to act wise. Did you ever tell some other little boy or girl how to do something? Do you remember that you felt that you were pretty wise to know something that they did not? It is not best to act as though we know it all. Paul says that when he went to that church he was determined not to act in such a way that they would feel that he thought himself wiser than they. Let us remember this when we have an opportunity to help someone that does not know as much as we do, or when we have a chance to tell someone about the Jesus way of living. Let us remember not to act wise as though we knew everything that was to be known.

Paul tells us another thing about the way to tell others about Jesus. He says that when he preached or talked with them, he told only about Jesus. He talked on the power of God and the love of God and of Jesus. In other words, he told them the things that could help them, and the things they needed to know. Let us remember this too, when we are trying to help others. Let us have a chance to tell someone who is not as good as we are, something to help them. We should do it in the very easiest words we can understand that we can think of. If we find

Taking the Gospel to the Jews

By Ella Saylor

During the time I spent in the Bible Institute of Los Angeles I had the privilege of having Jewish visitation as one of my assignments. It was a hard assignment, yet I enjoyed it. There are many interesting things about the work. It causes the Scriptures to be opened up in a new way to one, and gives a greater love for the people who were God's chosen people. Also one is brought to realize the great need of taking the Gospel to them. We must realize that the Jew is lost and needs a Savior. They have rejected the Gospel and it is the Gentile's place to take it to them.

The most work I did with the Jew was house to house visitation. This enables one to meet them in their homes and to have heart to heart talks with them. It is hard for the Gentile to approach the Jew, but we must go, and try to approach him as Paul tells us in 1 Corinthians 9:20 to 22: And unto the Jews I became as a Jew that I might gain the Jews. After handing them an invitation and inviting them into a Jewish mass meeting, which is held at the Institute twice a month, we asked them a few questions which were intended to create an interest in the meeting, and then asked them about their Messiah. This generally gets them interested and opens the way for us to go on and open up the Scriptures to them.

There are some who are not orthodox and who do not believe in the Old Testament. With these it seems we are against a stone wall, but the only thing we can do is to give them the Word of God and let the Holy Spirit do the rest. Some afternoons it would seem that the whole time had been wasted. We would go back tired and weary and often having been scoffed at because we had told them about their Messiah. But we rejoiced that the Lord counted us worthy to take the Gospel to his own people.

In our work we found that some were hungry for the Gospel and are seeking the truth. Others of them are drifting into other religious beliefs, and into unbelief and worldliness. This is a great field in which to labor. It brings a blessing to work with them and occasionally see one accept Christ as their true Messiah. And it means so much to those who accept the Gospel, even though to do so often means that they will be driven from home and loved ones. But they usually stay true to Christ and his teachings.

Again I praise the Lord for giving me this privilege of serving him among the Jews, for it has given me a great love for them, and has opened up the Scriptures to me in a new way. This field is white and ready for the harvest, and I pray that there may be many who will take the Gospel to the Jew.

Has Slavery Been Abolished?

An interesting test of the usefulness of the League of Nations will be afforded by Prof. E. A. Ross's report on forced labor on Portuguese Africa. This report, made after an inquiry by Professor Ross and Dr. R. Melville Cramer undertaken at the request of a distinguished American committee, was presented to the Temporary Slavery Commission of the League on July 13.

The present Portuguese substitute for slavery is forced labor. Each native is required to pay yearly taxes; and the theory is that only when these taxes have not been paid are men and women seized and forced to work for the government. As Ross and Cramer show by repeated examples, this theory means nothing. In practice, the Portuguese seize natives at their will and require them to work for months or even years. Sometimes this labor is rewarded by a receipted tax bill, or by a payment in money, which in a typical case amounted to fifty cents for six months' work. Just as often there is no payment of any kind, and not even adequate food or tools are provided. The village supplies food for its own men and women when it can. Labor is requisitioned without regard to the agricultural requirements of the village, so that it is not uncommon for all the able-bodied workers to be taken at the moment when crops are being planted or harvested, thus ruining a whole year's food supply for the community. In addition to this labor in lieu of taxes, the Portuguese plantation owners are in the habit of buying labor from the government, which sends out and seizes workers who are delivered, often in chains, to the plantation. The planter then pays their wages in a lump sum to the government official, who usually puts the aforesaid lump sum into his own pocket.

However, in either case the result to the natives is the same. We summarize incidents taken at random from the Ross report:

From one village eighty-four people were taken eight years ago and have never been heard of since * * * Of two hundred men taken from one place, eleven died on the three-day march to the scene of their labor * * * Pregnant women are forced to do heavy labor on the roads or in the fields * * * One man who stopped work for a day to help his wife in childbirth was severely beaten and then forced to work all day without food * * * Fearful of an uprising, the Portuguese government refuses all arms and ammunition to the natives who are obliged to do their hunting with bows and spears * * * On the plantations, to stop work for a moment means a beating with the hippo-hide lash * * * The government officials are aided by negro policemen, and both these and the white men violate the native women at will * * * When an uprising took place in Portuguese East Africa a few years ago in protest against these conditions, the Portuguese took a number of prisoners and thriftily starved them to death * * * Much of the forced labor is expended needlessly. Roads are built where there is no traffic, are made wider than necessary, are laid out by incompetent Portuguese engineers in the most inefficient manner, and the natives, being given no tools, are forced to use their own crude implements, and are then often beaten for failure to accomplish more * * * Twenty missionaries have left one district in the last eighteen months.—The New Republic.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Johnstown, Pennsylvania

This report covers the period from September 1st, to January 1st. Immediately upon returning from National Conference, we held a "Joint Rallying Meeting" composed of representative committees of all the auxiliaries of the church. Thus we unified our rallying activities. The church and all organizations responded quickly to these rallying plans, audiences increased in numbers, and soon we were moving along with, at least the usual pace.

The next forward step was the organization of "The Seventy." We issued a call for VOLUNTEERS to do PERSONAL WORK, not just for a few weeks, but permanently. The response was most excellent. Over 80 are now enrolled in this work. They are divided into teams with captains, etc. We have just enough organization and system to know the work is being accomplished, but it is all volunteer. We meet monthly and the pastor meets twice a month with the captains. The first month was given almost entirely to visiting the indifferent members of the church. Over 100 calls were made in this month. Then and since then, these noble workers have been calling in the homes of the unsaved. The personal work done by the Seventy contributed very much to the success of our evangelistic campaign. Their work was so pronounced that several of the churches near us are patterning after the Seventy in forming similar organizations. We highly recommend this plan to all Brethren churches.

October was "Preparation Month" for our evangelistic campaign. This church believes in thorough preparation for evangelism. Neither money nor effort is spared in informing and arousing the membership and in advertising in the general community. Yet, sensationalism and worldliness are kept out. The spiritual is made pre-eminent! During this month of preparation several families were received into membership.

November was a great month of victories. On the first Sunday evening, we enjoyed the largest communion of the church's history. Brother Dyoll Belote, now pastor in Moxham, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, assisted us. The next two weeks were occupied with intensive preparation for the coming of Dr. Bell. Thus, we had SIX WEEKS of genuine preparation for our evangelistic meetings. We were ready, waiting, anxiously expecting his arrival.

Now, we record two unfortunate things about our meeting. It was unfortunate that we did not begin on Sunday. Brother Bell arrived on Monday and met just "The Seventy" that night. With no Saturday night service, we had only four public services the first week. Then, the second week was Thanksgiving week with all the distracting interests that are unavoidable in a city. BUT, in spite of these two serious handicaps and a few others, the meeting was a pronounced success. There were 51 confessions. From October 1st, until the meeting opened we had received 18 at the regular services, making a total of 69 confessions in all. A few of these were reconsecrations and some sought membership elsewhere. We have received into membership 56 new members.

Brother Bell preached sermons full of Gospel truth and Spirit power. The fundamental doctrines of Christianity were proclaimed fearlessly. Every message exalted Christ in his essential Deity of Person and Atonement for sin. The membership of the church was instructed, inspired, and unified. Brother Bell was at home among friends and the fellowship of the campaign was sweet. We feel absolutely sure that the Hand of the Lord was the guiding power bringing Brother Bell to us this year as our evangelist.

Two events of more than usual interest have become history since the meeting closed. "Brethren Night" with "Welcoming of New Members" was celebrated with over 400 present. Each new member had a "Big Brother" or "Big Sister" to see that they got acquainted. Our Christmas Cantata was rendered with credit. We have one of the best organs, organists, choir leaders, and volunteer choirs in the city! It was an inspiration to see a choir of 45 voices volunteer to sing the praises of our Lord in this city in which church music is becoming commercialized to the extreme.

Space does not permit the recording of all the advances made by the different organizations of the church during the period covered by this report. However, since November 1, the Bible school has maintained the best record of attendance in its history. And now, we will soon go to Dayton for an evangelistic meeting. Pray for us that the Lord may be glorified in our ministry.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

School work was resumed Tuesday, January 5. The semester will close January 29.

Professor McClain spent the vacation with Dr. Bell at Dayton.

Professor Anspach, Professor Mason and the writer attended an educational meeting at Columbus. It was gratifying to note that the work of Ashland stands high in the estimation of those who have charge of the department of Public Instruction in Ohio. The meeting had to do with the work of preparing teachers at the College.

The local congregation observed the week of prayer beginning last Monday. Dr. Bame preached Sunday morning and evening. Rev. Comer of the U. B. church preached Monday evening; Dr. Porter of the M. E. church, Tuesday evening; Rev. Prather of the Church of the Brethren, Wednesday evening; Professor McClain, Thursday evening; and the writer, Friday evening.

Professor Puterbaugh attended the meeting of the Organic Chemists in Rochester, New York during the vacation.

Superintendent J. A. McDowell, of the Ashland schools, was recently elected president of the Ohio State Teachers' Association. Mr. McDowell teaches in our summer school and this is quite a distinction for the College.

Brother and Sister Link of the Canton church paid the college a visit recently.

Dr. Bame, our pastor, has left for a meeting in one of the Johnstown churches. Mrs. Bame accompanied him.

Three comforters were recently received at the Dormitory from the W. M. S. of Gratis, Ohio.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

To the saints and faithful brethren, greeting: After reading how many churches and their pastors have prospered, we thought it good to report how this church is faring.

Before I go into details, I want to state that I am going to report only what you would find to exist here if you were to visit us. A good cake is one that has beneath the frosting that which makes it what it appears to be on the outside.

The Bethel church was organized forty-one years ago. It had eleven members and some of them are still living. At the time our church history was written, Brother L. G. Wood was pastor of this church. Since then they have had a struggle to exist.

We have been here a little over seven months, and we find that the Mulvane church depends very much on their pastor for leadership, and with proper shepherding, we believe they can be moulded into a real, live-wire church. And we are praying that we may be able for the job.

One thing that makes church work go forward is proper organization, and the church that tries to run without organization will fail. I was told once regarding the beginning of a certain organization, that this was too much machinery, and that the more machinery a church had the sooner it would go to pieces. This may be true in some cases, but in general a church without organization and system is like an engine without a governor. We have adopted some system for doing things in this church. We have planned to have regular quarterly business meetings, to have communion twice a year, to have reports of all money paid in and paid out by the various organizations made once a quarter. This is only a starter and the people like it.

The church was in need of a revival and it was decided that the delegates and the pastor should secure at the Mid-west district conference some one to hold us a two weeks' meeting. We were fortunate in getting Brother A. B. Cover. We set the date for November 2, to avoid the bad weather, but we did not miss the bad weather. The meeting was just beginning to draw the crowds when the rain set in on Thursday and stopped the interest. The sky was clear in the second week until Friday when there was another rain and no services until Sunday. Sunday night a fair crowd came out and we had to close. One confessed Christ on the last night, and was baptized on Monday and took communion with the church.

We found Brother Cover a real co-worker and his ability as an evangelist is excellent. Could we have had an evangelistic meeting to begin when our revival came to a close the result would likely have been immense. Brother Cover left us with the church standing close to their pastor and his good advice has not lost its effect. We hope to have Brother Cover try it again when the weather conditions are more favorable. We want to thank the Falls City church for so kindly loaning their pastor and pray the Lord to richly repay them.

Our church attendance runs close around seventy when weather permits, and the prospects for a church at this place are exceptionally good.

On Wednesday night before Christmas the Bethel church put on a Christmas entertainment that was the best religious program I ever saw. It was the story of the birth of Christ told in action. It outdid the programs of the other churches in spirituality. That night we were told our place of worship was too small.

Now here is what they do for their pastor. Last fall while I was at conference one good brother came down and plowed our wheat ground and sowed our wheat. This was W. E. Howard. Another slipped a front quarter of veal into our Ford; that was B. B. Davis. Another brought a fine large piece of beef, about fifty pounds; that was Albert Howard. And just yesterday a Ford ran into our yard and left a quarter of a veal as a New Year's treat; that was M. L. Howard. All this makes us feel that the parish is thinking of us, and in gratitude we want to give them a square deal in services. That is our aim.

Now you have the cake with the frosting on it, but it would not be fair not to tell you that the sugar has been rather scarce, because of the hardships this church has had this year. The weather was exceedingly dry last summer and the farmers lost their corn crop; hundreds of acres were nothing but fodder and poor for that. Wheat made from two to sixteen bushels, and other crops suffered as well. And this hit the church hard. That the mission allowance was cut off; this was fifteen dollars a month. This might seem fair to any one who did not know the conditions of this church. If this church does not need the support now, it never did. And we are willing for any one to come here to investigate. I think any field ought to be investigated before it is cut off. And the Board should have some supervision over the church it supports, over the pastor and the field, so that the mission board and the field get a square deal.

This part of our letter is not news but business.

Pray for us.

H. W. ANDERSON, Pastor.

chance to tell some one who does not know about Jesus, the story of Jesus' love, we should tell them the easiest things to understand. We want others to know of Jesus' love for all little boys and girls, so that they may learn to love and serve him.

Then, let us Juniors remember to pray for the little Mexican children. Let us pray that they may learn to love Jesus, and let us remember Paul's message about how to tell others the story of God's love. Then, when we have a chance to help those who need us or if we should have an opportunity to be missionaries to the little Mexican children, we shall have the right spirit in which to help them.

PLEASANT HILL

Time passes swiftly, and it seems but yesterday since we took up the work at Pleasant Hill, and yet more than six months have passed. We are glad that the Lord has blessed us together here and there has been a steady increase in the interest and attendance. Sunday, December 20, broke the record for a number of years in attendance and the White Gift offering reached the highest point in five years, and only once did it ever exceed it and that was during War time when money was plenty.

Financially the church is in better shape than for a long time and this in the face of conditions that would not seem to warrant it, for the most of our people are farmers and they are facing great financial distress just now.

Christmas eve the entire community came to our church to witness a pageant "The Adoration" which we are told was the best ever given in this church or community. It is certain that the committee worked faithfully to make it very worthwhile. In addition to the White Gift offering that was presented at that time, seventy-five persons pledged their service to the active program of the church and the Master.

We conducted a short series of meetings in November to revive the work and give it impetus, but the late fall and corn husking kept many from coming. The attendance was good however, considering the handicap. After continuing for two weeks we decided to close and open again at a more opportune time.

Since our work began here we have been privileged to unite in matrimony three couples: Miss Viola Swigart and Mr. Kenneth Helman; Miss Mildred Westfall and Mr. Raymond Stoner; Mrs. Helena Chambers and Mr. Wm. Schellhouse. We pray God's blessing upon these new homes that come under the influence of this church.

It was our duty shortly after accepting the call here, to conduct the funeral services of Sister Mabel Carey. Miss Carey was the eldest child of Brother and Sister Forest Carey. She passed away August 1, at the age of 16 years, 7 months and 15 days. Miss Carey united with the church on Easter Sunday, 1923, and was one of the sweetest lives we ever knew. Our loss was Heaven's gain.

On October 21st the Angel of Death called another one of our flock. This time Sister Bessie Carey, the wife of Brother Henry Carey. She was one of our most loyal members. She and her husband were ordained as Deaconess and Deacon under the ministry of Brother W. J. Barnhart, and both were widely known throughout the brotherhood. We were assisted in the funeral service by Brethren R. F. Porte, of Louisville; S. Lowman of Oakville, and W. J. Barnhart, of West Milton. Her loss is keenly felt by her family and the church, who sorely miss her loving ministry.

OLD DOMINION

On the 27th of December the Bethlehem congregation near Harrisonburg, Rockingham County, Virginia, re-dedicated their church building, which was enlarged with Sunday school rooms nicely arranged. The entire cost was $3,000, which was all paid before the dedication day. On the same day we had a Sunday School Rally which was well attended, showing a growing and healthy condition. Our proficient superintendent, Brother Lee Logan, just knows how to do things. This congregation is moving forward on the old Gospel plan. No side lines of entertaining or amusements to draw the people. No long constitution to govern or discipline. We have an Official Board with 5 Deacons. The former look after the financial part. The latter the Spiritual and working parties looking to those who need encouragement and Christian help. All matters pertaining to the welfare and business are submitted to the congregation for ratification or rejection. So you see we are strictly congregational and stand upon the General Organization of the Brethren church. We are one body, working in peace and harmony for the promotion of the great cause of the Christian church.

JOHN W. PLATT IS RE-APPOINTED TO POSTAL JOB HERE

(The following from "The Manteca Bulletin" concerning the re-appointment of Brother Wesley Platt as post master of Manteca, California, will be of interest. Brother Platt finds time also to shepherd the Brethren Mission, which is growing as rapidly as the town is growing.—Editor.)

A Christmas Gift from Uncle Sam!

And in the form of an appointment as postmaster of Manteca for the next four years.

This is the "Gift" received by Postmaster John W. Platt from the president of the United States. Mr. Platt received notice of his appointment Tuesday in a telegram from Senator Shortridge, now in Washington. The appointment is for four years.

At the same time Postmaster Platt received a letter of congratulation on the manner in which he had administered affairs at the local post office during the term just passed.

The first news of his re-appointment was received by Mr. Platt in the following letter from Robert N. Stanfield, chairman of the senate sub-committee on post offices and post roads:

John W. Platt,
Manteca, California.

My Dear Mr. Platt:

It is with pleasure that I am again today, as chairman of the sub-committee on post offices and post roads, recommending that your re-nomination for Postmaster of Manteca to be confirmed by the Senate.

Congratulating you upon your past successful administration and wishing for you a continuance thereof, I am

Most sincerely yours,

Rob't N. Stanfield.

This letter was followed by the following telegram from Senator Shortridge:

John W. Platt,
Manteca, Cal.

It gives me pleasure to advise you that the senate today confirmed your nomination as post-master. Congratulations and best wishes.

Samuel M. Shortridge.

Mr. Platt's past term expired on October 3, and the new term will start with the reception of his commission. He has served at Manteca as postmaster for the past five years.

NEW PARIS, INDIANA

I am always anxious to hear the news from the field, so will add my bit. We have nothing startling to report, but the church is at work.

I am in my second year here. It is a real pleasure to work for the New Paris Brethren. All of our special offerings are taken up by the Sunday school. Recently these offerings have been so frequent that we came very near getting into a jam. Our worthy superintendent who is a good traffic manager, cleared the way and everything is moving on. The attendance at both church and Sunday school is on the increase.

We feel honored to have in our work Katherine and David Jobson. These children have splendid homes with the Smoker brothers.

We are sending a small Christmas present to the Yoder sisters at Ashland. I remember these girls as children with their parents visiting in our home in the Chicago Mission on their way to the South American mission. The Brethren here stand ready to respond to every good work. Each year they gladden the pastor's family with a Thanksgiving turkey. We have been remembered in a very substantial way privately by different members of the church for which we are very thankful. Brother J. L. Kimmel of Muncie conducted a two weeks' meeting for us recently. We certainly all enjoyed his splendid sermons. We do not have a large field here so the purpose of the meeting was accomplished. We have decided to repair and beautify the church in the spring. The W. M. S. is an ideal society with Mrs. Eva Roscoe president.

We held a very enjoyable communion on the 17th of December, the same being the pastor's birthday. Brother Stuckman and wife from Goshen, Brother Teeter and wife from Warsaw, were with us and assisted in the services.

Ardmore

This church has called me to be their pastor for another year. They have decided to hold their revival in the spring, the pastor to do the preaching. This evidently will soon be the Second Brethren church of South Bend. The Ardmore field is more like a city mission. The personality is largely young people and children. Homes are being built all around the church and people are moving in constantly. A number of our best workers have gone to California for the winter, which makes the work heavy on those that remain. The attendance is good; no other church near us. The work is well organized. Brother Glenn Carpenter is Sunday school superintendent, Brother Clyde Gleaner, president of the Christian Endeavor, and Mrs. Glenn Carpenter, president of the W. M. S.

The great need of this church is a local pastor. I suppose I can not impress the brotherhood with the importance of this field. The territory is two miles square with no other church near. The people are mostly prosperous, employes of Studebakers, Singers, Olivers and Birdsell Manufacturers. Many of them are high class workmen. Plenty of men and money to carry on. There must be a leader on the field. I am doing the best I can but I am forty miles away.

One of the biggest things here is pastoral work, which I enjoy doing. Most of the old Fairview members are supporting the work. We were rejoiced to hear that the Ardmore Californians will return in the spring. What's the good in taking such long vacations anyway?

Dutchtown, Indiana

This church has no pastor at present.

I organized this church twenty-eight years ago under the auspices of the Indiana Mission Board. I have done special work for them. They have a good church house, well equipped, in a thickly settled community. Quite a number of real Brethren are there. I have been frequently called to conduct funerals and now while I write I am called to preach the funeral of a young mother who lies in a home next door to the church. I have taken it upon my self to preach for them occasionally on Sunday afternoons until they can do better. I believe in foreign missions with all my heart, but it is not good Christian business to neglect these home fields.

This is my remedy—Let each district employ a preacher that is not afraid of work to be pastor of the pastorless churches.

THE GIFT OF GIFTS

"Who * * * gave himself for me"—Gal. 2:20.

Hester Alway Reisinger

Himself for me! O re-creative word
The pregnant aeons of the past that stirred,
At last, at last my sleeping soul hath heard,
And all the Universe is changed—transfused
With Love. In that the primal light suffused Cosmos appears from out Earth's chaos twice confused.

Himself for me! The mighty Lord of Life!
Then all is mine, and all that is, is rife
With good to me, despite the seeming strife.
Pain pearls begets, sorrow sweet sympathy,
The stars are born of Night's vast mystery,
And death is slave to Life's all-conquering mastery.

Himself for me! Then I was made for thee
O Love. Self of myself, my being's shoreless Sea.

Deep answereth to deep. O bliss to be Homed in thy heart—made strong to serve,
Made rich to give, to give without reserve,
Nor ever from the Calvary road to swerve.

Washington, D. C.

DO YOU EVER MAKE A MISTAKE?

Some people seem to think they do not. The pope and others claim to live above the low level of mistake making. Many of us are prone to magnify the mistakes of others. We see many times only the mistakes and errors and fail to observe the virtues and merits in our fellows and their efforts. The following from the New Carlisle Sun will be worth while to any with this tendency:

"Next time you hear a citizen complaining about typographical errors in his home paper, or in any other paper, just hand him these few figures: In an ordinary column there are 10,000 of type; there are seven possible wrong positions for each letter; there are 70,000 chances to make an error, and millions of possible transpositions. In this one sentence, 'To be or not to be,' by transposition alone, it has been figured out, 2,759,022 errors can be made. Newspaper people, from the 'devil' up to the boss, and other high officials, are merely human, and liable to err. Don't be nosing around for errors, but read for information you can get, and the good you can get. You'll find errors enough in your daily walk through life without having to hunt for them in a newspaper."—Richmond Advocate.

HE BELIEVES IN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

A certain denominational leader of young people's work condemns the new Christian Endeavor text-book, "Progressive Endeavor," by Amos R. Wells, on the ground that it takes throughout the old-fashioned and very much behind-the-times view that Christian Endeavor is absolutely the best form of young people's organization.

The critic is right. That is exactly the position taken in "Progressive Endeavor." Amos R. Wells does really from his heart believe that about Christian Endeavor. Moreover, he has dared to say so in just so many words over and over. And still further, he has had the temerity to give reasons, many reasons, unanswerable reasons, for his good opinion of Christian Endeavor.

People who believe as he does and who want to raise up a strong body of convinced and enthusiastic Endeavorers are really quite enthusiastic about the book. People who dislike Christian Endeavor, and want to substitute for it a department of the Sunday school, do not like the book a little bit. And we are not surprised. Indeed, we should be disappointed if they did like it. Woe unto books, as well as men, when everybody speaks well of them.—Arrow in C. E. World.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

The past few months have been ones of considerable activity for our church and for the pastor. For the pastor because, beside feeding and tending his own flock, he has been called on for so many outside lectures. He gave Bible studies and illustrated lectures at the Northwest district conference at Spokane and in the past quarter has given eight illustrated lectures at County Christian Endeavor Rallies. At each one of these, decisions have been made—either for the confession of Christ or for rededication of lives. At one where only fifty were in attendance, eleven young folks accepted Jesus Christ as their personal Savior. I'm sure many of you will be interested in reading Brother Tay's articles on his travels which are to appear in the Evangelist this year.

Now as to the church's activities, a church attendance campaign has been inaugurated which has helped materially in increasing the attendance. Full houses have been occasioned by the presentation of a most impressive missionary pageant, a unique Sunday School White Gift program, a masterful Christmas cantata, preceded by painted pictures of Bethlehem, and the Los Angeles Bible Institute's sacred concert. Last night we held our annual business meeting and supper in connection with a watch night service and discovered that things were in good shape. The pastor's salary was raised. There are 229 members on the roll. Over $1,700 was given by members to missions, the church having raised some $7,500 during the year. We shall be glad when the church is all paid for so we may have that much more for missions. And while we are speaking of missions, I might say that the church and the Young People's Sunday School class are selecting wedding gifts to send to Chauncey Sheldon, our own missionary on the African field, so they may get there in time for the wedding, which will likely be some time in the spring or summer. Miss Hattie Cope of Kentucky will share these gifts with him. We have sent two boxes to Africa so far, and one barrel and two boxes of clothing and gifts to Kentucky.

The Sunday school is growing. The average attendance was 179 for this quarter as against 164 for the last. We are pleased with the success of our new plan of a Sunday school motto each quarter. This motto, which was "Remember Jesus Christ" for last quarter, was framed and hung in the front and back of the church; many had them in their homes, and talks were given on it each Sunday. The class reports were all good. Here are a couple of items from the yearly report of a class of high school girls to encourage other like classes: They raised $142.50—$85 going to foreign missions. Part of it was used to send 260 New Testaments to the needy field of Russia. The W. M. S. and the three Christian Endeavor societies are all active.

The one thing that we are now concentrating every effort upon is our coming revival meeting with Dr. L. S. Bauman of Long Beach as evangelist—beginning January 10. Special prayer meetings are being held and we are looking for sinners to be saved and saints to be built up.

May his richest blessing rest upon all of you who are putting forth similar efforts.

A Great Day Coming

About thirty years ago the writer attended his first Brethren conference of the Indiana district at Milford, Indiana. He remembers several incidents of that conference, one of which was the request by one of the pastors to sing a solo just before he was obliged to start for home. The song was "There's a Great Day Coming," which was a new song at that time.

There is a great day coming, in fact there should be many GREAT days in one's life even before the JUDGMENT DAY. And in the church of Jesus Christ there should be frequent great days preparatory to the ONE great day which all must meet. The great days to which I refer are days of opportunity, and one's standing on the ONE great day will be measured largely by the manner in which he used his opportunities on other great days.

One of the great days in the Brethren church is the day on which an opportunity is given to every member of the church to make a contribution to the fund for paying for the Publishing House building. January twenty-four is the great day this year, or the Sunday nearest that date for those churches that do not have weekly services.

Go Forward

When Moses started with the children of Israel toward the promised land, and met with some difficulties and obstructions, he was ordered to "go forward."

We believe these are the orders for all Christian workers. Do not stop to mourn over obstacles, but "go forward."

Has The Brethren Publishing Company gone forward? A brief comparison will answer the question. Take a good look at the old Washington Hand Press shown on page one this week which was used industriously by Brother Holsinger in the pioneer days of Brethren publications, and then take another look at our modern Optimus Presses illustrated on pages four and five. A vast field of progress has been covered between these two periods of time. Much of this progress has been made in the last fifteen years. A great deal of it in the last six years.

But the point we would make is little, if any, of this progress could have been made had it not been for the co-operation of the loyal pastors and members of the church who constantly have the burden of the church resting on their hearts, and who are willing to "pray" and to "pay" for advancement of this department of the Lord's work.

Let our offering on this occasion be the best one yet made. Men who are acquainted with the financial affairs of our country tell us that 1925 was the most prosperous year America has had since the close of the World War. This being the case our offering should be largely increased out of pure thankfulness. Have we counted, and do we appreciate our blessings?

The Brethren Evangelist

It seems to me the subscriptions to the Brethren Evangelist are coming into the office with unprecedented promptness at the beginning of this year. In fact they are coming in so rapidly it is impossible for us to keep up with the revising of our mailing list. This is a tremendous task to carry on in connection with the rest of our many duties in the office, but we are trying to do the best we can, and we hope to be able to catch up in a couple of weeks by doing a great deal of night work.

Several of our pastors have asked for copies of the mailing list of their churches to enable them to check up on their subscription lists. We are always glad to supply these lists, but it is quite a task to get such lists ready and we can not always do this as soon as requested but we hope to supply all these requests in the next few days.

Some of our churches that have been on the Evangelist Honor Roll are sending us the largest list of subscriptions this year they have ever sent to us. We are always cheered by the enlargement of the list of subscriptions from any church, whether it be large or small.

This, I think, fills all the space allotted me by our editor, so I must come to a close; but lastly brethren, don't fail to make your contribution to the Publication Day fund, and if your church does not make an offering as a church, we receive mail every day, and a check enclosed in a personal letter is always thankfully received.

A Wonderful Present

A young lady one time received a very strange, yet wonderful present. This young lady was expecting a valuable present. She had set her heart upon a piece of jewelry. This gift was expected to come from a dear friend, the hospitality of whose home the young lady of the story one time enjoyed. At the proper time the gift arrived and the young lady eagerly opened the package and found only a common door key with a card attached to it by a ribbon. The lady was greatly disappointed and did not read the inscription on the card for a time, but when she did, this is what she read, "The key to the door of the house of a friend. It is yours to use. Use it every day if you wish." The meaning dawned upon the young lady; it meant that the fine home of her friend was always open to her.

Dear Reader, there may be some one near you who does not know that the riches of grace in Christ Jesus are open to them. That one may be in deep distress and all you need to do is to give them a good tract and a cheery word and they have the key to the rich treasure house of God.

THE PRACTICE OF PENITENCE

ONLY penitence can see "with open face" the one vision that can subdue and satisfy a world—the vision of a man on a cross—and this vision the ascetics had. They strove after an interior knowledge of sin, after a glimpse of the love that sin has stricken to the heart; and, say what we will, here, and nowhere else, is the beginning of illumination, the great wisdom of unseen eyes. It is at once a daring adventure and a sweet safety, for the contrite heart is an explorer of new planets and a dweller at the Father's hearth. "Satan," says John Pulsford quaintly, "can convert illumination into a snare, but contrition is beyond his art."

EDITORIAL

"Fruits of Pacifism"

The above was the caption of an editorial which appeared in the leading daily paper of Cleveland under date of January 13th, upon the occasion of the six to one vote of the Cleveland Board of Education to do away with military training in Cleveland high schools. This vote to eliminate military training from the school curriculum was declared to be "the perfect fruit of pacifism." The great daily considered this a most unwise and lamentable move, and held those, whose votes were responsible, up to ridicule as dwelling in "that familiar fool's paradise where future wars are considered impossible because they ought to be", and as failing to "keep their feet on the ground when they think." We are not interested in the action of this particular school board, nor the remarks of this particular paper, except as they are representative of two opposing forces manifesting themselves throughout the country.

This paper is correct when it says such action is "the perfect fruit of pacifism", but it does not seem to realize how natural and inevitable it is that such fruit should be increasingly manifest—that as certainly as the pacific spirit gets into the hearts of people, so certainly they immediately begin to throw overboard the schemes that are calculated to foster militarism. And that is just what is happening. Militaristic demonstrations of any sort, whether of the valueless, and often vicious, type carried on in high schools, or of the unpopular National Defense Day type, or of the foolishly expensive and internationally offensive naval display type, are becoming more and more distasteful to the enlightened public. Nor are men and women to be frightened into submission any more so easily by being ridiculed as "pacifists." An increasingly larger number of them are coming not to object to the term. It is losing the unsavory connotation that it once carried in the public mind and that militarists and their supporting press would still impart to it. And it is destined to grow in respectability and popular favor as the spirit of the Gospel penetrates more and more the public conscience, for that is the source whence it emanates. The spirit of pacifism is being welcomed as the answer to the deep-seated yearning of the human heart for peace and the fulfillment of the angelic prophecy concerning the destined influence of the Prince of Peace.

The militaristic press may ridicule if it will, but people are coming to realize that it is no "fool's paradise" policy but just ordinary common sense to stop preparing and training for war, if they would stop war. Their feet are planted not on the shifting sands of competitive armaments and war-efficiency, but upon the eternal principles of reason and cooperation, of forbearance and right conduct, of unselfishness and service. The "pacifist" does not object to an international police any more than he objects to local police, but he does not believe it is necessary to the peace and safety of our country to militarize its citizens and to build up vast armaments and armies as a threat to an imaginary aggressor. These things, if they do not actually tend to provoke war, make men more ready to fight upon slight provocation. Give our nation a large military machine, well-officered and trained, ready for use at a moment's notice, and we shall soon find use for it in "protecting our interests." Moreover, the larger the number of men whom we permit to be trained and given the military mind and view of things, the more easily will the militaristic group control the policies of our country. And such control it seems the rank and file of our country are in no frame of mind to encourage or tolerate. In preference, there is a widespread turning to policies that make no show of resistance and promote the spirit of confidence and good will.

Besides, there is a growing recognition that, regardless of one's attitude toward a policy great military efficiency, military training in high schools is both useless and vicious. And in substantiation of this assertion we may quote not only enemies but friends of military training. The principal of the Peabody Military School, San Antonio, Texas, said in a letter written to the Cleveland school board, as reported in the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

"I am not opposed to military drill, but I am opposed to R. O. T. C. drill, because the army officers we had here did not conform to our rules," the letter said. "Our rule prohibiting cigaret smoking was flagrantly violated by the army officers."

Further testimony on this point was given by Rev. J. H. L. Trout, a Cleveland minister, who is a member of a church that is not noted for its pacifism, and who declared that he had served in a reserve officers' training camp. Notwithstanding this background favorable to military training he said:

"But I live across the street from West Tech High school, and I see the boys drilling every day, and I have had an excellent opportunity to find out something about military training in the schools," he said.

No Help to Preparedness

"I have come to the conclusion that the country has done much injury in our schools.

for militarism and very little for real preparedness, in putting military training in our schools. So far as its military value is concerned, I am not sure but that just as much could be taught to more mature boys of 21 in a few weeks or a month, at most. And it is responsible for considerable corruption.

"For instance, the army officers are not supposed to smoke, but they have their rendezvous, and the boys know that they steal in there and smoke.

"There are guards about the building. I don't know whether they are placed there for correction or whether that is part of the discipline: but I do know that each guard will let his particular friends out so they can run down the street for a smoke, and that the friends will reciprocate when they are on guard duty.

"Instead of learning the snap, the poise, and the discipline supposed to go with military training, the boys learn corruption. It is an entering wedge to universal military training, and at too young an age. All we have taught the boy is glorification of the uniform and contempt and intolerance for anybody who is working for peace.

"I see it in my church and Sunday school; I see sneers at a prayer for peace."

It would seem from these testimonies that the militarists have launched a scheme that is working against their own aims, that the military drill in schools is proving such an obviously unwholesome and useless affair that it is turning sentiment against the training of civilians for war in times of peace. And this, we are told, is "the perfect fruit of pacifism." Thank God, if it is. It is evidence that the persuasive, heart-winning powers of the Prince of Peace are beginning to prevail. Let us thank God that we are "pacifists", and take courage that our Gospel-founded principles are meeting with such wide favor, and go forth to preach and to practice them with more boldness.

America Dry by Comparison

Much wet propaganda and ill-considered talk is being heard regarding the wetness of dry America and the dryness of wet England in comparison. It seems strange that so many intelligent dries should fail to recognize the source and purpose of such comparisons,—that they have their origin in the brain of some wet publicity agent and are put out for the sole purpose of discrediting the prohibition regime.

Every informed person knows that prohibition enforcement is not one hundred per cent perfect, in fact, that there are a great many slips and crooks in the process. It would be unreasonable to expect anything else in the effort to make effective a reform measure that move vitally effects the whole country economically and socially than even the freeing of the Negro. The thing that should really surprise us is in the degree of success with which it has been enforced in the face of almost insurmountable obstacles and the most vicious and persistent opposition, and at the same time the remarkable fruits that have in so short a time become manifest from even an imperfect enforcement. The extent to which we have succeeded in drying up America becomes quickly evident and is really astounding when we take a glance by way of comparison at any of our contemporaries, and see the ravage of an unsubdued liquor traffic.

Of interest to this point is the series of articles in The Outlook by Ernest W. Mandeville, who has made a careful survey of the prohibition situation in America, and has taken occasion to refute the contention recently set forth by Sir William Arbuthnot Lane, that "America under prohibition is less temperate than England." He says:

"No matter how much one is disillusioned about the dryness of our own country, he cannot but be terrifically depressed by the appalling sights of filth and degeneracy of the London public houses." "After a close study of the bootlegging evils in the United States and then a tour of observation through Great Britain, I feel strongly that I would rather see America under prohibition than America sodden with drink, as is England." "I have become convinced of the superiority of our prohibition (with all its faults) to the political and social domination of the liquor trade in Great Britain and its consequent evils."

"In England," Mr. Mandeville continues, "a firmly entrenched liquor trade, supported by both temporal and spiritual peers, is saddling the populace ... with a national drink bill of approximately $1,770,000,000. ... The convictions for drunkenness of women have doubled since the war. ... It is estimated that the average family expenditure on drink is $175 a year."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We say so much more by the way we say it than by what we say, that it takes an impersonator to quote a person correctly.

The newspaper clipping concerning Brother Wood of Fort Scott, Kansas, printed in the news department, is not distinctly a newsletter, but it has a news value and we are giving it a place there.

DON'T FAIL TO TAKE THAT PUBLICATION DAY OFFERING, if not on January 24th, then at the very first opportune time. And make it a generous offering; give your Publishing House a chance.

An interesting letter from Miss Hattie Cope informs us of a successful evangelizing trip, from the Bassai station in Africa, by herself and Mrs. Kennedy resulting in the conversion of eleven men and one woman.

Does your church have Brethren doctrinal tracts, which members may put in the hands of interested friends, or placed in a conveniently located rack where strangers may quietly and unobtrusively select what they want?

Christian Endeavor Week suggestions are supplied this week by Professor J. A. Garber, President of the National Organization. Every Society should make much of this celebration of the forty-fifth anniversary of the birth of Christian Endeavor.

An interesting report comes from Hampton, New Jersey, the first we heard directly from this little mission group, which had its beginning in an evangelistic campaign conducted by Brother A. E. Thomas during the summer of 1923. They number nineteen in all and are much encouraged under the leadership of Brother S. Adams of Philadelphia.

Brother Charles W. Mayes, pastor of the Lanark, Illinois, church recently assisted in an evangelistic campaign at Springfield Center, a suburb of Akron, Ohio, where Brother Leslie Lindower is the faithful student pastor. Ten confessions are reported, notwithstanding the difficulties. It should be encouraging to Ohio churches to learn that this mission point is making commendable progress.

When we talk about a dead church we usually don't mean what we say; it's just a polite way of saying that the individual members are indifferent, and have lost their religion.

Brother H. M. Oberholtzer, the hard-working and persevering pastor, of the church at Columbus, Ohio, reports the evangelistic campaign recently conducted by Brother A. E. Thomas, who in a most able manner held forth the Word of Life, with the result that four were added to the church at a time when such a campaign was difficult. The church is said to be greatly revived and the pastor is encouraged.

Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, the capable writer of the Christian Endeavor notes in THE ANGELUS, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the St. James congregation at Lydia, Maryland, which was made vacant at last General Conference time by the leaving of Brother L. V. King to take the pastorate at New Lebanon, Ohio. Brother Lyon was formerly pastor at Washington C. H., Ohio, where Brother S. E. Christiansen is now in charge.

In a personal communication Brother Edwin Boardman, pastor at Waterloo, Iowa, we read the following interesting item: "Elizabeth Lee Boardman was born Thursday morning, January 7th, at 6:40 o'clock. Weight seven pounds and fourteen ounces. Both mother and baby are doing splendidly." We can understand now better why he wished to drop his Sunday school lesson writing. We didn't like to have him quit, but we can't much blame him for wanting more time for Elizabeth Lee. Anyway we extend in behalf of the Evangelist family most hearty congratulations to Brother and Sister Boardman.

The Second church of Los Angeles, California, closes another year under the leadership of Dr. E. M. Cobb with an enviable record. Last year the increase was one hundred per cent; this year it has been sixty-three plus. The year ended with a membership of 317, a net gain of 123. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 382 and an average attendance of 320, three more than their church membership. Financially they have done well, also, reporting $6,000.00 raised during the year, in addition to the building funds. The slogan for the new year is "Every member of the church a member of the Sunday School."

We have often heard of missionaries burying themselves in far-away lands, and Miss Johanna Nielsen has almost literally done that, so far as any news reaching us from her is concerned. We knew however that she was very modest and averse to getting into print, and now Miss Longaker has revealed a still more satisfactory reason—she has been just too busy to write. And it is evident that she has been leading a most active life since she entered the work of a missionary. "That Office Secretary" is absolutely right; missionaries and pastors, who really take their tasks seriously, are not "people of leisure."

At Dayton, Ohio, has been built up a great church in a remarkably short period of time. It has not been so long since this was a ward of the Ohio Mission Board. During the last fourteen years it has grown from a membership of 300 to 1600, and a large share of the credit of directing this great work is due to Dr. W. S. Bell, who has been its able pastor for ten years. And under his capable leadership it is still aggressive and growing. An evangelistic campaign is now in progress, with Brother Charles H. Ashman as the preacher, and high hopes are entertained for a great ingathering. Brother Bell, to do the great work he has done there, has proven himself not only a talented preacher of the Word, but a skilful organizer and leader of men. His wisdom is shown by taking into his counsel and sharing his leadership with such able men as Attorney Orion E. Bowman and Rev. William A. Gearhart, and many others who are occupying positions of large responsibility in that great congregation. Brother Bell having accepted the call to conduct the college endowment campaign, the Dayton church has been fortunate in securing as his successor, Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana, whose proven ability as a pulpiteer and leader of men, makes his selection one of much promise. Prof. Alva J. McClain of the Ashland Seminary, is to supply the pulpit during the summer months, until the new pastor can arrive on the field. We congratulate Dayton for returning to the Evangelist Honor Roll. So great a church could not well stay off.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Except We Strive Lawfully

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

The above caption is taken from the famous chapter of St. Paul's Second Letter to Timothy, verse 5. "And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully." The American Revised renders it, "And if also a man contend in the games, he is not crowned, except he have contended lawfully." Moffatt translates the passage thus: "Again, a competitor in the games is not crowned unless he observe the rules."

In this figure of speech, Paul is on the race course once more. He is nearing the close of life; writing his last message, and that to a young preacher. And what is on his heart? "Striving lawfully." "Observing the rules." In common, every-day speech it is, "playing the game." What is Paul saying but just this: THE CHRISTIAN RACE MUST BE RUN ACCORDING TO THE RULES? The average Sunday school boy would say, "You must hit safe, and run the bases fair." The pious whine, "What's the difference, just so one is sincere," would immediately arouse the contempt of the gang, and he would be hissed out of the game. In the great game of which St. Paul is speaking, neither can SINCERITY take the place of the RULES. The game must be played. If one KNOWS the game and is WILLING to play it, his sincerity is never in the way. King Saul in sparing Agag might have been sincere, but he was dead wrong for refusing to "strive lawfully." The rules of the game and one's sincerity should never be separated. Why should they be? Saul lost his kingdom. Lot's wife was sincere. Naaman almost missed it by permitting his sincerity to stand in the way of the "rules" of the prophet when he was directed to go to the Jordan river to be healed of his leprosy. The prophet told him to dip seven times in the Jordan. He thought other rivers were just as good. Obedience even against his will brought healing. Yes, God's work must be done in God's way. Paul says, "strive lawfully."

Sin has twisted and distorted and damned the soul until man is utterly hopeless in estimating the gigantic TASK of preparing that soul for the pure, spotless white of heaven. Man's conceit and his pride stands squarely in his way of seeing himself as God sees him. To prepare himself for such associates as Jesus and the angels, and where his thoughts must ever be pure, is a PROCESS SO INTRICATE and SO PROFOUND AS TO TAX THE WISDOM OF GOD!

As well permit the ten-year-old to determine what his course of study shall be for the remainder of his school days as to think man capable of determining what his training must be to whiten his soul for the "land that is fairer than day." The unknown quantity in the equation is entirely beyond the comprehension of proud and wicked man. To bring man to the place where he is willing to permit the Great Physician to map out the exercise for his patients, is the task of all tasks. To permit man to exercise the freedom of his will, and yet fit him for heaven, is a problem so staggering that any man who insists on doing the job in his own way is an object of concern and pity. He certainly is sailing on unknown seas without a chart or compass. Smart, say you? No—reckless. It was just such hopelessness as this that led Paul to say, "I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection: lest that by any means when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway" (1 Cor. 9:26, 27). The scholars tell us that the word "castaway" is literally "disapproved." Moffatt translates: "In case, after preaching to other people, I am disqualified myself." You see, after running, after fighting, there is such a thing as being "disqualified."

A "contender in the games", and throwing the rules to the air? That is what every sincere preacher, every church officer, is up against these days. In Paul's analysis, success hinged also on "the rules of the game."

About nine times out of ten now, success is measured by the size of the crowd and the amount of the collection. The plea is, one must have a crowd before he can get his message across. What do the "rules of the game" amount to anyhow, says the average crowd-chaser. And the old world is going to hell so fast, as Mr. Sunday puts it, "that it is breaking the speed limits." If you can not have both, which is the more important in its far-reaching consequences, the crowd, or the God given message?

The injunction to get a crowd has never been laid upon us; but fidelity to the gospel message has. Jesus started his disciples with that idea uppermost in their thoughts. "And whosoever will not receive you, when ye go out of that city, shake off the very dust from your feet for a testimony against them" (Luke 9:5). Matthew 10:14, says the same thing. Mark 6:11, says the same. Receiving them was receiving the message intrusted to them. The message and the messenger were either accepted together, or went down together. That was drawing the line, wasn't it? Did the apostles do as they were bidden? Sure. Read Acts 13:50-52: "But the Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts. But they shook off the dust of their feet against them, and came unto Iconium. And the disciples were filled with joy, and with the Holy Ghost." Why were they thus filled with joy and the Holy Ghost; because of their failure? No; because they were faithful to their message—they were "striving lawfully"—playing the game; this was the highest attestation that God could give, and he gave it.

The church of today could be saved a lot of heart-aches if it would worry less about the crowd, and remember the program of God for this age, and be more concerned about her part in putting that program across. Here it is: "And after they had held their peace, James answered, saying, Men and brethren, hearken unto me: Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written,

THE INTEREST EATS UP THE PROFIT

The debt on your Publishing House should be paid.

The responsibility rests on every individual member and congregation of the brotherhood.

IF EVERYBODY LIFTS, THE LOAD WILL BE LIGHT

After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." That's our business, "To take out of them a people for his name." Read Acts 15:13-19. "TO TAKE OUT OF THEM"; not the whole crowd. He would, if THEY WOULD. Since they will not in the aggregate, then, "Whosoever will may come." Yes, that selection is going on. The gospel message and its complete acceptance is the dividing line. God can do no more than give men a chance. The church can do no more. But a church without her God-given message—what can she do? Become popular? Yes, with men. Get the crowds? Yes, if she will go to great enough lengths in her worldly programs. Get the money? She may, very likely will. But calling "out of them a people for his name", requires a message and faithful people who will proclaim it. "He is not crowned, except he have contended lawfully."

As I see it, the breaking down of the dividing line between the church and the world—I mean the line as God established it—is doing more to destroy her usefulness as his agency in taking "out of them a people for his name" than any other sin. And she can blame no one else than herself. The great doctrines of the absolute sovereignty of God, and the separation of the church from the world—who hears the thundering tones of the modern prophet calling the people to repentance? Do we need a revival? Yes. In our own church? Yes. Will the people hear? A few of them—yes. Will such a revival be a success? In the sight of God yes. In the estimation of the world, and ungodly church members, no. But our God has not said much about success; He has said much about FAITHFULNESS TO HIS MESSAGE.

The Brethren people throughout their history have been in the forefront of the battle for "A whole Gospel for the whole world." A "thus saith the Lord" is her only, and final appeal. No one has ever been asked to teach otherwise. Her ministry has ever and anon been urged to be true to the message of—not the councils and synods of men—but her Lord. The largest latitude possible to build up some congregation strong, and great, and good, with this message as her foundation has been encouraged. Competition in building the greatest of congregations is a negligible factor. The field is unhampered. His salary may be as high as his genius can command, and he can remain as long as his constituency is willing. The ordinances of the church are not fixed by some council, but were instituted by our Lord himself. The whole array of preachers will help him observe these divine institutions without dropping one of them. He can put his finger on the chapter and verse in God's holy Word where they have been instituted. He can put his finger on the chapter and verse where the apostles and the early church were still "striving lawfully" in keeping them. To tear foot-washing, the love feast, and the communion of the bread and wine, out of the magnificent setting of our Lord's last night on the earth, is a job for devils, and not of men. "Hands off", is our plea; for, as Moffatt says, in his translation of 2 Timothy 2:3, "A competitor in the games is not crowned unless he observe the rules." And a greater than Moffatt says, "And if any shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book" (Rev. 22:10). I think that God intends that "we shall play the game." And the rules hold until changed by their great Author, whatever man may say.

"Give me a man whose heart
Is filled with ambition's fire;
Who sets his mark in the start,
And keeps moving it higher and higher.
Better to die in the strife,
The hands with labor rife,
Than to glide with the stream in an idle dream
And lead a purposeless life.

Better to strive and climb
And never reach the goal,
Than to drift along with time
With an aimless, worthless soul.
Aye, better to climb and fall,
Or sow, though the yield be small,
Than to idle away day after day,
And never to strive at all."

Christian Business Acumen

By Dyoll Belote, Secretary Publication Board

I believe that I am stating that which will be corroborated by everyone who has ever visited our Publishing plant at Ashland when I say that if the opportunity were offered any of our enterprising business men to buy the plant as a business investment they would immediately close the deal. And yet it seems queer that when we are asked to contribute but a few dollars from each congregation to help buy this same valuable property for the church we shy off at the mention of the matter, or else plead previous obligations—heavy demands at home for the support of the pastor and the meeting of the other calls from the general brotherhood. "These ought we to have met, but not to leave this call unanswered."

Of the monetary value of the building and equipment of the Brethren Publishing Company there can be no question. But in my own judgment there is a still greater value which attaches to our Publishing Interests. Not the making of money, but the shaping of character and the grounding of our youth in the principles and practices of our beloved fraternity, is the aim of all loyal Brethren. And to this end the Brethren Publishing Company contributes no small part with the varied publications which are sent forth from its presses. And not one publication goes out from our House which will not pass the most rigid censorship—a thing which cannot be said of a great deal of literature which too frequently finds its way into our own Christian homes. If our children are trained to find a relish in the perusal of the publications which are produced by our own people and issued from our own denominational press, they will grow up to be better Brethren and to lead and enjoy fine Christian lives.

We are having the opportunity offered us on every hand to invest our money in interest-bearing annuities, which will be working for us long after we are gone. Why not invest a few dollars in an enterprise that will bring, in the years to come, large returns in the satisfaction which shall be ours in knowing we have had a part in making it possible for the Brethren church to disseminate abroad the "Faith of our Fathers," which has been to us "the power of God unto salvation" and will continue to be so to all who believe and accept. But how shall they hear that they may believe? By our generous support of our Publishing Interests so that they may be able to provide a still more varied and effectual group of publications and send them abroad to herald the truth to all the earth. Let us invest in some of these satisfaction-bearing securities, that will bring dividends of satisfaction both here and hereafter.

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Oh, the comfort, the inexpressible comfort of feeling safe with a person; having neither to weigh thoughts nor measure words, but pour them all right out just as they are, chaff and grain together, knowing that a faithful hand will take and sift them, keep what is worth keeping, and with the breath of kindness blow the rest away.—Dinah Mulock Craik.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

Palestine and Its People

By Herbert H. Tay

When one arrives in Palestine, he instinctively feels as if he were in a different world. The native of Palestine is an Oriental. His language is different; his dress is different; his religion is different; his habits are different; even his odor is different. He thinks differently, he reasons differently, he acts differently, he eats differently; he sleeps differently, he snores differently. His ways are at once delightfully different, and completely exasperating. He provides one of the most interesting and at the same time one of the most unsolvable puzzles which one can study in this oriental land.

We had our first opportunity to study oriental life at close range at the city of Alexandria, Egypt. Our boat anchored in the outer harbor about four o'clock in the morning, and by six the decks, passage ways, companion ways, and even staterooms were filled with quaintly dressed, dark skinned men, clinking Egyptian money in their hands, which they wished to exchange for our money,—at a high rate of exchange. We had a most unpleasant illustration of oriental importunity however, when the boat tied up at the dock. As soon as the gang-plank was pushed aboard, a swarm of motly dressed Arabs crowded onto the boat, and began to grab any piece of luggage which they could lay their hands upon. We had been warned beforehand, and had a firm grasp upon our suitcases. It was necessary. Not satisfied with our refusal to let them carry our luggage, they seized the handles of the suitcases, and tried to wrest them from our grasp. We tugged and tugged, and thus we made our way down the gangplank and on to the wharf. The porters were constantly jabbering something in Arabic at the top of their voices, and we were just as firmly insisting that we could carry the suitcases ourselves. This battle royal continued for about half a block as we went toward the customs house. Finally we decided that it was too hard work to carry our suitcases, and drag along a couple of howling Arabs besides, so we reluctantly relinquished our grasp,—and we knew very well that it meant that we would have to relinquish a goodly sum in "backshish" besides—and let the porters carry our luggage.

The importunity and insistence of the native porters, guides, and vendors throughout the Near East is occasioned by their idea of Americans. Every American is regarded as crazy, and a millionaire. The oriental mind cannot otherwise explain the reasons for traveling around in their country, digging up old rocks and broken pottery, and spending such (to them) fabulous sums of money. Hence they think that those more fortunate in a financial way, should share with them who are less fortunate. So they feel that "backshish" is necessary, even for the most trivial service.

One of the most interesting experiences, and at the same time one of the most enlightening experiences with native manners and customs, is in buying something in a native shop, or bazaar. The best place to do this is in Damascus. Damascus is—or was—justly famous for two things. Its bazaars and its dogs. The former are one of the chief sources of interest in this oldest city on earth, but the latter have for some reason, strangely disappeared. Brother Cobb says that twenty years ago Damascus was a city of 250,000 population, and about 250,000,000 "pup-ulation." But for some reason, which we were unable to ascertain, the dogs have disappeared. While we were in Damascus, which was for two days, we saw eleven dogs by actual count. How are the mighty fallen!

But the bazaars still remain, and they afford an excellent opportunity for observation, either by personal experience, or by watching others, of oriental bargaining. The native merchant never has a set price for any of his goods.

All business is carried on by bargaining. The proprietor sits in his little shop—often no larger than six feet square—and waits for a customer to come along. The prospective buyer comes, stops, looks at the goods on display, and then asks to see a certain article. The proprietor, never moving from his seat upon the floor, reaches around, gets the article, and hands it to the customer without saying a word. The latter looks it over carefully, then if he decides that he wants it, he will either offer the merchant a certain amount, or he will ask the price. If he pursues the former course, he begins the bargain by offering to give about one-fifth as much as he is willing to pay. The merchant counters by asking about five times as much as he is willing to take. Then the argument is on. If the argument is between two natives, it often becomes quite heated. They will gesticulate wildly with their hands, and raise their voices to a very high pitch. The Arabic language, which is full of guttural sounds, is most appropriately adapted to heated arguments of this sort. The uninitiated American, hearing two Arabs in a heated discussion, and seeing the wildly swinging arms, stands by in breathless expectancy, expecting to see Islam divided against itself in a mighty physical conflict. However, he is usually doomed to disappointment, for though it sounds as if the bargainers were upon the verge of flying at one another's throats, and tearing each other's eyes out, yet that is their method of bargaining, and when the bargain is made, they are as calm as if nothing had ever happened.

Though the naive of Palestine may have some customs which are strange and unpleasant to us, yet he has some customs which we would do well to emulate. One thing for the Arab—especially the Bedouin—is noted, is his hospitality. Though we heard many weird tales of robbery and murder perpetrated by the natives when foreigners were traveling unaccompanied, yet we never experienced anything but the most gracious hospitality. Wherever we went, we were most royally received, and were always treated as guests of special honor. We usually received special favors, which the native guest did not receive.

As we approached a native camp, we were greeted heartily by the entire family—human, canine, and entomological. The dogs were always the first to greet us. They came running out when we came within sight of the camp, growling and snarling like a pack of hungry wolves. They looked and acted so ferocious, that if a person did not understand them, he might think that he was going to be torn limb from limb. But if we stand our ground, the dogs will not approach very close. If we make a move as if to reach to the ground for a stone or clod of earth, the dogs will put their tails between their legs, and run for dear life.

We are next greeted by the people themselves. They always have us sit down in the tent of the "shiek" or head of the camp, and then pass around the coffee. This is the first formality in any call. The coffee is served in little cups, without handles, about an inch in diameter and an inch deep. The cups are filled about one-fourth full. There are usually two cups, which must serve for the entire crowd, natives and all. However we must partake of the coffee, for it is an insult not to do so. In drinking the coffee, it is polite to make just as much noise as possible. The more noise one makes, the more courteous he is.

The last members of the family to greet the strangers, are the fleas. Every Bedouin camp abounds with these pests, and they welcome the advent of strangers. If one does not go armed with plenty of ammunition—in the form of bug and insect powders—he is doomed to spend an unpleasant night. It was no uncommon experience at all in

By Willis E. Ronk

(Address delivered at Ohio Conference, Smithville, and voted by that assembly to be published in THE EVANGELIST. Published in parts. Part III)

Modern Religious Demands

Let us turn our attention now to "Modern Religious Demands." What are Modern Religious demands? I realize of course that the demands depend very much upon who is making them. Yet one may sift the evidence and arrive at some general conclusions. The subject is so broad that one can give only the briefest of outlines; but this is sufficient for the present purpose.

The first conclusion that I have arrived at, is that there is at present a general tendency or demand for a more conservative view or attitude. Outside of the church for a number of years, it has been fashionable in some quarters to boast that one is an agnostic or infidel. The tendency is not nearly so prevalent at the present. The trend is toward belief in God. The magazines of late have been printing and giving considerable prominence to articles in defense of belief. In a recent issue of Collier's a scientist of considerable note makes the statement that, "I have never known a thinking man who did not believe in God." However, it is not my purpose to try to prove that outside of the church the tendency is toward a more conservative view; but rather that in a statement which I shall make, I shall not be accused of ignoring a fact, which is receiving considerable prominence at the present time. Within the church, there is less prominence given to the excessive liberal view. The radical liberals have carried their views to such extremes in some instances that there has been a revolt all along the line against the liberal. There seems to be a toning down in all shades of Christian thought. Fewer preachers are giving their services over to the movie and to mere forms of entertainment; while on every side one hears more frequently the appeal made to the Bible as the source of the church's authority. This trend may be further seen in the so-called Fundamentalist movement within practically every denomination. It is a revolt against excessive liberalism.

There is also the demand for a more liberal attitude. This may be seen all along the line from Fundamentalism to Modernism; but it is kept within certain bounds or limits. The object of a great many of the magazine articles, already mentioned, is to create a more liberal attitude and bring peoples of all religions into closer fellowship. Many say "Believe in God and treat your neighbor right and you have religion." The inference is that Catholic, Protestant, Jew and all the rest are on an equal basis. Within the church men are saying that the time has come to get together. Liberalist say to liberalist, "Just drop some of these things and get together." The more conservative groups are saying, "We have so much in common and so little to separate us, just drop the things which divide. Let us be tolerant and get together. We are all trying to reach the same place. Don't be narrow." Then the argument is so often advanced that in local churches much duplication of efforts would be avoided. Where there are two or three churches partly supporting as many men; one church could care for the community and properly support one pastor. Then imbued with the idea of big business, what a force we could be for good if all were united. I trust that I have made myself understood. We must take cognizance of the fact that there are these two seeming contradictory tendencies running in parallel lines; if we would properly understand and interpret modern religious movements.

Conclusions

There was a time in the early history of this country, when the Brethren church could go her way and be very little influenced by world thought and conditions; but that day has long since passed. And we may be thankful that it has. Had the Brethren people been more in touch with world thought and conditions during the first seventy years of her history in America, the conditions which led to the division in 1881 would probably not have existed. We cannot escape the times in which we live, and should have no desire to do so. If our position is right, we need have no fear, but that we can maintain it against all obstacles. On the other hand, we must not think that we are secure and simply drift. To do so is to court disaster.

Let us now turn to the idea which I suggested only a moment ago, namely, that liberal thought is saying, "Let's forget our differences and get together; Don't be narrow and etc." Brethren folks are hearing this on every hand. Well, why not get together? Brethren people must be ready at all times to give a reason concerning their faith. And, if we cannot give a reason, we may soon expect the end; for our people are not going to stick to our cause JUST BECAUSE it is OUR cause.

Does it not seem strange, that with all of the talk of church union and "Let's forget our differences" that there is very little getting together after all? It is perfectly natural. Everyone thinks that the other person should do the giving up and get together MY WAY. In other words, the talk is either not meant at all, or it is for some one else. A sort of smoke screen, or an attempt to undermine the morale of the other church. And that is exactly what is taking place. Are we to be caught sleeping? I trust not. Shall Brethren risk being called narrow? Yes, by all means! Just as narrow as Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Disciples and others are narrow for the things in which they believe. I resent the charge that we are more narrow than others. To be sure, we have some practices that most others do not; but we are no more sticklers for our beliefs than others are for theirs. When those who talk so glibly about getting together begin to practice what they preach, there will be time for us to give ear. Meanwhile, let us keep at the tasks which are before us.

When we are talking of union, who has a better position to maintain than we? There is a conservative tendency today. The cry of the hour is back to the Bible. That has been our cry from the beginning. Our doctrinal statement, so far as we have one, is virtually the statement which the conservative elements of most churches are now making. But they do not go far enough. What a wonderful opportunity is now ours to herald our message with new zeal. But let me remind you that to do so will be no easy task. We are face to face with some mighty problems. For instance, we have forty ministerial students in the seminary, and more preachers now than churches. That means that during the next four years a number of our men will either be forced from the ministry or into some other denomination. And, it will not necessarily follow that the best will survive; it may be the man who will work the cheapest. Leaving all other problems, this one of itself is sufficient to challenge the best in us. If we do not organize new churches in the immediate future, we never will. Brethren, let's face the facts! We have a real task before us, and no one can foretell the outcome. Are we willing to pay the price of victory? Upon the answer to this question depends the future. I believe we are. The blood in our veins is just as our cause they endured insult and persecution. Shall we red as that which flowed in the veins of our fathers. For do less? God forbid. Let us then gird ourselves for our task, looking always to him who is sufficient for all our needs.

The Iniquity of Silence

By Floyd W. Taber

TEXT: Then they said one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household. 2 Kings 7:9.

The bands of Syrian soldiers had swept up and down the mountains and valleys of Israel, leaving desolation everywhere, until the fear of them was instilled into the heart of every Israelite. The clash of their arms had been heard in every village, hamlet, and countryside. They had laid waste every stronghold in the land except one impregnable fortress, the City of Samaria.

Since it was impossible to capture that mountain fastness by storm, Benhadad, King of Syria, resolved to starve it into submission; so he laid siege to the city.

Soon the people were dying by the score. The intense agony of their sufferings can be imagined better than told. They had killed their dogs and horses and mules to satiate the awful pangs of hunger. They had eaten the leaves and grass. At last that insatiable craving even overcame mother love, and a woman reported to the king one day that she had helped to eat her own son.

When the king heard this he flew into a frenzy of rage, accused God of causing all their trouble, and swore that he would kill Elisha, the prophet of God. So he sent an officer to get Elisha.

Elisha barred the door against the officer, and said, "Hear ye the word of the Lord: thus said the Lord, Tomorrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, in the gate of Samaria. In our measures, he said that barley would be about 32 cents a bushel and flour about a dollar a hundred. No wonder the officer said, "If the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be?" God did not make windows in heaven, but he did something just as wonderful.

Meantime, four lepers were sitting in the gate, waiting for starvation to overtake them. Suddenly one of them said to his friends, "Why sit we here until we die? If we say, We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die." So they started toward the headquarters of the Syrian army. They came to the outposts of the camp, expecting to be stopped by sentinels. But there were no sentinels! They went on into the camp. There was a ghastly stillness over the place. Everything was there just as the soldiers had left it, but there were no soldiers. The lepers found some food in one of the tents, and gorged themselves. Then they began to pick up the gold and silver which was lying loose in the tents, and to bury it.

But where were the soldiers? God had caused the Syrian army to hear the noise of a mighty host of horses and chariots and soldiers. The same thought flashed into the mind of every Syrian soldier at once: "The Israelites have hired the Hittites and Egyptians against us." The very thought of such a thing paralyzed them with fear; but soon that same fear gave wings to their heels, and they were in headlong flight. They left all their valuables behind, and thought only of escaping with their lives. They even cast aside their outer garments in their mad stampede. It was a wild race with death.

That is why the lepers found the camp deserted, and why they were able to continue burying valuables undisturbed. But a man will get tired after awhile, even of ear-rying gold. Moreover, their consciences began to hurt them, and they said one to another, "We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household."

What made these lepers feel their responsibility to tell the people in the city of their discovery? In the first place, they knew that the people were dying. They had seen their friends and relatives undergo the awful agony of starvation. They had seen women and children upon whom death had laid his cold hand, lying emaciated in the streets. They themselves had felt the pangs of hunger. They knew the absolute hopelessness of the people in the city. This made them realize their obligation to tell the people about the food they had discovered.

Why do we not feel the same obligation to tell the Good News of Jesus Christ to those who do not know him? Because we do not believe they are really lost. But we read "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." "He that believeth not shall be damned." "He that believeth not is condemned already." Condemned to what? "Outer darkness"; "weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth," "where their worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched."

We believe these things theoretically, because Jesus said them. But practically we do not believe that our next door neighbor, the woman we talk to across the back fence, the man we do business with, the friend we chat with on the street, our classmates and chums, are really eternally, utter-

MONDAY

THE CURE OF PARALYSIS—Matt. 9:1-8.

Sin in the body, like paralysis in the body, takes many different forms; sometimes dulling the feeling, sometimes weakening the will, sometimes producing a fixed condition of evil that involves torture. The Lord Jesus is equally the Master of the one as of the other, and faith is the condition.

TUESDAY

A PUBLICAN CALLED—Matt. 9:9-13.

He who looks upon the heart sees in the most unlikely and despised of men gems of rarest beauty and worth, and by the power of his love he draws out the best and wins for himself its devotion.

WEDNESDAY

FASTING OR REJOICING—Matt. 9:14-17.

Judaism was filled with fasting and tears, with disappointments and deferred hopes—well might they sorrow, but Christianity is full of satisfaction and joy, or realization and hopes enriched, of life abundant and glory unspeakable.

THURSDAY

THE TOUCH OF FAITH—Matt. 9:20-22.

Many touched Christ that day in the crowd and received no blessing, but the woman touched him in faith and was made whole. It is as true today as then, that mere touch without faith is as dead as a wire without current.

FRIDAY

THROUGH SCORN TO VICTORY—Matt. 9:18, 19, 23-26.

No scornful laugh of hostile men can halt the onward life-giving march of the Son of God. Wherever he finds faith interceding, there he has tens to crown it with life and joy.

SATURDAY

SIGHT AND SPEECH—Matt. 9:27-34.

To the blind Jesus gave sight, and to the dumb he gave speech, but spiritually one can scarcely have either without both; he who sees something will tell it, and he who tells something must first have seen it.

SUNDAY

ly, hopelessly lost, unless they accept Jesus Christ as their own personal Savior. If we believed it, we must have hearts of stone to talk with them day after day, week after week, year after year, and never say a word to them about their own personal relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ. But whether we believe it or not, it is true, and we are under obligation, just as these lepers were, to give the bread of life to those who are perishing without it.

The lepers not only knew that the people in the city were dying, but they realized that they had some good news which would save their lives. And what wonderful news we have. We have heard it so often that the lustre has worn off. But when the heathen hear the gospel they sit open mouthed and wide eyed. It is too good to be true. To think that God—the one they have always been taught to fear and dread—really loved them, and sent his Son—his only Son—to die for them, is such wonderful news that they cannot believe it. And we have the privilege of carrying to them this wonderful news, which will lift them up out of the mire of sin and degradation and place their feet on the rock Christ Jesus.

These four lepers said, "If we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us." The margin of the American Revised Version gives a literal translation of the Hebrew of this passage: "If we tarry till the morning light, our iniquity will find us out." They realized that when they had good news which would save the lives of men, it would be iniquity, positive sin, to keep silence. And they were sure their sin would find them out. And if we fail in the trust God has committed to us, to deliver the good news of salvation to a dying world, we may be sure our sin will find us out.

A great missionary leader once said, "I am not so much concerned about what will become of the heathen if they never hear the gospel, as I am about what will become of us if we fail to carry them the gospel." For several centuries after Christ, the church in North Africa was a church on fire. But the time came when it forgot its obligation to the heathen, and settled down to eat, drink, and be merry, and to spend its time in theological arguments. Today, we have to send missionaries to convert them members of that church. Let the churches of America take warning.

Every Christian has in his possession this good news, and is a debtor to carry it or to send it to those who are dying in ignorance and superstition to go into Christless eternity because they have never heard. And "if we tarry, our iniquity will find us out."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Lure of the Unattained

By Arthur P. Petit

OUR SCRIPTURE

Remember the word which Moses the servant of the Lord commanded you saying, the Lord your God has given you rest and hath given you this land. Your wives, your little ones and your cattle shall remain in the land which Moses gave you on this side of Jordan but ye shall pass before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valor and help them; until the Lord hath given your brethren rest, as he hath given you and they also hath possessed the land which the Lord your God giveth them: then ye shall return unto the land of your possessions and enjoy it which Moses the Lord's servant gave you on this side Jordan toward the sunrising.

And they answered Joshua saying, all that thou commandest us, we will do and whithersoever thou sendest us, we will go. According as we hearkened unto Moses in all things, so will we hearken unto thee, only the Lord thy God be with thee as he was with Moses. Whosoever he be that doth rebel against thy commandment and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandest him, he shall be put to death, only be strong and of good courage (Joshua 1:2, 13-18).

OUR MEDITATION

To some, the subject and the Scripture of this effort may seem ambiguous, but to me I see plenty of ways in which the lure of the unattained helped these militant and savage-like Israelites to make the decision to cross the Jordan and help their brethren to conquer the wild and virtually impregnable tribes of the Promised Land.

There were times in the nomadic life of the Chosen People when they practically gave up hope of ever reaching the Land of Milk and Honey, there were times when the optimists of the tribes were prone to become realists in the extreme degree and even suggest that they give up this "Insane" idea of ever traveling the distance to the land of Canaan, not to mention putting down the attacks of the warlike and settled natives. There were times when they even gave up their trust in God to fall down before the Golden Calf. There were times when their murmurings nearly became their undoing. But now we find them in one of their better moments, in one of the times when they were in the height of success. To enumerate their accomplishments at this time would be superfluous to say the least. How they accomplished the attack, how their faith in God won them the first city and finally the whole land is not my purpose.

What need we suppose is the real cause behind this movement on the part of the Israelites? Why did they not settle in the land East of Jordan, toward the "rising of the sun"? Why did they push on and accomplish the historic feats of which we read? Yes, nine in ten will answer in a single word, "God". The fact cannot be denied. But how did God work in this one instance? What means did he use to accomplish his end? This question is not so easily answered. The answers will be scattered over a much wider field than in the former case.

"The Lure of the Unattained" is the answer. That fascination which accompanies a look into the future of endeavor in any line, that eagerness to accomplish newer and better things was too much for the more peaceful and contented tribes and they too accompanied their brethren in the conquest of Canaan. The fascination of the unrealized kept them ever pushing upward and onward and finally won for them the whole of the goal.

And now a short application, mostly for the young people. In coming in contact with young people, we meet all kinds, as there were all kinds among the wandering descendants of Abraham. There are those who murmur at the least amount of trouble which faces them. They like to be pampered and coaxed as a trick puppy which has to be offered a choice morsel before performing. Again there are those who always see the stumbling blocks in life's way but instead of walking around them, they give up entirely. There are those who fall by the wayside of the path to achievement with that inexcusable excuse, "I can't." They are those who would rather stay under the bondage of the slave driver than to make an effort to reach the top. Others fall aside to worship the Golden Calf of Wealth. They all work against the plan of God in Nature to make people seek better things by the lure of the unattained. The "Lure" made the great men of today. They fell not by the wayside. They plunged upward, heedful of dangers but resourceful in meeting them. No success is ever achieved without vision and vision consists of seeing and planning for the future. The pioneers of today look into the future and see their pioneering turned into greatness tomorrow and with no regret for the time they spent in achieving those things which had never before been accomplished. A final plea would be that the "Lure" may secure a firm grip on your mind, on your life, on your soul, and you may "Hitch your wagon to a star," instead of aiming at a telephone pole. When a man stops achieving, he is no longer serving humanity. Ever onward and upward, and may you never stagnate in one place, or take advantage of the absence of your guiding Soul and stop to worship the Golden Calf.

OUR PRAYER

Father in Heaven, beacon light unto the path of every soul, watch over us and never cease to guide us in the pathway of life. Direct our footsteps toward higher service for the sake of humanity. May we never stagnate in the pitfalls which line our path. May we ever push upward and onward to greater achievements in thy name and for civilization. Guard us from our worst enemy, ourselves, and give us a lure for the unattained that we may ever seek to realize the noblest and loftiest of a true Christian nature. Watch over us and guide us, in thy name, we ask. Amen.

Jesus Feeds Five Thousand Men

Scripture Lesson—John 6:1-71.

Printed Text—John 6:1-14.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 34:3-11.

Golden Text—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life: he that cometh to me shall not hunger and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.—John 6:35.

Lesson Lights

Jesus never saw a crowd just as a crowd. He saw the hunger, the pain, the wretchedness, the need. Most of us are ready to respond to a need when it is pointed out, but most of us lack the power to see the needs of others—the need of help, of sympathetic understanding, of encouragement, of cheer, of inspiration.

The disciples of Jesus were so accustomed to the sight of the poor that it never occurred to them that they had any responsibility for the relief of the crowd that collected on the hillside far from any town to listen to the words of their Master, and to be healed by him of their sicknesses. Of course they must be hungry—but what was that to the disciples? "Give ye them to eat," said Jesus—Tarbell's.

A Summary of What Jesus Did on This Day

1. Sorrow for the martyrdom of John (Evening.)
2. Danger in the political sky.
3. A sudden voyage to Philip's dominion.
4. A morning of teaching his disciples.
5. The gathering crowds.
6. Preaching the gospel to them. (Afternoon.)
7. Healing the sick.
8. Arranging to feed the multitudes.
9. Working the miracles of the loaves.
10. Sending the multitudes home.
11. Sending his disciples across the sea.
12. Hours of prayer in the mountain alone.
13. The storm at sea.
14. Walking on the water.
15. Home at Capernaum in the morning.

Light from the Orient

Mrs. Ghosn-el-Howie of Palestine writes to the "Sunday School Times:" "When a native celebrity was bringing his bride home from a distant town, the people came to meet him and accompany him from villages near the route, and by the time he arrived, the crowd was estimated to number ten thousand. They had to be fed, and therefore the bridegroom's friends, and their friends, had to run round and spend two hundred napoleons (nearly $800) for food; for barley and straw for horses were as necessary as bread and flesh for men and women. Of the estimated ten thousand guests, only a few hundreds were expected, and still fewer were actually invited. Nevertheless, the honor and prestige of the house and the customs of the country required that all should be fed."

The Hungry Around Us"

"How much there is of temporal want! There are the poor and the sick, widows and orphans, distressed and despondent souls, who need nothing so much as the refreshment a compassionate heart can bring." The "bread lines" are always full. In all our great cities so many children go to school breakfastless every morning that the authorities are seriously considering the giving of free breakfasts to these hungry little ones. Weak bodies must be fed before the mind or soul can receive their food. City missions are only following the example of Christ when they use sandwiches and coffee as baits for their higher ministrations. But he who gives only bread, fails in his mission as a Christian. When Victor Hugo's Jean Valjean turned in at the Bishop's gate he would have satisfied the beggar if he had merely given him plenty of bread, but his ministry would have been of little value; Jean would have gone away a beggar still. But because he gave him more than material gifts, gave him that which his unloved and unashamed soul secretly craved, Jean Valjean slowly began to appropriate more than bread and meat. "He discovered that forgiveness was diviner than pity. He had touched heaven in the good old man's tenderness. And he came from that second audience a new creation" (G. C. Peck in "Old Sins in New Clothes.")

Men still think life consists of meat and raiment and are reluctant to receive the spiritual and abiding things. Schauffler says,

"To this day men are much as they were nineteen hundred years ago. We have difficulty in filling our churches. But it would be easy to fill ten of the largest churches in New York City every day if only we were to promise free feeding to all who came. So far as numbers are concerned, that would be the most popular preacher who would give the best dinners to all who came. It would require a squad of police to keep the surging throngs in order at any church that offered a turkey dinner to all who would come to a service. But just as soon as the dinner was called off, they would with one consent cease coming. What many men want is merely baker's bread, and if you offer them the Bread of Life, they will turn away disgusted. But none the less the Bread of Life is better than baker's bread, by just so much as things spiritual are better than those that are merely carnal."

What a Little Boy Can Do

A nameless, poor boy, but his record is immortal. He was too small to carry much of a supply. These might have been the lad's lunch (it would not have been too much for that) or he may have been peddling them among the pilgrims. But small as he was, and small as was his supply, Jesus could use it to feed many thousand. He could have fed them without any such store, but he preferred to let these others help.

Gather Up the Fragments

Of time. "It is too late to do anything," you say; 'only one hour left.' And so comes that most awful waste—the waste of man's time." Of wealth. "It is a duty to give, but he who has nothing can give nothing. Any loss of property, any want of economy in spending it, any failure to save any portion of it, must be the result either of human imperfection or of sin."—Mark Hopkins. Of character. "Is there a good impression that you have suffered to grow faint? Is there a holy practice which you have long neglected? Have you an offended friend who is still unreconciled? a temper still unchecked? a besetting sin still unresisted? Gather up the fragments that remain, lest all be lost."

Christian Endeavor Week

By Prof. J. A. Garber, National President

The annual celebration of Christian Endeavor Week, January 31 to February 7, this year affords an opportunity to review the work of the Society, and to celebrate its forty-fifth birthday. The program is built around "The Campaign for Fidelity to Christian Endeavor Principles." The proposed program is elastic and admits of adaptation to each local society.

Daily Suggestions

Sunday—Denominational Day: The opening of the week calls for the presentation of the aims and claims of the denomination upon its young people. Ministers are asked to preach on "The Call, The Claims, and the Conquests of the Church." The suggested text is "As we have therefore opportunity, let us do good unto all men, especially unto them who are the household of faith."

Monday—Broadcasting Day: The purpose is to make known the reasons for the faith we have in Christian Endeavor. There will be radio broadcasts. In addition Endeavorers may broadcast personally by visiting a neighboring society or church.

Tuesday—Christian Endeavor's Birthday: The forty-fifth anniversary may be celebrated with a banquet, a birthday party, or a general meeting. In either case much will be said concerning the work of the ever-youthful founder of Christian Endeavor. "Fidelity to our inheritance is the watch-word."

Wednesday or Thursday—Evangelistic Days: One of these church nights will be used for attendance at the mid-week service. Endeavorers may attend in a body. The service may be conducted along Evangelistic or Missionary lines, or both. "Fidelity in Prayer" is the appeal.

Friday—Fellowship Day: This will be a particular meeting for the young people. Themes proposed are: Christian Endeavor, An Interdenominational Force; Christian Endeavor and Missions; Christian Endeavor and World Brotherhood. A pageant entitled "If—Christ Exalted," May be used on this Friday or a Sunday evening.

Saturday—Junior Day: At this time the children will receive due consideration. A party or some appropriate entertainment will be provided for them. This may be done by the local church alone, or in conjunction with neighboring churches.

Sunday—Recognition Day: It is suggested that the Christian Endeavor and church service be merged for the evening hour. An interesting program has been planned by, and may be secured from the United Society. The purpose is to present the claims of the Recognition Fund for Dr. and Mrs. Francis E. Clark, which will provide a loving recognition for them while they live, and a perpetual endowment for Christian Endeavor in the years to come.

It is earnestly hoped that Brethren Endeavorers will feel constrained to share with the Endeavorers of other churches in so remembering Dr. and Mrs. Clark, and in so providing for the continuance of Christian Endeavor. It is further hoped that our societies will make Christian Endeavor Week the occasion of setting forward Christian Endeavor in the church. The suggestions presented by National officers and superintendents are worthy of serious consideration.

Observe C. E. Week

January 31 February 7

Plan big things for this week.

Every C. E. president in the brotherhood should get busy AT ONCE—preparing a week of special features leading up to February 7th—"Decision Day"—the time we commemorate the forty-fifth anniversary of Christian Endeavor.

If you cannot observe the whole week—plan a C. E. banquet or social for one night, have "Church Loyalty" night, and wind up the week with the "Decision Day" service. At this service the important step of deciding to do some definite work for Christ and the church should be stressed by the leader in charge. Make this a combination service and have the pastor or some outside speaker bring an inspirational message. Make the program interesting with a few special musical numbers.

Many a C. E. society's tongue is coated—its liver out of whack—and needs a little pepping up by injecting a few new ideas and features occasionally to attract the youth of our church. During this week will be a splendid time to turn over a new leaf and resolve to put more life into our meetings and by so doing we will get more out of them. Don't sit back and say that YOUR society is the driest society in the brotherhood—when YOU have never offered one suggestion to better it—or when asked to do some special piece of work, refuse. Don't be a hanger-on, be a BOOSTER. LOUIS E. CLAPPER, Publicity Superintendent. Louisville, Ohio.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for January 31)

The Church and Why We Should Belong to It. Luke 2:47; 4:16

Long, long years ago, in a country far across the sea, there lived a little dark-haired, twelve-year-old boy. This little boy had never traveled about very much. When he was a little baby, his parents had taken him on a long trip but he was so little then that he could not appreciate the trip and he could not remember about it. One day, he heard his father and mother talking about taking a journey and he was quite interested for he liked to have them tell him about the country that he himself had never seen. This was not the first time that his parents had gone away; every year they took this same trip and were gone for quite a few days. However, the boy soon became more interested than he had ever been before, when his mother called him to her and smiling happily at him told him that she and his father had been talking things over and had decided that he was now old enough to go with them on their journey. After several days of packing and the usual preparations the time came to start on the trip. A lot of friends and relatives came by and the little boy with his parents joined their company.

If we boys and girls of today could have watched these people starting forth, we would have been very much surprised about some things. They did not go to a nearby station and get on a train, nor did they go to the nearest town and get in a nice big automobile bus that would hurry them along to the place where they wanted to go. Instead, they trudged along on foot and a few of the older folks led animals, that looked like small horses, with packs on their backs. In these packs the company had put the clothing and also the food for the trip. There were no trains or automobiles at the time of this story. As they traveled, the boy whom we have been talking about spent quite a lot of the time asking his mother questions. He knew already why they were going on this journey. He had been told that they were going to a beautiful building to worship God. This building was called the Temple and he was so anxious to see it. The boy and all these folks who were with him were Jews and the place to which they were going was Jerusalem. It was the custom of the Jews to go there yearly to offer prayer to God. All the way this boy was very interested in the country and in the work that people were doing as they passed along the road, but he never forgot what he was to see at the end of the trip. Finally, Jerusalem was reached and all the boy's happy dreams of the beautiful house of God were fulfilled.

As their stay in this city passed, our little friend made friends with a lot of folks he met from day to day. There were some doctors and lawyers that he was particularly interested in. They talked about a lot of things that were new and interesting to him. Several nights, let us suppose, he went home with them and looked at their books. If he did, he must have gotten a lot of pleasure out of that, too, don't you think?

I wonder how many of you, Juniors, have guessed who it is we are talking about. Do you need three guesses? I do not believe you do. This story we have been thinking about

Miss Nielsen's Busy Life

"The Sky-Parlor, Long Beach, Cal.
 Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

How many of you know that missionary of ours in South America by the name of Miss Johanna Nielsen? In the East, we did not hear much about her, as we had never seen her and were much wrapped up in our own Mr. Jobson, and the Fosters and Mrs. Gribble whom we had seen and felt we knew personally.

However, since coming out here, your Office Secretary has heard so much about "Johanna", and has had her held up as such an embodiment of all that is desirable and perfect, that she ("That O. S.") is quite discouraged and never expects to reach that high standard! But we have discovered one fault in Miss Johanna, and that is, she is so busy in her missionary work that she does not have time to write letters for "The Evangelist" or even for "The Brethren Missionary"! So, it is the object of this epistle to try to meet the crying need of news from South America.

In a recent letter to her home-folks, Miss Johanna says, "My Christmas cards will all arrive late, for I simply have not had time to write them." And in reading of her many duties and activities, it would appear that this is a real reason, and not just an excuse. Some folks think that pastors and missionaries are people of leisure, but if those same folks would try to keep up with the activities of one real Christian worker for a day or two, methinks they would arrive "At the End of a Perfect Day" breathless and glad to settle back into their own little ruts of business and pleasure.

Besides teaching a Bible Class of young women, teaching English to some ambitious young people, counselling with the Field Council (and cooking for about 20 people on the side), fitting herself in a dozen vacancies in the work at Rio Cuarto—our "Johanna" hasn't a thing to do!

And then, just to break the monotony and make life more interesting, Miss Nielsen writes of an unexpected visit of South American winged ants, that arrived on the Mission Station as soon as they got wind of the fact that Brother Yoder (their arch enemy) was away! However, it appears that one Adolpho was equal to the occasion, and with the aid of paper torches and fragrant fumes of kerosene, persuaded them that Miss Johanna's garden was not a healthy summer resort for them. And so, with the help of the Lord's wind, which Miss Johanna prayed into continued action, the day was saved and the pests diverted and annihilated.

Miss Nielsen writes that "Summer has arrived with bells", and with it comes to the natives a lassitude and indifference which makes the work of the North American missionaries doubly hard and discouraging. So, let us pray especially that the Lord of the Harvest shall give them great joy in himself and in their work for him. "For he shall not fail or be discouraged until he have set judgment in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law."

Then too, dear Members of the F. M. S., pray that we may have more young volunteers, filled with zeal plus knowledge, to man our stations in South America. Then, that will mean still more prayer for funds to send them out and support them. You see, it is just a circle—pray for the workers (even if our Father God shall call our dearest, nearest and best); then pray for the funds to send them out and keep them on the South American field. Remember, God's plan for spreading the glorious Gospel of his Dear Son is that we shall now do the giving—first of ourselves and our loved ones, and then of our substance. Did some one say: "That is asking too much!" The reply comes back from the Right Hand of the Father, even from our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: "I gave myself for thee. What hast thou done for me?"

Yours in the Master's Service,
 THAT OFFICE SECRETARY

Itinerating with the Gospel

Bassai, A. E. F., Nov. 17, 1925.

Dear Readers of the Brethren Evangelist:

Would you not like to come with us for an itinerating trip in the Kare mountains? Last Saturday morning Mrs. Kennedy and I mounted our trusty steeds, the tepois, and set out for a journey across the mountains to give the gospel to those who have little opportunity to hear it. The road through which our tepois had to pass seemed almost impassable but these natives seem to have feet that cleave to the rocks, for they can go over a solid rock mountain, carrying the tepoi on their heads and still not fall.

The first village that we visited we found the people working, but those in charge soon released them and they came and sat on the ground around us, resembling a large amphitheater. At one side some men were gambling, but they tried to impress it upon us that it was no harm since they were only gambling for wives, and not for money. They soon left their play and joined the others to hear the white people talk. The children sat in front and I just wish you could hear these "Black Diamonds" sing "Bring Them In" or some other song in their own native tongue.

From there we went to another village following pretty much the same order. This village seemed so hardened! Right in sight stood an altar on which they offered up food to their idols. Before we departed several confessed Christ. We questioned them thoroughly for fear that they would not understand what they were doing, but they replied quite intelligently. They realize that they must give up their old ways and old paths, and most of them are ready to make these adjustments before coming and making confession. When they have more than one wife they usually make arrangements for the giving up of the surplus ones before accepting Christ. Most of them wish to be called by their childhood names. The greater part of them have two names, their childhood names and the name that is given them when they pass through a kind of initiation which is nothing short of appeasing the Devil. The latter is the name that they always go by but the Christians always want to go back to their childhood names.

From there we made our way to the rest house in order to be there during the heat of the day when the sun is so dangerous. The black soldier tried to be very friendly and freed the people from their work to come and hear us. He knew a little French and tried to impress this upon the other natives by talking what French he could to us. He with the chief and a few traders came to hear us. We talked as best we could, and then for the benefit of those who could not understand the native language we had a Christian boy who was with us translate in Sango (this is the commercial language of this territory).

They listened very attentively and everywhere they seemed anxious to hear more. During the day eleven men and one woman confessed Christ.

We came home rejoicing that his Word does not return unto him void.

Yours in his Service,
 HATTIE L. COPE.

"RID THE WORLD OF LEPROSY"

With this slogan, William M. Danner, General Secretary of the American Mission to Lepers, started September 16th on a round-the-world tour. The Mission, cooperating as it has done for many years with denominational boards of foreign missions, has established a chain of nearly a hundred leper asylums in lands where the affliction is most severe.

Mr. Danner carried letters of introduction from the Japanese Ambassador and the Chinese Minister at Washington, which will secure him access to the strongest statesmen in these two countries. In Siam he will seek an audience with the King, who personally founded the extensive public leper asylum in its capital city, Bangkok. He will bring to the attention of all the officials he meets the excellent results that have been obtained from segregation of lepers in Hawaii and the Philippines, as well as in the United States. If he can induce them even to begin on the American policy the end of the historic scourge could be said to be in sight, since quarantine on a national scale would stop the infection of new victims.

In Africa the white ant is pounded into a paste and is considered a food delicacy.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

DOINGS AT DAYTON

To the brotherhood we wish to say briefly that some things forecasted in our last of October notes have become history, and we shall endeavor to give information thought to be of interest and value to the readers of the Evangelist. The First Brethren church has been unusually blessed as a congregation since its dedication in 1912 with its anticipations by Dr. Charles A. Bame the pastor with a vision hardly considered possible by many of its most active members at the time. From a book-membership of about 300 in 1912 we have grown in numbers to over 1600 listed in our recent church roster of 1925, and still the outlook is favorable for an increase and continued prosperity. For more than ten years of this period of growth, Dr. Wm. Spencer Bell has been the aggressive and efficient pastor of the congregation, and it was with great regret the membership learned at the recent Annual Business meeting his plans to accept the call to assist Ashland College in their drive for a larger endowment, beginning in their service about Easter-time this year for a period of several years. Under the circumstances the church was requested to release him as their active pastor and make other provisions.

At their late business session, January 1st, the church considered the call of Dr. Bell to his new field later in the year and extended an invitation to Dr. Alva J. McClain for substitute pastor until September 1st. They also issued a call for regular pastor to Dr. Wm. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana, to begin September 1st for a period of one year, which he has accepted with provisions. The church feels itself very fortunate to have both these ministers accept the calls extended to them, and feels that her future of the continued success is assured under their administration as indicated. Dr. Bell has consented to continue his residence at Dayton, Ohio, until September 1st, and remain as inactive pastor, though willing to offer suggestions from time to time to the officers of the church when requested during the period Dr. McClain is the substitute in charge until he can remove to Dayton after the close of his college engagement.

We are incidentally informed by Rev. Wm. A. Gearhart, General Home Mission Secretary-Treasurer, that the First Brethren church of Dayton made their late Thanksgiving offering about $1200, which he expects will be somewhat increased yet by pledges and payments. The "White-Gift's offering for the King, was a great occasion when more than 50 baskets for the needy were brought to the platform and over $200 in cash given, this with the exercises was very much appreciated by the officers of the Sunday school and church. Mr. Robert Earl Kline, organist, gave a very fine organ recital at the gift's service on the pipe organ which was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

During a recent absence of Dr. Bell, the pastor, while holding an evangelistic engagement with the First Brethren church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, the services of our church were mostly taken care of by home talent, except that Rev. Peter Quartel of the City Mission, gave us a fine sermon on Sunday morning, and on one occasion, Honorable Orion E. Bowman delivered a sermon on the theme, "The Trial of Jesus", from a lawyer's standpoint, which was very well received.

At the New Year's Business Meeting, Mr. Orion E. Bowman with his two assistants, Roy H. Kinsey and Fred W. Eecard were again re-elected for another year, together with other elective officers. I now quote from the pastor's annual report: "The church has maintained throughout the year, a vigorous and aggressive program of work. We have maintained our position among the ranking churches of Dayton, and are so recognized. There has been splendid cooperation, fellowship and a united working body. We have given support to all the interests of the church at large. Have cooperated with the great Protestant body of churches in our own city in all the cooperative projects. The Bible school under the able leadership of Orion E. Bowman and his competent body of assistants and teachers is still at the head and lead all the schools of the city and county. This has been the greatest year's record in the history of the school." Continuing, the pastor says: "The Woman's Missionary Society has a capable leadership with Mrs. J. M. Wine as president, who has a cabinet of excellent officers. During the last year at a cost of over $1200 they installed modern equipment for kitchen and dining room. They have contributed to all the interests of the church at home and at large. This society has made a great record for the year just past."

The church decided to support an "Honor Roll" for the Evangelist this year, and many other things of interest could be named, but it would be inexpedient to take more space at this time. The evangelistic campaign with Dr. Charles H. Ashman in the pulpit is starting off fine, and a report will be given later to the Evangelist. May we have your prayers for the work at Dayton, First Brethren?

Corresponding Secretary.

HAMPTON, NEW JERSEY

Believing that the readers of the "Evangelist" would be interested in hearing of our work here at Hampton, we thought it would be well to explain a little regarding it.

As there has never been any report concerning our work, we will start at the beginning when in the summer of 1923 an evangelistic campaign was held, under the direction of Brother A. E. Thomas which resulted in about thirteen members desiring to organize a Brethren church. Not being enough for a church, we were placed in a class, the home church being at Calvary, New Jersey. We at once launched out to serve the Lord in the best possible way.

Many problems and difficulties confronted us, as we were unable to support a resident pastor, and had no church of our own, in which to worship. But the Lord was with us, and we were soon able to rent a church, where we could hold our services and Brother C. E. Kolb, well known to all Evangelist readers came and preached for us during the week, not being able to come to us on Sunday, as he was then pastor at Allentown, Pennsylvania.

We at once organized a Sunday school of about fifteen members. Although few in number, we knew that God does not count numbers as we do, and we felt encouraged to try still harder to work for the Master, praying that our work might grow, and the Lord has wondrously answered our prayers and blessed our efforts.

On November 26, 1923, evangelistic services were held by Rev. C. E. Kolb. Four converts were the result of these meetings, all of which united with our class. Then again in September, 1924, evangelistic services were held by Brother A. E. Thomas. At these meetings only one convert was the result, but we find in Luke 15:10, "There is joy in the presence of the angels of God, over one sinner that repenteth", therefore we could not feel discouraged, and a great spiritual awakening was felt in the hearts and lives of every member, due to Brother Thomas' wonderful messages.

Many discouragements came to us on account of bad weather, and nearly all of the members having to travel over country roads, some a distance of three miles, but the Lord always provided a way, and only a few Sundays during the severe winter of 1925 were we obliged to leave the doors closed.

We now have a Missionary Society of thirteen active members, and our prayer meetings are well attended and very helpful. Then last, but not least, after much prayer the Lord has supplied our pulpit, with a pastor, Brother S. Adams of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, who so willingly and faithfully comes to us each Lord's day with a message, that helps to give us new courage, and we feel sure, that with a man of God, whose whole life is consecrated to the Master's service, as is Brother Adams, our work must grow and the kingdom of God be advanced in the world.

The Class at Hampton feels very thankful to Brother Adams for coming to us each week, for we realize what a great sacrifice he is making, but we don't forget to ask the Lord to bless his efforts, and we know he will be given strength for every trial.

Our Class has grown to a membership of 19 with bright prospects of others uniting with us in the near future. Our Sunday school now numbers 31, and we hope to take on new courage and to work with greater determination, for we know there are greater things in store for us if we prove faithful. The Lord has surely blessed our efforts and we praise his name.

We ask the prayers of the brotherhood that some time in the near future we may have a church house of our own in which to worship, and that our work may succeed and bring glory to the Master's name.

MISS BESSIE BUTLER,

Sunday School Superintendent.

SECOND BRETHREN SERVICE STATION Los Angeles, California

Another year of wonderful activity and development has come to a successful close, and substantial dividends have been declared. 63 4-10% dividends on the capital stock was a good showing for 1925. In 1924 dividends for this station amounted to 100%, but owing to doubling the capital stock January 1, 1925 the present dividend was cut down.

Business has been very good here and the present outlook is far better than a year ago. New investments are constantly being received. All local people, of course, because we cannot use foreign stock very well.

Some interesting facts developed at the stockholders' meeting held on the property on the evening of December 31, 1925.

The average enrollment for 1925 in the Sunday school was 382 and the average attendance was 320. The church membership was 317 on December 31, 1925. Our average Sunday school attendance for the year was larger than our church membership on the day of business meeting, and showed a 30% gain over last year.

The report also shows 123 net gain in church membership, and 84 of them came through the Sunday school, thus bearing out old figures that 85% join the church before they are 20 years of age, and 80% come through the Sunday school. A number of heads of families are included in this gain. It is also interesting to know that an average of 186 carried their Bibles each Sunday, and this is as it should be.

We have adopted a slogan for 1926—"Every member of the church a member of the Sunday School." The church treasurer handled over $6,000.00, exclusive of building funds and the Sunday school offering amounted to 10 cents per member for the year.

Some wonderful work has been mapped out for 1926 and some good dividend material is already in sight.

Of course we would not boast for anything, but if there is another church in the brotherhood paying larger dividends we would like to hear from you, and we might take you on for a contest.

May the Lord richly bless all Service Stations doing business in his name.

J. C. McBRIDE.

SPRINGFIELD CENTER, OHIO

It has recently been our privilege to hold a meeting ten days long, at Springfield Center, Ohio, where Brother Leslie Lindower is the good pastor. Our stay here was greatly enjoyed and we trust profitable for all. Brother Lindower is an old college chum and our association together for a few days seemed short indeed.

Tribulation was ours. But the Book of Books says, "Tribulation worketh patience." The weather was intensely cold. There was much sickness. It was the rush of the holiday season. Several prominent members found it necessary to be in other states at the time. Ten days' time is too short.

But the Lord can work anywhere and in any sort of weather and under any circumstances. We give him the glory and the praise for ten souls who promised to take Christ as Savior and Lord.

Brother Lindower has done remarkably well in the last year or more. His work is handicapped by his absence from the church to be in school. But he is not easily discouraged. There is a fine opportunity in the Sunday school here which is composed of many children, to develop some real Christian men and women. This church holds services in a very comfortable and attractive basement, which some time will be built higher up. The pastor is well liked and has won a place in the hearts of the people of the church. Pray for this church.

CHARLES W. MAYES.

A PASTOR'S NEW YEAR GREETING AND SERMON BRIEF

(The following clipping from the "Fort Scott Tribune" will be read with interest by Brother Wood's many friends—Editor).

A New Beginning. A New Vision of Service
Theme of Rev. L. G. Wood in New Year's Sermon

The pastor of the Brethren church, Rev. L. G. Wood, delivered a challenging message to an appreciative audience Sunday at 10:45 A. M., taking for the text, Revelations 21:5. "And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold I make all things new." The speaker first pointed out the possibility of a new beginning, as the charm of life. A new beginning freshens life by giving place to hope, and putting away all past failures. These new beginnings mean new experiences and an enlarging vision. The new forms of modern existence is loudly calling for the unfolding of a Christian civilization.

The pastor exhorted his congregation to a new vision of service which will be in harmony with the spirit and opportunities of this New Year. Some are asking, what is the matter with the church? It is the best and the greatest institution in the world, and is presenting in her divine message, the most sublime challenge to human effort.

May we take three words and lay the stepping stones to a successful answer to this New Year's challenge:

First: RECOGNIZE—Recognize our need of just such a Savior as Jesus Christ purposes to be. It is extremely sad to think of this new world being ushered in, one of these days and find us in our old garb.

Second: RELY—We must rely entirely and only upon Christ. He alone can furnish the "robe of righteousness." He alone can crown life with richness and unfading glory.

Third: RESPONSE—The only way we can prove our recognition of Christ and our reliance upon him is by meekly responding to his great invitation and program.

"Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

This message was concluded with the pastor's personal New Year's greeting, which follows:

A New Year's Greeting

As the old year becomes a part of all our yesterdays, and we stand upon the threshold of the new year, we experience a mingling of emotion, among which predominates the feeling of gratitude unto him who is the author of every good thing.

I desire to express my appreciation to the members of the congregation and friends who have shown me so many kindly courtesies since my return to Fort Scott, two months ago. From the loyalty shown during this time, success in the service of our King, and for our beloved church, which he purchased with his own blood, is assured.

We have passed through a momentous year, whose loom has been strung with the warp and woof of destiny. It has been a year of testing, of your faith, in more ways than one. I hope you have emerged from all of the unpleasant experiences of the old year, with a meek and holy desire to promote "peace on earth and good will to all men."

As we look back we feel that a real progress has been made. A deeper peace enfolds the world today, than ever before since the Angel choir sang peace over the Judean hills.

The statesmen of the whole world are recognizing the fact that the problems of state and nations, as of individuals, are moral and spiritual problems, more than political. We are coming to a clearer understanding of the words of the great Apostle, when he said: "Other foundations can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus."

We now bid the old year good-bye with a bit of regret, conscious that we have not lived up to our opportunities, in all things. Many words and deeds we would blue pencil if we could, and in service unperformed we would retrace our steps to render.

But a realization that past failures can be made stepping stones to a better future, enables us to turn our faces toward that future with a firmer hope and a finer resolve.

With implicit faith in our heavenly Father, who is able, out of the imperfect past, to work out a far more exceeding weight of glory, and trusting through him my ministry may be of constructive value to the Brethren church and also to the entire community.

I extend to one and all the greetings of the season, and wish for you a year of developing contentment and peace, in which the spiritual and material prosperity may always be in the ascendancy. And that your joy in the service of our divine Master may be increasingly manifest throughout another year and for life.

The Church and Why We Should Belong to It

together is the story about the boy Jesus on his first trip to the temple. You know the rest of the story, I am sure. Jesus' parents started for home without noticing that Jesus was not with the children who were in the company. Finally, when they missed him and went back to Jerusalem after him, they found him in the house of God talking with the doctors and lawyers. He was asking them questions and talking with them and they must have been very interested in him, I think. Do you know what this boy said when his mother asked him why he had not gone with them? He asked her if she did not know that he must work for his Father. By his Father, he meant his Father God, up in heaven.

Jesus taught us to pray to God and call him, Our Father. Then, let us remember to be about his business and work for him, too. In the time of our story, there were no churches like we have today. Instead, they had the Temple and they had the Synagogue, a place of worship. Jesus went to one of these places to worship God always on the Sabbath day. This is one reason why we think that we should join the church and attend regularly, because Jesus did. Another reason why we, boys and girls, should join the church, is so that we can make friends with other people who are God's children and are serving him. We can work better when we have friends to work with. It is hard to accomplish things and to think out how to do things by ourselves, so it is a good thing to become members of the church and be with people who are serving the same Master we are, with whom we can work. When we are young we have many more years of work to offer to the Master, so we should join the church and become faithful to him while we are yet young.

Although recently we have made no report of our work at this place, through the pages of our work at this place, through the pages faithful have pressed bravely on in the good work of the Lord, and while we have not always realized the most encouraging results we have continued to do our best, by God's help, trusting him for blessing upon our efforts.

That which interested us most during the recent weeks was our evangelistic and revival campaign conducted by Brother A. E. Thomas, who came to us December 1 and mightily preached the Word for three weeks. His sermons were considered among the very best and they were delivered with great power. The Gospel could hardly be presented most appealingly and convincingly than it was by Brother Thomas. Besides his sermons, his lectures on Sunday afternoons and his Bible Talks on other afternoons were well received. His Sunday afternoon lecture on "100% Americanism" was particularly a great message. During his stay with us, Brother Thomas lectured at three different high schools, having a total audience of more than three thousand pupils, all of whom responded with enthusiastic applause. He also spoke at the luncheon of the Business Men's Pocket Testament League and preached early one Sunday morning to the prisoners in the city prison. He accompanied the pastor in many calls in the parish and faithfully helped in the personal work. His work was satisfactory in every way and it was a great pleasure to work with him. The meetings were well advertised both in the city papers and by printed cards. The weather was very favorable nearly the whole time. Yet, it seemed impossible to get a large attendance except on Sundays. The unsaved especially were few and irregular in attendance. This was undoubtedly due to the overwhelming interest in the commercialized spirit of Christmas, which began even before our campaign. It seemed that few people could give any thought or time to anything but that which pertained to Christmas. It seems strange that the celebration of the birthday of Christ, "The Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world," could detract so much from an evangelistic campaign. I feel sure that if we had held the campaign either a month earlier or later it would have resulted in many times the success. We had wanted to hold the campaign in November, but Brother Thomas could not come then. Against our better judgment we went ahead with the meetings in December, hoping to overcome the adverse influences, but they proved too strong for us to attain the success we had wished.

However, four were added to the membership of the church as a result of this campaign, three by baptism and one by letter from the Church of the Brethren, and two young lives were dedicated for life service to Jesus, besides several dedications to more faithful service. Furthermore, the church has been revived in spirit and is pressing forward into the New Year with increased fervor. For all this we are truly thankful.

I am sorry that Brother Thomas could not have come to us at a more opportune time. Doubtless the results would have been much more satisfactory. However, the results were large, much larger perhaps than some of us think. I consider Brother Thomas a very able evangelist and one that ought to be kept continually busy in evangelism in the church.

Our communion service was held Sunday evening, January 3, and was considered by many as the most spiritual communion we have had for a long time. A peculiarly holy atmosphere seemed to pervade the entire service, which was closed with a number of earnest testimonies.

Though we know what difficulties and hindrances await us we will fearlessly press on and by his grace do all we can to make this a great year of victory.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

POWELL-PRICE—At the home of C. A. Ulrick of Udell, Iowa, on the 20th day of December, 1925, Miss Hazel B. Price and Mr. Ora A. Powell were united in marriage in the presence of a few friends by the writer.

G. T. RONK.

YETLEY-DEVIG—Mr. Donald Yetley, of Garwin, Iowa, and Miss Olga Bertina Devig, of Le Grand, Iowa, were united in marriage at the Carlton Brethren Parsonage, on Christmas eve, December 24, 1925. The bride has been employed for some time, in domestic work in Marshalltown. The groom is a farmer and an active member of the Carlton Brethren church. The young people will make their home, for the present, with the parents of the groom in this community. These are splendid young people and their hosts of friends join in wishing them every happiness. Ceremony by the writer. CARL E. HELSER.

IN THE SHADOW

HUMBERD—John M. Humbert, son of Samuel and Lucinda Humbert, was born in Carroll County, Indiana, July 20, 1866, and departed this life to be with his Lord December 29, 1915, being 59 years, 5 months and 9 days old. For the most part his life was spent in Carroll County. On September 4, 1889 he was married to Phoebe A. Flora. To this union were born six children, three dying in infancy. The living are R. I. Humbert of Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio; Mrs. Virgil Stinbaugh of Delphi, Indiana; Neva Humbert at home. Mr. Humbert leaves four sisters, one brother, and one foster-brother. They are: Mrs. C. A. Welty; Mrs. Ed. Walker, Mrs. Wilbur Richardson, all of Flora; Nancy Miller of Hagerstown, Indiana; Rev. R. I. Humbert of North Little Rock, Arkansas; Charlie Pope of Flora. Beside the wife and family there are five grandchildren and a host of relatives and friends to mourn the passing of this good man.

Perhaps the progress and development of the local church was the result of his work and faithfulness more than any other one man. Brother Humbert has served in the office of Deacon for twenty-five of the thirty years that he has been identified with the church. For ten years he served as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a strong supporter of the mission in Kentucky, having taught one year at the Riverside Institute, and three terms at Krypton.

Services were held at the Brethren church in Flora. FRANK G. COLEMAN, Pastor.

Resolutions of Condolence

Whereas, the All-Wise Heavenly Father has seen fit to remove from our midst a beloved brother, John M. Humbert, who entered into rest Tuesday, December 29, 1925.

Therefore be it resolved that the Flora First Brethren church acknowledge the loss of an esteemed and active member, one who has served as deacon for the home church for a period of twenty-five years and also as a teacher in the Kentucky Mission schools.

And be it resolved that we extend to the bereaved family our sincere sympathy and trust that they may be comforted by the thought that the loved one gone before is waiting beyond to welcome us to the eternal home. He was ready and willing to go, for he knew that his mansion had been prepared for him by his Savior and Lord.

Furthermore, be it resolved that we, the members of the church, continue to hold him in loving remembrance and be motivated by the memory of his kind and gentle disposition and splendid Christian spirit.

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family and also sent to the Brethren Evangelist, and spread upon the minutes of our record book.

ACKER—John Acker, eldest son of Christian and Margaret Acker, was born May 9th, 1848, near Bluntsville, Indiana, and passed away December 22, 1925, aged 77 years, 7 months and 13 days. In March, 1920 he united with the Brethren church of Oakville, and remained a faithful member till death removed him from the scene of suffering. He had been in ill health for several years, but he never complained, enduring his sufferings with Christian fortitude. Funeral services conducted in the Oakville Brethren church by the writer. S. LOWMAN.

THOMAS—Mrs. Isabelle Thomas, daughter of George and Margaret Thomas, was born June 16th, 1842, at Gibbonsdale, Pennsylvania, and departed this life, December 27, 1925, aged 83 years, 6 months and 11 days. On March 11, 1860, she was united in marriage to Isaac J. Thomas and the following day they started west to make their home in Iowa, settling in Mt. Etna, Adams county. Three years later they moved to New Virginia, which was their home for the remainder of their days together, having enjoyed over sixty-five years of wedded life. To them were born four children, only one of which remains—Mrs. Mary M. Folger of Osceola, Iowa. The faithful husband was at her bedside when the last hour came, and though he will miss her greatly, he rejoices in the hope of a resurrection and a happy reunion. They have trusted in the living Savior since childhood; they united with the Brethren church in 1860 and immediately established a Christian home. Besides the husband and daughter, she leaves four grandchildren, eight great-grandchildren, and many other dear friends. Funeral was held from the Christian church in New Virginia, conducted by Rev. Homer Caskey of the Brethren church of Lenox, Iowa. I. J. THOMAS.

STIMMEL—Mrs. Robert Stimmel was born in the city of Indianapolis, Indiana, May 1, 1861, and died at her home in Louisville, Ohio, January 8, 1926, aged 65 years, 7 months and 7 days. Mrs. Stimmel with her husband united with the First Brethren church of Louisville on November 13, 1920. She is survived by her husband and one daughter. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor from the church on Sunday afternoon, January 10. R. F. PORTE.

A Glorious Sunrise

A band of Christians were crossing an Eastern desert. The night was dark but they determined to push on. Soon they lost their way and had to spend the night in anxiety and fear. It seemed the night would never pass. But almost all at once the sun rose, bringing daylight and showing the way to safety. Not one of them ever forgot that sunrise. So the people of this world are lost in their wanderings. They are really lost, lost in the darkness of sin. But the Sun of Righteousness has arisen. He hath shined into our hearts because some one brought us to the light. Are you trying to bring somebody to the light of Christ? Begin now by having good tracts in your possession and give them out as you go about. Write the Publishing Company at Ashland, Ohio, for advice and particulars concerning Brethren Tracts.

Is Coarseness on the Increase?

We were made to wonder about it because of some recent observations. And the observations impressed us the more and seemed the more significant because they were so casual. We had no thought of gathering statistics, or of getting anything on present day standards. We have not taken these few incidents so seriously as to be oppressed and made pessimistic regarding the future, yet we feel justified in raising the question, if perchance those who are in the "look-outs" on the walls of Zion may have their scrutiny directed toward a growing evil that may have by some been overlooked.

We stepped into a grocery store recently and heard a girl, perhaps eighteen years of age, recounting to a man of middle life certain happenings in a show she had attended the night before. Her description required her to make use of language and make reference to wearing apparel and to parts of the human body in ways that, to say the least, were unusual and surprising, if not shocking, and men were turning their attention to her with looks that were curious and a little puzzled. Yet she seemed entirely unembarrassed and accepted the gazes and attention with rather a sense of satisfaction. We have every reason to believe she was an entirely virtuous girl, but she had evidently lost the sense of delicacy and refinement that we have been wont to prize in womanhood.

We were endeavoring to make our way through a flock of high school students, leisurely wending their way homeward after school, and as we passed, one of the boys reproduced a coarse joke which, it became evident from their conversation, he had gotten at a recent movie. There followed a horse-laugh which echoed far down the street and was participated in by a number of the girls as well as of the boys. Instead of the joke being received with the disapproval of silence, which was the least it deserved, it was thoroughly enjoyed and approved by hilarious, ear-grating laughter.

Standing in the broad entrance-way to a large and very respected business establishment, visited by people of every social standing, were a number of men and women in a group, talking and laughing boisterously. It seemed that the subject of their conversation was a recent marriage of two of their acquaintances, which event was furnishing the occasion for some humorous and uncomplimentary remarks about the marriage relation. One of those making a witty remark seemed to have gotten his cue from a popular cartoon caricaturing heme life. And from the guffaws of the men and the unsuppressed laughter of the women it seemed that no one took exception to the coarseness involved. They were not bad people; their countenances were clean and they showed no signs of being other than just our ordinary, respectable folk. But they lacked refinement and culture; they had a very inadequate sense of moral values; they had no high and wholesome regard for that which is proper and of good taste.

Many other incidents might be recounted, but these which came within the experience of one trip about town, are sufficient to warrant one's raising the question as to whether there is a growing tendency toward coarseness, and even vulgarity, not only among the young, but among all ages and classes. Whatever tendency there is in that direction, we are persuaded is due in no small degree to two influences; namely, the movie and the popular newspaper cartoon. Added to these is the failure on the part of the home to exercise a proper counteracting influence. In fact, many homes are themselves pervaded by a spirit of coarseness and vulgarity, and parents are often found sneering at influences that encourage true nobility and propriety of speech and conduct. They mistake culture for snobbery, and refinement for an overbearing superiority, and one given to high ideals and self-betterment they look upon as a "high-brew."

Perhaps some may consider these things as of very slight significance, and as affording no cause for alarm, and yet they can hardly be passed by so lightly when we realize that nothing so truly reveals the real self as the type and quality of our manners and the refinement of our speech. These are the outward signs of the inner character and being, and they warrant our concern.

Importance of the Religious Press

Time and again we have emphasized the importance of the religious press, particularly from the standpoint of our denominational interests. But we fear many have been inclined to discount our words as coming from one who is biased by a special interest in our church press. We are glad therefore to pass on the words of another on this point, the words of one who represents an interest that receives very generous support from the secular press as well as from the religious press. Dr. Howard B. Grose, director of the Bureau of Information of the National Council of Y. M. C. A.'s of the United States, bears this significant testimony:

"Whether the advertisers have as yet discovered it or not, there was never greater need for a live, intelligent, wide-visioned religious press in our country. The Protestant press has a work of magnitude and importance to do in creating the right kind of public opinion and unifying it in the bringing together of the Protestant forces of America, as a matter of preparation for whatever emergencies may arise."

And we might add that the denominational press especially has a great work to do, a work that surpasses that of all other agencies in this particular, in building up denominational intelligence and loyalty, and in unifying the various widely separated geographical sections and bringing about the harmonizing of emphasis and the centering of effort along certain well defined lines. Nothing is more important to denominational success than just this, and that being true, it should be a matter of the most vital concern on the part of every church leader to see that the church paper enjoys the widest circulation possible. To give encouragement to this end, every pastor should feel it his bounden duty, for he is the key to the situation.

Mississippi Leads in Lynching

The state of Mississippi has the unenviable record of committing the most lynchings during the year of 1925—the number being six. The total number of lynchings during the year was sixteen, the same number as during the preceding year. While this record is shameful enough, yet it is encouraging in that it is the smallest number of persons lynched during any other year since records have been kept, according to the report of Dr. R. R. Moton, Principal of Tuskegee Institute. It is "17 less than the number 33 for 1923, and 41 less than the number 57 for 1922." Aside from the six lynchings which occurred in Mississippi, the other states whose names were blotted by this crime are Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 2; Louisiana, 1; Missouri, 1; Utah, 1; Virginia, 1. Of the sixteen persons lynched all were Negroes.

There were thirty-nine instances in which officers of the law prevented lynchings. Seven of these were in northern states and thirty-two in southern states. In three instances during the year persons charged with being connected with lynching mobs were indicted. Of the forty-one persons thus before the courts, twenty-one were sentenced; five suspended sentences, dependent on good behavior; and others received jail sentences. The propaganda carried on for a number of years by the churches and the religious press has caused sentiment to crystallize so strongly against this crime, that more and more caution is being taken to prevent it. The Tuskegee Institute has also had large part in bringing about this advance by its records and the publicity given to them. May the good work go on until lynchings shall no longer blot the good name of our great and proud country.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother D. A. C. Teeter, whose present home is Warsaw, Indiana, informs us that he is in a revival meeting at Lapaz of that state where he is pastor, and asks for prayer in behalf of the campaign.

Christian Endeavorers should not fail to give careful attention to Brother E. M. Riddle's outline of the annual essay contest conditions and the announcement of valuable scholarship prizes. Ashland College Night is the event to be thus featured.

In case you have not yet taken your Publication Day offering do it quickly and make it the best you can. Keep up with the schedule of offerings and you will not get into trouble. If you let them drag, they will become annoying and burdensome.

A neat little announcement was received at the editor's home from Rev. and Mrs. E. M. Riddle, informing us of the arrival at the church parsonage at Bryan, Ohio, on January 19th of Joan Elizabeth, weight seven pounds. In behalf of the Evangelist family we extend to Brother and Sister Riddle most hearty congratulations.

Dr. C. A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland church, and who is engaged in a revival campaign at the Third church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, writes, "Our meeting is wonderful; 34 confessions at the fourth drawing of the net; crowded houses and beautiful harmony. These two congregations are more than ready, they are anxious for union."

We learn in an indirect way that the evangelistic campaign just closed at Masontown, Pennsylvania, with Brother B. T. Burnworth as evangelist, resulted in about twenty-five confessions. Brother J. L. Gingrich is the faithful pastor, and will doubtless soon give us a report of the meeting, as well as of other events of interest. Brother Burnworth is now assisting Brother George H. Jones of Conemaugh in a campaign.

A letter from Miss Alice B. Longaker, office secretary of the Foreign Board, passes on an example in giving that should cause most of us to throw away any pride we may have had in the size of our gifts for missions, or any other department of the Lord's work for that matter. There are here and there some precious souls who make really sacrificial gifts, but most of us give out of our comfort, if not of our abundance.

We notice by the weekly calendars of the First church of Philadelphia, that Brother R. Paul Miller and his faithful co-workers are making a strong effort to clear the church of its final indebtedness by February 14th. The entire amount was covered with pledges in February a year ago, and now they are endeavoring to cash in on those pledges. They will have the good wishes and prayers of many friends of the congregation.

The First church of Los Angeles is pressing forward in their splendid work. They closed the year with a decision day service which resulted in twenty-three making the good confession. Their once-a-month breaking of bread, followed by a discussion period is an interesting innovation and should result in greatly strengthening the spirit of fraternity among the membership. They carried out an interesting surprise celebration of the silver wedding anniversary of their pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister N. W. Jennings.

With this issue Dr. Martin Shively begins his promised series of articles on Some Pioneer Ministers of the Church. He is to provide one article a month, and it is expected that the series will extend through two years. The first of these fathers of the church to receive attention is Elder H. S. Jacobs, father of President E. E. Jacobs of Ashland College. This is a most important service that Dr. Shively is rendering, and it is hoped that it will result in not only making these pioneers, most of whom are gone, more real, but more appreciated by the younger members of our church, and especially the ministry.

We learn that the Martinsburg church in Pennsylvania is in the midst of a revival campaign, being conducted by their new pastor, Brother James S. Cook, who recently came to them from Turlock, California, where he served faithfully and efficiently for a number of years as pastor. Brother W. S. Crick, our informant, and pastor of the New Enterprise church, thirteen miles distant, tells us that he was planning at the time of writing to go with his congregation for a fraternal visit to the Martinsburg people to encourage them in their campaign.

Brother W. R. Deeter, the busy pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, tells of the progress of the Lord's work at that place and of some of the many forms of community leadership which he is exercising. We are in receipt of the excellent program of the service observing the third anniversary of the dedication of their new church, and it is unique in the number of local talent participating. It will be remembered that the former church was burned and the first task of Brother Deeter upon assuming the pastorate was to lead in the rebuilding. The membership has been increased to the number of forty-nine.

We are glad to note that Brother W. S. Crick is complying with our request that churches make quarterly reports of their work to the Evangelist, and we hope many other pastors who have not been doing so heretofore, will follow his example. His report of the work at the three congregations in his charge—Yellow Creek, Raystown, and New Enterprise—is very encouraging. Eight additions to the church at Raystown and two at New Enterprise are tabulated. All three congregations showed their appreciation of their pastor and his help-meet by generous gifts at the Christmas season.

The financial report of Brother W. A. Gearhart, begun in last week's issue, gives receipts from the middle of November to the close of the year. It is possibly one of the best reports that he has made covering that period and shows the increased interest that is being taken in the extension of the church in the homeland. And no task of the general church is more urgent and requires giving in larger sums than just that. It is well that this fact is beginning to dawn upon our consciousness, for progress in many other lines is beginning to tarry for the advance here. Our church future is bright or not depending on the zeal we show in home missions. Let the good reports continue to come.

The General Secretary of the National Sunday School Association, Prof. J. A. Garber, has something of interest for all Sunday school workers on the Sunday school page. He speaks of the "larger" and "prompter" White Gift offerings, the splendid work being done by Brother M. A. Stuekey, and special features appearing in "The Educator" and then announces the coming International Sunday School Convention to be held at Birmingham, Alabama, in April. This reminds us that the Ashland Times-Gazette recently announced that the Ashland County Council of Religious Education, had delegated its general secretary, Brother Garber, and his good wife, as its representatives to that great convention.

We have an interesting report from the new correspondent of the Long Beach church, who writes that this thriving church, at the threshold of its thirteenth year of history, is not entertaining any superstitious fears regarding the number "thirteen", and by continuing the year with prayer, as they started it with prayer, they have no reason to expect anything but a continuation of God's abundant blessing. Dr. Bauman, their pastor, is assisting Brother Herbert H. Tay and the congregation at LaVerne in an evangelistic campaign and in February is to begin a similar campaign in the North Long Beach Mission, following the dedication of the new church house. This mission has been conducted and financed by the First church of that city.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Material versus the Spiritual

By J. L. Kimmel

It is generally conceded that the origin of man was at least six thousand years ago. Scientists tell us that the human race is much older than what the Bible chronologists make it. But whatever the time may be, whether it is six thousand years or six million years, there is no doubt that man's problems have been very much the same all down through the ages.

The two great problems that man has had to face from the beginning until now have been the material and the spiritual. First life, then death. Life man possessed and death was sure to come. So the first great problem was how to maintain life and the second was how to meet death. These are still the problems of the race and ever will be.

God has implanted into every living creature a desire to live and to protect its offspring. He gave strength to the lion, fleet of foot to the deer, and wings to the fowl, and reasoning faculties to man. This makes man responsible to God, the creator, and the preserver of us all. It is therefore perfectly proper and right that man should have a desire to live and to enjoy life to its fullest extent. It is also natural for the material to appeal very strongly to the human mind. And the history of the world is that man has been inclined to pay too much attention to the material and to neglect altogether the spiritual. It is true, however, that there have been noble exceptions in all ages, but these have been entirely too few and the masses have overestimated the material and underrated the spiritual.

Happiness is the great overwhelming desire of the human soul. Everything that man does, he does with a view to happiness, whether good or bad. The question then is: What brings true happiness into a man's life? Is it the material things of life, or is it the spiritual things of life? What makes a nation great? Is it the material or the spiritual things that make a nation a tower of strength in this world? The fact is that we need both to be happy and to accomplish things for the good of the world.

Man is a dual creature. God made him in a physical sense, then he breathed into him the breath of life and man became a living soul. That is, God breathed into man a part of himself and ever since man has cried out for God. David cried, "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God." When David gave expression to this great truth, he uttered the universal language of the race.

The nations of the world have risen and fallen like the waves of the sea, simply because they did not have the spiritual to sustain them in the crisis and to give them strength that is enduring. The Roman empire is a remarkable demonstration of this truth. We are told it was three thousand miles long and fifteen hundred miles wide and had a population of one hundred and twenty millions of people. The United States as a nation from ocean to ocean measures three thousand miles and from the great lakes to the gulf, fifteen hundred miles and has a population of one hundred and fifteen millions of people. We are now the richest nation in the world and we are told by men who are in a position to know, that there is a period of unprecedented prosperity before us. Just how much room we have as a nation for congratulations because of our great wealth and our unparalleled prosperity, is a very grave question. May I quote from history, by way of comparison, as to the wealth of the Roman Empire in the day of its greatest prosperity?

The City of Rome had a population of four millions of people. Its theaters and amphitheaters were among the greatest the world has ever known. The palace of Nero glittered with gold and jewels; perfumes and flowers were showered from ivory ceilings. The halls of Heliogabalus were hung with cloth of gold, enriched with jewels; his beds were silver and his tables of gold. A banquet dish of Drusus weighed five hundred pounds of silver. Tunics were embroidered in figures of various animals; sandals were garnished with precious stones. Paulina wore jewels when she paid visits valued at $800,000.00. Drinking cups were engraved with scenes from poets. Libraries were adorned with busts and of rare woods; sofas were inlaid with tortoise shell and covered with gorgeous purple. The Roman grandees rode in garnished chariots, bathed in marble baths, dined from golden plates, drank from crystal cups, slept on beds of down, reclined on luxurious couches, wore embroidered robes that were adorned with precious stones. They ransacked the earth and the seas for rare dishes for their banquets and ornamented their houses with carpets from Babylon, onyx cups from Bithinia, bronzes from Corinth, marbles from Numidia, statues from Athens, whatever in shore was precious or rare, or curious in the most distant countries, was brought to Rome and enjoyed by these men and women of wealth and power. But while Rome was covered with magnificence and splendor, underneath it all was corruption, vice and sin. Rome had materialism with a vengeance, but she lacked the spiritual, which makes nations great, and her doom came and her day was at hand. The Barbarian hordes from the North swept down upon her as eagles upon a dead carcass, and Rome, the pride of the ancient world, lay helpless before them. Not a single thing said about ancient Rome in all history, regarding her wealth that could not be duplicated again and again by the people of America today.

Not long since, a young lady whose father owns a chain of stores was robbed of a million dollar's worth of jewels that she had on her person. While at the same time, the girls that work in these stores in our cities get ten and eleven dollars a week for their work. That is materialism again with a vengeance as we may see it in our day.

Some time ago a man was found by the police in New York City nearly starved and almost frozen to death. At the police station where he was fed and clothed they found five thousand three hundred and fifteen dollars of gold on his person. This man however, is not the only man that has valued his gold too highly.

A traveler who was lost in the desert and almost starved had hoped for days that he might find something to eat that other travelers had lost. One day his hopes were gratified when he found a leather bag which he supposed contained figs and dates. But when he opened the bag, to his great disappointment, it contained nothing but precious stones and rich jewels, but they were worth absolutely nothing to a starving man in the desert.

A million dollars are of no value to a dying man, and too often only a curse to a living man. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches and loving favor rather than silver and gold." "Words fitly spoken are like apples of gold in pictures of silver." A good conscience, a pure life, and the hope of heaven are the only things that count at last.

Elder J. L. Kimmel

What about this great and rich nation in which we live? We have twenty-seven million boys who do not even go to Sunday school. Sixty million people who are not Christians, with a great crime wave sweeping over our fair land. Which do you think we need the more: gold or righteousness? The material or the spiritual? The things that are seen or the things that are not seen?

Some Brethren Leaders of Yesterday as I Knew Them

I. Elder H. S. Jacobs

By Martin Shively, D.D.

Of the group of twenty-six preachers, who constituted the leadership in the Dayton Convention, held in September, 1883, only three are now living. In reality there are four who survive, but only three remain with the Brethren church, and it is with this part of the group that these papers are to be concerned. The three of whom I shall write as I have time and opportunity, are Brethren Jacobs, Kiehl and J. H. Worst. The forty-two years which have elapsed since that historic gathering, has all but wiped out the men who prayed and wrought that an organization might be affected, which should stand squarely on the Word and whose government should be "of the people, by the people, and for the people." Most of those who are gone, labored and sacrificed heroically for the principles which led to the calling of that meeting, until the Lord in whose name they assembled, called them from labor to that "rest that remaineth for the people of God." Two of the three who survive, are men of advanced age, bearing the marks of the years which have passed, waiting faithfully to rejoin the group which assembles on the other side. I shall notice these first, as I know them, and the first of these is he whose name appears at the head of this paper.

Brother Henry S. Jacobs was born in York County, Pennsylvania, October, 1844, and is thus in the 82nd year of his age. He became a Christian at the age of 16, uniting with the Tunker church, by which he was called to the office of deacon eight years later. And still later, he was called to the ministry. Just after the dark days of division came, he had moved to Medina County, Ohio, and, casting his lot with the Brethren cause, he organized the Homer church in the fall of 1883, becoming its pastor, and maintaining that relation with the congregation for a period of 32 years. Not only did he preach, but he supported himself and his family, by cultivating his farm. He also had a prayer meeting in his country church, which was of the ever green variety, and he missed less than a dozen of the meetings in the whole term of his service. Perhaps twenty years ago, his eyes began to fail, and finally he became entirely blind, but even with this handicap, he continued to serve his church, both in the pulpit and prayer meeting, remaining as pastor for seven years after this darkness settled upon him, until his good wife passed to her reward, when it was no longer possible to continue the work. For the last eighteen years he has lived in a world of darkness, and that without complaint, though I am sure his physical word is the more dark, because he can not longer be active in the cause in which he spent so many of his earlier years. He lives now, as he has done for the past eleven years, with his only child. Dr. Jacobs, president of Ashland College, in whose home he receives every care that love and profound respect can suggest, waiting for his call into the home where blindness shall not afflict.

I think I met Brother Jacobs first during my work in the college, almost forty years ago, for he did some of the preaching here then, living as he did in an adjoining congregation. Of course I met him often afterward, for he was a faithful participant in the conferences of the church, serving at least once as state moderator, at West Alexandria. He was never self-assertive, nor much in the public eye in these conferences, but when he had a word to say, it was the right word, and its saying caused no sting, because there was never any rancor in his heart. Perhaps the most affecting scene with which my memory associates him, was one which occurred sixteen years ago. The Ohio district conference was being held here at Ashland, in the College chapel. During the sessions, Brother Jacobs came in, being led by his wife. As they came down the aisle, the congregation arose and remained standing until he had been seated, thus giving expression to the deep respect in which he was held, for this was during the days when, though blind, he continued to serve as the pastor of the Homer church. He was asked to address the conference upon any subject his heart might dictate, and both the man and his message, profoundly gripped the hearts of those who saw and heard.

I most devoutly hope that none who read this paper, will ever suffer so great an affliction as that which has fallen upon this man of God, but if such affliction must come, I pray that it may be borne with as beautiful a spirit of resignation, as that which finds expression in him. I am sure that in it and underneath it, lies unquestioning faith in the positive declaration, "All things work together for good, to them that love the Lord." It must also be a source of deep satisfaction to him, to know, that if further service in and for the church is denied to him, he is still serving, in the person of his brilliant son, toward whose training and preparation, he made willing contribution. In him and his descendants, he shall long continue to bless mankind, and advance the Kingdom in which he gave so many years of faithful service.

Growing Old

They call it "going down the hill" when we are growing old,
And speak with mournful accents when our tale is nearly told;

They sigh when talking of the past, the days that used to be,
As if the future were not bright with immortality.

But it is not going down; 'tis climbing high and higher,
Until we almost see the mountain that our souls desire;
For if the natural eye grows dim it is but dim to earth,
While the eye of faith grows keener to discern the Savior's worth.

Who would exchange for shooting blade the waving golden grain;
Or when the corn is fully ripe wish it were green again?

And who would wish the hoary head found in the way of truth
To be encircled with the bright and sunny locks of youth?

Sacred Spots in the Holy Land

By Herbert H. Tay

If the hills and dales of Palestine could speak, what tales they could tell! What deeds of valor! What heroism! What love! What hate! What religious devotion! Yes—what sacrifice! All the familiar associations of sacred song and story cluster around this little land. From Hermon's snow-crowned peak, to Gaza's desert sands—every foot of the Holy Land is vocal with incidents in the life of our Lord, and in the history of God's chosen people. It is the land of enchantment—the Holy Land—the Land of the Book.

To adequately describe the sacred spots in the Holy Land would require an entire volume. One can only give an introduction in a limited article such as this. We shall begin in the South Country and proceed to the north, choosing spots at random. Many must necessarily be omitted, but it is hoped that they may be covered in subsequent articles.

Picture in your mind a gently rolling prairie country, covered with fields of growing grain. This quiet pastoral scene stretches away as far as the eye can reach. Far to the east, but slightly visible through the purple haze, one can faintly discern the mountains of Moab. Overhead is an azure-blue sky, seldom flecked by a cloud. Underfoot one tramples poppies and scarlet anemones, which dot the green fields and give vivid color to the otherwise monotonous landscape. If we stand upon an eminence, we may see, here and there upon the plains, the black tents of the Bedouin, who are tending their flocks and herds. This is the country in which Isaac lived, and the occupation in which he engaged. Many and many a time he looked upon just such a scene as we are looking upon now.

Again—picture in your mind a huddle of houses, mostly of unpainted lumber, and in a dilapidated condition. They center around one main street, which is quite wide, and runs straight through the town. The shops which face upon this street, have wooden awnings, which cover the sidewalk to protect the citizens, as well as the shopkeepers who usually sit in front of their places of business, from the burning days of the tropical sun. There is very little activity upon the street during the day. One occasionally sees a sleepy burro wander slowly down the street, or a dejected looking dog, with drooping head and tail, cross the street to seek a cooler spot in the shadow of a house. This is the village of Beersheba, the symbol for the southern boundary of Palestine throughout Old Testament times. Those who live in western Kansas and Nebraska need only to look out of the window to see an exact duplication of the Beersheba country, and those who live in the western states of Arizona, New Mexico, or Nevada, need only to visit some of the towns which were built in the days of the mining boom, to see just such a village as Beersheba.

Proceeding to the north, we come, in about fifty miles, to an entirely different country. Here the rolling, treeless plains have disappeared, and instead we see wave after wave of rugged, rocky hills. These hills are covered with silvery olive trees, and grape vineyards. It is the "hill country of Judea."

There is one level place to be seen, which lies just east of the village of Bethlehem. It is called the Field of Boaz, and it is most likely the place where the scenes of a great part of the Book of Ruth were laid, for it is the only place in the vicinity of Bethlehem where grain can be grown. In the center of the Field of Boaz, is an enclosure of two or three acres, called The Shepherd's Field. We are told that it was here that the shepherds were watching over their flocks that memorable night when the angelic host announced the birth of the Savior.

The village of Bethlehem is situated upon the hills. It is a clean, up-to-date little town, with stone houses and clean, wide streets. The principal point of interest to the visitor is the Church of the Nativity. This stands over the site of the birthplace of Jesus Christ. It may be surprising to some, to learn that the place of the nativity is no more than a cave in the earth. We usually think of the stable in which Jesus was born, as a neat, clean structure, with a manger filled with clean sweet-scented hay. But such is not the case. The stable in which he was born was a typical Palestine stable, such as those that are used to this day, and was nothing more nor less than a dirty cave in the ground. When one thinks of it in this light, he can more readily realize the humiliation of the incarnation. To think that the Lord of glory should come out of the ivory palaces, where all his garments smelled of myrrh and aloes and cassia, and condescend to become flesh amidst such repulsive surroundings, is beyond human comprehension. But God has told us that it was because—God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

Leaving the place of the Savior's birth, we travel ninety miles to the north, and come to the place of his boyhood, Nazareth. It too, is a clean and respectable little village, situated in a cup in the hills of Galilee. There is no point of special interest around Nazareth, save that the whole district is sacred to every child of God, because we know that the feet of the boy Jesus must have trod those hills many a time as he romped and played in the vicinity of his native village.

Sixteen miles to the north-east of Nazareth lies the Sea of Galilee, like a blue gem in its setting of brown and gray hills. The one spot which interests us more than any other—though the whole region round about was made sacred by his presence—is Capernaum. The ruins of this one time flourishing city are situated upon a promontory near the northern end of the Sea, and upon the west shore. Piles of bleaching stones, which cover many an acre mark the site of the houses of the village. But one thing in particular which attracts attention, is the ruins of the synagogue. The stones are scattered about the ground, and it seems that if they all could be gathered together, there would be sufficient to reconstruct the synagogue. Many of the stones are most elaborately carved, and the building, in its better days, must have been beautiful. We are told by John, the beloved disciple, that it was in the synagogue at Capernaum that Christ delivered that wonderful discourse upon the bread of life. It might well have been within the walls of this structure, the stones of which are now lying scattered promiscuously about the ground.

Time and space forbid our enlarging upon this theme at any greater length. Would that we could speak of Joppa and Samaria, of Carmel, Tabor and Hermon. Bible characters live anew as we stand upon these sacred spots and read the accounts of their deeds in the Word of God. Because of its association of God's chosen Son with it, it is, and always will remain, the Holy Land of three great religions—the Holy Land of over one-third of the people of the earth.

La Verne, California.

Jesus' methods in winning followers were based upon a principle that we need to emphasize again and again—men had a need in their hearts for what he could give them; they could have that need filled from no other source; hence it was his obligation and privilege, as it is ours today, to induce them to become his disciples.

Whose I Am and Whom I Serve

A Short Sermon on Real Religion

The word "religion" means "bound." Every man's religion means everything or nothing according as he is by it bound to God. St. Paul said he was "the bond slave of Jesus Christ." Are you bound? That is, have you real religion? There are some heart-searching inferences flowing from this admission, and if you are unwilling to follow them it's no good making the admission. As, for instance:

IF

a man profess to belong to Christ in the sense of being Christ's slave, he confesses that Christ is Lord of all he is and of all he has.

EVEN IF

St. Paul's phrase be deemed an exaggeration, the inescapable inference remains that no man can call Jesus, LORD, in any serious sense unless he extends that Lordship to himself personally and to all that he has.

AND IF

Christ is LORD of us and ours, we hold ourselves and our possessions as a tenancy, not in fee. Somewhat of the product has to be paid back, else HE "will miserably destroy those miserable men and will let out the vineyard unto other husbandmen."

IF

we would pay back some rent to Christ, it must be not only gratitude it must be some material expression of gratitude. Otherwise our profession is only a feeling. And if our religion is only a feeling, then Christ's Lordship is only a feeling. And his Salvation is only a feeling.

BUT IF

we give anything material to Christ we must give it to some human representative of Christ. We can't give him anything directly. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, ye did it unto me."

SO IF

you belong to the Methodist Protestant church, you are one of an organization of men trying to do Christ's work in the world. This church can't do this work without money, and it can't get money except from those who belong to it. If you are not supplying this money what church are you paying to?

IF

the Jews paid one-tenth of their income to God, and if God gave specific and bountiful returns to those who observed this practice, what reason is there for thinking he will be less pleased with those who observe it now?

BUT IF

you are a steward of Christ, what right have you to withhold his due until you have a surplus you think you can spare? Ought you not to give as often as you pray, and to give publicly as often as you worship publicly?

IF

you are not prosperous, and fear to divide with God lest you may come to want, can you be sure that you save what you keep back from God? Do you believe that any man ever became poorer in doing business with God as a partner?

PROVE ME NOW HEREWITH, SAITH JEHOVAH OF HOSTS, IF I WILL NOT OPEN YOU THE WINDOWS OF HEAVEN, AND POUR YOU OUT A BLESSING, THAT THERE SHALL NOT BE ROOM ENOUGH TO RECEIVE IT.—A Tract, Published by the Methodist Protestant Church.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Prayer---An Apostolic Doctrine

By E. A. Duker

TEXT—Matt. 6:9. After this manner therefore, pray ye.—Matthew 6:9.

It is our fear, that, too often, in our enumeration of Christian doctrines as taught and exercised by the early apostles, we fail to recognize one that was taught with outstanding emphasis not only by the apostles, but also by our Lord, himself. In this discourse, I am not advocating that we give less place in our lives to such important doctrines as Faith, Repentance, Baptism, Feet-Washing, The Lord's Supper, the Eucharist, and the like, but that we would give the more place to the apostolic teaching of PRAYER. So very often, we have noted that Brethren people when asked for a statement as to our Faith, enumerate those points that make us what we call peculiar, and fail to call attention to those on which our blessed Lord laid strict emphasis, both in WORD and in ACT. My plea is not that we eliminate, but that we stress that which our Lord stressed. May it not be true that owing to our lack of use of this outstanding Christian privilege, we fail to list the same. If asked to mention those modern products which make us peculiar to this age, I am sure that the much USED and ENJOYED automobile would not be overlooked in our listing. And why? The answer rebounds with swiftness, "It is used daily." That there is a very definite lack of DAILY PRAYER is evident by our aptness to neglect to list the same as a definite Brethren plea. May we then call to our attention some facts regarding prayer.

1. THE DIGNITY OF PRAYER.

"And when thou prayest, pray to that Father." What a supreme and dignified privilege is ours, that we may have direct approach to the Father! How lightly we value some of the very greatest of privileges accorded believers! In the things of the world, we find this approach to the potentates a much guarded one, and only the especially privileged may come into his presence, and then only with much ceremony. And then to know that the approach to him, the Father, even our God, may be ours by direct routing! "Pray to thy Father." When we would talk with him in whom we have the solution of all of life's problems, we are told by him who revealed the Father, to "Pray to thy Father." Brethren, we shall never know the fullness of the dignity of this privilege accorded us, until we have come into his presence, redeemed through the precious blood of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. Unfathomable, that we, the creatures be permitted to commune with the Creator, and even this is our Christian Blessing.

Let us suppose that our National Executive held within his knowledge that which we knew to be the solution of our problem and the fullness of our needs, and we were permitted to approach him and to receive such for our asking. Do you suppose we would decline the approach and the requesting? Whatever may be our attitude in this divine principle, we note that Jesus, our Savior, believed in communing with his Father, and he prayed and urged his believers to pray. It is quite evident that when one advocates and practices a certain principle, he believes in it. He, who would say in word or in lack of act that prayer is not a reality, denies the authority of the Christ. We fear, sometimes, that there are those who are extremely ardent in their proclamation of the definite place of doctrines mentioned but once by our Lord, (and that does not indicate they were not important), and who fail to take cognizance of his telling and retelling us to pray and that daily. "Give us THIS DAY our daily bread."

Too, let us note the special emphasis the Apostle Paul places on the Life of Prayer. Not only does he request the membership of his various established churches to pray, but see the ardor with which he pours out his soul to his Father in behalf of the churches at Ephesus, Thessalonica, and Philippi, and this ardor is not to be compared to that of our Lord's in his closing days as he breathes forth that memorable prayer as recorded in John 17. And may we again note the direct approach; not through the priest nor the pope, but directly he spoke, "Father, the hour is come."

II. IMPORTANCE OF PRAYER NEEDS TO BE EMPHASIZED.

Just as our Lord took his departure from his disciples, he requested that they tarry in Jerusalem until they were endued with power. Have we waited and requested power? This power must be wanted, requested. In a very explicit way Jesus said, "Ask, and ye shall receive." And Brethren, I tell you in all seriousness that what the church is needing today is not more organization nor leaders, but POWER, POWER. Not mechanical, physical power, but spiritual power, power which comes from God to man. Yes with the authority of the Word, there is but one source, and that is with the Father and must come to man through prayer. While from an evangelistic viewpoint, we lay emphasis on Matthew 28:19, permit me to declare that no PRAYERLESS going will ever evangelize the world, and neither will PRAYERLESS giving do it. But the Great Forces of Heaven are ours for the asking and WHAT WE DO NEED IN THE BRETHREN CHURCH IS A REVIVAL OF PRAYING.

III. SOME REACTIONS OF PRAYER IN OUR LIVES.

1. He who Prays Will Discover the Character of God.

Man has ever been reaching out into the unknown, seeking to add unto his present knowledge and understanding by means of discoveries. There is a knowledge that passeth all understanding and that is to know God, even our Father. Other than the knowledge of the Father as revealed in the Son, Prayer stands alone as the paramount medium whereby we may know God. He who prays will be making constant discoveries regarding the One to whom he prays, that is, the Father will reveal himself to him who prays.

The person who does not pray, but seeks for the character of God in the results of his works, is the one who endeavors to characterize him as "Love", "Power", "Nature", or "Science." He who prays will learn that these are but separate and individual characteristics which find

2. He Who Prays Will Discover God's Will for Life.

There are many, indeed, in this land of the living who are desirous of knowing the course to be pursued in their lives. It is our humble opinion that God surely brought man into this world for a purpose, and there is no record wherein God is shown to have worked against his own purpose. Should he refuse to reveal his will concerning our lives, he would be working against the consummation of his purpose in man.

We find that the Word is a constant record of those who went to the Father in prayer that they might learn the will of the Father concerning their activities. It was after much prayer that the successor of Judas was named. Paul prayed three days before going to the Gentiles. If you truly desire to know God's will concerning your life, PRAY.

3. He Who Prays Discovers a New Reality in Prayer.

If we continue to pray, we will soon discover that the God to whom we are wont to pray is not a giant monstrosity into whose ears may be poured a conglomeration of meaningless statements, meaningless as far as the desire or seriousness of the speaker is concerned. We shall learn what the TEACHER meant in the recording of Matthew 6:7, "When ye pray use not vain, repetitions." Figuratively speaking, we are inclined to think that many times when our Father has received a call from a child and has placed a receiver to his ear, he hears meaningless prattle of statements and requests which the child has heard others use and thinks they are appropriate to use when he calls the Father, not that he is desirous of them, but deems them appropriate. Not unlike is our own child, who hearing her mother call the grocer and order the usual daily ration, playfully takes her small telephone and she, too, calls the grocer and orders, not that she is wanting to obtain but speaks thus because she deems it appropriate, for thus she has heard her mother take the phone.

When we pray, let us remember that the God whom we worship and to whom we pray is an intelligent Being, capable of understanding. Let us no longer heap insult upon insult by our meaningless prattle in prayer. When once we pray to God as we would talk intelligently to our fellow men, we will find him responding to our requests in proportions we have never expected and then we will learn that he who PRAYS will discover a new reality in prayer.

4. He Who Prays Will Experience the Widening of Influence.

How eager we are that the power of our lives will influence those whose lives we shadow. This is especially in material and social ways. How we rise with august carriage, when as the result of our suggestion or advice, we see the advised meet with pronounced success. Humanity craves

MONDAY

COMMISSIONING THE TWELVE—Matt. 10:5-15.

As the incarnate Christ sent out the twelve to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, so the risen Lord summons every disciple to bear his message to lost and dying men, and the ground of his plea and the policy of his commission is that as they have freely received, they are to give freely.

TUESDAY

A HAZARDOUS UNDERTAKING—Matt. 10:16-23.

The Lord would not have them misunderstand the nature of their task; it is no holiday venture or pleasure trip, but a difficult, hazardous undertaking, calling for courage and sacrifice.

WEDNESDAY

OUR EXAMPLE IN SACRIFICE AND SUFFERING—Matt. 10:24-33.

Our Lord never spoke words that so completely strip his suffering and sacrificing messengers of any right of complaint as that the servant is not above his Lord who himself made the supreme sacrifice.

THURSDAY

ALL FOR CHRIST—Matt. 10:34-11:1.

Jesus wants his disciples, now as then, to face the absoluteness of his claims clearly and frankly; his truth is disturbing to many if our relations and family ties, but nothing can be allowed to interfere with the priority of his claims or the completion of our surrender.

FRIDAY

JOHN SEEKS REASSURANCE FROM JESUS—Matt. 11:2-6.

"Who comes to God an inch thorough doubtings dim, In blazing light God will advance a mile to him."—Robia.

SATURDAY

JOHN THE STALWART PROPHET—Matt. 11:7-15.

In this tribute to John which will be his memorial as long as time shall last, outranking the noblest monuments of earth, our Lord emphasizes the importance of courage, strength and readiness to endure hardness for Christ's sake. Worthwhile things are not of easy attainment.

SUNDAY

FAULT-FINDING UNBELIEF—Matt. 11:16-24.

Jesus was oppressed with the fault-finding, unreasoning childish attitude of the people of his generation, and then he thinks of the unresponsive, unbelieving, hardening attitude towards the truth to which all this leads, as illustrated by certain cities in which he had performed many mighty works, and by way of warning he says, "Woe, woe," with tenderest compassion and pleading.—G. S. B.

the power of influence. If we would have influence and power with men, if we would have spiritual access to men, the secret is prayer. It is told us that it was after much prayer that Paul and Barnabah went forth, and we well know the power and influence of their lives on those they met.

5. He Who Prays May Approach Crisis Times with Assurance of Victory.

Often has man approached with fear and trembling the varied crises of life, owing to the fact that these have not been preceded by prayer. I do not feel presumptuous in suggesting that our Lord's Gethsemane made possible his bold facing of Pilate. Who could account for the successful career of Paul, other than for the large part that prayer played in Paul's life, was equally true in the lives of the early disciples. They were not unusual characters nor superhuman, but they did know the value of prayer in times of crises. They knew, in fact at least, that familiar hymn, "What a Friend we have in Jesus!" "Oh, what peace we often forfeit! Oh, what needless pain we bear! All because we do not carry everything to God in Prayer."

And this we might continue almost indefinitely, for the field of results of prayer is unlimited. Why, should we lament for workers, when we fail to "Pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth workers"? Why are workers scarce? For no other reason than that we HAVE FAILED TO PRAY TODAY.

In conclusion, Brethren, let us give a living recognition to the Apostolic Teaching of Prayer. There is but one of two things to do, either enter into the fullness of the prayer-life or else quit waving the banner of a "Whole Gospel". For the salvation of lost souls, and for the Love of our Savior, let us rather adopt the former and PRAY.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Cities of Refuge

By Robert Crees

OUR SCRIPTURE

The Lord also spake unto Joshua, saying, Speak unto the Children of Israel, saying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, Whereof I spake unto you by the hand of Moses: that the slayer that killeth any person unawares and unwittingly may flee thither: and they shall be your refuge from the avenger of blood. And when we that doth flee unto one of those cities shall stand at the entering of the gate of the city, they shall take him into the city unto them, and give him a place, that he may dwell among them. And if the avenger of blood pursue after him, then they shall not deliver the slayer up into his hands; because he smote his neighbor unwittingly and hated him not before that time. And he shall dwell in that city until he stand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high priest that shall be in those days: then shall the slayer return and come into his own city, and into his own house, unto the city from which he fled. And they appointed Hadesh in Galilee in Mount Naphtali, and Shechem, in Mount Ephraim, and Kirjath-Arba, which is Hermon in the mountain of Judah. And on the other side of Jordan by Jericho eastward, they assigned Bezer in the wilderness upon the plain out of the tribe of Reuben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Bashan; out of the tribe of Manasseh. These were the cities appointed for all the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among, that whosoever killeth any person unawares might flee unto them, and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood, until he stood before the congregation (Joshua 20:1-9.)

Two important parallel references are Num. 35:1-34 and Deut. 19:1-13.

OUR MEDITATION

In searching the Bible one may find many beautiful types of Christ and of his work. It is these types that serve to illustrate and beautify the narrative. Out of many Old Testament stories that serve as types, the account of the Cities of Refuge is perhaps the most unique. Let us look at the Cities of Refuge as compared to Christ.

The cities stood on high eminences, so all could see them.

Christ is to be lifted up, "so that all men may be drawn unto him".

The roads to the cities were to be very wide.

The way to Christ is wide enough for all the world to walk in.

The roads to the cities were to be kept clean and posts were erected which guided the fugitive to them.

The road to Christ and eternal life is clearly and plainly stated in the Bible which is our guide to Christ.

The cities of refuge were so situated that they might be reached from every part of the land in a few hours.

Jesus is always near and one may enter into him at any time.

The gates of the cities stood open night and day.

Christ is ever accessible. The gates of mercy are never closed against the sinner.

The cities were a sure refuge to all who entered.

All who believe in Christ are most surely saved.

The cities of refuge sheltered the innocent offender from judgment.

Christ shelters the sinner from judgment.

If anyone was outside the cities of refuge, no matter how near, they perished. The fugitive must be inside the city to be saved.

If one is outside of Christ, no matter how good he is, he is lost. We, as guilty sinners, must be within Christ to be saved.

The refugees were to abide in the cities until the death of the High Priest.

The believer must abide in Christ until his own death.

OUR PRAYER

Our kind Father in Heaven, our hearts are filled with gratitude for the wonderful way in which thou dost reveal thyself in thy Word. We thank thee that the way of salvation is made plain. We thank thee that thou art ever accessible. We thank thee that all who believe are truly saved. Help us, Father, to be faithful unto death, that we may receive a crown of life. We ask it in the name of Jesus. Amen.

For though, in truth, the outward man must perish and decay,

The inward man shall be renewed by grace from day to day; Those who are planted by the Lord, unshaken in their root, Shall in their old age flourish and bring forth their choicest fruit.

It is not years that make men old; the spirit may be young, Though fully three-score years and ten the wheels of life have run.

God has himself recorded in his blessed word of truth, That they who wait upon the Lord shall e'en renew their youth.

And when the eye now dim shall open to behold the King, And ears now dull with age shall hear the harps of heaven ring;

And on the head now hoary shall be placed the crown of gold,

Then shall be known the lasting joy of never growing old.

Jesus Heals and Saves a Blind Man

Scripture Lesson—John 9:1-41.

Printed Text—John 9:1-9, 24, 25, 35-38.

Devotional Reading—Isaiah 42:1-7.

Golden Text—I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. John 8:12.

LESSON LIGHTS

The importance of the miracle we are to study is seen in the fact that John gives a whole chapter to it. The event was important because it showed Christ's power so marvelously, because the hostility it aroused must have contributed largely to bring about his crucifixion, and because of the noble spiritual truths which it teaches. It is "one of the most remarkable and dramatic passages in the history of our Lord.

He Saw

He did not need the disciples to point out to him the wretched man. Only one of the eight miracles which John records was performed in response to a petition. Jesus was ever looking for some one to help.

"For his hands were always helping,
And his eyes were always kind,
And he never was too busy
To heal the sick and blind."

—Song Stories for the Sunday School.

Jesus wrought several miracles for the blind besides the one in the lesson, on seven men in all. Two blind men at Capernaum (Matt. 9:27-31); two blind men at Jericho (Matt. 20:29-34); Mark 10:46-52; Luke 18:35-43); one blind man at Bethsaida (Mark 8:22-26); one at Capernaum (Matt. 12:22,23).

"Who Sinned?"

The question implies that this man was suffering because of some sin that his parents had committed or that he himself had committed in some pre-existent state. The pre-existence of the soul, usually in some other form, was an ancient Greek idea, become quite prevalent, and is today the belief of the Hindu mystic. Sin does cause suffering, more than many realize, and a great many people are punished for their sins by the suffering they are caused to endure. And such punishment is not an arbitrary visitation, but the result of God's law of cause and effect. But this by no means is a universal explanation of the problem of suffering. Jesus said, "But that the works of God should be made manifest." This, if we grasp the underlying truth of it, is the explanation of the presence of all evil, imperfection and suffering in the world, in so far as man's will is not responsible. God is still at work in his world, completing, perfecting his good purpose. And the imperfections that appear are opportunities for man to observe the working power of God in ways that are marvelous to our eyes. However, Jesus declares that the origin of evil is less important than its removal. And the presence of evil in any form is a constant challenge to the church to use its divinely given power to eradicate it.

A Type

This man was a type of the spiritually blind—blind to God, blind to his own best good, to the highest ideals, to the greatest spiritual realities, to true holiness, to the possibilities in his soul, to the joys and glories of a religious life, to the highest motives, to eternal life. This blindness leads to spiritual poverty, to helplessness and hopelessness. Great as is the misfortune of physical blindness, that of spiritual blindness is vastly greater.

The spiritually blind are like a savage in a library, a deaf man at a concert, a blind man in a picture gallery or amid the scenery of paradise.

"And They Cast Him Out"

Out of the synagogue, excommunicated him.

"The Jews had three kinds of anathema: (1) Excommunication for thirty days, during which the excommunicated might not come within four cubits of any one. (2) Absolute exclusion from all intercourse and worship for an indefinite period. (3) Absolute exclusion forever; an irrevocable sentence. This third form was very rarely if ever used. It is doubtful whether the second was in use at this time for Jews; but it would be the ban under which all Samaritans were placed. This passage probably refers to the first and mildest kind of anathema."

The Night Cometh

"We must put the wheat into the mill while the water is in the race, for when the water is gone we cannot grind. We must teach the child while it is young. We must visit our sick friend while he is sick. We must show sympathy to those who are in trouble while the trouble is upon them."—J. R. Miller.

Sunday School News

"Larger" and "prompter" are the fitting words with which to characterize the recent White Gift offerings. In many instances there has been a substantial increase over last year's gift. And most of the schools have remitted much more promptly. Some have not been heard from as yet. It is earnestly hoped that they will remit without prolonged delay to Dr. Martin Shively, Treasurer of The National Sunday School Association, Ashland, Ohio. Brother Shively has already sent one thousand dollars ($1,000) to Brother Wm. A. Gearhart for the Kentucky work.

Service Continued

The generous response in the White Gift offering, we are happy to believe, is an expression of the appreciation the fellow workers have of the service rendered by the National Association. Appreciative reports have been received of the very acceptable and decidedly helpful work which is being done by our Field Secretary. He reports a cordial reception and hearty cooperation. After touring Mid West and Illiokota and a part of Indiana Brother Stuckey returned for a brief rest with his parents over Christmas. He then left for Spokane, Washington, and is now in sunny California. He continues to send in book orders. Further requests are being received for the new Workers' Handbook. This useful directory may be obtained from the writer without cost.

The Educator

To avoid duplicating publications and to help to keep the BRETHREN EDUCATOR in circulation the National Association supplies and edits the general matter of the magazine and contributes to the cost of the publication. The latter aid places the magazine at the use of our workers at a much lower figure. Schools whose officers and teachers are not receiving this monthly publication are missing valuable promotional material. The January number number featured Adult and Administrative work. The February issue is devoted to Young People's work. Among others there is an article on "An Adequate Program for Boys," by W. O. Nish; "The Sunday School As Seen By" a high school sophomore, a college sophomore, a college senior, a working boy, a working girl. These young people speak out courageously. Besides there is a stimulating article on "Vacation Bible Schools," by Dyoil Belote. A post card request will bring you a sample copy.

Birmingham, Alabama

This growing southern city will be the meeting place of thousands of Sunday school workers next spring. On April 12-19 the Triennial International Sunday School Convention will be held at Birmingham. Officers of the International Council have allotted the Brethren Church ten credentials for the use of Brethren delegates. Your officers gladly accepted the quota with the hope of having it completely filled. Any Brethren worker may secure a credential from the undersigned by remitting the registration fee of $3.50. Arrangements have been made for railroad rates of one and one-third fare. Lodging and breakfast will be provided in homes at a nominal rate. Camps are being provided for tourists. Here is an opportunity that will not come again for at least three years. Individuals are planning to go of their own accord. Are there not churches and church schools that would like to send a faithful pastor, superintendent or teacher as a reward for service rendered? Besides making the heart of such a worker glad, he or she will come back to you with a vision and a message that will help to transform your church and school. What do you say: Johnstown? Dayton? Waterloo? South Bend? Goshen? Elkhart? Nappanee? Conemaugh? Clay City? and others?

Young People and College Night

Essay Contest with Valuable Scholarship Prizes

Occasion

College Night is observed in Brethren churches by their young people as the climax of Educational Sunday, June 6.

Subjects

- 1 The Value of Education in a Christian College.
- 2 Why Brethren Young People Should Attend Ashland College.
- 3 Make Ashland a Center of Brethren Idealism and Enthusiasm.
- 4 Ministerial and Missionary Service in the Brethren Church.
- 5 Present Day Life Work Opportunities and Challenges.
- 6 Why Ashland College Should Be Adequately Endowed.

Preparation

Each contestant will choose one of these subjects; master it thoroughly through study and consultation with teachers and pastors; write his resulting thought orderly and clearly, writing legibly on one side of the paper only.

Eligibles

All high school students of senior and junior years.

Length

No essay shall exceed 750 words.

Time

All competing manuscripts must be delivered to the Contest Committee at Ashland, Ohio not later than May 1. The duplicate will be read in the local church on June 6.

Judges

The judges will consist of three distinguished persons at Ashland, who will consider the writer's knowledge of the subject and observance of rhetorical principles.

Awards

1. $65.00. 2. $35.00. 3. $25.00.

Note

1. That is the contestant winning either place will be awarded a credit to the amount stated on a year's tuition in Ashland College.

2. If the winning contestant is a Seminary student, he will be given one year's tuition in the Seminary.

Supplemental Suggestions

1. Though promoted by the Stewardship Department, this is not an exclusive Christian Endeavor affair. It is open to all the young people of each local church throughout the brotherhood.

2. Where there may be only one person of the high school rank indicated, let him or her join the church-wide contest and supplement the program with papers or talks on the other topics by young people of lower or non-high school grade.

3. These parts with suitable devotions and appropriate music will make an inspiring evening's program for the whole church. The pastor may want to give a short talk or address. Let us all share in the offering for this work.

4. Additional material and helps will appear in both the Brethren Evangelist and Angelus.

5. Send offering and names of Life Work Recruits to the undersigned.

E. M. RIDDLE,
Stewardship Superintendent.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for February 7)

How Does Christian Endeavor Help Us to Follow Jesus? Luke 2:40-52

On a long dirty street in one of the big cities of our country, there is a row of high straight buildings. These houses cannot have nice big sunny porches but are built all in a line close to the street. They have never been painted and the sides of the houses are so close together that the sun hardly ever gets between them to give the least appearance of happiness. In one of these houses there once lived a little girl who loved pretty things and pretty colors. She did not have very many of them though, only little scraps of ribbon or bits of colored cloth that she found on the floor of the house where a woman sewed. Do you want me to describe the little girl for you? She was a slender child with a rather round face. She had brown eyes and brown wavy hair. Her name was Estella. When she was six years old she started to school just like all you boys and girls do. As she was the oldest child in the family and did not have an older brother or sister to take her to school that first morning, she went up the street to get with some of the other children who had been to school before. Estella was very excited that first morning and was very interested in all the new children whom she had never seen before. She was not dressed as prettily as most of them, but she was happy to be seeing them anyhow. There was one little girl that Estella particularly liked that first day. This small girl was about Estella's size. She had blue eyes, dark hair and nice pink cheeks, but the thing that caused Estella to notice her at first was the bright red dress the little girl was wearing.

When school was out and the children were starting for home, Estella smiled at this other child and was quite pleased when Betty, for that was her name, smiled back. Now Betty was a little girl like most of you children—she had a nice house to live in and on Sundays she went to Sunday school and Christian Endeavor like you do. The next Sunday after school started the Junior Superintendent told the children that they ought to be friendly to all other children and that it would be nice if they could find other children to bring with them to the Christian Endeavor. This started Betty to thinking and the first person she thought of was Estella, for somehow most of the children had not played or talked with Estella very much and Betty began to understand that that was not very nice of them. The next day she played with Estella and soon these children became chums. Betty invited Estella to go to Christian Endeavor with her but at first her invitation was not accepted. Betty soon found out that her chum did not have any clothes nicer than the ones she was wearing to school and that she did not want to go to church in them. Then a happy thought came to Betty's mind. She took Estella to her home after school one evening and introduced her to her mother. Betty's mother liked little girls so she was interested in Estella. She and Betty helped this little child. They told her a lot of things about keeping her teeth clean and about washing often. Then they hunted up some of Betty's clothes that she did not want any more, and made Estella very happy by giving them to her.

From that time on Estella attended Christian Endeavor regularly with Betty. Betty kept thinking of ways to help her little friend. She helped her to learn the Christian Endeavor lessons and to memorize the string of pearls. Then she helped her to know Jesus and to know how to love him. Estella became a much happier little girl than she had ever been before. She learned to enjoy helping others like Betty did when she helped her, and used her ideas in helping her own folks and making them happier.

From this little story we, Junior Endeavorers, can see how Christian Endeavor helps us to follow Jesus. It shows us how Christian Endeavor helps us to love Jesus and how it helps us to learn to enjoy doing things for others as Jesus did. Are all of you trying hard to memorize all these chapters and the books of the Bible to get your string complete? That is a good thing to do, I think. All of us know someone who would appreciate our friendship and who would be helped by coming to Christian Endeavor if they do not come as yet. Maybe we do not know of anyone who needs help as badly as Estella did, but there are children who need our kindness. You will find that it will make you yourself much happier if you find others to be happy with you.

A Member of Our Macedonian Band

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Calif.,
 January 27, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

The other day, your Treasurer received a letter from one of God's "greatly beloved", enclosing her Easter Offering of $10. She sent it thus early for fear she would not be able to send it at all, for she was just about to go on the operating table for the sixth time. This dear one of God's saints belong to our "Macedonian" Band, for in the past she has sometimes gone without necessary, warm clothing in order to give to the work of her Lord in far-away lands! She reminds your Office Secretary of our Lord's commendation of the widow who gave her "mite". You will remember he said, "This poor widow hath cast in more than all they which have cast into the treasury; for all they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living."

You know, some of us ((both as individuals and as churches) sometimes have a feeling that we have done great things for Missions—sort 'o put our right shoulder out of joint patting the left one! But, in the light of this woman's gift, what does our giving amount to? In the light of the Yoder-Sickel-Nielsen-Yett "living sacrifice" (was afraid the Editor wouldn't allow me space enough to list also that noble band in Africa)—how does our "giving" look in the eyes of our God? Remember, we have a God who "seeth not as man seeth, for man looketh on the outward appearance; but the Lord looketh on the heart." And we have a God too who "is not unrighteous to forget your work and labor of love that ye have shewed toward his name." Yes, that is what counts in this world and the next—"your work and labor of love!" Without love, even the great Apostle Paul says he would "become as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal."

Our Lord Himself says, "Behold I come quickly; hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown!" O, dear members of the F. M. S., let us not lose the joy of giving the consequent reward, by giving under a wrong motive! Let us not "look on the outward appearance," but let us look, through God's eyes, on our hearts! Are you giving to your God a love gift, or are you congratulating yourself on the amount you have given to Foreign Missions?

Yours in the Master's service,

THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

The Music on the Roof

Haidar Pasha is a suburb of Constantinople where the wealthy business men and merchants live. The buildings that surround its mission school, which was formerly a German educational center, are massive structures several stories high with large balconies. Some of them were so near the school that an athlete could almost spring from roof to roof. In the cool of the summer evenings Turkish ladies love to emerge from the seclusion of the haremlik and congregate on roof or balcony to while away the time by playing on stringed instruments, singing and chatting together.

One night, writes a correspondent of the London Christian Herald, I had gone to bed, tired and a little homesick. Suddenly I heard some Turkish ladies come out on a neighboring roof, and one of them began to play a guitar. I had often heard them do that, but this time the tune arrested my attention. She was playing the well-known hymn, "Tell Me the Old, Old Story." Then one of the women began to sing. She had a sweet contralto voice, and her English was perfect. I was charmed, thrilled—and astonished. How was it that this Moslem woman was singing a Christian song? I slipped on my dressing gown and walked out on the roof. The Turkish ladies were just discernible in the darkness.

"That is a Christian hymn which you have been singing, madam," I ventured, scarcely knowing whether to expect a response or not, for it is against the Turkish custom for a woman to uncover her face or even to speak to one of another faith.

"Yes," she replied in soft tones.

"Are you then of the Christian faith?" I queried.

"No," she said. "I am a Mohammedan; but I love some of your hymns."

I bade her good night and retired again. The next day I wrapped up a small New Testament and tossed it on to the roof of the woman's residence.

Some months afterward I received instructions from headquarters to return home. The following morning, while at breakfast, the orderly handed me a letter that he had found on the roof. It ran as follows:

"I found the Bible which you threw on my roof for me, and offer you my thanks. I have read it many times and love it. The reading about Jesus Christ has melted my heart. I have prayed to him to make me like him, and he has filled my heart with joy. I know he is the Savior of the world. I am compelled to be a secret Christian, as we cannot do what we would here; but I am sure Jesus understands and knows that I intend to worship him. Adieu. Aziade."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

PORTIS, KANSAS

Not having reported for some weeks, we shall endeavor to let the world know we are still on the active list in the Lord's vineyard. Brother Ratliff reported the work some time ago, but we have not reported since early fall. The work in general is going good. We have received two by letter since January first. We lost three members by death during the fall season and one by letter. We are trying to enlist new recruits. At our last business meeting, the church decided to have revival services beginning February 14, lasting over two weeks. They asked the pastor to do the preaching. After getting the consent of most all the members to stand by the work in whatever way they could help, attendance and all, we have decided to do so, and leave the results with the Lord. This will be a heavy task, for we have held one meeting and have been preaching the unsearchable riches here for over three and a half years, but we are not afraid to tackle a BIG job. We have a faithful membership as a whole who have never failed yet in undertaking big things for our Jesus, whom we love to serve. May we have the prayers of God's people in this undertaking. We shall report later.

The Sunday school is keeping up real well, considering the losses we have sustained in removals and by deaths. We averaged for the whole year of 1925, 103 per Sunday. Three Sundays the attendance was extremely low—largely on account of muddy roads and bad weather. Here in the west folks can't travel much right after a rain—it means "parking in a ditch," or a visit to the garage for repairs.

In December we celebrated our Third Anniversary of the dedication of our new church.

Reports given by the different auxiliaries all showed progress in the last three years. Forty-nine new members have been received into the church; the W. M. S. has added new members with now a total of 38. The S. M. M. reorganized with 18 members. The C. E. is doing good work, with the enlistment of more young folks in active service. The Sunday school average for the first year in the new building was 109, second year, 106, third year, 107. (Ten families moved away from the vicinity since 1922.) We are starting a Teacher Training class soon, also putting on a friendly contest for attendance among all the classes—the men against the women—to last over the period of the first quarter of the year. Brother Dell Lemon is our efficient superintendent.

We are now conducting a Boy Scout School in the city, open to all boys from 9 to 14 years of age. We have 21 enrollments so far. This school will last over six weeks culminating with National Boy Scout Week, February 7-13, at which time honors will be given.

We assist in the Parent-Teacher programs which meet every month, and also conduct chapel services at the high school regularly taking our turn with the other two pastors of the city.

Recently we became a member of a new organization, The Lincoln Park District Ministerial Association, comprising four counties, with a total constituency of 78 ministers. We meet once every three months.

The street to the west of the church has been graveled and curbed—two main highways go along here—and a part of an 8 mile stretch of pike completed last summer. The street to the front has since been graveled so now we have a 'clean front' on two sides of us when it rains.

We have been observing all special days, and in the midst of a severe shortage of resources in a farming community, we are glad to say most all local bills are paid up—the preacher gets his check regularly. This condition is due largely to past training in tithing and teaching on keeping the Lord's work to the foremost in importance.

Praise the Lord, under seemingly hindering conditions, we are making progress, for which we give him the glory.

W. R. DEETER, Pastor.

BEDFORD COUNTY, PENN'A. CIRCUIT

Seeking to comply with the request of the Editor of the Brethren Evangelist, that a quarterly report be submitted of the various fields, we are led to make mention of the following facts.

Yellow Creek

On the Sunday after the Pennsylvania Conference, October 11th, we began a two weeks' revival at the Yellow Creek church. The services were evangelistic and preparatory in character, and resulted in one reconsecration. On the closing night, when thirty members surrounded the Lord's table, we felt that this attendance was attained largely through the interest aroused in the special services. Bad weather was in evidence during more than half of the period, but the loyalty of the membership did not waver. One night only six were in attendance, one family, but the service was held.

On Wednesday night, following the close of the meetings, the church came in a body to the pastor's home at New Enterprise, bringing a generous donation of seasonable and staple provisions. The guests, forty in number, furnished the entertainment for the evening, and the refreshments, and a very enjoyable evening was had. The instance of united good will and generosity has been supplemented many times by individual families sharing their blessings with us.

On Christmas night the Sunday school held its Christmas service, in which the choir, and those who so attractively decorated the church, as well as the children, won great credit. One instance of the spirit of the occasion was the gift to the pastor of a generous purse. Interest in the Sunday school is being sustained during these winter months.

Raystown

The Raystown church began a three weeks' revival on November 15. We enjoyed fine weather conditions, and a very loyal attendance and cooperation on the part of the membership. On Thanksgiving day two boys were baptized. The following Sunday, the second in the meeting, practically every member in attendance at the morning service came forward for reconsecration. And amid this occasion of deep rejoicing, six more young people from the intermediate department of the Sunday school came forward and made the good confession. These six also have been baptized and received into the fellowship of the church. All eight were present at the Communion service, when forty-one participated.

An entertaining playlet was given by the girls of the Senior Department of the Sunday school at Christmas. These same girls also compose an active Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. The following evening, the regular treat was distributed. The Woman's Missionary Society presented Mrs. Crick with a beautiful and serviceable quilt, which represented many, many hours of patient sewing on the part of the membership. At the same time the Sisterhood presented a beautiful silver carving set. These gifts shall ever be highly valued by us. In addition to these gifts, the church gave the pastor a generous purse. Many other gifts have been received from different families, all of which are greatly appreciated.

So real was the spirit of giving that more than one hundred dollars was subscribed by the membership as a Christmas gift to the church, the same to be used in curtailing a note soon due. We have assurances that there are still other substantial subscriptions to be made. The W. M. S., the Christian Endeavor and the Sunday school are making determined efforts to augment the fund when the time comes.

We believe Raystown can truly be called a growing church. While the growth is not so much in numbers, there is in evidence a healthy desire to do more and better work for the Lord. And such intelligent and consecrated desire is the secret of real growth. There is to be seen hunger for information, and for the adoption of methods and organization which assures expansion and efficiency.

New Enterprise

The New Enterprise church decided not to hold its revival until early in the spring, and plans are already being formulated with the special services in view. A very inspirational Communion service was held on November 8th, when fifty surrounded the tables. An interesting fact in connection with the service was that as many men as women were present. Several members of the Martinsburg, Penn'a. church were present, which was an added blessing.

The Sunday school attendance has been sustained. On the last Sunday of the year, with the thermometer at zero, forty-seven were in attendance at the program given by the children's division. One brother went so far as to hitch a horse to his Ford to get it started, so he could bring his family to the service.

The women of the church became inspired with the Christmas spirit early in December.

By using a very clever ruse, they led Mrs. Crick to choose a coat at a local store. Then all unknown to her, they solicited the funds, purchased the coat, and gave it to her for Christmas, much to her surprise and pleasure. Many other gifts have been received from individual families, all of which are highly appreciated.

There was one reconsecration before the Communion service and two have been received into the New Enterprise church by letter since our last report was made.

In General

All three churches on this circuit have complied with the usual requests for offerings for National and District Missions, and for the the White Gift. Knowing the conditions here, we feel that the response has been commendable in every instance. Plans are being made to make the appeals for Publication Day and for benevolences in due time.

Pastor and membership all desire the prayers of the brethren that through our willing submission to the leading of the Holy Spirit, this work may be expanded and developed.

W. S. CRICK.

New Enterprise, Penn'a.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

According to the date on the corner stone of the First Brethren Church of Long Beach, we are just entering the thirteenth year of our history. You just watch us upset all the calculations and prognostications of the superstitions "calamity howlers", for, according to God's promise, we expect to be living demonstrators of that verse that says: "All things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." Rom. 8:28.

We started the New Year right—on our knees in an old-fashioned, powerful, spirit-filled Watch Night service. It was just an extra blessing—one of "God's handfuls of purpose"—a misplaced Wednesday night prayer meeting, so to speak—God giving us two times of refreshing that last week in the old year. For we do have the most wonderful Wednesday night prayer meetings! If you could attend just one, you would understand what a "filling station" along the way they are!

Then we had our annual business meeting a week or so later. The people may have made a few mistakes there (such as electing a new Church Reporter and making the undersigned "it"), but Romans 8:28 is still in the Book! The harder the "all things" are to be worked together, the greater the glory to our all-powerful Lord and Savior Jesus Christ!

Then we wish to praise and thank our Father God that he gave grace to our Official Board (although it was as hard as prying loose a wisdom tooth) to lend our beloved pastor, Dr. L. S. Bauman, to the LaVerne church, for a two weeks' evangelistic service. It is a real deprivation to do without him for three Sunday nights and two Wednesday night prayer meetings, but we have faith to believe we will share a bit in the joy and reward of "much fruit" which will come to the La Verne Brethren. We know that it was according to the Lord's will that he should go, and so we claim the promise that he which began the good work will perform it. Phil. 1:6.

On the first Sunday of February, we expect to dedicate our youngest "child"—even the North Long Beach Mission Church, which the parent church is erecting at the other end of the city. Again, our pastor is to conduct a two weeks' evangelistic campaign there, following the dedication. Pray with us that the Lord will use him mightily there, to the salvation of many souls and the upbuilding of the church.

At the present writing, we know of nothing that is going to "happen" in March, but no doubt our pastor will see that something shall "come to pass," as he doesn't believe in rocking chairs or cozy corners when it comes to church organization!

Then after that comes Easter and its offering to the Lord of the Resurrection Day, through our remembrance of Foreign Missions of our church. We don't wish ourselves any "bad luck," but if you want to excel the Long Beach church in your offering—here is our challenge "to provoke you unto love and good works!" Heb. 10:24.

A. TASTER. Ps. 34:8.

We are very grateful for the substantial increase in the Thanksgiving offering this year. We trust that all churches will make sure to send us an offering. Members who were not present at church when the offering was raised, should not neglect to send their contribution to our office any time between now and July 1st.

Respectfully submitted,
WM. A. GEARHART,
Home Mission Secretary, 1106 American Building, Dayton, Ohio.

HOW TO KILL A PRAYER MEETING

1. Forget all about it until the hour arrives.
2. Come ten minutes late and sit near the door.
3. Work so hard during the day that you are so tired when night comes you cannot keep awake.
4. Do not take part in the singing. But if you should make a mistake and sing, be sure and drag. Slow, painfully slow, singing is very appropriate to a dead prayer meeting.
5. When the meeting has begun wait for others to speak and pray. Spend your time in planning your next day's work.
6. When you take part, occupy about twenty minutes. Do this especially when the leader asks for sentence prayers and testimonies.
7. Be sure and bewail the low spiritual condition of the church.
8. When the meeting closes go out as from a funeral. You can speak with your brethren or the stranger at some other time or place.
9. If you mention the meeting during the week, tell how dull it was.
10. If the above rules do not produce the desired effect, try staying away entirely. A sure way to kill the church is to kill the prayer meeting.—Selected.

whole-hearted convert at his feet, turned to the bystanders, among whom was probably John himself, and declared the lesson he wanted them to draw from the whole event, the lesson of personal decisions. There are two classes of people in the world; those who are conscious of their blindness and come to Christ that they may see, and those that think they see clearly and so will not go to Christ that the eyes of their souls may be opened. The latter were the proud and conceited Pharisees, full of sin just because they were so certain of their own righteousness and so ready to condemn others.

Jesus Christ the Light of the World

"How can faith be developed; how can 'they that see not...see?' By imitating the man born blind; listen to the words of promise which Christ has spoken; obey his commands however strange; have the courage to hold to your convictions in the face of reputed 'wise men'; be willing to suffer for his sake; and your spiritual sight will be strengthened, light will be cast on life's mysteries, and you will find Jesus to be indeed 'the Light of the world.'"—Prof. Charles R. Erdman.

HAPPENINGS AT FIRST CHURCH

Los Angeles, California

In the absence of Sister Stone, the regular correspondent, I venture a few lines which may be of interest to the church generally.

On the evening of December 20, there was a large gathering of the church membership at the parsonage, where all went as merry as a marriage bell. Few were the absent ones. The assemblage had a previous gathering at the home of Brother Wm. Keller, from whence they proceeded to surprise their popular pastor and wife. The event was the celebration of their silver wedding. This gay company went armed with sterling silverware, seasoned with a bountiful supply of refreshments and a warm Christian fellowship. An excellent program was rendered.

It would be putting it too mildly to say that the company was received with open arms and royally entertained. And surprised they were! All retraced their steps homeward after they had shown their appreciation of the loyal services of the pastor and his estimable wife.

The year was closed by "Decision Day", which was a hearty response to the invitation to follow after the "Blessed Master." Twenty-three men, women and children made the good confession.

New Year's eve was the regular church meeting for the transaction of business, reports and election of officers.

Everything went off harmoniously and all are looking forward to a prosperous year.

Brother Jennings has been preaching excellent sermons to an increased attendance. The morning sermon, January 10th, was on the Transfiguration. Brother Jennings was unusually ardent on this occasion and we believe that many more are counting the cost.

The church membership is meeting one evening a month in which they eat together (break bread) and enjoy the evening church fellowship, after which they meet in the regular audience chamber for the discussion of topics of general church interest.

The Christmas exercises were attended by a large and appreciative audience, and by many was pronounced the most elaborate ever conducted, and certainly had a fine effect on Decision Day.

This is the seventh year of service here of Brother and Sister Jennings. May the Lord spare them to us seven more.

B. F. SCHISLER.

IN THE SHADOW

LOWRY—Florence Hartsell was born near Tama, Iowa, December 22, 1867. She spent her childhood years in Tama County, and her entire life in this state.

On May 1, 1889, she was united in marriage with James Lowry. To this union four children were born: two daughters, Mrs. Perry Lynch and Mrs. Forrest Ambler, and two sons, Claude and Ray Lowry, all of whom are living near Green Mountain, Iowa.

Soon after her marriage, on December 2, 1891, she confessed Jesus as her Savior and Lord and united with the Carlton Brethren church. She was among the first to unite with this church, the organization having been effected just a short time previous to this. An evidence of her faith is attested in the fact that it was necessary to break the ice in order to baptize her. To her church she has remained a true and faithful member. She was a loving mother and a faithful wife. It might be said of her as wrote the poet: "None knew her but to love her or named her but to praise."

Though her sufferings were long, and at times intense, she bore them very patiently. She was ready for the call of her Master, and peacefully fell asleep about 3 A. M., Thursday morning, January 14, at the age of 58 years and 23 days.

Besides her husband, the four children, and eight grandchildren, she is survived by two sisters, Mrs. A. S. Fox of Palmyra, Penna. and Mrs. Lydia Morse of Portland, Oregon, and two brothers, John Hartsell of Bridgeport, Washington, and Eli Hartsell of Portland, Oregon. All of these we commend to our Heavenly Father, who is abundant in mercy and peace.

The funeral service was conducted at the Carlton Brethren church on Sunday afternoon, January 17, by her pastor, assisted by Rev. G. E. MacCanon of the United Brethren church of Garwin. Interment was made in the Dobson cemetery adjoining the church grounds.

CARL E. HELSER.

HEFFNER—Rosetta (Holmes) Heffner was born in Ashland Nebraska, August 6, 1876, died November 27, 1925. She was married to Charles Heffner at Falls City, Nebraska, October 31, 1898. To this union was born four children, Ambrose Heffner of Hastings, Nebraska, Lowell, Ralph and Pleasant, of Wild Horse, Colorado. Besides the husband and children she leaves four brothers and two sisters. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at the home of a sister, Mrs. Frank Lydick. Interment was made at the Hamlin cemetery.

AUSTIN R. STALEY.

ST. CLAIR—Elizabeth St. Clair, the daughter of Jonas and Catherine Beery, was born in Hocking County, Ohio, April 21, 1850. She departed this life at her home in Columbus, Ohio, December 10, 1925. She was the wife of Samuel C. St. Clair, who preceded her in death a number of years ago. Also two sons and a daughter have passed on to the great beyond. Five sons and a daughter survive her.

Sister St. Clair united with the Brethren church in Hocking County in 1870 and when the Mt. Zion Brethren church was organized became a charter member of that organization. After moving to Columbus she transferred her membership to the Brethren church in that city. She was always loyal to her church and was regular in her attendance until confined to her home on account of infirmities caused by a fall. She was an invalid for about two years and suffered much pain, but she bore her lot with becoming Christian patience.

The funeral services were held in the Mt. Zion Brethren church, near Logan, Ohio and interment was made in the cemetery nearby. The services were conducted by her pastor, the writer, who was assisted by Brother A. E. Thomas. Each gave a brief message of comfort and encouragement.

The following lines, selected by Sister St. Clair and included in her parting words to her family, are expressive of her thought concerning her loved ones that remain:

"Goodbye, goodbye, for God is reaping.

We say it in sorrowful tone,

For safe in the Father's keeping

We surely can trust his own.

Goodbye, it is only but for a moment,

The way to his home lies straight;

We'll enter it, some in the morning,

And some in the evening late."

H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

CARBERRY—Jacob Carberry, a member of the Raystown, Pennsylvania, congregation, departed this life December 13, 1925, after an illness of two weeks, at the age of seventy-three years. He was a son of Daniel and Susan Brumbaugh Carberry, to whom eight children were born. Only two of these children survive, five having departed this life within the last eighteen months. Mr. Carberry is survived by his widow, and six children. According to those who knew him well, Brother Carberry lived a quiet, unobtrusive life, and was held in high esteem. Burial was made in the Liberty cemetery, where for four years the church house in which he worshiped, stood.

FISHER—Mrs. Kate Fisher, the wife of George Fisher, departed this life December 19, 1925, at the age of 62 years. Her husband and daughter survive her. She was not a member of the Brethren church, but the church of her choice being located in a distant part of the city, she was a faithful attendant of the services of the Brethren church near which she lived, and was an active worker in the Woman's Home Missionary Society, having been the faithful treasurer of that society for several years. Her earnestness and fine Christian spirit was an inspiration to others. She will be greatly missed by all who knew her. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. Bickel of the Methodist church, assisted by the writer.

Sunk in the Mire

A marble head of Augustus Caesar, lodged in hard clay under the Hudson River, was drawn up recently by a War Department suction dredge, and was exhibited in a Fifth Avenue gallery. The head is of Carrara marble and weighs fifty pounds. The nose and the rims of the ears were broken, and the neck and chin were knocked loose in its passage through the suction pipe. Many critics are of the opinion the sculpture is the work of a master of the first century.

Many living men and women are as deeply sunk in the miry clay as was this bust of Caesar at the bottom of the Hudson River. These people must know that the mercy and grace of God can reach them if they will lay hold of the life-line. Are you a witness for my Lord?

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

SUGGESTIONS To Young Christians

1. Trust the Lord fully. He is able to keep you.
2. Read the Bible daily as God's message to you.
3. Keep a daily tryst with God, as you would your lover.
4. Speak to some one daily and helpfully about your Master.
5. Attempt difficult tasks for God. There is joy to the worker.
6. Be happy in the Lord. The devil cannot harm a joyful Christian.
7. Declare your allegiance to Christ openly. It will give added strength.
8. Do something for the aged, helpless or poor. This sweetens soul and character.
9. Cultivate the consciousness of God's presence. He is your strength and life.
10. Live in the light of heaven. Press toward the goal. The best is yet to come.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR FORTY-FIVE YEARS OLD

A movement that has lived so long and has spread so far, has a vital mission to fulfil. And so long as young people are what they are, there will be a need of just such an institution doing just such a work. Be not deceived, our youth of today are as sorely in need of training "for Christ and the Church" as were those of a generation ago.

Necessity is Laid Upon Us

The last Sunday in February is the time for lifting the offering for Benevolences—the support of the superannuated ministers and the maintenance of the Brethren Home. Some churches and individuals have been in the habit of passing this interest over lightly, if indeed they have given it any consideration at all. A little over a year ago there was some flinching and uneasiness manifested because we pointed out the fact that "Sixty-Five Churches" had failed to make any offering whatever to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and as a result these old and honored servants of the church of former days were going for months without their pay and some of them were suffering want. So far as we have learned, the situation is not so bad this year. We are hoping to learn soon from Board members how our veterans are faring. We are expecting the report that the response on the part of the churches has been decidedly better this year. And surely it should be. It is not a matter to be lightly considered, not a thing that can be taken care of after every other desire has been supplied. It is not a call that we may answer or not, as the notion takes us. There are three considerations that make it imperative that we shall seriously consider and faithfully respond to the claims of those of our number who may be in need of the comforts of life.

First, the Bible enjoins us. Regarding ministers, Paul says, "Know ye not that they which minister about sacred things eat of the things of the temple, and they which wait upon the altar have their portion with the altar? Even so did the Lord ordain that they which proclaim the gospel should live of the gospel" (1 Cor. 9:13, 14). Not only the ministers are to be provided for, but the needy among the laity, especially the widows, as the apostle very definitely enjoins in the 5th chapter of First Corinthians. So insistent is he about it that he says, "If any provide not for his own, and especially his own household, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever" (v. 8). And where this cannot be done individually by relatives, it must be done collectively by the churches. James places the care of widows and orphans as one of the outstanding evidences of "pure religion" (1:27). Paul urges Timothy (6:17, 18) to charge them that are rich in this world's goods to become "rich in good works" and to "be ready to distribute" to those who have need. And to the Romans (12:13) he writes that they be characterized by that love that is in the habit of "communicating unto the necessities of saints." John in his first epistle (3:17) feels the necessity of such benevolence so strongly that he says, "But whoso hath the world's goods, and beholdeth his brother in need, and shutteth up his compassion from him, how doth the love of God abide in him?" And the writer to the Hebrews declares that if this obligation is discharged, God will not forget such labor of love "in that ye ministered unto the saints and still do minister" (Heb. 6:10). In the face of these words, how can we escape the feeling that "necessity is laid upon us" to provide for the physical welfare of those who belong to our household of faith?

Not only are we under the Scriptural injunction to care for the aged ministers and laity of our church, but our natural sense of obligation to provide for our own makes response to the appeal in behalf of those in need a matter of necessity. The heart of the natural man feels this constraint; it is an inherited instinct; it develops with the growing sense of relation. He who crushes the feeling of obligation and turns his back upon the duty is universally looked upon as heartless and cruel, as deficient in natural affection and debased. How can he who professes to be a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and especially in the face of the rebuke he administered to the greedy and hypocritical Jews for their pretended generosity to the temple as a cloak for the evasion of their duty to their aged parents, fail to realize a high obligation and bounden duty in making provision for the aged and infirm of the church?

Moreover gratitude impels such concern for the welfare of the saints of God, especially is this true of our relation to the aged ministers. They have labored and sacrificed for the church that we hold dear; they served in a day when service was more difficult and persecution was real; they gave themselves to their ministry with little or no thought of compensation on their part or on the part of those to whom they ministered; they have preserved unto us a rich heritage of faith. Is there a heart so lacking in appreciation, so dead to all sense of gratitude as not to wish to do some kindness in return for all that has been wrought in our behalf? Surely the least we could wish to do is to see that the latter days of these veterans of the cross are comfortable and happy. Pity that soul who feels no obligation to these godly men as he ponders the incomparable treasure of a whole gospel faith, or feeling such, refuses to do what he can to discharge it.

Contrasting Views of Youth and Age

We have been interested to note the contrast in the reaction of the younger and older men (so far as they have expressed themselves) to the Evangelist's attitude on the war problem and its criticism of the government's war propaganda activities. One man, an Elder in the church and advanced far down the sunset side of life, took us severely to task because of our advocacy of the World Court and our criticism of the government's expensive and world-disconcerting naval display and its militarizing "Defense Test Day" and in as strong words as he could decently use called us unpatriotic. We were not ruffled by what he said at all, but we were saddened by the feeling that possibly he and the other elderly men, not ministers, who replied with less fervor but with lack of appreciation of the Evangelist's aggressiveness in this line, represented to a far too great extent the old man's view of war. Others by their ominous silence have tended to increase that feeling.

On the other hand, several young men (ministers and pastors) have written commending our attitude, or criticising it for not being more aggressive. One young minister sends us a noted speech, practically an appeal for pacifism, and gently hints that our opposition to war should be more vigorous. Another sends us a booklet on "Military Training in Schools and Colleges in the United States" and says in part, "I believe that if we as Brethren are to regain (I say 'regain', for it seems to me that we lost much ground during the Great War) our original position concerning war, we must do so by acquainting ourselves with the facts and then acting." And he believes that the use of the Evangelist, "the most effective method for broadcasting our ideals of peace," should be made more of. Another young man, a student, believes thoroughly in pacifism and thinks we ought to refuse to participate in any form of military training in schools or elsewhere and to speak out against military in every form. These again impressed us as being quite representative of the attitude of youth toward war, and we cannot help saying that it seems the one and only source whence we may expect an awakening to our duty as propagators of the spirit and principles of the Prince of Peace. And the singular thing about these young correspondents is that they got their vision and enthusiasm from other than Brethren sources, which fact confirms our conviction that we are not teaching and preaching our peace principles enough.

We are not ready to believe that the majority, nor even the average, of our older ministers have lost their Brethren convictions against war, notwithstanding the vociferous attitude of a few, but we do fear that they have grown too silent on the subject. And long continued silence tends to give rise to a feeling of indifference. But why the silence and apparent indifference of the older men and the outspoken, and aggressive attitude of youth? The one class seems to have forgotten that the world was recently ravaged by a great war and has no premonitions of a future war, while the other vividly remembers and is fearful of the world drifting again war-ward.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We learn that Miss Minnie Deeter, returned missionary from Africa, whose address is 11 Albert Apartments, Clemmer Street, Dayton, Ohio, who underwent a successful operation, is enjoying good health again.

Publication Day offerings are not coming in very lively, according to word from the Business Manager. Send them promptly, and when you send them, make them worthy expressions of your interest in the Publishing House.

The church at Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, has experienced a good year under the leadership of Brother and Sister J. A. Remple. The Sunday school has grown to the point where more room was required. Seven confessions were recently received.

Miss Alice Longaker, in reporting concerning a letter received from Miss Tyson, missionary to Africa, makes a suggestion that ought to be heeded by a goodly number of those interested in missionary work,—writing letters to our missionaries and offering to share the burden of their problems in prayer.

Brethren young people of Junior and Senior years in high school should in large numbers avail themselves of the opportunity offered in the Ashland College Night Contest, concerning which Miss Elizabeth Haun writes on the C. E. page this week, and which was outlined in last week's issue.

Brother B. T. Burnworth, who is in the evangelistic field, announces that, due to a change of program, he has an open date for the three weeks preceding Easter. Any church interested may write him at Ashland, Ohio. His notice arrived too late for entrance in the "Announcement" department.

Brother S. E. Christiansen writes of the work at Fairview, near Washington C. H., Ohio, where he is pastor, and where he has received evidences of the loyal support of the faithful. Sunday school and church attendance seem encouraging. The Women's Missionary Society, as is often the case, proves a strong arm to the church. Two confessions were received at a meeting begun in December and postponed on account of conflicting community activities.

Brother Thomas F. Howell writes an interesting letter concerning the transfer of his activities from Mulvane, Kansas to the New Highland church near Washington, Pennsylvania. He did a good work at Mulvane in resurrecting the church and getting it started on a new course. He has been kindly received in his new charge and finds himself among a people who are mindful of the temporal needs of a pastor to a commendable degree.

We are glad to note that the Louisville, Ohio, work is moving forward encouragingly under the able direction of Brother R. F. Porte. One addition to the church is reported and every department and interest active and making good reports. Plans are under way for the enlargement of the Sunday school quarters, as they are cramped for space. If this is carried through it will likely result in a great advantage to the church.

A certain pastor in Coral Gables, Florida, claims to have solved the problem of getting the golfer to church by instituting a "golfer's service" which is held each Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock, when men and women are on their way home from the Country Club two blocks away. The innovation is said to have proven popular with the golfers. This pastor is to be given credit for his effort, but if his ingenuity could devise some means of getting the golfer going rather than coming, it would likely be better for the church and the golfer, though it might work to the disadvantage of Sunday golf.

The report from Flora, Indiana, where Brother Frank G. Coleman has recently become pastor, is quite encouraging. The Sunday school attendance is gaining and they are expecting soon to reach their goal of 200. The W. M. S. did a splendid thing last year in raising funds to the amount of $2,446.92. There may be societies that did better, but they have not been reported through the columns of the Evangelist. Another hopeful sign is the increase in the prayer meeting attendance, which threatens to overflow into the auditorium of the church. They are now in the midst of an evangelistic campaign with their pastor doing the preaching, assisted by singing evangelists.

One faithful correspondent from the Pittsburgh church shares some of their joys with the Evangelist family, and displays a very optimistic spirit regarding this work under the able leadership of Brother A. L. Lynn. A net gain of twenty-nine members is reported for the year. A re-dedication of their improved church was recently held and the service, a copy of the program for which was sent to our office, contained a number of interesting items aside from the address by the pastor. Among them was a historical sketch of the church by the recording secretary, a most fitting number in view of its being the 36th anniversary of the organization of the Pittsburgh church.

We are in receipt of a beautiful souvenir booklet containing the program, the original songs and the address of welcome given on the occasion of the entertainment of the King's Servants class by the Altruists of the Falls City, Nebraska, Sunday school. The former class is taught by the pastor, Brother A. B. Cover, and the latter by Mrs. H. J. Pritchard. Sometimes we neglect the social requirements of our church people, and the adults feel it as well as the young people, then again, the social features are emphasized a plenty, but without any thoughtful direction. It is evident that this social occasion was one of careful planning, and doubtless resulted in inspiration as well as enjoyment.

Brother R. F. Porte does the other pastors a service in reporting the Ohio Pastors' Conference recently held at Columbus. It is to be regretted that not more of our men were there. But Brother Porte's suggestion to the churches—that they make up a purse and send their pastor another year—will solve the problem in many cases. For we personally know that pastors (and editors) are not financially able to spend much money on conventions in addition to the trips we are required to make to our own National and district conferences. But it will pay the churches to enable their pastors to get spiritual refreshment and enlarged vision by sending them to such conferences and conventions occasionally.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor at Oak Hill, West Virginia, reports progress in the Lord's work at that place. Two have been added to the church recently. Two features of special note are the interest taken in the prayer meeting and the effort being put forth to hold the children for the church services, a thing which is too often overlooked. We are glad to note Brother Ankrum's admonition to his fellow-pastors about writing church news. If every pastor would report or have his correspondent report once a quarter or oftener, when occasion demanded, the news department would be kept bristling, the brotherhood would be kept well informed regarding the condition of the Lord's work, and there would not be an occasion for such lengthy letters as are sometimes written when one must recount the work for a whole year. We have been pleased to note an improvement in the matter of writing recently, however.

If you are not at one with Christ, you are not one of Christ's.

Some folks don't like topical preaching because it is inclined to become too practical.

Outward forms are containers of spiritual truths, but the contents cannot be sipped by carnal lips.

Men can quarrel over man-written creeds as well as over the Bible, and in the process both sides are likely to get farther from the truth.

GENERAL ARTICLES

For Christ and the Church

By E. M. Riddle

(This excellent address delivered by Brother Riddle on October 30, at the Ohio Conference held at Smithville, and voted by that body to be published in "The Evangelist," we have purposely held for publication at this time as a fitting celebration of Christian Endeavor Week—Editor.)

E. M. Riddle

The task before me is one of supreme importance. What question is there that should command such attention as how to deal with the youth of today that we may win them for Christ and the church? After eleven years of experience in the Christian ministry, I am still seeking the best way to win and keep the youth who are entrusted to my pastoral care. I believe this to have been the paramount problem of my ministry, how best enlist my young folks for the Kingdom of God.

The Place for Young People

I am persuaded that the young people of every church and community should be linked up with the church program, through some active auxiliary. Their place is in the church. They should never be allowed to feel that they are apart from the program of the church. The time was and not long ago either, when in many churches the young were not to be heard and were not at all encouraged to identify themselves with the church. However I am glad it is different today. In recent years a large influx of young life has been gathered into the church. It is even true in our own denomination. Hence there lies within our arms a large responsibility, that of nurturing, training and enlisting our young people. Enlisting—yes, tying them up with the church. In doing this I take it that every young person should first be won to Jesus Christ, secondly won for the church. That, my friends, is a worthy goal of the worldwide Christian Endeavor program for this year, "win 100,000 boys and girls for Christ and the church during the year."

Consciousness of God

One of the very finest things that can come to us in this convention is a renewed consciousness of the presence of God. With this renewed consciousness of God we ought to go among our young people, fearlessly to face every problem with a note of victory in every action. I like what ex-President Roosevelt once said to some American students; he said, "That character was made up chiefly of three elements: plain honesty, courage, and common sense." I wonder if we parents and officials of the many organizations of the church can face our task with these qualifications. Let us be honest, let us have courage, and dare to venture for God, and let us in a common sense way face the great problem of wedding our young people to the church. It is one thing to have them unite with the church organization or any part of the church program, but it is quite another to keep them.

The Purpose of C. E.

More than forty years ago, our beloved, esteemed and honored Francis E. Clark conceived the idea that his church should do something for the young people. The Bible school was teaching them but he, looking upon their boundless possibilities, saw the need for an organization which would afford opportunity for development and real genuine expression, preparing them for future leadership in the church. The success of the Christian Endeavor organization which has come to be world wide is largely due to the fact that it had a real purpose for existence; in other words, it filled a need. From the moment of its inception it has been a challenging program to young and old alike. This worldwide organization of Christian Endeavor presents a program that is vital. It is both practical and comprehensive. Any church can adopt all or part of its policy. There is room for all from Juniors to the Alumni. In her matchless Fidelity campaign launched at Portland Oregon in July, 1925, Christian Endeavor has a six-fold program presented as follows, —Worship-Information-Service-Recreation Fellowship and Organization. Christian Endeavor is growing wherever there is a desire to hold up a definite spiritual standard for young people. Christian Endeavor believes that young people need to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as a personal Savior and to witness for him in the home life, the community, the nation and the world. Christian Endeavor believes in the importance of daily prayer and Bible study to equip persons for life's task. Christian Endeavor exalts the church. She challenges young people to a program of Christian living and world service. Only where the church has this ideal for its young people can Christian Endeavor prosper.

Our Part

Now then, you say, what is our part in this large and inviting program. Allow me to say that if you have only a half a dozen young people you ought to harness them with this program. Thousands of churches of America and the world are appealing to the young life through one to four Endeavor societies, actively functioning in the church. Thus they are holding and training thousands, who will be the churches' future leaders. They will be leaders who have cultivated a love for their fellowmen, a prayer life, a passion for soul-winning and a spirit for genuine service. Think of the staggering task that faces these trained leaders,—58 millions not affiliated with any religious faith. There are approximately 25 millions below the age of 25 years not enrolled in any Sunday school. These 25 millions represents 25 millions ignorant of the Gospel. Christian Endeavor is the tool at hand to cope with this situation. It is splendidly versatile. The general frame work, the system of officers and committees, prayer meetings, socials and study classes, the closely articulated and comprehensive unions, plans for adult aid and individual strength, denominational, and interdenominational guidance; all this is ideal for any phase of religious education.

In my recent meeting conducted in West Virginia, I found through interrogating a number of young folks, school teachers, a mission worker and others that in all too many of the churches, particularly small town and rural churches, there is nothing done for the young people. Permit me to say that I had one of the exceptional opportunities of my life in preaching day after day to such a large number of fine young people, who are waiting to be trained and won for the church. One man who was more than seventy years of age, said if he could have the desire of his life it would be that he might again be young just for the privilege of teaching and training his family as he now feels they ought to have been trained.

Recognize the Youth

The wise pastor will see to it that his young people are properly recognized. It is a promising and inspiring period of time between mere childhood and manhood. "Rejoice O young man in thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes, but know thou, that for all these things, God will bring thee to judgment," says Ecclesiastes.

Sympathy! yes they need our sympathy. Far be it from us to ever be out of sympathy with the work of the young people in our midst. Parents, God never gave us a greater duty than the sacred opportunity of training our children. Do you believe it? Youth is the noble seed that springs into flowers of worth. Take an illustration from Conwell's famous lecture. He tells of a boy who bought a mouth organ for twenty-five cents, all the money he had. Unfortunately he broke the mouthpiece in half, and not having any more money, used his own ingenuity to repair the break, and finally succeeded. The result of that and many years of toil, is the Estey organ of today—talent developed. Youth of today are often very loath to hear the counsel of the older; like Rehoboam of old they rather choose the younger. We should always earnestly pray and seek to lead them by the power of the Spirit to choose the things that are real and vital. Indeed life is very much like the boy with only one arrow for his bow. This life is the one we have to use. We need to plan, aim, deliberately and carefully, else we shoot our arrow in vain.

Conserving

Isn't it a fact, Brethren, that we have laid the emphasis almost entirely upon receiving folks and very little upon some definite plan to conserve them? The young person who is brought into the church and actively engaged, with something to do in the Bible school or the Christian Endeavor may not need to be guarded very heavily. We need to allow the young to know that they can be trusted to do things in the church. They like action. They are full of life. The activity of Christian Endeavor makes it appeal. I believe right here is the leakage in too many churches, in that they have given the young folks nothing to do except sit still, and they are not allowed to make any noise in doing that. Christian Endeavor has been called the training camp where young people are trained, educated, and conserved for the church that she may have stalwart soldiers of the cross to battle with the forces of evil. Follow the churches, my friend, that have had a good lively Christian Endeavor work and you will not find there a dearth of leadership in the community. Neither will you find all the young people sitting back with their arms folded. A work that has stood for more than forty years, an organization that has enlisted tens of thousands in that period, an organization that has reached the uttermost parts of the earth because of its challenging program is worthy of our most sympathetic support, in lieu of the fact that it does so much for the future generation in the name of Christ and the church. From Hagerstown Morning Herald.

General Smedley D. Butler was dismissed from the Philadelphia police department because he "tried to enforce the law without fear of favor," the Rev. G. C. Carpenter told a large congregation at the First Brethren church last night.

The Rev. Dr. Carpenter's statement came in the course of a sermon on prosperity. Speaking under the head, "Law-abiding or Lawless," he said:

"It is the duty of every citizen to obey the law. A good citizen, speaking of policemen getting drunk, said: 'Those men have taken the oath of office and ought to keep their oath. They ought not only enforce the law but they ought to be good examples of law abiding citizens.'

"In Philadelphia during the last two years, General Butler as head of the police force, has tried to enforce the law without fear or favor, knowing no rich or poor. And the result was that just before Christmas Mayor Kendrick dismissed him from office. When General Butler was after small fish all went well but when he got after the seven million dollar hotels and said they must obey the law, the mayor said: 'Hands off, these are my friends, we grew up together, you must not padlock that hotel.'

"Then Butler said: 'If you will not support me as you pledged, I will appeal to Governor Pinchot.' He did appeal and the next day he was dismissed from office.

"Butler said that 16,000 persons were arrested in Philadelphia during the last year for selling liquor but only ten per cent were convicted. The police did their duty, he said, but the magistrates would not do their duty, neither would the district attorney.

"Governor Pinchot said in a great farewell meeting for Butler: 'General Butler, you have not failed; you have only not been allowed to finish. Criminals big and little rejoice at your departure. The friends of law and order throughout Pennsylvania and the nation are hurt just as much as the cause they love is hurt. I speak with your voice as well as my own when I thank you for what you have done for this commonwealth.' And every law abiding citizen of the United States ought to thank him. We need many more General Butler's.

"A similar condition exists almost everywhere. Only the little fish are caught, now and then, in the net of the law. The big ones escape. The law can be enforced. The majority of the people want the law enforced. But we are too easy. We are asleep at the switch and there will be a wreck one of these days unless we wake up and demand law enforcement without fear or favor.

"We ought to live to make the world better by our living in it, but some men seem to be living so they will make the world better by getting out of it. Maybe a lot of folks could well be spared as we enter the new year. Let nations and individuals so live that they may prosper and have success as the Lord measures prosperity and success.

"The secret of true prosperity and real success," Dr. Carpenter said, "is in Joshua 1. 8: 'This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein; for then thou shalt make thy way prosperous.'

"We call the Bible an open book, but to millions it is a closed book as much so as though it were bound with iron bands and locked with Yale locks," he added.

"Too many are living for the outer man and are letting the inward man perish. Millions of dollars for cosmetics to beautify the body, but the best way to beautify the body is by living a godly life. Better throw away the lip sticks and use the beatitudes. Better throw away the paint-box and rejoice in the beauty that comes by keeping the heart pure and the thoughts clean. Better throw away the extreme fashions of the world and adorn with the garments of righteousness. Godliness bringeth true joy and beauty.

Beauty Spots in the Holy Land

By Herbert H. Tay

The entry of the average tourist into the Land of Palestine might appropriately be termed, "The Great Disappointment." One's ideas of the land have been formed by the glowing accounts of the land flowing with milk and honey mentioned in the Bible, which in turn have been more highly colored by a vivid and idealistic imagination, until the plain and prosaic reality is a terrible shock. To be plain, Palestine is very dry and uninteresting from the scenic standpoint. The Philistine plain is tiresome and monotonous. The Hill Country is barren and rocky—even bald in spots. The Sea of Galilee is surrounded by barren heat-baked hills. Those tourists whose idealism is only skin-deep soon tire of the land, and are eager to get away.

But to the devout student of the Word of God,—to the one to whom the history of this land awakens such sacred memories—it is the most interesting and beautiful land on earth.

Nor is it beautiful simply from its historic and sacred associations. There are beauty spots in the Holy Land that are as lovely as any found in lands that are famed for their beauty. The striking contrast between them and the dry, uninteresting surrounding country, only serves to enhance their loveliness. Like the old master, beautified by the surrounding daubs of modern amateurs; like the beautiful gem, glistening in splendor when surrounded by imitations; so the beauty spots of the Holy Land stand out in all their beauty, because they are surrounded by such barrenness and desolation. Let us visit three or four of those spots today, and mark well their loveliness.

We shall visit first, a spot which we came upon, quite unexpectedly, in the mountains south of the Dead Sea. We had been travelling from Kerak, ancient Kir of Moab, in a long caravan, down to the Ghor es Safieh south of the Dead Sea. The country was, for the most part, desert. In order to descend from the plateau of Moab, to the floor of the Dead Sea Valley, it was necessary to negotiate a very rocky and precipitous mountainside, for about three thousand feet. The road consisted of little more than a trail, which was barely wide enough for the pack animals to retain their footing upon. There was practically no soil upon it whatever, it being literally paved with sharp and jagged rocks, which made it exceedingly difficult for man and beast to walk. We let the pack train go first, and as we followed on foot, leading our horses—it was impossible to ride upon such a road—we noticed many a blood-spot on the larger rocks, and often a piece of skin and hair, that had been scraped from the bleeding and bruised feet of the animals which were bearing the packs. So steep, rocky, and dangerous was the descent, that it took us from ten o'clock in the morning until three o'clock in the afternoon to negotiate the three thousand feet.

We were tired and hot, footsore and weary when we reached the bottom. But upon arriving there, we came suddenly upon a stream of clear water. How good it looked after the heat and toil of the day! While the "mukari" or muleteers were pitching the tents and preparing the camp, we followed the stream up, to see where it came from. After walking about a half mile, we came upon a scene which I shall never forget. Our progress was halted by a high cliff, that rose sheer from the bottom of the canyon a hundred feet or more. At the foot of this cliff was a spring of crystal-clear water. The cool water was dropping everywhere from the fern and moss covered rocks above. This beautiful nook was overshadowed by the drooping fronds of graceful palm-trees, which formed a beautiful bower in which one could lie down and rest. The song of birds was in the air. The fragrance of the retam was wafted to our nostrils occasionally upon the quiet evening air. In the sand at our feet was the footprint of a gazelle, that had come to satisfy her thirst in the cool waters. Beautiful flowers and grass grew along the sides of the stream that flowed from the spring.

We reveled in the cool shade and refreshing water, after our hard tiresome descent of the past five hours. We sat there upon the green grass, drinking in the beauties of sight, sound and fragrance, with nothing to disturb the quietness of the secluded nook, save the songs of the birds, and the quiet dripping of the water from the cool, moss-covered rocks above. What a beautiful spot it was, and its beauty was only heightened by its gray and somber desert surroundings.

We shall now turn our footsteps northward, and go to the other extreme of the Land—to the head of the Jordan river. In the valley north of the Waters of Merom, the Jordan "divides, and becomes three heads." One of these, rising on the north-west side of Hermon, is called the Hashbeia branch of the Jordan. Another, arising in the midst of the valley, from an enormous spring, is called the Leddan branch. It springs from the ground at the site of Dan, the northern boundary of the Land in Old Testament times. The third head of the Jordan is called the Banias branch, and arises from the foot of Mt. Hermon, on the south, at the village of Banais, or Caesarea-Philippi as it was called in the days of Christ. This spot, and its surroundings is one of the Beauty Spots of the Holy Land.

We approach it from Dan, and even before we get to the village, we seem to be walking through a park. Oak trees are everywhere, and underfoot are all manner of wild flowers. Before we enter the city itself, we hear the roar of waters, and come suddenly upon a rushing stream of crystal-clear water, overhung with willows and alders. We cross it upon an old Roman bridge, and passing through the village, we come to the very foot of Mt. Hermon, where the stream is bursting forth from the rocks, a full born river. The ice-cold water is bubbling from between the rocks in the form of a semi-circle, perhaps two hundred feet long. It splashes over the rocks, its spray glistening in the occasional patches of sunlight which shine through the branches of the overhanging trees, and skirting beds of fragrant mint, it begins its headlong descent through the Sea of Galilee, to the Dead Sea. Time and space forbid our lingering any longer in this beauty spot, though we stayed there for several hours in the cool shade when we visited it.

There is one more spot which we must visit, not only because of its beauty, but because of its sacred associations.

"Beside the Still Waters"

It is called by the Arabs, Ain Fara. Very few tourists visit it, because it requires a long, hard walk, and few are willing to pay the price. Few indeed have ever heard of it. However, it is the traditional spot in which David received the natural imagery that is incorporated in the Twenty-third Psalm—the Shepherd Psalm.

Down in the bottom of a rocky, precipitous gorge, there bursts forth—it seems almost out of the solid rock—a copious stream of water. It tumbles headlong over an overhanging rock in a beautiful, sparkling, cataract, and spreads out into a beautiful, crystal pool, in which the overhanging willows and fig trees are mirrored in all their verdant loveliness. In the pool are numerous fish, darting about like silver shadows. The water is cold and clear, and a long satisfying draught is welcomed by one who has negotiated the tortuous descent from the top of the mountain. Not far below the source of the stream, the canyon widens, and there is a place which is covered with grass. It is here that the shepherds still bring their flocks that they might quench their thirst in the sparkling stream, nibble the succulent grass, or rest in the shadow of the mighty rock that overhangs the southern side of the canyon.

Surely it is a place of inspiration, and David might well have received his message from God here, when he penned the words of that immortal Shepherd Psalm. At best, words are inadequate to describe the beauty of the place. Human speech is so halting, and the vocabulary so limited, that they fall impotent before the impressive and over-aweing grandeur of this scene.

Let no one disparage the beauty spots of the Holy Land. It has scenes of which many another land might well be proud. But above all else, it is beautiful to the child of God, because of its sacred associations. Even the bare rocks are beautiful and sacred to the Christian, for they might well have been trodden by the feet of the Savior. And any place, and any life, that has enjoyed the presence of the Son of God, cannot help but be beautiful.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

One Who Never Changes

By Homer A. Kent

TEXT: Jesus Christ the same yesterday and today, and forever.—Hebrews 13:8.

One bright day when Brother Tay and I were in the land of Egypt we determined to go to the edge of the Libyan desert to see some of the ancient tombs and pyramids of a bygone civilization. We obtained a typical Egyptian guide who could speak a little broken English and we set out quite early on our tramp. It was an intensely interesting walk that beautiful morning through the rich fields of green verdure in the Nile valley. Everywhere in those fields the natives were cultivating their crops and tilling the land. Camels, donkeys, and oxen were busy serving their masters. Men, women, and children alike were at work in characteristic oriental fashion. The landscape presented a fascinating picture. Here and there were mud villages surrounded by date palms which lift their heads majestically to the heavens. The long Nile valley stretched away to the north and to the south appearing like a huge green plush carpet. And in contrast on each side of the valley arose the bleak and brown cliffs of the desert, forbidding in their aspect. On the western desert could be seen the pyramids which added wonder and romance to our experience.

We journeyed onward with the pyramids and surrounding tombs as our objective. Shortly we approached an unusually large clump of date palm trees. In the midst of them our guide bade us stop, and then began to point out some strange but obscure ruins. We were told that these were the ruins of old Memphis, which at one time was the pride of all Egypt. There was the center of trade and commerce for Egypt in the day of its great civilization. It was a center of learning, of religion, of art and of sculpture. It was the capital of united Egypt and possessed of great glory. But look at it now! Unless we had had a guide to point them out we would have walked right by the ruins of that great ancient city. But we walked among the ruins. We saw where its once massive buildings had been, where its temples had lifted their proud heads and where power was irresistible. But we saw that now not a soul lives there. The situation is given over to the habitation of wild beasts, of creeping things, and of fowls of the air. Lying here and there among the palms were bits of statuary, one especially to be remembered was the broken statue of Rameses II. Until the year 1850 the site of the city had been lost altogether. The sands of the desert had so encroached upon it that its location was a secret.

So that day as we pondered these things we said surely the writer of the Scriptures was right when he said "Here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come." Then from these ruins we walked out to the edge of the desert and we looked upon some of the pyramids, tombs of the Pharaohs who ruled in that yonder city. They have been standing there close to five thousand years, but, alas, the civilization which they represent is past and gone and the pyramids themselves are showing signs of ruin and decay. They no longer are objects of beauty, only of wonder and genius. Surely a great change has taken place. A profound lesson lies there for us to learn, namely, things of time are fleeting. Civilizations change, cities fall to ruins, customs alter, the scenes of life are ever shifting. Over the vast gateway of the deserted city of Futtypore Sikri in northern India is an Arabic inscription to this effect. "This world is but a bridge; pass over, build not thy dwelling there." These words are certainly true but as we read them a tinge of sadness comes over us. However the antidote for the sorrow lies in the eternal truths of the Scriptures which tell us that though heaven and earth shall pass away yet the Word of God shall abide forever. And among all the changing, decaying scenes of time remains this immutable fact, which gleams and sparkles like a diamond in the crown of a king, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today and forever." How wonderful that truth! There is one who never changes. He is always the same.

I. He is the same in his power. Earthly kings and potentates rise to great dominion and authority and rule with an iron hand for a while. But sooner or later they fall and their influence is gone. Napoleon and Bismarck are no longer to be reckoned with in world affairs. Men no longer bow to them. But Jesus Christ the King of kings and Lord of lords shall never lose his power. He is the same. He, who was present at the time of creation, who swung the stars into space and set the laws of the ages into operation. He, who has been the preserver of every existing thing throughout the past. He, who came to earth and healed the sick, opened the eyes of the blind, and caused the dead to rise, he, who with resurrection power said "All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and in earth" and gloriously ascended back into heaven from whence he came, he is the same and shall be as long as the eternities roll on. And when some glad day we shall see him not in a body of humiliation but in a glorified body coming down the meadows of the heavens to set up his reign, whose right it is to reign, we shall be glad to know him then for he shall bear upon his vesture this name "King of kings and Lord of lords." That is Jesus Christ our Lord. To know that he is one of such power and that his power never changes helps us to know we can trust him. He is able to fulfil his every promise for he is the Omnipotent One.

II. This leads us to the consideration that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and today and forever in his fidelity. He is faithful to his covenant which he has made with his people. We can trust him to be true to his Word. Our friends sometimes change their minds and do not do as they have promised. Sometimes they disappoint us but never does Jesus Christ. He never changes his mind. When once he promises a thing he makes it good. He is the Rock which cannot be moved. A young man who, one time was a victim of a ship wreck narrowly escaped losing his life but through great effort he succeeded in saving himself. First he got hold of a plank that was floating near him. With this aid he succeeded in reaching a rock which lifted its head above the surging waters. He remained securely upon that rock until he was rescued by a life boat. In relating his experiences to a friend he was asked this question, "Did you shake, Jim, when you were on that rock?" "Yes," replied Jim, "But the rock didn't." Amid all the infidelity of men, amid our own faithlessness and doubting, amid the tempest that surges about us when it seems as though our faith is tested to the breaking point we can still recognize in Christ the Rock of Ages that is never shaken. Upon him our faith is built and man cannot destroy its foundations. They are as immutable as God. Are you safe upon the Rock today?

III. Then we come to the blessed truth that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and today and forever in his love. He loves the world, the saved and the unsaved.

"Every human tie may perish,
Friend to friend ungrateful prove,
Mothers cease their own to cherish,
Heaven and earth at last remove—
But no changes
Can attend the Savior's love."

"O, no! It is an ever fixed mark
That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
It is the star to every wandering bark."

Christ has loved us from all eternity and shall love us to all eternity. Away back yonder before the word was spoken that brought creation into existence Jesus Christ looked forward and loved the sons of men. Even then as he saw their fall through sin his heart was touched with love for them and he became "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." That infinite love was proved beyond doubt when he left his heavenly home and came to earth to lift us from the sinking sands of sin. It was proved when he became a friend to the outcast and the unlovely. It was proved upon the cross when he prayed for his murderers. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." It was proved that morning of his ascension when he stood on the Mount of Olives and blessed his disciples before he stole away to be with his heavenly Father. No one can doubt that his love has been proven. And in the presence of that love man stands on trial today. Will he appreciate it? Will he receive it into his heart? If he will he shall be possessed of a love that shall keep him throughout time and eternity, for it never changes. And with that love in the heart one can rise up and sing,

I've found a Friend, oh, such a Friend!
He loved me ere I knew him;
He drew me with the cords of love,
And thus he bound me to him.
And round my heart still closely twine
Those ties which naught can sever,
For I am his, and he is mine,
Forever and forever.

IV. As a concluding thought let me remind you that Jesus Christ is the same yesterday and today and forever in his willingness to save. He is not willing that any should perish. He stands today with arms outstretched, pleading with the wayward to come to the Father's house. He offers himself to all and that means abundant life and joy and peace. Can you not hear him as he says, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out," or as he earnestly gives the invitation "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." And as he sees some spurning such an invitation so tenderly given he says, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life."

Christ's love for the lost is ever the same and his willingness to save them, unchangeable. A man may repeatedly denounce the callings of the inner voice until finally the ear of the heart is deaf but Christ's yearning attitude for the unsaved is never altered. He, who offered salvation to the outcast woman of Samaria, he, who saved the thief on the cross, will save the "chief among sinners" today. He will give them something to live for, something to die for, something that will make them new creatures. He will place their feet upon the Rock and when the shifting scenes of life have shifted for the last time they will still be upon that Rock for Christ shall endure and he offers to let us be with him forever. THANKS BE UNTO GOD FOR HIM WHO NEVER CHANGES.

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE LONE REVELATION OF GOD—Matt. 11:25-30.

In Jesus Christ alone men are able to see the true character of the invisible and otherwise inconceivable God, and then only when their minds are child-like in receptiveness. And it is only that type, too, who are able to find in him their gracious burden-bearer.

TUESDAY

DISCIPLES ACCUSED OF SABBATH DESECRATION—Matt. 12:1-8.

Jewish life was swamped in a mass of petty, senseless prohibitions, especially regarding the Sabbath and the Pharisees were jealous for the enforcement of the last one of them, and in the pursuit of this purpose they had formed the habit of looking for faults in others and of putting the worst construction on what they might say or do.

WEDNESDAY

A WORK OF MERCY ON THE SABBATH—Matt. 12:9-21.

The scrupulous Jews would allow the unfortunates to suffer hunger, or even to perish on the Sabbath rather than break the law by ministering to them, but Jesus at the risk of his life turned it into a day of mercy and service.

THURSDAY

JESUS MALIGNED—Matt. 12:22-32.

Jesus, accused by the Pharisees of being in league with Satan in performing his mighty works, answers them most effectively, and then proceeds to warn them against persisting in their obstinate way until they have committed the fatal sin—the sin against the Holy Spirit.

FRIDAY

WORDS A TEST OF CHARACTER—Matt. 12:33-37.

Jesus, the supreme psychologist, knew how natural and inevitable it is for that which is harbored in the mind to find expression in words, and that whatever the lips give expression to, the heart has first conceived.

SATURDAY

SIGN SEEKERS WARNED—Matt. 12:38-42.

After all that Jesus had wrought and taught, these superficial and unbelieving Jews still treated Jesus as a mere wonder-worker and would be entertained with more signs. And what is more surprising, some professed Christians manifest the same attitude today—they are attracted by the striking, the strange, the sensational, but they have not learned to appreciate the spiritual presence of Christ, nor the practice of his teachings.

SUNDAY

THE INCOMPLETE TRANSACTION—Matt. 12:43-45.

The Jewish effort at righteousness by ceremonial cleansing and the banishing of evil was incomplete and inadequate. "We must empty by filling," said Ellie Hopkins. And said Dr. H. L. Wayland, "The Holy Spirit, by entering the soul, empties it of evil spirits; and, by dwelling in the soul filling it to the utmost, he maintains the exclusion of the bad."—G. S. B.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Christian's First Duty

By Dessie M. Hollinger

OUR SCRIPTURE

Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed rightly dividing the word of truth (2 Tim. 2:15). Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you (Matt. 6:33). Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my pathway (Ps. 119:105). All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect thoroughly furnished unto all good works (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). If any man will to do his will he shall know of the doctrine (John 7:17). Thy word have I hid in mine heart that I might not sin against thee (Ps. 119:11). And this is the victory that overcometh the world even our faith (1 John 5:4). But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ (2 Peter 3:18). He said unto them I have meat to eat ye know not of. My meat is to do the will of him that sent me (John 4:32, 34). If a man love he he will keep my words and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with him (John 14:23).

OUR MEDITATION

Man's first duty to his physical body is to feed and clothe and exercise it as to keep it in splendid health so that he is able to perform well the work which he has chosen in life. The Christian's first duty then is to maintain and develop that close relationship with God (vastly more important than the care of the physical body) which is absolutely essential to real Christian living. As well try to grow strong bodily without eating as to grow strong spiritually aside from the word of God. To this end, the Christian needs daily to feed on Christ who is the Word. When Jesus said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me," did he not teach us a valuable lesson? How shall we know his will for us except we search the scriptures with a sincere desire to know his plan for our lives? We have the promise that we shall know. Unless our lives are properly connected with God, the great spiritual power house, we are as powerless as the trolley car which is unable to move unless connection with the source of power is complete. If we would teach and preach the gospel of the kingdom we must first live it, for the life we live is the sermon we preach. Our highest aim should be, that one seeing us, sees not us but Christ in us. The only true happiness and satisfaction comes from knowing God. When we really know God our will is surrendered to him. There is a great difference between working for God and allowing God to work through you.

"Letting go is twice possessing,
Would you double every blessing, Pass it on."

The surest way then, of living close to God is by careful daily study of his Word—the Bible. Someone has said, "It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilot's compass, the soldier's sword and the Christian's charter. It should fill the memory, rule the heart and guide the feet. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor and will condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents." Another has said the Bible is a gold mine, the richest in the world.

We need to hide his word in our hearts that we might not sin against him, a precious thought. If we memorize portions of God's word we are armed with the sword of the Spirit with which to meet temptation. This was Jesus' method when sorely tempted in the wilderness. Another splendid lesson for us. But we must be alert for the tempter is quick and knows our weaknesses. Would that we might give ourselves more to the study of the Word and less to the sensational things of this life. Especially do we say this to our young people. There are different ways to study the Bible and if we as Christians desire "To grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord" we must study it daily, not merely read it but study it prayerfully and thoughtfully. Dr. R. A. Torrey said a man once asked him to tell him in one word how to study his Bible. He replied, "If I must tell you in one word how to study the Bible that word is thoughtfully." Think of what you read. Turn it over in your mind until you fully grasp its meaning.

In conjunction with Bible study, prayer is absolutely necessary, for prayer helps unlock the treasures of God. Prayer is the greatest spiritual instrument in the hands of man. The Bible contains numberless examples and exhortations to prayer. The greatest missionaries of centuries past and present are persons noted for their devotion to the Bible and prayer. Attendance at services of worship and association with strong Christian characters are very important aids in helping us to live close to him who came that we might have abundant life.

"All of us like to hear from the man who has 'been there.' Let any one in a group bring into the general conversation about a distant land the fact that he has been there, and instantly attention turns to him. For surely he knows. He has had a first-hand experience. So it is in our exploration of Bible truth. As Sir William Ramsey has said, 'The man who really knows is the man who has discovered truth for himself and not the man who has been taught results.' If we know what truth we know because we have gone to its source in the Word of God to find it, our message will come to our Sunday school class with the same ringing note of certitude that brings us to full attention when Paul declares, 'I know whom I have believed.' Is your knowledge gained at first hand? Do you really know what you know?"

If we live close to our Master, then are we kept from dangers seen and unseen and when grievous trials and temptations come, our feet are guided and our strength sustained, then do we know the greatest joy of living here and now and "the peace which passeth understanding." Then do our fellowmen find in us that sympathy and confidence and goodwill so noted all about us. This is a silent but powerful testimony to our Lord. And remember, Christ in the heart lived out every day in the home is the mightiest force for righteousness known in the world.

"We've traveled together, my Bible and I,
Through all kinds of weather, with smile or with sigh;
In sorrow or sunshine, in tempest or calm,
Thy friendship's unchanging, my lamp, my psalm."

OUR PRAYER

Oh, loving Savior, we bring to thee our worship of praise and adoration. We thank thee for thy patience with us and ask thy forgiveness for our failure to know thee better through thy Word. We beseech thee to teach us through thy Holy Spirit how to best study thy Word that we may know thee better, be of greater help in winning others to thee and in strengthening thy cause and kingdom for Christ's sake. Amen.

Jesus the Good Shepherd

Scripture Lesson—John 10:1-30.

Printed Text—John 10:1-5, 11-16.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 23.

Golden Text—I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep.—John 10:11.

LESSON LIGHTS

Shepherd Life in Palestine was most familiar to those to whom Jesus spoke. "The hills of Palestine were covered with flocks of sheep, and many families had some of their members as caretakers of the sheep. Then, too, their great king, David, had been a shepherd, and their greater lawgiver, Moses, had spent forty years of his life as shepherd near Mount Sinai, so what he said to them about shepherd and sheep had no strange sound. They all know the characteristics of the good shepherd, and the needs of the sheep."

The Shepherd and the Fold

The sheepfolds of the East, while there are sometimes within them low, flat buildings for shelter in severe weather, are "not covered buildings like our stables, but mere enclosures surrounded by a wall of loose stones with thorn bushes upon the top, or a palisade, but usually an effectual barrier against the wolves."—Van Lennep. "One such fold serves for a large district. To this the shepherds lead their flocks at night. When the flocks have been carefully counted, sheep by sheep, as they enter, the door of the fold is fastened, and the fold is guarded all night by the porter. There are prowling Bedouins, whose trade is sheep stealing, but the porter will not let them in. He will only let a shepherd in. In the morning each shepherd calls his own sheep forth. They recognize his voice, and follow him as he goes before them."—Condensed from Canon Tristram, Eastern Customs in Bible Lands.

The sheepfold is an emblem of liberty. Once belonging to the flock and to the fold, the disciple can go in and out under the care of the shepherd, and everywhere be safe, and have freedom of activity for all his powers. Exercise is as needful to the Christian as food. Wherever there is help, or blessing, or wider vision, through all the realms of knowledge, literature and science, through the most heavenly transfiguration experiences, through the trials that purify the battle that ennoble by victories, there the sheep may go under the care and protection of the good shepherd.

A Fold and a Door have their double value. They shut in what is good, and they shut out what is bad. This is true of the individual heart; it is true of the home; it is true of the church. The door is an emblem (1) of admitting the right persons; (2) of shutting out enemies and dangers; (3) of protection; (4) of hospitality.

A traveler in Palestine was talking with a shepherd about the fold. "But where is the door?" he asked. "Door?" said the shepherd; "I am the door! I lie across the entrance at night. No sheep can pass out, no wolf come in, except over my body."

The Good Shepherd

"1. The good shepherd loves his sheep. In the East there is a kind of personal friendship between shepherd and sheep. He is with them all day, and he learns their peculiarities. He even gives them names, and as he calls them by name they come to him. They are a part of his family and are near his heart. In this respect Jesus is like the shepherd, for he loves those whom he calls his sheep.

"2. The good shepherd will be ready, if need be, to die for his sheep. When David saw the lion and the bear coming down on his flock he gladly risked his life for them. In the East there are many dangers that assail the sheep, and the shepherd always stands ready to fight for his flock. In this respect, too, Jesus is like a good shepherd in that he came to this world to give his life a ransom for his own. He knew when he came that he would have to do this, but that did not make him shrink from his errand of mercy.

"3. The good shepherd seeks out his lost sheep and carries them safe back to the fold. It may be that he has to go far and search out the poor sheep on the cold mountains, but he goes all the same. Here, too, Jesus is like the good shepherd, for does he not seek out those who are lost?"

Callesh Them by Name

"I asked my man if it was usual in Greece to give names to the sheep. He informed me that it was, and that the sheep obeyed the shepherd when he called them by their names. Passing by a flock of sheep I asked the shepherd the same question which I had put to my servant, and he gave me the same answer. I then bade him call one of his sheep. He did so, and it instantly left its pasturage and its companions and ran up to the hand of the shepherd with signs of pleasure and a prompt obedience. It is also true of the sheep in this country, that a stranger they will not follow, but will flee from him, for they know not the voice of strangers. The shepherd told me that many of his sheep are still wild; for they had not yet learned their names, but that by teaching they would all learn them."

Christ loves us as individuals, not merely as a part of humanity. No one but a divine Savior, omniscient and omnipresent, could know all his disciples by name, and he present everywhere to hear their prayers and grant them aid.—From the Illustrated Quarterly.

Current Events in the Sunday Schools of Egypt

The American United Presbyterian Mission in Egypt organized a Summer Training School for Teachers at Assiut. The Sabbath School Committee of the Synod of the Nile requested that one day be devoted to a study of Sabbath school methods and ideals. Experienced leaders were invited to present the various subjects. The General S. S. Committee for Assiut district met at Assiut College and more than 1200 pupils attended a rally meeting which was arranged by the Committee. This series of meetings was addressed by Sheikh Metry S. Dewairy, Field Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association and Associate Editor of the two weekly papers published by the Mission.

The following account is given by Sidky Effendi Hanna, one of the Egyptian College teachers who was present: "On hearing of the coming of Sheikh Metry S. Dewairy for the annual conference, delegates from all districts flooded Assiut. Their purpose was to gain strength from the meetings, to enable them to engage in personal evangelism and change the sad conditions of child life in their villages and towns. On Saturday Rev. Tawfik Salih and Zaki Effendi Fam spoke, the former on the Sunday school movement in America and the latter on Street Sabbath schools in Assiut. These addresses were followed by question-time, when Sheikh Metry gave forceful and interesting replies to all the points raised.

"Later in the day Sheikh Metry delivered inspiring messages to the Students' Union in the Wissa High School, the Assiut College Preparatory and Secondary Schools and in the Y. M. C. A. If we do not hear another address to the end of the year we have sufficient food for thought and sufficient personal inspiration from this group of meetings."

Daily Vacation Bible Schools in Korea

Two hundred and forty-eight Daily Vacation Bible Schools were conducted in Korea last year. The attendance totaled 23,856. Of these 11,873 were boys and 11,983 were girls. In these schools 1,109 young men and 894 women taught throughout the course. Most of these instructors were young people and many were Christian students from the various schools. The course of study was predominantly the Bible and such schools were conducted in every province of Korea. Already well-laid plans are being matured to have more and even better Daily Vacation Bible Schools during the coming summer.

The schools are conducted under the direct leadership of the Korean Sunday School Association with the cooperation of the World's Sunday School Association and the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. Mr. Russell Colgate is the President of the latter organization and Mr. Thomas S. Evans, Superintendent. The International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools is now affiliated with the World's Sunday School Association in carrying on Bible Vacation schools in what is called the foreign mission field and Mr. Evans has become a member of the World's Association staff.

Why Brethren Young People Should Participate in the Essay Contest

By Elizabeth Haun, '28, Ashland College

(Note—Miss Haun is one of the prize winners of two years ago, which fact makes her appeal to Brethren young people all the more challenging.—J. A. Garber.)

The Essay Contest, as presented to many of the Brethren young people by students of Ashland College returning home for Christmas, is a contest for Juniors and Senior High School students on various subjects concerning education in a Christian college. Participation in this contest is a great opportunity for the young people of the church.

It is an opportunity for self development. Those who participate are not only presenting new thoughts to others but they are storing away much knowledge for themselves. Their ideas are given opportunity for expression. The manuscripts do not have to be in till the first of May, thus affording the contestants ample time to collect, discriminate, and weigh the subject matter. Then after all available information has been secured and digested, the participants must formulate their ideas expressing them to the best of their ability.

The best of these efforts are to be rewarded. This should have a great significance to all contestants. It should fill them with enthusiasm and should make them eager to do their best and to make their best the best. They should have a burning desire to win. The awards are not small but of great moment. The participant's whole outlook on life may be changed, broadened, and enlarged, for to some the winning may mean a year of college education which otherwise they could not have afforded. The value of a year of college education cannot be overestimated.

Do not forget about this contest. All those who are eligible should feel it their duty as well as their privilege to participate and make the winners real winners. Don't get discouraged and after expending much energy and time fail to enter your manuscript. Get into the spirit and do your best. Remember the importance of participating in this essay contest and make a hard race for the decision.

A CHANGE OF VIEW

"The sending of missionaries into our eastern possessions is the maddest, most expensive, most unwarranted project that was ever proposed by a lunatic enthusiast," was what the British East India Company said at the beginning of the nineteenth century.

"In my judgment Christian missionaries have done most lasting good to the people of India than all other agencies combined," was what the British Lieutenant Governor of Bengal said at the close of the nineteenth century.

The Things that Count

Not what we have, what we use;
Not what we see, but what we choose—
These are the things that mar or bless
The sum of human happiness.

The things near by, not things afar;
Not what we seem, but what we are—
These are the things that make or break,
That give the heart its joy or ache.

Not what seems fair, but what is true;
Not what we dream, but good we do—
These are the things that shine like gems,
Like stars, in Fortune's diadems.

Not as we take, but as we give;
Not as we pray, but as we live—
These are the things that make for peace, Both now and after time shall cease.

Joseph who Carried the Torch to Egypt. Genesis 45: 1-7

This week we have our second lesson about torch bearers. You remember the first lesson concerning torch bearers was a month ago and the man we studied about was Abraham. Do you remember that we thought about the qualities that lighted the torch so brightly when Abraham was carrying it? You know a torch is used to carry light and so we decided that the light of Abraham's torch was his faith and his obedience. This time we are going to think about the torch being carried by Joseph.

I wonder if you are well acquainted with Joseph. Do you know whether Joseph was the only child, or if he had some brothers? Well, he had eleven brothers and all but one of them was older than he was. You would think that he would have had a very happy time being entertained and looked after by that many brothers, wouldn't you? He did not, though, for he did not get along well with his brothers and they did not love him as brothers should. Did you ever see one little boy making fun of another little boy just because he had gotten a higher grade, in spelling? Or did you ever hear one little girl say to another, "The teacher likes me better than she does you, for she let me walk home with her"? We call people who talk like that boasters. Now, that is what Joseph did. He boasted to his brothers because he dreamed that he was going to be greater than they were. We are sorry Joseph acted like that, for he had important work to do when he grew up and we would rather that he had not been a boaster when he was a boy. I suppose you know the story of the way in which his brothers punished him for trying to act important. They took him one day, when he came to them quite a distance from home and sold him to some people who were passing by. Was not that an awful thing for brothers to do? When they went home, these boys pretended that some wild animal had eaten their little brother and that made their father very sad for he loved Joseph. So, this is the way that Joseph went to Egypt, for that is the place that the people were going, to whom Joseph was sold.

We started out to talk about the things that made Joseph's torch shine so brightly, but so far we have only talked about the things he did that were wrong. I guess you are wondering how anyone that did bad things could carry a torch that is to be lighted by good things. The reason is this, Joseph, just like we boys and girls, was made up of both good and bad qualities. We can be glad we have a Savior to help us overcome our bad points and that as we overcome our bad points we are strengthened in our good points.

In Egypt, Joseph became very important. The king trusted him and gave him important work to do. Joseph was a person who trusted in God and whom people could trust. So, you see trust was one of the qualities that lighted his torch. When he was far away from his family, in the land of strangers who did not believe in God, he still thought a lot about God and trusted in him. If we trust in God and try to do what we think will please him we will be boys and girls that people can trust like Joseph was.

The second quality that lighted Joseph's torch was forgiveness. One day after Joseph had been in Egypt for a long time and had become so important that he was helping the king to sell the food to the people, Joseph's brothers came down to Egypt to buy some food. Joseph recognized them but they did not recognize him. You see it had been a long time since the day that they had sold him. He was just a little boy when that happened, and now he was a man. No wonder that they did not recognize him. At first, he did not tell them who he was. However, after a certain length of time, he told them that he was their brother and then, do you suppose that he remained angry at them for the wicked way that they had treated him? That would have been an easy thing to do, but it is not what Joseph did. Instead, he forgave them and all his family moved down to Egypt and lived near him. Now, you see why I said that Joseph's torch was lighted both by Trust and by Forgiveness.

Shall we light our torches with these two qualities, Trust and Forgiveness? I think that would be a very nice thing for us to do. Let us try it.

The Office Secretary's Letter

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Calif.
 February 3, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

Your Office Secretary has just been reading a letter from Miss Elizabeth Tyson, one of those "called-out" ones from the Philadelphia church. Like all our missionaries to Africa, Miss Tyson is in love with her work, and praises the Lord for the privilege of being his "ambassador" over there. She said in one of her letters that she might some day come back to Philadelphia on a visit, but Africa was her chosen country and the place where she found untold and unbelievable joy and content. You know, there is a verse in our Book somewhere that says, "Strength and gladness are in his place", and that is the reason why one can be filled with "joy unspeakable and full of glory" even though thousands of miles away from home and friends! One is conscious, deep down in her heart of hearts that she is "in his place" for her.

But Miss Tyson says in this letter: "We were out in the brush for one week, and the Lord gave us a blessed time, telling those who had never heard before the wonders of his love. We had the opportunity of speaking to crowds, and many, many of them accepted the Lord Jesus Christ. But the sad part of the story is that perhaps they will not hear the Word again inside of another year. I think this is the hardest part of a missionary's life. One gets out and sees the great need, and then realizes that we are human, and can only do a little. But then, I want to be faithful in the little that I can do, for I know that the Lord alone can give the increase."

Are you, dear Member of the F. M. S. reading these words, burnt up with the desire "to be faithful in the little that I can do," knowing that the Lord alone can give the increase?

Here is a very practical way in which you can be "a home missionary", when the Lord has not called you to a foreign land. Select a missionary (you will find their names and addresses listed on the back of "The Brethren Missionary") and write to that one. Tell her (or him) that you want to be a fellow-helper by prayer. It will not only be an untold blessing to your missionary to receive your letter and be assured of your interest and support, but it will be "joy unspeakable" to you when you see your Father God answer your prayers "according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus"! Our Lord himself has said, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son." It is just like having a blank check signed by the only son of a fabulously wealthy father. We can, without doubt or hesitancy, draw on our Father God, in the Name of his Son, for the work of our missionaries and the salvation of the precious souls for whom Christ died, for we know that our missionaries are among "the called according to his purpose," and we know that "The Lord * * * is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance."

So do it now! This very day, start your letter on its way! Ask not to be told the pleasant and amusing things, but the "things hard to be understood," the things that bruise and cut to the very heart of your missionary—that you may be a real fellow-helper together by prayer!

Yours in the Master's Service,
THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

P. S.—Members of the Board are also requested to read and heed. Your missionaries know you each personally and a letter from a personal friend means so much when one is thousands of miles from home! (From one who knows.)

A Banker's Verdict on Christian Missions

F. W. Stevens is a prominent business man in the Orient whose headquarters were in Peking while he represented international banking interests negotiating for the Consortium loan authorized at the Paris Peace Conference. He had time to study China, with unique opportunities to see the inside, and to study conditions with the eyes and mind of a hard-headed American banker.

When Mr. Stevens addressed the faculty and students of the Peking Union Medical College and all Peking took notice and the "Peking Express" carried a report of it in full. Having evidently been stirred up by anti-religious agitation the speaker devoted his attention to religion as a factor in the development of China, and rendered a clear-cut tribute to the work of the Christian missions.

"I do not speak as a religious man, only as an American business man who has become deeply interested in China. My remarks will be the first I have ever made upon a religious subject," said Mr. Stevens.

After discussing the place of religion in the life of any nation, Mr. Stevens turned to Christian missions and said:

"Now and then I hear reputable foreigners in China—I am not now speaking of the excessively intellectual class—express the opinion that the Christian missions are not helping China. The Christian missionaries have long been about this, I am told, but have allowed the statements to go largely unnoticed. Perhaps it is time that something be said by laymen on the subject.

"These remarks are made by people not particularly interested in nor familiar with mission work. They have not investigated and they draw conclusions from misinformation. When I hear a man express such an opinion, I want to be a lawyer again and have the privilege of asking him questions. I want to ask him:

"What do you really know about the work of the Christian missions in China?"

"How many of their twenty-four Y. M. C. A. city centers or their twelve Y. W. C. A. centers and eighty student associations, how many of their many schools, academies, colleges and universities, workshop and hospitals, churches and Sunday schools and other places of activity have you investigated or even visited?"

"With how many Christian missionaries themselves have you talked seriously about their work? Or with how many Chinese who know about such activities?"

"Have you read any issue of the China Mission Year Book that tells about them?"

"Do you know what is being done in the cities of China through homes for boys and homes for girls, and otherwise, by the Salvation Army, a great and worthy Christian missionary organization?"

"Do you know of anything more repulsive than Chinese beggar women and do you know that it is educated, genteel Christian missionary women who are little by little getting them and their children off the streets, cleaning them and getting them into self-supporting condition?"

"Do you know that about 80 per cent of the Chinese people are farmers; with about 50,000,000 farm holding; that they are backward in methods; that their position in respect to adequate food supply and articles to be sold in foreign markets is threatened; that about 85 per cent of China's exports are products of the soil; and that Christian mission institutions are doing nearly all that is being at all for their economic as well as their spiritual and social welfare.

"Do you know a single thing about the importance of agriculture in the yearly program of the missionary organizations—about soil fertility, plant diseases, seed selection, animal husbandry, as they relate to Christian missionary efforts in China? Do you know of the missionary work in sanitation and health promotion, or in helping to rid China of the awful narcotic curse?"

"Do you know that there are about 236,000 Chinese children in missionary day schools, not counting the 190,000 in the Roman Catholic schools, and that most of them would have no schooling but for the missionary schools?"

"Do you know that the Chinese modern system of education in China began with the work of the Chinese mission teachers, and that modern medicine was mediated to China by the Christian medical missionaries?"

"Do you know that China was devoid of anything resembling modern hospitals and trained nurses until they resulted from missionary effort; and that now there are over 300 mission hospitals in China, nearly 100 of which are conducted on approximately modern standards with up-to-date equipment and nursing; and that there are few cities in China having even one such Chinese hospital which is of non-missionary origin?"

"Do you know that although leprosy has existed in China from time immemorial and there are now estimated to be 400,000 in China, the first leper hospital or asylum was established by a missionary society?"

"Do you know that there was never in China a hospital or asylum for the insane until one was provided by missionaries?"

"Do you know the missionary type? Do you know with what respect, and confidence the people within the range of the missions have come to regard the missionaries; and that they are advisers and friends to the whole community in all kinds of trouble?

"Have you some better way than the one followed by the Christian missionaries for implanting into the minds of the Chinese masses ideas of right living that will help uplift China?"

"Do you know of a single organized activity in China, on a scale of importance, that aims at moral improvement or that is calculated to bring it about, and that is not traceable in its origin to the Christian missions?"

"Careless talkers with little or no learning about Christian mission work in China, go home, and, wishing to seem wise on all things pertaining to China, express their opinions about the ineffectiveness of the Christian missions. It is a common mistake in foreign lands to regard all firmer residents of China as oracles upon all matters pertaining to China and the Chinese; while in fact there are hundreds of foreigners in China who are as ignorant of the real facts about Christian missions in China as if they had never come to China."—From the Christian Advocate.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FLORA, INDIANA

The Burnworths left us the middle of September for Ashland, Ohio. We sure missed all of them, also their talent and ability in leadership. However, after some time we were able to secure Rev. Frank G. Coleman, of Sunnyside, Washington, as our new pastor. He, with his family, moved here the first of November. It was at this time that he preached his initial sermon one evening. He then proceeded with his evangelistic campaign until December 6th, at which time he commenced his regular duties here. On the date mentioned above we held our Rally Day service. A fine program was rendered with a big basket dinner at the noon hour. It was a real get-acquainted meeting for our new pastor and his fine family. Our attendance wasn't as large as we anticipated (225) but considering the stormy day that we had the number that did venture out in spite of the weather, was very commendable.

The Sunday school is steadily gaining under the capable leadership of Lee Myer. We are hoping to soon have an average attendance of 200 and the realization of our hopes seems to be only a matter of time as we are coming very close to the mark.

The W. M. S. is still doing a great work, having this year made something like $2,446.92. Some may wonder how it was done. If you care to know the secret just write to Flora and we will be glad to inform you of the particulars.

The prayer meetings are increasing in attendance and enthusiasm with each meeting. As a matter of fact, if the increase continues, the class will have to convene in the main auditorium of the church. Any one who knows anything about Flora knows that is saying a great deal. At the present time plans are under way for a big revival beginning Sunday, January 10th. Mr. and Mrs. John Long of Inglewood, California, are to lead us in song. We hope to be able to send a glowing report of this campaign in the near future. Pray for us in the coming weeks that all may do a work in his sight to whom we will give all praise and honor.

CARRIE ZINN, Corresponding Secretary.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

"The Switzerland of America"

Our editor is giving us a splendid paper, but it looks as though we pastors will soon expect him to write the field notes. Personally I think that the part of the paper devoted to reports from the field ought to be a thermometer in a way to denote activity in the various congregations. About the only way to tell whether some congregations are among those still at work is to look in the Annual once a year. A pastor never gets too busy to report occasionally, and whether he really desires to do it or not he owes it to the rest of the brotherhood. Now do not blame the above on the editor, he did not suggest it to the writer.

We are still hammering away here in the mountains of the Southland and not without progress. Since the last report we appointed a program committee to prepare the programs for the prayer meeting. This is quite a help when they do not forget to function. Our prayer meeting is held each Thursday evening for one-half hour preceding our Bible study class. We are studying the Gospel of John with a splendid interest. We have also taken up the study at Salem with a good attendance. We have a total of about seventy-five or eighty present each week at both places for the study. I have been doing the teaching.

Two members have been received into the church since the last report. There are others awaiting baptism. At the Christmas season an offering was taken at Salem for the White gift. An offering was taken at Oak Hill, but instead of sending it to be used elsewhere we used it for needy among the people of Oak Hill.

The work of the Sunday school and church is moving along smoothly with a good interest and attendance. One thing that has bothered other churches in this community has not bothered us quite as much, and that is the Sunday school leaving almost in a body at the close of the session. While we work for the Sunday school, we have not put it ahead of the church. The attendance is increasing for the preaching services, and while the Brethren church has stood well here in the public eye, we are more firmly and substantially grounded than ever before. Expression is common among the outside people regarding the hearty cooperation and spirit of the Brethren of Oak Hill. Our people are already planning for the District conference at Roanoke this summer and the General Conference at Winona. Brother Jim Duncan is teaching singing at Salem and Brother Sam Duncan is teaching a class at Oak Hill. We are planning for the Duncan Brothers' Quartette to attend the Conference at Winona. We have missed one of our regular attendants this winter, our aged Brother A. B. Duncan. He is not able to leave the house and has not been able to be on the street since the meetings last fall. He is approaching his eighty-fourth milestone, but we are hopeful that when the spring time comes he will be spared to be with us again. While physically weak he is alert mentally and we discuss and plan the work of the church. We occasionally take our prayer meeting to him which he very much appreciates.

We are interested in the work of the brotherhood and are doing what we can to help in this needy field. The Oak Hill Brethren church is not sacrificing one principle of the Old Book, but stands firm for the Whole Gospel when there is a tendency to cut loose in the town.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

NORTH VANDERGRIFF, PENNSYLVANIA

At a recent business meeting of this congregation the writer was chosen correspondent for the Evangelist, so we must get busy.

We united with the local churches in the week of prayer with considerable pleasure and benefit to ourselves.

All the regular services show an increase in attendance and interest.

The Bible school is nearing the one hundred mark, now having three organized senior and adult classes, and what is more, shows real interest and advancement in the study of the Word.

This has increased our need for more room and has been met by a loyal effort on the part of all. One hundred dollars cash and considerable work on the part of our men and we now have room for two classes apart from the main school. This also gives us a room for our Juniors who, under the wise leadership of our good Sister Remple are learning much of God's Word and plan and have become a source of joy and inspiration to all.

Brother and Sister Remple have been with us now a year and have at considerable sacrifice on their part given themselves wholeheartedly to the work here, and now with some help from our District Mission Board are starting on their second year. At the regular morning service recently six persons souls came forward and publicly accepted Christ and another did the same after the Sunday evening service. Our special evangelistic services begin this week with Brother M. O. Witter of Kittanning as evangelist.

We ask the prayers of the Evangelist family that great benefit may result from this effort.

B. F. BUZARD, Correspondent.

REPORT FROM THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH FOR PUB-LICATION IN "THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST"

We are happy to once again have the privilege of having another news-letter go forward from the Pittsburgh church to the readers if the "Evangelist."

About two months ago we acquainted the readers of the "Evangelist" through these columns of the improvements in the Pittsburgh church which had been authorized by the membership and which were about to be started. It gives us great pleasure to say that these improvements have been completed and our newly improved church held a Re-dedication Service last Sunday, January 24th. Coincidentally with this occasion, January 23rd marked the 36th anniversary of the organization of our beloved church in Pittsburgh, and the officials of the church deemed it wise that a combination Re-dedication Service and 36th Anniversary of the Organization of the church should be observed.

The occasion last Sunday passed into history recorded as a great success. The excellent program which had been arranged was everything that could be hoped for in the way of impressiveness. I am sure the heart of every member beat a bit faster with the pride of being connected with the Pittsburgh Brethren church. The main auditorium of the church was filled, and every one present was instilled with the spirit of the occasion.

The new entrance is a much-needed improvement. The new lights marking the entrance conspicuously point the church out to the passers-by. The new lighting system in the main auditorium is excellent. The heating system is also much improved.

But, in order not to make this report unduly lengthy, we must pass on: The annual business meeting of the church was held on Wednesday evening, January 13th. Officers to serve our church for the ensuing year were elected. Our own beloved Rev. Lynn was re-called to serve us for another year. No wiser choice could have been made. We repeat here what we said in our last newsletter: No better pastor could have been found. The following excerpt from the minutes of the annual business meeting is eloquent substantiation of the esteem in which we hold Rev. Lynn:

"The calling of a pastor for the ensuing year was held. The judge of the election declared that he would not request Rev. Lynn to retire during the calling of a pastor, as is the usual custom. He further asked all members in favor of electing Rev. Lynn as pastor for the ensuing year to stand. The call was unanimous * * * Rev. Lynn at this point responded to the call of the church with a few well chosen remarks, bespeaking the continued cooperation of the membership, and pledging his best efforts throughout the coming year. Elder Gans with a few remarks stated that we should likewise pledge ourselves to the support of the church and the pastor, and requested every one to stand in a pledge of that character while he made a short prayer."

We also take the liberty of quoting certain remarks from the pastor's annual report which he made at the annual business meeting above referred to:

"A backward glance over the year shows much activity, earnest campaigning, arduous efforts, consequently some victories.

"The past year says that the church acquitted herself splendidly financially. Moreover, monies for current expenses, salaries and necessary repairs and improvements have been met promptly.

"If each one will do his bit,
The work will not come behind one whit;
But if one fails to do his part,
His neglect hurts the rest at heart."

"We had a net gain of 29 last year. Let me make haste to say when we take into consideration the non-Dunkard element in which we find ourselves, plus the strong Roman Catholic element, which is predominantly in the ascendancy in the Garfield section, a net gain of 29 is mighty good—very good.

"The Brethren church has an enviable position—the only church of its kind in the city—a whole Bible church. If our church has a peculiar distinction, it must be the Lordship of Christ.

"Morning attendance is good. Fondly do I hope, and fervently do I pray, that the year 1926 may record an increase in loyalty, attendance, devotion and growth in every department of the church and Sunday school.

"If the splendid material improvements which are nearing completion in our beloved church are not indicative of our desire to improve, beautify and make our church home more attractive, then I miss my guess.

"Now, Brethren, a similar spirit of interest and cooperation in the spiritual dynamic of our church will solidify our membership, unite and coordinate our departmental efforts, and enable us to do great exploits in the name of Jesus.

"We are able, we are willing,
Let us rise up and build.

"The congregation is certainly indebted to the Board of Trustees and the president of the church for their vision and tireless efforts to make the House of God more inviting; likewise, I am sure these Brethren appreciate the cooperation of the congregation in this worthy project. To the folks in the parsonage, the statement "Wash and be clean" has become delightful poetry since the modern-up-to-date laundry has been installed. Many thanks!"

We are hoping for big things in 1926. May our hopes come true.

G. M. GARLAND.

FLASHES FROM OHIO PASTORS' CON-VENTION

It was the privilege of the writer to sit with 700 pastors from the state of Ohio at Columbus during the week of January 19-21. There were two Brethren ministers there. Our Columbus pastor and the writer. Steps were taken at this convention to urge the churches to pay the expenses of the pastor to the next convention.

The one great impression I received from the convention as a whole was the clear presentation of the world need and ways to meet the need. We listened to such men as Dean Graham of Oberlin, Dr. William Hiram Foulkes of Cleveland, Bishop Warren Rogers of Cleveland, Sherwood Eddy, the world missionary, Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago. These men have recently traveled and are students of the world situation. They are soberly and thoughtfully facing the world task of the church with the one thought that Jesus Christ is the only help for the world need.

Using the story of the march to Canaan in Exodus 14, Dean Graham said, "I am suspicious of the attitude of those who desire to go back to the good old days. It is impossible to go back to things as they were. History justifies the urge of the few to go forward to the better land." One of Dr. Foulkes' great statements was, "In the spirit of Christ may be found the mind of Christ." "Evangelism is not oratorical but atmospherical." "It is not enough to secure the attention of people, we must secure their decision." Mr. R. A. Doan voiced the idea that "If the churches would definitely show that they were doing the will of Christ the gift of money would be forthcoming." He suggested that moneyed people were sometimes doubtful of the trend of the churches. "The church must cleanse herself of un-Christlike things." Bishop Rogers made this statement, "If we can keep the voice we are one, when we attempt to clothe it in form we differ." "Church unity, he said, will not be what I am or what you are." "The church must find herself and her great task."

Bishop A. R. Clippinger voiced the truth when he said, "Because a denomination is small is no reason why its work is not worth much." He voiced the truth that "We are too fragmentary." "There is danger," he said, "when the fragment regards itself as the whole." "We have no right to maintain a church for denominational purposes." Dr. Sherwood Eddy after reviewing the status of the countries of Europe and Asia made an eloquent plea for "men with a spiritual dynamic to preach a gospel for all men and all classes in the whole world." He further said, "We drink once of the fountain of living water and then continuously of the inner spring." Dr. Magill of Chicago, said, "We must have the plus in education, the knowledge of God and our responsibility for the spiritual condition of the world." "The child is not a mere creature of the state. Those who maintain and direct his destiny have a right to prepare him for other responsibilities." Dr. Stone reminded us that God had one view of the world in that he "so loved the world" and Jesus came to save 1600 million people." "Our polity, doctrine, must not take precedence over preaching the cross." "The world's problems will be solved by the cross. We are not responsible for the result but to the command. The command is, 'Go ye', the result is his." "The world wants to know what Christianity is, not our ideas of conditions and religions in the world." Dr. Stone's plea was for a careful presentation of Christ and the Cross in life and word.

The convention closed with a musical concert by the "incomparable" Dayton Westminster Choir under the direction of John Findley Williamson. Brethren pastors in Ohio cannot afford to miss these Pastor's Conventions. The Brethren churches must be taught that they get large dividends by sending their pastors to religious conventions. The pastors are very small when divided among the members of his church. The members can not go to conventions and institutes, so why not show a good spirit and send the pastor?

WASHINGTON C. H., OHIO

For the first time in our life we are a resident of a rural district, surrounded by large farms of up to 900 acres. The change at first made us seem somewhat secluded, but we are enjoying it much at this time. The people here are fine, loyal to the teachings of the Word, and are stayers-by of each of the pastors who preceded us. This is a rare thing, for most every place there are some people who show the pastor their heels, but here they speak well of each man and the work he tried to do.

The Woman's Missionary Society here is active, willing to sacrifice for the church and community. In fact, they have done far above our expectations. They made an increase in pastor's salary of twenty-five percent. They gave $50.00 for new batteries for our light plant, and have aided in various other ways. These good women are standing by the church in the good old-fashioned way. May our dear Lord bless them for still greater activities.

Our Sunday school under the leadership of Sister J. Finn is going on to what has been the average attendance. Although the highest attendance since we are here is 49, a small number to us, yet the people here think it good. Our morning service reached 54 and our evening service reached 70 in attendance, and these were at regular services. During a special, that is, an attempt to hold a revival meeting during the month of December, one Sunday night we passed the 200 mark. The people that night said, "This looks like old fashioned Fairview." If the pastor had known some of the customs of this section we would not have started a revival at this time of year, as this is the season when the centralized schools, both high schools and grammar grades have their contests and suppers. And as in most places, where there is anything to eat and drink there the crowds gather. Due to the changing of our audience, we thought best to postpone our meeting to a later date. We had two confessions.

We have a young people's service on Sunday evening, at which time we frequently have over 30 in attendance, and 20 of these participating in the service. This young people's service was proposed and started by Sister Christiansen, and the Sisters Junk are heartily cooperating in it as in every other department.

The membership here is small, about forty, a number of which are members of the Home Guard. There are some who cannot get out, but we bring the church to them in the form of prayer meetings.

The undersigned is here serving the church ten months of the year. This leaves two months of evangelistic work. An interest is asked in your prayers for the advancement of the Fairview Brethren church.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

The work of the Louisville church is progressing nicely under the leadership of R. F. Porte, our pastor since June 1st. After arriving on the field he at once acquainted himself with the members living within automobile distance. Rev. Porte, besides being a good "mixer", is a splendid pulpit man, and always has his sermons well prepared. At the present time he is bringing us a series of messages on "Stewardship."

In October the pastor planned a Men's and Boys' Banquet. The attendance at this affair was good and the menu was served by the W. M. S., four of the S. M. M. girls acting in the capacity of waitresses. The Sunday school orchestra played several selections. Rev. F. C. Vanator, pastor of the Canton church, was the speaker of the evening.

During the month of November Rev. Porte conducted a two weeks' meeting, basing his themes on the Book of Revelation. This series was well attended and very good interest manifested. One young man accepted Christ and was received into the church by baptism at the close of the meetings.

Immediately following the series, the pastor got busy on plans for a Christmas pageant, and under his direction the members of the Sunday school presented a White Gift Adoration pageant. The offering at this service was over $100.00.

The church cooperated with the other churches of Louisville during the special "Week of Prayer" services, held the first week in January.

The Sunday school is doing a good piece of work in presenting the Bible to its scholars through thirteen classes—five in the elementary department, under the leadership of Mrs. Floyd Miller, and eight in the adult department under the leadership of S. F. Essig. Our biggest handicap now is a lack of class rooms and modern equipment to care for the elementary division. The church is awakening to this fact and at a recent meeting appointed a committee to get in touch with a contractor to ascertain the approximate cost to make the needed improvements. A fund for this purpose has already been started and we are all anxiously looking forward to the time—we hope not far in the distance—when our dream will be realized. The members of the Sunday school will render the cantata, "The King Eternal" by Ira B. Wilson, on Easter Sunday night. There will be about thirty-five in the chorus, under the direction of F. E. Clapper.

The W. M. S. is very much alive and are having very interesting meetings. They have pledged $1,000.00 toward the church remodeling fund and expect to raise said amount before the close of the present year. Mrs. Henry Eshelman is president of the society.

The Sisterhood Girls, under the direction of Mrs. Joseph Wertenberger, patroness, deserve much credit for the splendid work done by that organization. They recently sent a barrel of clothing to the mission at Kentucky and bandages to the African mission field. Their monthly meetings are well attended and are not merely a social gathering, but are real spiritual feasts—stressing the prayer life of the members. Their annual banquet was held in November at the home of Mrs. Wertenberger and was a grand success.

The Christian Endeavor society is an active organization, and has always been the main training school for future church workers. All of the present titheers in the church received their training while members of the C. E. society. We are observing Christian Endeavor Week this year with special programs outlined by the United Society. We had planned to have the Misses Eleanor and Grace Yoder, of Ashland, with us on the opening night of C. E. Week, but on account of sickness they were not able to be here. We hope to have them at a later date. Glenwood Oyster is president of the society.

A SONG OF FAITH

By Josiah Gilbert Holland

Day will return with a fresher boon;
God will remember the world!
Night will come with a newer moon;
God will remember the world!

Evil is only the slave of Good;
Sorrow the servant of Joy;
And the soul is mad that refuses food
Of the meanest in God's employ.

The fountain of joy is fed by tears,
And love is lit by the breath of sighs;
The deepest griefs and the wildest fears
Have holiest ministries.

Strong grows the oak in the sweeping storm;
Safely the flower sleeps under the snow;
And the farmer's hearth is never warm
Till the cold wind starts to blow.

Day will return with a fresher boon;
God will remember the world!
Night will come with a newer moon;
God will remember the world!

FROM KANSAS TO PENNSYLVANIA

This report may seem proof of a resurrection, but we have not been dead by any means. It has been said it is better to be seen than heard, and we do not want to be too much heard so as to be an annoyance to the readers of a good paper, or a worry to a busy editor. Yet we know the field news are the first to be read by most people when the Evangelist arrives. So we will do our best and leave the results with God.

About May the first we found ourselves preparing to say good-bye to a goodly number of Brethren and friends with whom we had labored for three years. The experiences of both pastor and people at such times are too strong to be soon erased from memory, and the ties of love and friendship formed by the spirit of the Almighty can never be broken. With the Apostle Paul we can claim many as our own in the Gospel, as we clasped their hands and heard them make confession of their faith in the Lord and Savior, and baptized half a hundred, laying hands on them and pronouncing the blessing of God upon them. For this work we give God all glory and praise.

I am sure that a lasting good was accomplished at Mulvane, especially with those big-hearted young people. We pray that this work may go forward and that their influence may reach unto the ends of the earth, to the bringing of many souls to the Christ who died to save.

Early in the spring we were called on a trip across the Alleghenies, and on the way we run into some of the results of the little "Wels's Evangelist." The Listic church and community certainly had been stormed and the devil routed. The church is certainly alive. The most remarkable thing was that there were about 76 attended the mid-week prayer meeting, and every one took an active part, from the oldest to the youngest, and some who were deprived of the service sent a report of their absence and their desires for the work. This turned our minds back a decade when the people had the old time religion and love for the Kingdom of God. If Thomas can turn a community upside down with the Gospel, why should we not all put our faith squarely in the Gospel and use it to the accomplishment of great good for Christ? On this trip the Highland church invited us to stop off for a few days, and the results are that we are back with the good people whom we so hurriedly left to go west.

Leaving Mulvane May the 14th, we stopped in Michigan and in Indiana, with our daughter and friends, and arrived at Highland June the 1st, the trip costing us $40.00. We do not regret the five years we spent in the Sunflower state, but we were sorry to find the Highland church in backward state. We are glad to say however that we find some here who are willing to lay their all on the altar for God. These people received us as the father received the prodigal son. They gave us the best room, prepared the best meal and welcomed us home with joy. Many changes have taken place in five years. Brethren O. P. Burson and Daniel Smith, both old men and mainstays in the church when we left, have gone to their reward. We miss them, as well as others.

They had been without a pastor for some time, and things had happened which caused discouragement. But when we brought the old Gospel, even as when the old prophet cried, what seemed a valley of dry bones, began to move and when spring comes and the new concrete roads, which are now under construction, are finished, we think the sinew and flesh will prove real life.

In November we opened fire on the devil with Rev. A. L. Lynn in the lead as evangelist. He is a real Bible preacher, a man filled with the Holy Ghost and a power in God's hands. His message appeals to the people and draws them out. At the end of one week we were compelled to close because of rain and mud, but the sermons delivered and the calls made had a telling effect. We are planning to make an effort this coming summer by securing a tent and inviting the entire community, churches and all, to take part in an evangelistic campaign. We are going to give Brother Lynn an opportunity to lead us. Also as we are only eight miles from Washington, Pennsylvania, a city of 25,000 population, and that without a Brethren church, we are contemplating a campaign there, as we feel here is a mission field right at home, and this is a good place to spend our mission money.

A move is on foot at present to do some improving on the church building, either by a balcony, or a basement and redecoration. This is necessary for room, as well as for the repair of the building and the encouragement of the community. At present we have the children of several Catholic families attending our Sunday school. We don't have to go to South America to do mission work among the Catholics, we have them right at our door, and by your prayers and God's help we believe God can and will save.

On his return from Europe Brother Benjamin F. Owen and wife stopped off with us for two days, he giving us one of his real messages which did us all good, and she giving us a well prepared program which was enjoyed by all. We were sorry to have them leave us so soon, but with a promise to return again, we said good-bye.

On a Saturday evening during the month of November we enjoyed a visit from Harry Berkshire and family from Masontown. With Mrs. Berkshire at the piano and Edgar and Clayton, the two boys doing the singing, we had some real talent as the leading part of our musical program. On Sunday Mrs. Berkshire brought us an impressive message well suited to the occasion. We must say this noble family is worth all the space it occupies in a community or church. We would like to have them in our midst. We appreciated their service and welcome them with us again.

We introduced our Thanksgiving service by sending out a letter to each home connected with the church, and the offering was the best ever.

It was the writer's pleasure to visit Terra Alta, West Virginia, recently and conduct services there for the Brethren Sunday morning and evening. This people received us royally and we enjoyed our stay. But it is dead sure this part of the Lord's vineyard needs workmen, and there is another certainty that unless some of our people loosen up and broaden out in their religious activities and give out, there will be a great loss. We should remember the message of John on Patmos—"Hold that which thou hast."

Christmas brought us cheer and gladness, as we had a very good program. The spirit that prevailed was fine. The White Gift offering was very good considering the attendance. The pastor was not forgotten, by any means. A pocketbook well filled with valuable green paper was present at the close of the program. Besides many other useful gifts were presented to us during the holidays—house slippers, socks, handkerchiefs, shirts, bags of potatoes, pork, lard, beef, chickens, sugar, flour, fruit, canned goods, etc. These commodities have been coming to our hands since our arrival. We can never do enough to prove the gratitude of our hearts for these loving acts. We have a comfortable home with modern conveniences in a village called Long Pine, on a hard surfaced road, eight miles from Washington, Pennsylvania. We shall be glad to have any of the Brethren stop with us as they pass through.

We have been called upon to assist in more funerals in the past seven months than in seven years previous. There is still some sickness among our people and we ask the brotherhood to remember them in prayer. We covet your prayers for our work.

THOMAS F. HOWELL.

An Alligator or a Messenger

Two young girls were looking over the stock of an alligator farm where they were raising the ugly, snappy things for sale. At last one girl said: "Did you ever see anything that seemed so absolutely lifeless? They are the most inanimate creatures that I have ever seen. Think of living for eighteen hundred years, and during all that time accomplishing absolutely nothing! They eat and sleep, sleep and eat again. I certainly should not want to be an alligator!"

You doubtless know many churches and Christians who are earnest messengers for God, but sad it is when churches and professed disciples of Christ are like alligators, sleeping and eating and then looking for more to eat and more sleep with little or no thought of their duty to God. Get busy folks with some good tracts if you are afraid to talk to your unsaved friends.

Facing the Growing Movie Peril

Perhaps some do not realize we have a movie peril. Practically everybody knows that we have some sort of a peril, that something is radically wrong with the moral life of our day, that its tone and temper are at a decidedly low ebb. But many do not seem to have related this condition with the movie in any very definite way.

Of course, we all know something is wrong, very much wrong. We are hearing that on every hand, and from leaders in every sphere of activity. Judges, law enforcement officers, reform associations and newspaper writers are pointing out that youth is on a rampage and crime on the increase. They tell us that parents have lost control of their children; that youth in revolting against parental rule, has set itself against all law; that crime is growing at an astonishing rate, especially among the young, not only in America but throughout the world; that 80 per cent of all murders and burglaries of the last quarter of a century have been committed by boys and girls under 25 years of age; that 75 per cent of persons now in jail are under 25. The Cleveland Association for Criminal Justice in its semi-annual report ending June 30, 1925, opened its report as follows:

"Crime continues to increase in Cleveland at an alarming rate. For the semi-annual period ending June 30, 1925, major crime has increased over the corresponding period of the year 1924. Robbery, 15 per cent; house-breaking and larceny 59 per cent; automobile stealing 61 per cent; burglary and larceny 75 per cent; murder 95 per cent; assault to kill 100 per cent; manslaughter 139 per cent."

This is a fair sample of the statements being made throughout the country by those who are being brought in touch with the ragged edges of humanity. But few, however, have had the vision or the courage to point out the large and definite way in which the movie is responsible for this lamentable condition, and so very little effective public sentiment has been focused against it. This has been due largely to two facts: first, that too many people have become enamored with the motion picture, and second, that many have been deceived by maneuvering of the Movie Trust to give the people the impression of its high purpose and respectability. Will H. Hays with all his talk about cleaning up the movie is but a smoke screen behind which this powerful law-breaking corporation has gone on making merchandise of the baser passions of men, at the same time "throttling good pictures, terrorizing the better elements of the industry and corrupting politics," as is affirmed by Dr. Wm. Sheafe Chase, general secretary of the Federal Motion Picture Council, which is now in conference in Chicago. Those who expected Mr. Hays to be clothed with power that would enable him to improve the character of the movie against the will of the more powerful movie magnates, who pay him his princely salary, have been disillusioned by the fact that crime inciting pictures are on the increase.

The Film Daily for October 9, 1925, says,

"The British rulings make their censorship more severe because of increase in crime films."

Again on October 22 it reported: "The Australian commonwealth has imposed a number of more severe censorship restrictions against American and other imported pictures. 'Production', the theme of which deals with the adventure of female crooks, will not be permitted to enter the country under any circumstances."

The Film Daily for November 1, 1925, gave the following forecast for movie productions in the United States:

"Crook pictures seem to be in demand, or at least coast producers are thinking that way and looking for such material. So if you have one up your sleeve, dig it out. Female crook stories also wanted."

Says Dr. Chase: "Judges all over the land are declaring in language no intelligent person can fail to understand, or afford to ignore, that motion pictures are responsible for the alarming increase of juvenile crime . . . The records of the Chicago Board of Censorship and of the New York State Movie Commission shows that the moral character of the motion picture has been steadily growing worse in the last three years."

What shall we do about it? We should like to see, if we consulted merely our feelings, the Christian take a stand of aloofness, leave the movie entirely alone, and so keep himself pure from its contaminating influence. And we cannot escape the conviction that such an attitude toward the movie shows, so far as the individual Christian is concerned, is about the only consistently Christian way of dealing with them. If the church membership would rise to that position, it would doubtless be greatly increased in power in every way, and the movie business would not be nearly so profitable as it is. But we are well aware of the fact that the rank and file of the church membership does not take that attitude either in spirit or practice, but that great hosts of them are movie attendants. Nor could the Christian discharge the whole of his duty in relation to the peril by merely adopting that attitude. He would save himself from contamination, but he would not help to solve the problem, and thus save others.

The fact is that the movie must be cleaned up, if the peril is to be warded off. It is very probable that the large majority of movie goers are not church members and could not be appealed to from a Christian motive. And a still larger per cent are children and could not possibly be kept away from movie entertainments in any large numbers under the present condition of parental indulgence and lack of control. The Federal Trade Commission which has been investigating the movie since 1921 says in its brief against the Trust issued in October, 1925:

"Of the 20,000,000 daily movie goers, 75 per cent are under 24 years of age. The actual daily attendance in schools is 10,000,000; a greater potential power to influence the character, habits, dress, morals and general conduct of our youth than our public school system."

It is on our children that the movie is getting in its worst influence. It is the teen aged folks who are being transformed into criminals, or if not so bad, into frivolous, insincere, irreverent, Godless throngs, who avoid the church, and find no enjoyment in the higher and finer things of life. In view of this fact it is evident that the situation cannot be ignored. If we care for our children, if we care for our national welfare, if we care for the church and for our duty, we must do something to stop this steady stream of corrupting influence.

With so difficult a task facing us squarely it is encouraging to note that there is arising a leadership that is not only fully convinced of the demoralizing influence of the movie, but at the same time promises to be able to mobilize and direct public sentiment in a way that will make possible that moral protection that is so much needed. This leadership is heading up in the Federal Motion Picture Council, which was organized as a result of four National Motion Picture Councils held in Washington, D. C., in 1923, 1924, and 1925, and purposes to be the organized agent and servant of the churches in bringing about a national crusade for clean movies.

When Writing for Publication

Follow any new-fangled ideas you wish in writing your personal letters, but please observe the long-established rules for preparing proper manuscripts for the printer. Fads do not make for efficiency anywhere, least of all in a printing office where speed and accuracy are secured by learning the proper way of doing things and then doing them by habit. For example, when beginning a paragraph it is still proper to indicate it by indentation; there are difficulties with the fad which some follow of making the first line flush. We are not particularly anxious to see your fancy box-stationery, and less so to have you write on all four sides of such fancy folders; use just plain paper, and write on one side of the sheet only. When you have written what you thought was your last page and you have a line or two to write yet, do not turn the sheet over and write on the other side; get a new one. Do not write single spaced when using a typewriter, as it is hard for the operator to follow the lines and allows no space for the editor to make any needed corrections. When writing with a pen, do not crowd your lines, and when you have finished your manuscript, read it over and insert any possible omissions and determine whether your copy is likely to be readable after it has gotten cold. That is all for this time, thank you, and we hope you are still smiling.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Read the "Tract Corner", and buy and use tracts, especially those setting forth the teachings and advantages of the Brethren church.

This week we feature the Brethren Home on page one; next week it will be the Superannuated and pioneer ministers.

Our friend, Brother M. E. Horner, who was some years ago our correspondent for the Goshen church, writes an interesting record of his trip to southern Texas.

From the communications of the "Office Secretary of the Foreign Board, it has been evident that she is well fitted for her place, and from her letter this week it is to be seen that she is happy in it.

The railroads are offering fare and one-half rates to registered delegates to the convention of the International Council of Religious Education to be held at Birmingham, Alabama, April 12 to 19, 1926.

The Religious Education Association has announced its twenty-third annual convention to be held at Toronto, Canada, March 9 to 12, 1926. The theme of the convention is to be "Religious Education for Participation in World Affairs."

The Christian Endeavorers will find an interesting letter in this issue from Brother Charles W. Mayes, Citizenship Superintendent. See the Christian Endeavor page, you will want to read it. We shall be glad to hear from other department superintendents. Use your page, Endeavorers. Keep it alive with news and helpful suggestions.

The church at Flora, Indiana, is rejoicing in a splendid revival conducted by their pastor, Brother Frank G. Coleman, assisted by a Mr. and Mrs. Long, evangelist singers. Fifty confessions were received and with the number who are coming by relation the church will be re-enforced by about sixty. With this added strength and enthusiasm the Flora church will doubtless press on to greater things.

President E. E. Jacobs supplies us with another installment of "College News" and among other items of interest is the one concerning the recent generous gifts of Mr. John C. Myers in the form of a radio set and a hundred dollars to buy platinum for the chemistry department. Mr. Myers is the son of the late F. E. Myers, who with his brother, P. A. Myers, a College trustee, built up the widely known F. E. Myers & Brother Company, makers of pumps and hay tools.

Dr. W. S. Bell, pastor of the Dayton church was in Ashland this week laying plans for the beginning of his work as director of the College Endowment campaign among the churches. He also called upon the force at the Publishing House, in which he has a vital interest, being president of the Publishing House Board of Trustees.

He recently closed an evangelistic campaign in his church at Dayton with Brother C. H. Ashman as evangelist, resulting in about ninety confessions, sixty-six of which will unite with the Brethren church.

Our correspondent from Sunnyside, Washington, reports three additions to the church, and the Sunday school doing excellent work. Dr. J. C. Beal is the able pastor of this church, having recently entered upon his second pastorate at this place. It is hoped that his health, which he told us recently had been quite indifferent, will soon be much improved. It is evident that the young people of this congregation are being well cared for by organizations adapted to proper ages, and no doubt the church will in the days to come find itself abundantly repaid for this wise course.

Brother Lester V. King writes "From St. James, Maryland, to New Lebanon, Ohio," and naturally such a record contains many things of interest. The church he recently left was his first pastorate, and though he puts his accomplishments very modestly, we think he did a splendid work there. The parish is widely scattered, and Brother Thoburn C. Lyon, the new pastor, will have plenty of work to do, but we understand that Brother King realized a commendable improvement during his stay there. He has been well received in his new pastorate and the outlook is bright for an encouraging growth under his leadership.

Dr. Martin Shively, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, makes his second report of the White Gift offering, and an encouraging report it is. Much interest has been shown in the work that the Association is doing in Kentucky missions, College support and the promotion of Sunday school work through its field secretary, Brother M. A. Stuckey. It is evident, however, that there are many schools who have not yet reported, and it must be remembered that the budget is only about two-thirds covered. Let others "do their bit."

FEBRUARY 28 IS BENEVOLENCE DAY WHEN EVERY CHURCH is requested to lift an offering for the Superannuated Minister's Fund, which is to be sent to the new secretary, J. J. Wolf, of North Manchester, Indiana, and also an offering for the Brethren Home to be sent to Henry Rinehart, treasurer, Flora, Indiana. No church has a right, neither can it afford to neglect this worthy cause. The Superannuated Minister's Fund officers say they must have $4,000, this year to meet the Board's obligations to all those to whom the General Conference voted to give aid. The Brethren Home officers have not yet named their goal, but we suppose it is the usual 40 cents per member.

Dr. Charles A. Bame reports a very successful evangelistic campaign closed at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in which our Third church (in Morrellville) and the Church of the Brethren in the same locality, cooperated. The revival spirit ran high and almost eighty confessions were received. This rejoices the heart, but there is a sorry side to the situation in view of the fact that two Dunker churches within a stone's throw of each other are trying to occupy the same field. The revival was a fine example of cooperation, but unless it is carried farther and they work out some way of cooperating permanently, they will eventually become competitors, which is a situation neither denomination can justify anywhere.

English newspapers are launching an attack on psychoanalysts following the suicide of a young barrister as a result of being psychoanalyzed. No one can safely be dogmatic as to what may or may not be discovered about the operation of the human mind, but of this we may be sure, that no good will come that can in any measure atone for the evil resulting from a preposterous theory that arrogantly denies "the claims of morality as being irrelevant to scientific research," as does the Freudian school, according to the London Post. The minds of boys and girls are debased by ruthless exposures, and men and women are oppressed and made despondent by having their minds exploited by so-called psychological examinations and treatment. After all, the best place to go for an examination of the bent of one's inner life and a treatment of the mind and heart is to the Gospel of Christ. There is pointed out the cure and the examination is safe and free. The Holy Spirit will convict every one who will submit to the penetrating light of divine truth,—he will convict of sin, of righteousness and judgment, but he will not leave the mind distracted and despondent. Instead he brings strength and victory through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Jesus and the Throne of David

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

King, Throne, Scepter, Reign—these words may seem strange to the careless student of the Word of God in relation to Jesus. But they have all been made about him and of him. In this paper, I wish to call attention to a single line of prophecies concerning him that, until this present moment, must mean just nothing; and unless there is a fulfillment of them later, they must nullify faith in both the Old and New Testament Scriptures. All through the Old Testament there are prophecies which I believe may be headed up in Isaiah 9:6, 7. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace. Of the increase of his GOVERNMENT and peace, there shall be no end ON THE THRONE OF DAVID to order it and to establish it, with JUSTICE and JUDGMENT from henceforth, EVEN FOREVER. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Note the words "government" and "power" in caps. The New Testament, beginning with Matthew 1:1, starts with "The book of the generation of Jesus Christ, the SON OF DAVID", and continues with the proclamation of the kingdom of heaven by John, Matt. 3:2, and by Jesus, Matt. 4:17, 23; giving the principles of that Kingdom in the sermon on the mount, Matt. 5-7, his rejection at Nazareth, his unbidding of the cities of Capernaum, Chorazin and Bethsaida, because they repented not. Then, the explanation of the Kingdom in the mystery form of parables so that his disciples might understand and others might not, and much more on this "gospel of the kingdom." Turning to Luke, again the kingly character of the Man of Galilee, is faithfully set forth. How royal is the annunciation to Mary! Luke 1:30, 33. And the angel said unto Mary, "Fear not, Mary; for thou hast found favor with God. And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus. HE SHALL BE GREAT, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall GIVE UNTO HIM THE THRONE OF HIS FATHER DAVID; and HE SHALL REIGN OVER THE HOUSE OF JACOB FOREVER; and of HIS KINGDOM THERE SHALL BE NO END." Note that very much of this annunciation to the virgin applies to the KINGDOM side of his life. Both of these prophecies—the one from Isaiah and from Luke are very often partly quoted but alas! too often only PARTLY.

How strangely silent are many preachers about the very prominent part of both these texts concerning the kingship of Jesus on the THRONE OF DAVID. But how can the Bible be the Word of God concerning the Saviorhood of Jesus and that concerning his Kingship be untrue? If one is to be believed and stressed, why not both? If both lines are true, then something is yet to happen in the earth, and that something concerns Jesus' Kingship ON THE THRONE OF DAVID. The prophecies concerning the suffering Messiah have been fulfilled but those concerning the Reigning King have not; they must yet be fulfilled; so may it be. To this bear all the prophets witness. The Jews did not recognize the suffering Messiah when he came, and only this week, Rabbi Wise in New York, said that he has not yet come. Now the danger is that the careless, negligent church of today will not be ready for the kingly Christ when he comes again TO SIT ON THE THRONE OF HIS FATHER DAVID. That this is the design of the Great Jehovah, seems clear from the study of the Scriptures, if we allow them to say what they say. It is most assuredly set forth in the Word, that God has been attempting to set up a kingdom on the earth from the first: "Have dominion," said he to Adam, "over every living thing." But like a drunken lion-tamer loses his power over the ferocious beast, so Adam through sin lost his dominion and man has not yet recovered it; nor will he until the sin has been eradicated from the hearts of men, and lost power restored. Again, in the call of Abraham, in the republic under Moses, under the rule of the Judges, and then, through the rule of his people by a king, under David and Solomon, and their successor, who followed after idolatry and brought on the Dispersion and the Babylonish captivity, God was trying to make ready a people for his kingdom on the earth where his will might be done and righteousness might come.

Just as clear, it can be seen through all these dealings with a rebellious people, he was telling of the man of our text under whom his will would finally be done; who, when he came, said, "It is written in the volume of the Book, I came to do thy will, O God." But they killed him whom they should have crowned and still his will on earth was delayed. The first of these indications is in Genesis 3:15, in the promise, "The seed of Woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Note, too that this is the only reference to the "seed" as belonging to the woman, a possible and probable forecast of the Virgin birth of the Lord. The next reference is that the promise of restitution is to come through the line of

Charles A. Bame

Seth, Genesis 9:26, 27. Then, "My Covenant will I establish with Isaac" (Not Ishmael) is the next word, Genesis 17:18-21. Here again the line is limited—no Ishmaelite will occupy David's throne. Next, of the sons of Jacob, not Reuben the oldest, nor Joseph the favorite, but "Judah, thou art he whom thy brethren shall praise: thine hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies; thy father's children shall bow down before thee * * * the SCEPTER shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet till SHILOH COME; and to him shall the gathering of the people be. Note here the word SCEPTER denoting power and SHILOH referring to the Messiah; Savior and King, to come out of Judah. Next comes the assurance that was afterward to be sworn to by the oath of Jehovah, that David's throne was to be FOREVER. Through Nathan as God's spokesman, David was told with the warning, 2 Samuel 7:16, that "if he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men," v. 14, but with unrestricted and unlimited promises that his throne should never cease. "Thine house and thine kingdom shall be established FOREVER before thee and thy throne shall be established FOREVER." Again, in the 89th Psalm, 35-37, God says, "Once have I sworn in my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His SEED shall ENDURE FOREVER and his THRONE as the sun before me."

But God did not forget and in Jeremiah 33:20, 21, long after David was dead, we read, "Thus saith the Lord, if ye can break the covenant of the day and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their seasons, then, may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to REIGN UPON HIS THRONE. "Here God makes the succession as sure as that of day and night. But it will be replied that the line has been broken. But be careful lest we mistake. Matthew and Luke both trace the genealogy of Jesus to David. He was of the royal line and had a right to David's throne, had the King not been crucified. That the line was not to be a succession, is also clear from the prophecies concerning the Branch. Says Jeremiah 23:5, 6, "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will RAISE UP UNTO DAVID A RIGHTEOUS BRANCH and a KING SHALL REIGN AND PROSPER and shall execute justice and judgment IN THE EARTH. IN HIS DAYS JUDAH SHALL BE SAVED AND ISRAEL SHALL DWELL SAFELY and this is the name whereby he shall be called, "THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS." See also, Isaiah 11:1, 2 "And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of knowledge and the fear of the Lord." Now, it would seem that there could be no doubt of the identification of the Branch. But lest there should be, it is written, Luke 2:40, 52, "The child grew and waxed strong IN SPIRIT, filled with WISDOM and the grace of God was upon him * * * and Jesus increased in WISDOM and stature and in favor with God and man." Let it now be said that how these prophecies could have been fulfilled in any human being and how many others concerning the land of Palestine and the city of David could come to pass must have taxed mightily the faith of the prophets even, who foretold them. Indeed, had they known their scriptures they would have known that he was not to be a human, for it was said, Isaiah 7:14, "A Virgin shall bear a Son and shall call his name IMMANUEL, or "GOD WITH US." The God-Man was the only hope of such a wonderful reign as that. FOREVER, could not be predicated of any human. No more could there have been a righteous reign of any human ON THE EARTH ON THE THRONE OF DAVID, for David himself had failed awfully in righteousness. Either these prophecies were to be fulfilled by a more than human or they were enigmatic and phantasmal.

But in the fullness of God's time, came the assurance to the Virgin that she should be the mother of the IMMANUEL. The angels sang at his birth; the wise men came to witness to his Royal greatness with gifts for the "born King of the Jews." Jealous Herod made it possible that "out of Egypt have I called my Son." John came preaching "The Kingdom of heaven is AT HAND," and then, after the baptism of Jesus and the witness of Heaven to his heavenly Sonship, he himself went forth, preaching, "The Kingdom of heaven is at hand." The King was here and in the Royal line of David for God's chosen Israel, but they could not recognize him because they did not know their scriptures or could not rightly divide the Word of Truth." He gave them the principles of the Kingdom in the sermon on the mount; and when he yet sits on the throne of David we will see the golden rule of that sermon administered. Peace on earth. He returned to the city of his boyhood at Nazareth and they led the king out to the brow of the hill and would have cast him over, but he escaped through their midst and then he said to his disciples, "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the KINGDOM; but unto them it is not given" and in mystery form he revealed in many parables that the kingdom could not come now; the King would "go far into a far country AND RETURN." That his faithful ones would rule and reign with him when he came back in Royal splendor. "After a long time the lord of those servants will return and reckon;" and woe to them that are foolish and not ready and watching.

Now, behold the workings of the wonder-working God. In the evening of the sixth, thousand-year day, the Jews returning to their native country, now in the hands of friends, at an amazing rate and wealthy Jews pouring out their money so that it may be so. Dreams of again populating their native land with the suffering of their race from all the countries where they have been persecuted ever since they crucified their King and cried out "his blood be upon us and our children." Returning to where the King shall sit on the THRONE OF HIS FATHER DAVID to rule the nations in righteousness and they, there, ready for the King through whom they will rule the world. "A nation born in a day" is beginning to be forecast as a possibility. Behold, also, how the world is thinking in terms of a world kingdom; never before have the nations tried to form a world power. Never before, a League of Nations. Never before a World Court.

May I conclude this paper with the words of an Israelite? I quote from Paul in Romans 11. "I say then, hath God cast away his people? God forbid. * * * God hath not cast away his people * * * there is a remnant according to the election of grace. I say then, have they stumbled that they should fall? God forbid. But rather through their fall, salvation has come to the Gentiles. * * * If their fall be the riches of the world * * * how much more their fulness? * * * Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, there shall come out of Zion a Deliverer and SHALL TURN UNGODLINESS AWAY FROM JACOB. FOR THIS IS MY COVENANT when I SHALL TAKE AWAY THEIR SINS * * * FOR THE GIFTS AND THE CALLINGS OF GOD ARE WITHOUT REPENTANCE." And once more from the Annunciation: "Fear not Mary; for thou hast found favor with God; Thou shalt bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus." And Matthew adds "for he shall save the people from their sins". (Back to the annunciation) "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest and the Lord God shall give unto him the THRONE of his FATHER DAVID; and HE SHALL REIGN over the HOUSE OF JACOB FOREVER and of his KINGDOM THERE SHALL BE NO END."

Now, I know that it is objected that this is not a necessary part of the gospel; that God will take care of the Throne of David and therefore, we need not concern ourselves about the details of the Divine Plan. But it is a part of the Gospel and therefore the whole gospel is not preached unless we preach this. Personally, I know that it is attractive to the people. More than that, I know that it has an appeal to the Jew. Certainly, that Christian who can tell the Jew that all these glorious promises of the Old Testament Scriptures are yet in the plan of God, has a message that will beget hope and faith. Perhaps, the reason so many Jews are infidel and hopeless today, is because so few teachers and preachers pay attention to this other half of the gospel of the Son of God. If we preach that the suffering Messiah has come to "save the people from their sins," let us also preach that "He shall sit on the throne of David and rule over the House of Jacob FOREVER."

AN OPEN DOOR

The life that is lived in steady contemplation of God is not only firm and roomy, but is characterized by daily enlargement. Every day the Lord opens doors to the consecrated life. Words that hitherto had no meaning throw open their doors and unveil their wealth. Promises, that have hitherto been under lock and key, fling their doors ajar, and invite us to partake of their treasure. We don't know just where we shall find the open door. Sometimes a lowly service confronts us. We discharge the humble task, and in the act of obedience we find we have passed through an open door into an enlarged conception of "the inheritance of the saints in light." In the old castle at Edinburgh, the way of the Crown Jewels leads through a very humble doorway and through a very dingy and circuitous passage. The humble doorways of common duties are frequently the way to the room where God keeps his jewels. The Lord is ever giving us new opportunities, fresh chances, that day by day we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of him. It is his will that we should grow daily in finer discernment, richer affection, and more brilliant hope.—Dr. John H. Jowett, in "Books by the Traveler's Way."

"The Slanderer"

By Edythe R. Hall

He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool—Proverbs 10:18.

I think the slanderer is well represented as a serpent with a characteristic human head, coiled in the grass, striking with an arrow-tipped tongue into the bleeding heart of its victim.

Jealousy and envy are the sac of poison under the slanderer's tongue. Love and honor never engage in this vile business. Truly does a great poet, style slander, by way of personification:

"Slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword; whose tongue Outvenoms all the worms of Nile."

The victim of slander truly suffers more than the victim of theft, as, with a consciousness of innocence, he endures a lifetime of shame without the power of defense. Our friends may hold us innocent and stand by us, but the world will think of the dove as soiled and the lamb as spotted. Our enemies especially will keep the skeleton of a dead slander upon our track, and but a few of them are generous enough to grant, much less prove, our innocence.

There are even churches, where some of the members gossip, scandalize and slander each other, and sometimes slander their pastor, thereby making his way hard. Churches that engage in this sort of thing are bound to lose their prestige and will never regain it. Such a feeling should not exist among Christians. Think of the effect it has on people outside the church. There should be a marked difference between Christian people and people of the world. Slander is an evil genius, a cunning fiend which stalks its prey at noonday and springs upon its victims at midnight. Deep down in the hottest hell, where dwells the foulest devil, will be the eternal abode of the serpent-tongued slanderer.

There is a lot of jealousy and envy in our churches today. The Bible says, "Jealousy is as cruel as the grave; the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame." Shenstone has well defined jealousy as the "fear of apprehension of superiority;" and envy, "our uneasiness under it." Shakespeare called jealousy "the green-eyed monster which doth mock the meat it feeds on." In fact, jealousy and envy are the product of small minds. It is always an inferior jealous of its superior, you never find a superior jealous of its inferior. Do not be jealous, if someone can do a certain thing better than you can. All people are not talented along the same lines. The church should let and encourage its members to do the things that they can do the best, and no one should feel jealous and envious because certain persons can do certain things better than others and should not try to push and vote them down, but should give encouragement so they can develop their talent still more and be of greater service to the Lord.

Of all the vices to which nature is subject, slandering and jealousy are the most detestable, being compounded by fraud, cowardice and revenge. It destroys those principles of mutual confidence and security.

Slandering and jealousy are cowardly. They soon find their crowd and then spend their time in scandalizing some innocent person. A bit of scandal is to them a sugar-plum which they roll in their mouth and divide with each other; and the plum grows as it rolls from mouth to mouth. They find a fiendish delight in the spread of neighborhood gossip. Slanderers have a reckless disregard for truth and honest reputation. We are often astonished at some of the people that engage in this sort of thing, for truly it is the vilest business of mankind.

The treatment of slander is an important consideration. The slandered man or woman occupies a difficult position. He needs most of all the grace of patience and forbearance, or fortitude and bravery. The question then arises, "How shall I treat scandal and slander?" We should never be in too big a hurry, or too hasty, and never pay any attention unless dignity and duty demands defense, and when defense is impossible, wait on God. Slander will run its course after a while, and though the one slandered may never be pronounced innocent by all, yet character untainted will shine again like the sun through the clouds, even if the sky never becomes altogether clear. Socrates said: "Slanders do not hurt me, because they do not hit me," but we do not all have the rugged mountain grandeur of Socrates. Slanders do hit and hurt some innocent people, sometimes rend families, churches and neighborhoods, leaving for awhile the desolation of the cyclone on its track; and it takes manhood and Christianity to await until the storm passes over. The surest method against scandal is to live it down by perseverance in well-doing, and by prayer to God. After all, God and time and well-doing are the best remedies for slander, so far as the effect of it may ever be cured. Slander, is one of the Christian's crosses and if well borne will lead to a higher Christian life. It is comforting to know that the birds pick at the best and highest fruit upon the tree. The best people in the world are slandered; and only the good and useful can be. Of course there is a negative, good-for-nothing good of which none speak evil. To such Jesus spake when he said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you."

Slander makes the true man examine himself to see whether or not the things said of him be true. A great writer once said, "that he never grew angry at slanders and scandals; for if they were true, he tried to improve his life above them; if false, he would ultimately shine all the brighter by them." This is true that the result of a slander lived down will purify and brighten the character of the slandered, though he may never regain his lost reputation or position in the eyes of everybody. Tupper gives us good advice when he says:

"If a liar accuseth thee of evil, be not swift to answer, You give him the license for awhile; it shall be thine honor afterward."

Let us therefore drive all slandering, envy and jealousy out of our churches and practice the law of kindness. Nothing pays so well in return, and nothing is so easy in its investment.

WHAT THE BIBLE MEANS TO SOME CHILDREN

During December a request was received by the Society from the Week-day School of Religion, Dayton, Ohio, for a number of copies of the booklet entitled "John 3:16," containing some specimens of the 770 languages and dialects into which the Bible verse has been translated. The booklets were supplied free of charge, and were distributed during the "Own Your Own Bible" campaign conducted by the school.

A letter was received in due time thanking the Society for the booklets and telling of the delight with which the boys and girls received them.

It was especially interesting to learn some of the responses which came from fifth grade children in answer to the question: "Why should an American boy or girl study the Bible?" A few of the answers given follow:

"If we didn't study the Bible, the earth wouldn't progress, and the people would form bad habits, and there should be fighting."

"American boys should study the Bible, because it gives them the spirit to be good and to mind their parents and to help others at all times."

"I want to study the Bible because I want to learn about God and be directed on the right road. If I see anyone, I will tell them to read the Bible and help our country to be the leading country in civilization."

My Bible and I in 1926

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

"Do you know your Bible, my little child?" was the question asked of a little girl who had come to a certain Sunday school for the first time. At once she thought of the large unread family Bible in her home and made this quick reply to her teacher's question: "Oh, yes, I know everything that's in it; sister's young man's photo is in it, an' ma's recipe for face cream, an' a lock of my hair cut off when I was a baby, an' the ticket for pa's watch."

"Do you know your Bible? How can you live it if you do not know it? Not what is in it, but what it is. Why is it that the safest place on earth for storing keepsakes is the large family Bible? Perhaps it is because it is too large for convenient use, but it is more likely that it is because the Book in any size is seldom used in the home. Nobody bothers hence it becomes the family safety box.

The greatest need in the world today is that many more people know what is in the Bible and then live that truth in daily life. A general disregard for the law of God and the law of man characterizes the present generation. And the serious results are patent to every thinking person. What the end will be if the present reign of lawlessness continues is alarming.

What an opportunity these three months to know what is in the Gospel according to John, as this book is studied in our Sunday schools. John says that he wrote the book "that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." Life itself is serious. A Philadelphia preacher, not of the Brethren church, used as the subject of a New Year sermon: "Life is a Joke, so Laugh." Multitudes take that attitude toward the Bible, the principles of righteousness and the soul's destiny, but blessed and thrice blessed are they who know the Bible that they may know and do the will of God.

Let every one walk with Jesus and live his life in 1926.

May his Word be a Lamp unto our feet and a Light unto our pathway.

A NEW FORM BUT THE OLD SPIRIT

It cannot have been intended that the Church of Christ should remain forever in her primitive condition in all respects. It is the nature of a seed to grow, to attack its surroundings, to absorb and transform them, and thus to become all that lay within it to be. To become, for example, a tree whose roots pierce more and more deeply into the nature of things, whose branches spread upwards and outwards to the sun and the sky. It is in the nature of all spirit to take to itself a body or form—a body which at once defends the spirit from assault and enables the spirit to express itself. But the church, though she may never again return to her first pattern, just as she will never return to her first numbers, may and must retain as her one dear treasure that spirit, that idea, that grace, that outlook upon things and up into God, which at first was all her glory. She may and must show forth the primitive generosity and fellow-feeling amongst her members, the indubitable reflection also of her only Lord.—John A. Hatton, in "As at the First."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Mission and Method of the Master

By L. G. Wood

TEXT: "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief."—1 Timothy 1:15.

There is much being said and written these days about Methods, Missions, Plans and Programs, and these are all useless, except as they center in a person and direct the mind and the heart of man toward that Person. It is very significant, that the great Apostle, who is the author of our text, always found the personal Savior at the heart of every message of good news, even describe him as the Personality of all TRUTH. "If so be that ye have heard him, and have been taught by him, as the truth is in Jesus" (Eph. 4:21).

The text lends itself to a most beautiful outline of six great propositions, which we will try to notice briefly in their order.

I. "This is a faithful saying." These words certainly represents a sure declaration, concerning the Mission and Method of the Master. The Bible contains more than three thousand promises, and these stand out as the unanswered challenge of God to man. Inspiration also tells us that we "have also a more sure word of prophecy" than the audible voice from heaven (2 Peter 1:18-19). We understand that to mean simply this: Fulfilled prophecy, is "more sure" as a permanent evidence to man of the Inspiration of the Scriptures, and this is based on a clear statement as to the source of inspiration: "For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were MOVED by the Holy Ghost" (2 Peter 1:21). In the last book of the Old Testament God, through the prophet, lays down a challenge to man in these words: "Prove me and see if I will not pour you out a blessing" (Mal. 3:10).

"Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it" (1 Thes. 5:24). "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure" (2 Tim. 2:19). "These sayings are faithful and true" (Rev. 22:6).

II. "Worthy of all acceptance." "This is not only worthy, but is a safe investment of that which is most precious of life. This investment not only means the transformation of our lives but also our participation in the divine nature. "Whereby are given to us exceedingly great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Pet. 1:4). This is the means by which we make our "calling and election sure," and shall receive an 'abundant entrance into the everlasting Kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.'

It is frequently said that "Christianity is worth all that it costs" which is indeed true, for Christ-likeness is the real demand of our manhood. No one can pay too much for an infinite relationship. "And every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or fathers, or mothers, or wife, or children, or lands for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life" (Matt. 19:29).

III. "Jesus Christ came." Those three words involve all there is in a Divine mission. A mission regarded by angels as sublime, and of everlasting interest.

At his incarnation, angels accounted it their highest honor to announce HIM. Yes, the angelic dream was one of peace, and the Judean hills rang clear that night, by the angel choir, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good will to man." His entire earthly life seemed to be accompanied by an angelic host. In the wilderness of temptation, in the garden, on the cross and at the tomb, then they furnished his escort to Glory. The apostolic Peter writing about the great Mission of the Master, said: "Which things the angels desired to look into."

If the angels, who did not need salvation, were so much interested in this great mission, surely we who are so vitally concerned, should hail HIM with rapture.

IV. "Into the world," This is certainly a needy place. The natural trend of this old world (world order) is away from God. There is a great deal of carnality in the world today, and sometimes a bit of it creeps into the church, and what ever the "carnal mind" is, it is at "enmity against God" (Rom. 8:7).

The Bible not only describes this present world order Son of God. "Who gave himself for our sins, that he might as evil, but also reveals the deliverer in the person of the deliver us from this present evil world, according to the will of God and our Father" (Gal. 1:4). The friendship of the world does not promote the work of the Kingdom of Christ. "Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity of God" (Jas. 4:4).

John also describes the world by its works, as "lusts of the flesh," "lusts of the eyes", and "the pride of life." These are the "ear marks" of worldliness, and not worthy of the Christian's affection because "the world passeth away, and the lusts thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2:15-17).

O Christian! Rejoice that Christ Jesus came into this sin-blighted world; then rejoice again, that he has called you and me to be his representatives in this needy place. May we so live and so serve that his call to us may not have been in vain.

V. "To save sinners". This is the greatest proposition that can engage human thought, because it implies the exercise of Infinite power, in behalf of unworthy sinners, with but one promoting motive: "GOD SO LOVED."

This is an infinite task, which came by a heavenly birth, and while we can not perform it, we can lead a soul into the presence of the ONE who can save. When Christians LIVE the Gospel as well as teach it by word of mouth, they too can say with the Apostle: "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the POWER of God unto salvation" (Rom. 1:16). Salvation is through, and by, the WORD and not independent of it. The WORD of the Gospel is backed up by HIM who sealed his testimony with his own blood. One can not be born of the Spirit, until he is begotten of the WORD. "Of his own will begat he us with the WORD of TRUTH, for it is the POWER of God unto salvation... Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the INGRAFTED WORD, which is able to save your souls" (Jas. 1:18-21).

When the writer to the Hebrews declares "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever" (Heb. 13:8), he not only presents the changeless CHRIST, but also recognizes the world's three dates in the divine economy. On Sinai, God asked for Holiness, spelled with a "W" (Wholiness). On Calvary God provided for that same type of Wholiness, and at the Judgment he will require that same type of completeness in Christ. The Mission and Method of the Master has given the church a redemptive work to do, therefore it must stem the tide of modern ideas to maintain its proper place and dignity. The church of Jesus Christ is not a play house; it is not a social club; it is not a banqueting hall; it is not a hotel lobby, a fire escape, nor a side-show. But are not these absorbing too much of the church's time and activity today?

May we ever remember the wonderful words of the Master: "As Father hath sent me into the world, even so SEND I YOU." As the "Pillar and ground of the truth" it is the representative of Christ on earth, passive in the hands of the Holy Spirit, and the conservator of grace and purity. I don't think Luther Burbank's recent infidel statements should be dignified with any comments from Christian intelligence.

When a man tries to make-believe that Christianity is a delusion and that the Bible is out of date; and that it has been left behind in the onward march of human knowledge and progress; IT ONLY PROVES THAT HIS OWN BRAIN HAS BECOME MUDDLED AND THAT HE HAS LOST HIS BEARINGS. We thank God that the old Star of hope still shines brightly, and that HE is the unchangeable guide out of time into eternity, out of sin into holiness, out of death into life. We still have with us that true scholarship, which pauses in reverence at the threshold of REVELATION.

In whatever age or country, there is a spiritual modesty, which always accompanies the highest intellectual achievements. Newton, after his epoch-making discovery of the process of gravitation, when praised for this great achievement, said modestly, "I feel like a little child who has only picked up a few pebbles, beside the great ocean of unexplored truth." May we labor and pray for the increase of that scholarship, which finds its chief delight, in following the blood prints of the feet of the man of Galilee.

The greatest thing in the mission of the Christ, was that of offering himself as the world's Savior, and the greatest thing his church can do is to make him known to the world. All of the opposers of the Christ will one day reach that place of confessed defeat, that the defeated Emperor Julian of the fourth century reached in his death struggle when

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE TRUE BROTHERHOOD—Matt. 12:46-50.

Jesus places spiritual relationships far above the ties of blood and makes obedience to the will of God the qualifications for sharing in that blessed relationship.

TUESDAY

RECEPTION OF THE WORD—Matt. 13:1-9.

How many barren souls, in which the noises of the world have drowned the voice of God! How many a response is but a bit of shallow emotion! How many are only partially surrendered! But give the Word of God a chance, and behold, how abundant and satisfying are the results!

WEDNESDAY

THE LAW OF DISCERNMENT—Matt. 13:10-17.

He who has an open mind is ever receiving new and more glorious truth, but he whose mind is prejudiced and unreceptive is living in self-imposed darkness.

THURSDAY

THE MASTER EXPLAINS—Matt. 13:18-23.

It is always so—Jesus makes plain the mysteries of the Kingdom to those who earnestly and humbly seek the larger truth.

FRIDAY

GOOD AND EVIL SEED—Matt. 13:24-30.

The same soil that grows wheat will also grow tares, and the more carefully the heart is prepared for the good the more earnestly the devil will contend for a place in it.

SATURDAY

AN UNFOLDING OF TRUTH—Matt. 13:35-43.

Two warnings are here: first, against hasty and summary action against the false in the kingdom lest the good be injured; and second, against discouragement in the presence of the evil, for it will surely be detected and destroyed, but the righteous shall share the glory of heaven's brightness.

SUNDAY

GROWING AND SPREADING—Matt. 13:31-35.

The Kingdom of heaven in its beginning is small like the mustard seed, and like it also it has life and is destined to grow and become strong and great. It is also like leaven, for it is to grow quietly, unobtrusively, pervasively, until it has spread throughout the whole earth.
—G. S. B.

he exclaimed, "THOU HAST CONQUERED, NAZARENE!" Obedience to the truth purifies the soul. "Seeing we have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, see that ye love one another with a pure heart fervently, being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the WORD of God, which liveth and abideth forever" (1 Pet. 1:23). There is also an awful consequence of not believing the truth. "That they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness . . . God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the TRUTH" (2 Thes. 2:12-13).

These are my only pleas for a Whole Bible doctrine in faith, in practice and in service, and upon this basis rests all of those beautiful doctrines, which distinguish us as a people. The Brethren church furnishes an opportunity to to each of its members, to pay full honor to the TRUTH, and also to enlist the full measure of heart devotion in the service of him who is TRUTH. Therefore we seek untarnished truth in baptism, feet-washing, Lord's Supper, Communion, confirmation, anointing and salutation. How much these assist the believer in the interpretation of the will of our Master.

VI. "Of whom I am chief." This is a personal confession and necessary in order to claim our part in his great Mission. He is the Son of God because he transforms human lives, even to this day. It is our high privilege to crown him Lord of our lives here and now. The Mission and the Method of the Master is demanding more of us than toleration or respect, it is demanding a real, personal relationship.

This vital relationship has been experienced by some in every age of the world history. Behold that sweet gleam of hope and faith in the eyes of dying legions, whose last words have been: "My Jesus I love thee, I know thou art mine."

Our Master will never be satisfied with our admiration of him, but his great heart is longing for our identification with him. May we thus partake of that great inheritance of the Saints in Light.

One With Him

One when he died
One when he rose,
One when he triumphed over his foes,
One when in heaven he took his seat
And heaven rejoiced over hell's defeat."

Christ on Calvary

The strangest thing in all the history of the universe is the Cross, and yet the divinest thing. It pours contempt over the glory of material things. It makes the glory of God in the heavens and in the firmament, which are his own handiwork, pale away into insignificance. Yet it was a cross, a bloody cross; it had all its sorrow, yet God was on it. It is through Christ crucified that God is known. He is the power of God and the wisdom of God; and if ever the demonstration of the truth that God is a Spirit was furnished to the world, it was by the Christ on Calvary. If the opposite were true, that God is not spiritual, then we should have wanted pomp and state and ceremony to accompany the Son of God. But such was not, and is not, the case. The crucified and risen Savior is the supreme revelation of God.

He breaks down every barrier between us and God and leads us into the holy of holies. All may now come near in full assurance of faith, and they that come shall find that God is nearer than they ever dreamed, nearer than anything else in the universe, so near that, if they will but hold on to him, he and they will grow together into one—"they all shall be one"—perfected and cemented in eternal union with him, now and hereafter, even forevermore.—"Sermons, Lectures, and Addresses," by Alpheus Waters, Wilson, D.D., L.L.D., The Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tennessee.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Man's Reward

By Mrs. Leslie Lindower

OUR SCRIPTURE

Take heed that ye do not your righteousness before men, to be seen of them; else ye have no reward with your Father who is in heaven. When therefore thou doest alms, sound not a trumpet before thee, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, that they may have glory of men. Verily I say unto you, they have received their reward. But when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth; that thine alms may be in secret; and thy Father, who seeth in secret shall recompense thee. And when ye pray, ye shall not be as the hypocrites: for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have received their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thine inner chamber, and having shut thy door, pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall recompense thee (Matt. 6: 1-6).

OUR MEDITATION

In these six verses we are exhorted to do our alms without ostentation and display; not to be lauded of men, thus gaining worldly prestige, but to be as secretive as possible, receiving no commendation from men, but an everlasting reward from the Father. There are some magnanimous people, no doubt, who, if known for their beneficence, would be eulogized to the extent of human satisfaction. However, they wisely understand the truth in Jesus' teaching that if rewarded by men, it is the only reward, and justly so, for the Father does not reward such giving. The figure Jesus so clearly sets forth explains that secrecy the Christian should maintain concerning his benevolence. The hypocrites, he said, sounded a trumpet before them to gain favor in man's eye. Yet we who call ourselves Christians must beware of display. Though we "sound not our trumpets," we are very prone to forget or disregard the admonition to secrecy. The Father's reward will take place on the judgment day when the secrets of all hearts shall be disclosed. Yet even in this life there is the reward of a good conscience and of God's approval.

This appeal for private worship or "praying in the closet" does not disparage public prayers and worship, because Christ commended this emphatically, both in precept and practice. But private prayer offers a test of sincerity which public worship does not.

It is an important truth that some prayers are merely a recital of eloquent words and phrases, which reach no higher than the ceiling overhead. There are also, for which we are thankful, those unpretentious prayers that fall from the lips of Christians, scarcely audible to man but clear and beautiful to the Father.

The Christian can be, and generally is, inspired and comforted by this passage which shows that regardless of how small may be our gifts or how unpolished or faulty our prayers, if we are sincere, our efforts will surely be rewarded. So we may rejoice at man's disregard or ignorance of our bravest efforts, while our hearts within us sing because "Thy Father which seeth in secret shall recompense thee."

OUR PRAYER

Our loving Father, may we ever be sincere in serving thee. Help us to remember that thy commendation is worth infinitely more than men's praise. Be our guide throughout this life and guide us into that future life of perfection.

Jesus Raises Lazarus from the Dead

Scripture Lesson—John 11:1 to 12:11.

Printed Text—John 11:32-44.

Devotional Reading—1 Cor. 15:50-58.

Golden Text—I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live.—John 11:25.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From the Illustrated Quarterly).

Lazarus is the Greek form of Hebrew Eleazar, which means "God is my help." He was not the Lazarus of the parable (Luke 16:20), nor is there any evidence that he was the rich young man of Matthew 19:16. He was probably younger than Mary, and Martha was probably the oldest of the three. He must have been a young man of fine character to be so loved by Jesus.

The Mysterious Delay

(1) It may have been necessary in order to complete some work in which he was engaged; and it was to the glory of God and his Son that he should place duty before all considerations of personal feeling. The brightest stars in the crown of some of the greatest characters, stars which shine down the ages when almost all else is forgotten are the deeds of duty and patriotism at the cost of help for one nearest and dearest. (2) "This delay was necessary to the consummation of the miracle of the resurrection of Lazarus in such form as to forever prohibit the impression that death had not really taken place." (3) It was needful to develop and increase the faith and love of the Bethany family and his disciples, and give them a vision of the future life and their Savior's power, such as can be seen only from the depth of sorrow. (4) It would lead many to believe on Jesus, and thus glorify the Son (v. 45). (5) Jesus himself was soon to lie three days in the grave; if, therefore, he was able to raise up Lazarus after four days' burial, they would have stronger faith in the resurrection of Jesus from his three days' burial. (6) It has been to the glory of the Son of God, in that it has shown to all generations that Jesus is the resurrection and the life.

Christ did not come to the help of the disciples, storm tossed on the Sea of Galilee, till the fourth watch of the night, when they were nearly worn out with rowing; and even then "he would have passed by them."

Christ does not shield his followers from sickness and sorrow and death. "As if a general in the army would, because of his faltering heart, refuse to let his son take the post of danger; as if he would not rather wish for that son—aye, with a great pang in his own soul—that he should be the bravest, the most daring, the one most exposed to the deadliest hazard."

Lazarus' Grave

The traditional grave of Lazarus now shown at Bethany is an excavation dug in the ground, and steps lead down to it;

"cave," however, points rather to a natural or artificial hollow in a cliff, with an upright entrance against which a stone slab was placed to keep out the wild beasts—such a cave-tomb as was soon to receive the body of the Crucified. "This, like many other touches in the narrative, indicates the social position of the Bethany family. It was not a common burial-place among many, but like what we call a family vault."—Prof. John Laidlaw.

The Prudent Withdrawal

The Sanhedrin decree was published—not the sentence of death, but the decree for his arrest, and the command for information as to his whereabouts to be given. Christ knew that his death was inevitable, and had freely foretold it for months, but he would not needlessly hasten it, and probably realized that it should take place at the coming passover.

Therefore he cut short his public addresses and his working of miracles, and withdrew into the wild region east of Jerusalem which had been the refuge of so many fugitives, and where John the Baptist had lived and preached. A town was there called Ephraim, and there Jesus lodged. Its location is unknown. Eusebius placed it eight miles north-east of Jerusalem and Jerome twenty miles from the city in the same direction. There our Lord remained, awaiting the sacred feast which meant so much to the Jews and to himself.

Inspires Deeper Devotion

Another result of this miracle was the still deeper love of the sisters to their Master—if that was possible. On Jesus' return to Judea for the Passover, a few weeks after the raising of Lazarus, he stayed as he often had, at the Bethany home. But this time Mary did not content herself with sitting at his feet and listening to his words. The supper which was made in the Master's honor may have been the thought of Martha, (Continued on page 15)

The White Gift Offering--Second Report

My last report was written on January 8, and as you will see below, quite a number of Sunday schools have sent in their offering, as it will appear below. If the name of your Sunday school or church does not appear, it might be a good thing for you to make inquiry of the proper officers, as to why it is not included in this report.

The amount announced on January 8 was $2,199.87

Since then, offerings have been as follows:

Wooster, W. M. S., for Fairhaven, $	5.00
Salem, W. Va.,	11.00

Total to February 4, $3,885.95

It will thus be seen that we are yet $2,000.00 below the requirements of the budget for this year, but we know that there are a large number of our Sunday schools which have not reported, and we feel confident that when the last report is in, the entire amount shall have been provided. This is one of the few offerings to which practically every Sunday school in the brotherhood makes a contribution, and because of that fact, your executive officers felt led to plan for unusually big things for this year. We are very confident that we shall not be disappointed.

Christian Endeavor and the World and Citizenship

By Charles W. Mayes

Dear Christian Endeavorers:

As I write doubtless some of you are twisting the dials on your radio, hoping to hear the voice of another tongue. Some of you will probably be fortunate enough to "get Europe." Isn't it great? Doesn't it inspire you with wonder? What does it mean?

We are face to face today with many evidences of the fact that the "world is a neighborhood." At the time America was discovered there was an almost insurmountable barrier between one side of the world and the other. But not so today. Thoughts fly around the world indeed in the twinkling of an eye. Europe is just a good sized honeymoon trip.

Now there is one thing in particular which every young American Christian ought to know. It is this: THIS WORLD NEIGHBORHOOD SHOULD BE CONVERTED INTO A BROTHERHOOD IN CHRIST JESUS. You should have a part in this great brotherhood effort. The Christian must remember these things. God is the true Father of the true Christian. The true Christian is the true child of the true God. Jesus Christ is the true Son of the true God. We are joint heirs with Christ. A happy thought indeed it is to know that we are joint heirs with our Lord. But we should not be narrow. Christ belongs to the world. He did not die for the United States alone. He did not die for the white race alone. He gave himself for the world.

Do not worry that your vision of Christianity will be too big. Worry that it may be too small. If your vision does not include the world, expand it. "God hath made of ONE every nation to dwell on the earth." The color of your skin and the wave in your hair make you no more precious in God's eye than your brother on the other side of the globe.

Now what makes a good citizen? Think awhile. The person who is a good citizen in the Kingdom of God will be a good American citizen also. You should already be a citizen of the Kingdom of which Jesus Christ is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. You have entered that Kingdom by making Christ, Savior and Lord. When your life is surrendered fully to the way, the truth, and the life, as revealed in the Son of God He is your Lord. Your surrender day is your commencement day. It is a day when you commence to be a subject to the true King.

If one person surrenders himself to the complete program of Christ here in America and another person does the same thing in Africa, these two will be of the same mind, one toward the other even though thousands of miles separate them. The same Christ will be Lord over all. "Things equal to the same thing are equal to each other" is surely not a mathematical truth only.

Let every Endeavorer say, "What would Jesus have me do?" He will then be an enterprising and forward looking citizen. He will not be satisfied in allowing the horizon of his vision to rest upon himself. He will have the attitude of heart which will make for perfect relationship with men. Let the Christian ask, "What would Jesus have me do?" and the writer questions whether he will trot off to war at the first blow of the bugle. Ask the question and your heart will be filled with love. Answer the question and you make a good citizen.

Let it be repeated that the Citizen of the Kingdom is the best American citizen. Get

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

Every-Day Heroes. Heb. 11:2-34

We can all be heroes if we want to. Did you ever think of that? Some people think that there are only a few people who ever get a chance to do heroic things. Did you ever feel that you wished that something would happen so that you could do some act that everyone would praise? Maybe you even wished that there might be a fire or an accident somewhere near you so that you could show your bravery by rescuing someone or something valuable. It is very fine to do this kind of heroic acts but just now we are going to talk about a different type of heroic deed. We are going to see if we can not think of some heroic things that we can do without waiting for a fire to give us an opportunity.

A boy of nine was just starting forth to have a big time playing ball with his chums. As he reached the door he heard someone behind him and looking about found that his four year old sister was behind him. She smiled at him and said, "I want to go along, brother." He knew that he could not take her along to play ball for she might get hurt and was tempted to tell her to go in and stay with their mother. Then he remembered that mother was not feeling very good, and he gave up his own plans with a smile. Soon they were off to find playmates that both could have a good time with, where there would be no danger for the little girl. I consider that a really heroic act, don't you? It is hard to give up doing a thing when we have planned it. This little boy gave in willingly and with a smile. I wonder if everyone of us Juniors can not find a chance like this to be kind to a little brother or sister. If we do, we shall show our heroic spirit.

Another kind of hero is one who obeys his parents and teachers even in the face of difficulties. Did you ever find it hard to do the thing you were told to do? Sometimes we are given tasks just when we want most to do something else. We shall be heroes if we learn to always obey when we are told to do a bit of work even though we feel like whining and trying to get out of doing it. Sometimes when we have been doing a lot of things and feel that we should be allowed to stop and play, there comes a word from mother or father asking us to do some other work. It begins then to look like we are going to have to work all the time and never have any time to play. Did you ever feel like that? Well, next time you do, just say to yourself, Here is my chance to be a hero, and hurry right into the job. You will find that the job will not seem so big or so hard if you do it willingly without stopping to object first. Then let us all remember to be heroes by being obedient.

Sometimes we are heroes when we just remember to be kind to someone. A little newsboy fell down on the side of the street one time and a lady who wondered if he might have hurt himself, smiled at him as he got up and collected his papers. The smile of the lady made the boy so happy that he ran and caught up with her and thanked her. He told her that no one had ever smiled at him like that before. This little boy did not have a mother and he needed just the friendship of someone to make him happy. It is easy to be nice to others. In fact, it not only makes them happy but it makes us feel happier ourselves when we are friendly and kind, don't you think so? The time when it takes real heroism to be kind to someone is when that person is not as well known and liked as you are. When some little boy or girl who is poor and does not have very nice clothes comes to your school, remember that he or she wants friends, and if the children who are playing do not make this new one feel at home, then say to yourself, here is a chance for me to be a hero. It will not always be easy, for someone may say to you, "Come on and play and let her take care of herself." But remember that you can be a hero by being kind to those who need friends and that will help you to do the right thing.

Shall we remember these things and try hard to find chances to be heroes? There are other ways beside the ones that I have mentioned. See if you can think of some of them. We shall be heroes if we remember to do our bit of work, and all that we do, with a smile on our faces. Shall we, Juniors, learn to be heroes? We can, if we try, so let us try.

Donald Fraser--"One Who Smiles with Any One"

"Chisekeseke," the African name given to the Rev. Donald Fraser, D.D., means "one who smiles with any one." After many years in Nyasaland, Dr. Fraser has become Home Organization Secretary of the Foreign Mission Committee of the United Free Church of Scotland. The following address was presented to Dr. Fraser by the African Christians on his departure from the field:

"We as members of the Mombasa Native Association, have heard with deep regret that you have received a call from the Home Church to leave your post here for ever that you may serve God in another noble work in Scotland. As by God's grace our eyes have been opened, we must frankly say that we have observed the following things in your long and blessed service:

"1. The people among whom you came were utterly lost, so that their spiritual life was uncared for; but you, with your care for the salvation of souls, proved yourself an earnest follower of Christ's Gospel by preaching and by opening schools in very many villages, so that people in these villages might be redeemed from sin and its consequences. As the result of your preaching and opening of schools there is today many a saved soul. These are the crown of your ceaseless activities.

"2. Your heart, which was full of compassion for the unsaved, was restless and unsatisfied in spite of many conversions, and so you resolved to hold annual conventions for the following reasons: (a) to deepen Christian truths in those already converted; (b) to bring to the Light those who were still in spiritual darkness. These conventions have been the means of salvation to hundreds of souls in Angoniland.

"3. On the day when you first left Scotland you had only English music in your mind, but, after you lived among the Ngoni here, you drew very sweet music out of the native mind by encouraging us to sing praises to God in purely native tunes, and now Ngoni tunes are sung in many languages in and outside Ngoniland. Our Ngoni and Tumbuka hymn books are rich in native hymns, which today are another means of spreading the Gospel.

"4. As you saw a Christian church forming in Ngoniland, you resolved to teach the infant church that a church that is sympathetic with the unsaved is a church that is blessed and that grows strong within itself, and so you sent teachers to Marambo and Usena to make Christ known to those far-away lands. Glory be to God that you did not only send teachers to Marambo, but yourself went there constantly, preaching, teaching, baptizing, celebrating Communion, organizing the church, opening and inspecting schools...

"5. Many of those who had the opportunity of understanding you have found in you a passion for winning souls for Christ, as you have again and again been found pleading with backsliders and infidels to come to Christ. Your study was ever open to those who came to you for spiritual help, and you, in turn, have visited many a hut to teach and plead for Christ in the individual home.

"6. Through God's grace and help your intellectual powers have been a great store out of which new and helpful ideas and plans have come from time to time to feed and nourish the infant church of the Ngoni, and those who are spiritually minded will never forget you in this.

"7. In 1915 the Ngoni learned something new from you—that you did not come from Scotland simply for the redemption of men's souls, but for the redemption of their bodies as well. We remember when the Boma wished to punish some parts of Ngoniland because of the chief's unwillingness to lend a hand in the Great War, you were the man who encouraged the Ngoni to go and take their share in that War. We must never forget that memorable day when, at your word, hundreds of men, with teachers among them, thronged to the Boma at Mzimba, offering themselves for service in the Great War. Chiefs and Indunas have always found in you a great and sympathetic helper in political matters.

"8. In difficult circumstances, both spiritual and physical, you have stood firm in faith and hope for brighter days. Surely you have proved yourself a real optimist; and your encouragement to us in many dark times has put new life in us. We admit that on the part of the people you came to help there have been ingratitude, disappointment, sin, and apostasies from the Christian faith, but amid all these you have been found faithful to them. Hence, many love you dearly, and call you a father who has begotten them through forbearance and sympathy."—Missionary Review of the World.

"My Cup Runneth Over!"

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Cal.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

This is not Thanksgiving Day according to the calendar, but nevertheless the Office Secretary feels like singing the 13th Psalm, which starts out:

"O, Give thanks unto the Lord,
 For he is good!
 For his mercy endureth forever!"

and every verse ends, "For his mercy endureth forever!"

But she cannot sing! And then comes to mind that admonition: "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so!" But she cannot make a speech! So she has decided to "Say it with a typewriter."

Out here in the Long Beach Sunday School, we sing that song, "Count your blessings—Name them one by one," but we change the verses like this:

"Count your blessings—
 Name them two by two!
 Count your blessings—
 See what God will do!"

and then we sing:

"Count your blessings—
 Name them four by four!
 Count your blessings—
 God will give you more!"

And that is proving so true in the life of the Office Secretary. God just seems to be heaping joy and gladness upon her unworthy head! Your Treasurer said the other day that he feared the Lord was too good to him just permitting him to live in Southern California. If he, so used and blessed of the Lord, feels that way about it, how do you think "That O. S." must feel, with the additional privilege of working for and with such a pastor, chief and dictator as she has? Truly, "My cup runneth over!" Will you pray for your Office Secretary—that she may prove worthy of the Lord's trust confided to her in the Foreign Missionary work? Just pray that she may be kept faithful to every duty, and will not fail in strength or body or keenness of mind to grasp every opportunity of service, and that she may ever keep in mind that she serves the Lord Christ.

Then, if you yourself can stand a blessing, "permit me to say," as the dictator is ever dictating, that God has given you a recipe—a recipe that is guaranteed never to fail, if you will but follow it. Here it is:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse,
 That there may be meat in my house;
 And prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts,
 If I will not open you the windows of heaven,
 And pour you out a blessing
 That there shall not be room enough to receive it!"

And at the present writing that spells F-o-r-e-i-g-n M-i-s-s-i-o-n-s to

THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

We scatter seeds with careless hand
 And dream we ne'er shall see them more:
 But for a thousand years
 Their fruit appears
 In weeds that mar the land,
 Or healthful store.

The deeds we do, the words we say,
 Into still air they seem to fleet,
 We count them ever past;
 But they shall last,
 In the dread judgment they
 And we shall meet.—Keble.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

TRAVEL FLASHES

Johnstown-Morrellville

For the fifth time I was called for a revival in this good city. My first one was with the Walnut Grove Church of the Brethren in 1905, and some of the converts of that meeting attended this one. I had served three different Brethren churches in and near and when a call came to hold a union meeting of a Brethren church and a Church of the Brethren the very names distinguished like tweedle dee and tweedle dum, I was anxious to go. My Official Board was willing and granted the leave of absence. The situation here was very peculiar and very wonderful. Four years ago, both churches were in different locations and then bought lots within one square of each other in a new location; at that time in a meeting of the ministers of both denominations, I said, "Somebody ought to be hung" for this sort of conduct. Nevertheless, both peoples went on and erected places of worship. Our church has a very neat and complete building seating 350, crowded. The Church of the Brethren have the basement story of their projected building finished—a very complete and commodious building that far. Blue prints for an upper story of a $50,000 building are already finished. Let it be known, also that many meetings have been held by committees looking to some sort of a Working Agreement so that the anomaly of two churches with the same message will not seem to be opposing each other and costing almost double what it ought to get that message across. It was at one of these meetings that this Union Revival was proposed and launched, and after deliberation, myself chosen to lead the meeting. We began January 10 with the Brethren church well filled and what was called a wonderful service. In the afternoon the thought was "That they may be one as we are one." Unity, love and service were our watchwords as to our relations. Prayer and the whole message of the gospel, our weapons. The power of God seemed to settle down upon us from the first meeting. The first drawing of the net gave us some 30. Gathering power and publicity, we drew people from many churches at once, and from Brethren peoples in both churches very regularly. Scarcely a night that strange preachers did not lead in prayer. Brother W. S. Baker, now, unfortunately without a regular pastorate, was very regular for being a working man ten hours of the day. (Some church ought to use him full time) Brother F. B. Statler, the Church of the Brethren pastor was platform man. (by the way, a Princeton Theological graduate of the class with Quinter M. Lyon. He was a good loyal promoter and a fine yoke fellow, ready to follow the plans of the evangelist, to a dot. The United Choirs of the churches made a wonderful chorus of fifty voices and they were there to sing. Allen Davis, a Welshman, gave us rare leadership, and great solos. Churches there, ought to use him much. The crowd was small only one night. Cold and rain did not seem to affect us save when the thermometer dropped like lightning in a single day, from rain to below zero.

The Results

No one can measure the results. A revival was started and, I am sure, not finished. The last day with rain falling all day gave us three great audiences, and more confessions than on any day; I stayed Monday, and people came for baptism that had not made the confession in the meeting. One was taken after the farewell song had been sung. Scores—maybe 200 people witnessed that they had a new confidence in God, believing more than ever in answered prayer. There was much praying, personal work, and the finest Christian spirit in all, that I have seen in many months. It was the most "old-time" revival that I have enjoyed for years. The fellowship and love manifested despite denominational affiliations, was the most delightful imaginable. We proved that at one place Evangelism—"a Working Agreement"—is possible, workable, economical, Christian and winsome. Near the end, we almost lost track of the number of confessions, coming as they did, but it was near 80. Publicity was larger; the sympathy of the public was greater; I believe that God gave added blessing because we tried to work together. The future of these two congregations with the same message and the same practice, almost, is problematical unless they find a way to further work out their destiny in harmony. One thing is sure, if they both continue in their present locations, neither will grow as they ought for, in the first place, their population is growing foreign very fast, limiting the field in that way. If they both go on as they are now organized, they must divide their prospects, even as they did in this meeting. If either fails to live harmoniously among themselves, the other stands to win out. It is a most difficult situation from any angle save a well-worked-out AGREEMENT. Also, I am sure that this is possible. A few "carpers" still remain but if they could not go along at all, with the new arrangement, they could in this Dunker city, go to one of the other churches of either denomination. I trust that the churches shall not now surrender to prejudice and bigotry and break away from this fine spirit. I trust also, that many of our small churches will try out a union evangelistic campaign with their brothers of the Brethren fraternity. Both of our groups are too small and the overhead too great for us to get the message even to our own country alone. It is my prayer that many moons shall not pass until other Brethren groups prove that we are trying to be one, as the Master prayed.

The next work I have for the Kingdom is a Union Meeting with three churches just outside of our city, six miles at Savannah.

The New Church

The new church is slowed up a bit by the rigid weather.

FLORA, INDIANA

(The following is a clipping from the "Carroll County Press", Indiana).

"Brethren Revival Success"

"The three weeks' meeting at the First Brethren church closed last Sunday evening, (January 31) with one of the largest crowds of the entire meeting. The Longs proved themselves as artists in their line. Never have we worked with gospel singers who were as willing to carry their share of the burden or more willing to fit in to the program of the evangelist. The Lord wonderfully blessed our work together, to the extent that fifty people took a stand for the Lord. There are still others who will come by relation which will make the total around sixty. We give thanks and praise to the one to whom praise is due. Baptismal services were held each evening during the close of the meeting and some forty were baptized together with their Lord in the likeness of his death. We welcome these into full fellowship with the church and pray God's richest blessing upon them as they find their place among us. The church has been strengthened and built up spiritually and have a vision of greater things. Many of the good people in and out of the church expressed themselves as well pleased with the messages from night to night for which we are glad and again give the one credit and praise who made it all possible. We wish to thank again all who had a part in making this meeting a success, pastors, editors, and good people of Flora in general. We gladly invite you to any future service in our church when your own church does not make demands upon your time."

"The Church with a Cordial Welcome."

"FRANK G. COLEMAN, Pastor."

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

The Sunnyside Brethren church held her annual business meeting on January first. This is always a get-together day when all come prepared to spend a social time around the "family" table and to consider seriously the business of the coming year.

During the business session a letter was read to us from our recent pastor, Brother Coleman. We were very sorry to lose the Coleman family, for we had learned to love and admire them during their five years of service here. We pray that both they and the Flora church may be blessed because of their work there.

Brother J. C. Beal, recently of the Spokane church, is to be our pastor for the ensuing year. We feel very fortunate indeed, in being able to secure a man of such ability and a man of such sound gospel. He is working very zealously and is already accomplishing much. Three have been added to the church.

A Junior church has been organized with competent young people as leaders. Since last September the group has grown to a membership of thirty-seven children. They are trained in memory work, singing and praying and each Sunday, some one tells them a story from the Bible.

Harold Mackey, who served so faithfully and well last year, was re-elected as Sunday school Superintendent for the ensuing year. We have a fine school, with an average attendance, last year of two hundred twenty-eight. The highest attendance being three hundred twenty.

Rev. Stuckey, Field Secretary of Brethren Sunday school work, was with us for two evenings. We were glad to welcome Brother Stuckey and greatly enjoyed his talks. In speaking on the subject, "Winning our Brethren Youth," Rev. Stuckey emphasized the necessity of indoctrinating our children in the Sunday school; that they may know why they are Brethren and be able to stand fast when testing times come.

Willis Belcher is our Senior Endeavor president for this year, and Grace Allhouse and Harold Mackey have charge of the Intermediates. However, the first ten minutes of the Intermediate hour is given over to the pastor. Both Endeavor societies are quite well attended. In addition to these a Volunteer Band has been organized, which is composed chiefly of young people. They have been doing a good work, using Sunday afternoon as their visiting day to bring cheer to shut-ins.

May we ever be watching for his Coming.

COLLEGE NEWS

The gift of three comforters which was recently credited to the Gratis congregation should have been credited to the Gretna Women's Missionary Society and to the Sisterhood of Gretna. The former organization sent two comforters and the girls one. I am glad to make this correction and also to extend the thanks of the College to these organizations for this useful and much appreciated gift.

Professor and Mrs. J. A. Garber are expecting to attend the meeting of the National Sunday School Association to be held at Birmingham, Alabama, early in April of this year. They will represent the county work of which Dean Garber has long been the secretary.

Our Athletic teams have taken a winning streak, winning the last four games against strong college teams.

Monday, February 15, Dean Miller expects to leave Ashland for his trip to the Holy Land and Europe, returning some time in May.

The College has recently come into the possession of a very fine radio set, through the generosity of Mr. J. C. Myers of Ashland. Mr. Myers also recently gave the College about $100.00 with which to buy some platinum which Professor Puterbaugh uses in the Chemistry department. This is more valuable than gold and when not in use is kept in the College vault.

Charles Mayes, Weldon Hoot, and Charles Deffenbaugh, all graduates of Ashland, were visitors here recently.

Professor Anspach has given addresses before Parent-Teachers Associations recently as follows: Perrysville, Savannah and Huntington.

Miss Harriett, a member of our church at Middlebranch, Ohio, expects to teach Domestic science in our Summer school.

I was in Columbus one day last week in the interest of the coming Endowment campaign.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

FROM ST. JAMES, MARYLAND TO NEW LEBANON, OHIO

Already several months have passed since we packed our goods and started for our new field in Ohio. On December 1st, with our goods on the way, we started with our Ford, for the fourth time over the beautiful and famous National Highway. On the other three trips we left Maryland for the purpose of visiting home and friends in Northern Ohio. But this time to take up our new charge in Southern Ohio. For 400 miles we stayed on this splendid highway, luckily, no one bumping us off. We reached our field the next day at four o'clock. And to our surprise our goods arrived at the station the next day. We were not long in getting settled in our new home, neighbors helping us with truck and labor.

However happy we are in our new home, we have left behind friends we have made during our three and a half years stay we shall never forget. St. James being our first charge, mistakes have been made. We assume the responsibility for these. However, we believe some progress has also been realized.

There are two services I would like to mention in commendation for these people. On October 25th, we held our first Homecoming day. This proved to be a great success in spite of the rain. In the afternoon and evening service the house was full.

The morning service was designated as Homecoming Day for the Sunday school. Mr. O. T. Kaylor, a former officer of the Sunday school, now a successful Christian attorney from Hagerstown, spoke on the subject: "The value of Bible Instruction in the Day School."

In the afternoon, Rev. B. T. Burnworth, who was then conducting an evangelistic service at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, spoke very effectively upon the subject of the Home. His sermon was much appreciated. A history of the church was given by the pastor. The report showed that about 1000 members have been taken into her membership during her 40 years of growth. The church was organized by Rev. John Duke McFaden in the year 1886. Rev. J. I. Hall served the church for 13 years and received into her membership about 250 members. Others serving were Revs. I. D. Bowman, J. C. Mackey, E. B. Shaver, Joshua Long, Garvin Smith, L. G. Smith, H. W. Nowag, Willis Ronk and Marcus Spacht. Rev. E. B. Shaver and Rev. Joshua Long were the only former pastors present. Both gave reminiscences of its early history. Rev. Long is in Pennsylvania, has been connected with the church from her beginnings. Several charter members were present. Brother H. N.

Cross, 83, was the oldest male member present. Mrs. Elizabeth Beechley, the oldest female member, was also present at all three services. Words of praise were given by the pastor for these and others.

The church of Hagerstown showed a splendid missionary spirit by sending their Sunday school orchestra and the Men's Chorus for the afternoon program. Their pastor, Dr. G. C. Carpenter and wife were also present. The Hagerstown church is to be congratulated upon their splendid orchestra and chorus.

In the evening greetings from former pastors and friends were read, bringing back many fond recollections to the older members of the church. The message was brought by Rev. E. B. Shaver, the father of the missionary work of Brethernism in the Shenandoah Valley. He used as a text the words in Matthew 28:18, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." Although not young in years, he spoke with the enthusiasm of youth and ably handled his message. I want to take this opportunity of again thanking those who helped in making this day a spiritual blessing to the church.

Our farewell message was given Sunday, November 29th, to the largest crowd the pastor saw at a regular Sunday morning service. As a farewell message a copy of the Gospel of John was given to each person present by the pastor.

Rev. Thornburn Lyon has accepted the charge at this place and is already on the field. We wish him the best of success and trust the church shall stand back of him in the work he undertakes to do for the Kingdom. We will remember Brother Lyon and these good people in our daily prayers.

And now a word for New Lebanon, which is situated just 10 miles west of Dayton on the main thoroughfare leading to Indianapolis, route 11. There are three Brethren churches on this route within a distance of 15 miles. All tourists traveling the National Highway from Coast to Coast take the route through New Lebanon.

New Lebanon itself is a small village of 445 people and is quite a little progressive town. We have here nearly all the conveniences of the city, with the noise, rush and jam eliminated. The homes in the village and surrounding community are well kept. The farms are small, making a thickly settled farming district. The village is growing. Folks are moving out from Dayton and building here. Our church is the only church located in the village.

New Lebanon is located in the center of Brethren churches. We need but go 9 miles to the east and we come to our beautiful structure at Dayton. Or should we desire to journey westward we need but go seven miles and we reach West Alexandria. If the weather perchance is warm, we travel northward but 8 miles and reach Salem. Or during these cold zero days, we can travel southward and come to Miamisburg, but 15 miles to the southeast, or Gratis but 18 miles to the southwest. We are therefore in the center of things, geographically, in the rich Miami Valley, and doctrinally in the center of Dunkardism.

A warm welcome has been extended us and we already feel at home. The people are cooperating in a splendid way. We have here a splendid group of praying and working people. Rev. George Kinzie, who has labored here so faithfully for the last six years, deserves a great deal of credit for the work he has done. During these years he has trained a corps of talented and consecrated leaders and teachers which will mean much to the work of both Sunday school and church. Unlike so many places the pastor is not compelled to teach in the Sunday school as there are sufficient teachers to take care of the work. This is as it should be. This gives him an opportunity to study the work of the Sunday school and serve as pastor superintendent.

During the two months we have been here the highest Sunday school attendance was 168 up until last Sunday, when without any special effort, the record showed 208 present. There is a wonderful opportunity for growth here and we believe the field is already white for a great ingathering of precious souls. We are making preparation for our evangelistic services some time in the month of March. We hope to be able to have Rev. W. C. Benshoff to conduct the meeting for us.

Pray for the meeting and pray for us and the work here, that we might prove faithful and worthy of the work to which we have been called. We trust that you will pardon oftener in the future. We want to welcome this long letter. We will promise to write our friends who are traveling from East to West through New Lebanon to stop off with us when ever they can.

L. V. KING.

LAFERIA, TEXAS

About five years ago we were elected corresponding secretary for the Goshen Brethren church and tried to do our best to fill the office, but for some cause the office passed into oblivion. Since then there has been no corresponding secretary, so no doubt it is the privilege of any one to write. I do not intend to give the news of the church at Goshen, but will try and give a few items of interest of our trip and stay in the Rio Grande Valley of southern Texas. Having had a desire for several years to spend a winter in a warm climate, my wife having a brother and sister living here, we decided to go to southern Texas. We left Goshen November 16, enroute for East Lynne, Missouri, spent several weeks with our friends, Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Hartzler. Mrs. Hartzler was formerly Miss Emma Kauffman of near Middlebury, Indiana. They are good musicians and often sing for Gospel meetings.

From East Lynne we made a trip by auto to Nevada, Missouri, to call on my brother-in-law, Charles Phelps. From here we made a trip to Fall River, Kansas, to see my brother and spent Thanksgiving week. Then returned to East Lynne, the roads were fine and the weather delightful. Wife and I in company with Hartzler expected to make the trip to Texas by auto, but on December 5th there came a western snow blizzard, and blocked the roads for a time. So we went by rail, but before we got through Kansas the snow had disappeared, and the roads looked good along the way. When we got to San Antonio we realized a big change—palms and all kind of tropical shrubs. It is a city of southern type population, around one hundred and eighty thousand, a great many Mexicans and Negroes. Things surely seemed out of place to us when the sun arose; it made its appearance in the northwest. We left here for Sinton, near the Gulf. Our liking for Texas was not very great on this trip, we passed sand hills and rocks all along the way, but as we drew near to Sinton the scene changed to a level, fertile country, well improved. This scene continued for many miles. We landed here at 10:30 P. M. It had been raining and there was plenty of mud. But in this country when the sun shines and the wind blows a few hours the mud disappears, and it seems like walking on rubber. From what they tell us, this valley has made a wonderful advance the past five years; and if the Good Lord spares this world the next five years will show a greater advance, as tourists are coming to the Valley in great numbers. There is a railroad and paved road running parallel east to west, ninety miles and there are already fourteen towns and cities on the line. The soil is a rich black loam and the soil reaches to the water bed, 25 to 30 feet. We have not been over the valley much as yet, but the water here at La Feria is good. The soil produces nearly all kinds of vegetables, cabbage, carrots, potatoes, beets, and tomatoes are the specials. Corn does well, cotton is raised extensively, cabbage is being marketed now at $45.00 per ton. At the same time they are planting cabbage and potatoes. This valley is dotted all over with some very nice grape fruit and orange orchards. We are having daily grape fruit, oranges, vegetables and greens from the patch and trees. There is yet some land in its native state, covered with ebony, and mesquite and wild cactus and held by wealthy owners. The greatest drawback to this country is that land is too high for the poor man, and lack of outlet market for their product. The climate is fine, only when the north has a cold snow-blizzard and the wind continues from the north for several days, they get what is called a "Northerner" here. Temperature was as low as 28 degrees once, and up to 84, averages about 60. There is a fine balmy air when the wind blows from the Gulf. Churches and schools are up to the standard in the valley; This town of 1500 population, only six years old, has five churches, three school buildings and will build two more this year. We have been attending Methodist and Baptist Sunday school and church. They are very much in earnest for the plain preaching of the Word and make strangers feel at home. The Christian or Disciples are having evangelistic services at present.

the Gospel viewpoint and your mind will be free from filth. America needs clean minds. Get the Gospel viewpoint and you will forget yourself. America needs folks who put others first. Surrender your life to the Lord, and your life will be filled with righteousness. America knows that "righteousness exalteth a nation." Surrender your life and you will believe that the ideals and spirit of Jesus Christ should pervade society. America needs those folks.

At the present time Christian Endeavorers can render acceptable service in keeping our country dry. Once it was the task of Christians to put the saloon out. Now it is the task of the Christians to keep it out. Before many moons our country will have to express herself on the matter of drink. Some are saying that America wants booze back. Christians don't believe that. This is no time for resting on the oars. If you can vote, vote right. If you are too young, get everybody else stirred to vote right, around you. Maybe grandfather thinks he is too old to get out to vote. Cheer him up. Help him to take another blow at the enemy of all mankind. And remember, citizens of the Kingdom make the best American citizens.

It is my purpose as the Citizenship Superintendent of the Christian Endeavor to write you another letter before so long. It will probably be personal to each society. If there are any questions or suggestions from any society in the brotherhood, communications will be gladly received.

Sincerely yours,

Lanark, Illinois.

but there is no indication that Mary did not do her part. But more than that, Mary is known down the ages as one of the two who honored Jesus by the anointing of his feet with precious ointment. Note that this is not the same anointing which is recorded in Luke 7, nor is the Mary the sister of Lazarus either that "woman who was a sinner", whose name is not known, nor Mary Magdalene, Mary of Magdala, yet another friend of Jesus.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

FAGERBURG-SHUMAN—At the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. Nina Fagerburg, of 416 Osburn Street, Fort Scott, Kansas, on Sunday afternoon of January 24, 1926, occurred the marriage of Miss Eda Fagerberg and Mr. Ted R. Shuman, both of Fort Scott, Kansas.

About thirty were present, consisting of relatives and several invited guests. It was a very beautiful home wedding and the impressive ring ceremony was used. After congratulations, dainty refreshments were served and an enjoyable social hour was spent.

Mr. and Mrs. Shuman were the recipients of many beautiful and useful presents. They have the highest respect and the best wishes of a large circle of friends. Mr. Shuman has a position in Kansas City, Missouri, where they will make their home. Ceremony by the writer.

L. G. WOOD.

DESHONG-RITCHEY—At the home of the writer, at New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, on the evening of December twenty-third, was solemnized the marriage of Miss Roxie Ritchey and Mr. Sherd C. Deshong. Both are well known young people of the Yellow Creek congregation. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry W. Ritchey, of Yellow Creek, and is the church organist. Mr. Deshong is a son of Mr. and Mrs. John C. Deshong, of Cypher, Pennsylvania. The best wishes of a host of friends bespeak for them godspeed, happiness and usefulness in their life together.

IN THE SHADOW

GARVER—Our Brother Jesse A. Garver, was a native son of Ohio, being born in Wayne County, December 5th, 1840. He was married to Lucinda Brower in 1866 and they were permitted to live together in wedlock for 59 years.

Brother Garver was well known not only in Dayton and its vicinity, but throughout southern Ohio, where for many years he was a stock buyer. He was a man of estimable character, one who would rather suffer wrong than be harsh. Quiet and unassuming in manner, he avoided publicity and praise. He had a reputation for honesty in dealing, with kindness and consideration for all. He moved to Dayton in 1894, where he was held in high regard by neighbors, friends and business associates.

Our Brother united with the First Brethren church of this city in 1912. He was one of the most devoted and loyal members of the congregation, his life and service was an inspiration and his aid a great factor in the wonderful growth of this congregation. The church feels that it has lost one of its best and most influential members. He was more than an ordinary church member—he was a devoted Christian. His faith in Jesus Christ as Lord grew only stronger with time and when realizing his stay here on earth was short, called for the anointing service and with a full committal of his body, soul and spirit into the hands of the Lord, in his quiet way, he said, "Not my will but his be done."

W. S. BELL.

MURR—Our Brother Henry Murr was born in Montgomery county, February 17th, 1859, and was called from this life January 21st, 1926, at the age of 66 years, 11 months and 4 days. He was united in marriage to Lannie Fohrney, May 12th, 1881, to which union four children were born, three of whom survive the father. Brother Murr was born and spent his entire life in Montgomery county and was widely known. He was always interested in promoting educational work. He taught school in Madison township for 21 years, assisted in grading the township schools and was one of the first examiners appointed. He held the office of the Clerk for the Township for nine years, during which time he was influential in securing the organization and establishment of a high school, which was the second Township High School to be established in Montgomery County.

During the latter part of his teaching career he held the office of Secretary of the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company of Montgomery County, Ohio, for a period of ten years. After retiring from this office he gave his entire attention to his farms. However he never lost interest in furthering the progress of education. He was industrious, progressive and faithful to his responsibilities and trust.

Early in life Brother Murr embraced the Christian faith and united with the Brethren church. For years he was actively associated with the Bear Creek congregation. At the time of his death he was an esteemed member of the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio. His illness was of short duration of only one week and was caused by cerebral hemorrhages and for the past few days was in an unconscious state.

W. S. BELL.

HUFFORD—Thomas M. Hufford, son of Wm. A. and Julia Hufford, died at the home of his parents on November the 20th. He was twenty-two years of age, had become a member of the Highland Brethren church when but a child, and was a highly respected Christian young man, loved by all who knew him. The end came after an illness of three weeks, suffering with meningitis, yet conscious near the last, telling the father that he was ready to go to be with Jesus. Besides father and mother, he leaves to mourn their loss the following brothers and sisters—Harold, Charles, David, Olive, and Essie Hufford and Mrs. H. L. McCullough.

Funeral services conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Greenlee, of the M. E. church, Brownsville. Interment was in the Bealsville cemetery. THOS. F. HOWELL.

CARBARRY—Samuel Carbary was born in Bedford County, Pa., and was aged 78 years, 5 months, and 1 day at his passing. Brother Carbary was never married, and had lived in and around Portis, Kansas for a great number of years. He was known as "innocent Sam." We used as a text, "Keep innocency, and take heed unto the thing that is right: for that shall bring a man peace at last."

Burial in Garrett cemetery northwest of town. Ceremony by the writer, assisted by G. J. Wolters. W. R. DEETER.

STRAYER—Elizabeth Strayer was born in Pennsylvania, died in Norton, Kansas, in November, 1925, aged 78 years. A charter member of the Maple Grove Brethren church. Ceremony by Rev. A. E. Whitted, assisted by the writer. W. R. DEETER.

HARRIMAN—Jennie Harriman was born in Wisconsin, died near Portis, Kansas, December 10, 1925, aged 65 years, 10 months and 27 days. She was baptized some 30 years ago by G. J. Wolters and renewed her covenant, and was anointed some weeks prior to her departure. Burial in Crystal Plains cemetery. Ceremony by the writer, assisted by Rev. Wolters. W. R. DEETER.

PRESNELL—William Presnell was born in Henry County, Indiana, died in Beloit, Kansas, January 13, 1926, aged 76 years, 6 months and 2 days. He has lived in, and in the vicinity of Portis for over 40 years. He had made the good confession some years ago, but never formally belonged to any church. He has been a widower for nearly nine years. Burial in Hammond cemetery. Funeral at the Brethren church in charge of the writer, assisted by G. J. Wolters. W. R. DEETER.

SIMMONS—Lena Winifred Simmons, infant daughter of George and Rachel Simmons of Rich Patch, Virginia.

The Lord gave her to the home January 18, 1925 and called her to her heavenly home December 13, 1925, so blessed be the name of the Lord. She was a great sufferer and finally succumbed to her dreaded disease, spinal meningitis. Funeral service was conducted at Mountain Valley church by Rev. J. S. Bowman, after which her body was interred in the cemetery on the hill near the home, there to await the resurrection morn. Her sister Buby, preceded her to the glory world. She leaves a father, mother and one brother, Emette. She was a member of the Cradle roll of the Mountain Valley Sunday school. This is the only break in our Sunday school in 1925. We feel our loss is heaven's gain. She is another gem for the Savior's crown, and we humbly bow in submission to God's will.

MRS. ALLIE HUMPHRIES AND MRS. LEE SIMMONS.

IN MEMORIAM

Ernest Linwood Johnson

He has gone to his heavenly mansion.
The dear Lord has led him away,
To glory by mortal undreamed of,
Where no night ends the beautiful day,
And we are lonely.

We miss his dear voice and his smiling,
His sympathy sweet and his love,
Our hearts are nigh broken with grieving,
As we scatter fair blossoms above
Where he lies sleeping.

What wonder he left us for heaven,
The dear Lord had need of him there,
His soul had attained its full stature,
Pure, noble and wondrously fair,
And Jesus took him.

His labors among us are ended,
But the work is still to be done,
We must take up the threads as he left them.
For weaving must still go on,
Though hearts are heavy.

We know he is safe with his Savior,
He is one of the glorified throng;
We must trust him for light in our darkness,
And lean on the strength of his arm.
He will not fail.

His devoted wife,

L. BERNIE JOHNSON.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

AN OPEN DATE

For the fourth time I have a date, the best in the year, left open by change of program, the three weeks leading up to Easter. The date is open to the first church wanting it.

B. T. BURNWORTH, Ashland, Ohio.

READY FOR PASTORATE

It is a pleasure to introduce to the churches one of our younger men, Brother Kenneth M. Monroe, who will finish his theological training this spring and be ready to accept a pastorate. Brother Monroe is well prepared for his life work, being a graduate of the regular four-year Liberal Arts course in the University of Southern California; and this spring he will complete the three year course in the Xenia Theological Seminary of St. Louis, Missouri, taking his graduate degree at the same time. He has had considerable experience in the pastorate, having held regular preaching charges during the greater part of the past two years. Both Brother and Sister Monroe are members of the Second Brethren church of Los Angeles, California.

Any church desiring to communicate with Brother Monroe should do so if possible before March, addressing him at 6834 Washington Avenue, St. Louis, Missouri.

A Tract Table in Church

It has become universal in the Church of England to have a small table standing in some convenient place in the vestibule of the church. Prices are marked, the subject dealt with some aspects of the church's life and thought. We have noticed the same provisions made in nearly all the large Roman Catholic churches of America. Christian Scientists are inveterate tract distributors. A few churches have book tables.

Wisdom would seem to dictate the use of such a method. Before communion seasons, a supply of literature dealing with the sacraments could be placed in the vestibule, and an announcement made of its presence and use would make for more intelligent Christians in our pews."—The Presbyterian Banner.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

The Ministers at the Famous Dayton Convention of 1882

They "looked unto the recompense of reward"—

Not the reward of silver and gold,

Rather "accounting the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt,"

"For they endured as seeing him who is invisible."

Only a few of these pioneers remain, but these few and their successors and their widows and dependents, who served without regard for material reward, and so were unable to lay by in store sufficient to provide for their declining days, must not be neglected in their time of need by those who enjoy the benefits of their toil.

Where the Chief Responsibility Rests

We believe our people are loyal and will meet the demands made of them by the general interests of the church if rightly presented, and that among the other appeals, the Benevolences of our church will not go without response. We believe also that they will not be unmindful of the service rendered by, and the heritage come down to them through, the aged servants of God in our fraternity, but will show their gratitude in proper and substantial ways, if opportunity is offered. We have faith in them, too, that they are not uncompassionate or inconsiderate of those who have been unable to lay by in store for the season of enfeebled health and unproductivity and so find themselves denied the bare necessities of life, but will let their sympathy flow out in benevolent deeds, if the appeal is sincerely presented to them. And because they are loyal, grateful and sympathetic we may be assured of their adequate support of this vital interest, if the situation is presented to them. But people cannot be expected to give to that cause about which they have not been properly informed, or concerning which they have been allowed to grow indifferent and forgetful through lack of proper agitation. Those who expect response from the people, therefore, owe it to them to keep them informed and aroused as to the urgency of the situation.

To the accomplishment of this end the responsibility rests heavily upon the pastor; he is the key to the problem of enlisting the sympathetic cooperation of the members of the congregation. The executive officers of the boards charged with the direction of our Benevolent work have a responsibility for widely informing and enlisting the interest of the people, as also has "The Evangelist", both of which have been seeking in every proper way to bring the message to the people. But after all is said and done, a congregation's sympathy, or lack of it, for a particular cause is largely determined by the attitude of the pastor. If he is indifferent or lukewarm about it, the membership will very generally take that attitude. If he makes no preparation for the offering and no announcement of it until the day arrives for receiving the offering and then shows himself satisfied to take just what the people happen to have with them, he will find his people feeling themselves to have discharged their responsibility with giving nothing more than that. But if the pastor is keenly conscious of the stewardship of his influence, if he believes thoroughly in the cause that he is called upon to support, if he is desirous that his people shall do their full share and that every member shall measure up to what is expected of him, if he feels himself honor-bound by the claims of denominational loyalty and Christian fidelity to give the cause his full and sincere support, his people will in the main adopt his attitude and give in a manner that will merit commendation. He is first in responsibility for the success or failure of the cause among his people. And because of this fact nothing is more important than that every one whom God hath clothed with the mantle of ministerial leadership should be fully persuaded in his own mind that the care of our superannuated ministers, or their widows and orphans, is the church's bounden duty, and that the provision of a home for the aged and infirm of our denomination is the mark of a truly Christian brotherhood.

Let no pastor look lightly on this matter. It is serious. Neglect causes disappointment and suffering on the part of the needy and a heavy burden of anxiety and nights of sleepless planning on the part of those whom General Conference has entrusted with the direction of this work. While the pastors have shown a much more wholesome loyalty to our Benevolence work this year than last, yet there is still much to be desired, according to information received from the treasurer, Rev. J. L. Kimmel, who says, "Our offering last year was $3,671.69, but we owe quite a number of those on our superannuated list for January and February." It is a pity that the deserving men and women who are dependent on this support should be allowed to go without their checks in the very midst of a heavy winter. But the treasurer cannot write checks on an empty treasury. It is a most worthy thing to build and maintain churches, but they who tell the aged ministers, That wherewith thou mightest have been honored and supported, we have given for the building of elaborate churches, for the purchase of cushioned pews, for the installation of costly pipe organs and for many other things that the fashions of our day demand, will deserve the rebuke of our Lord spoken to the Jews, for making the word of God of none effect by their tradition. He who thinks more of the religious display he is able to make than of the discharging of his primary Christian obligations to those of his own household of faith, is far enough off the track of vital godliness that it stands him in hands to stop and make a realignment of his ideals and aims.

It is not a burdensome thing that is asked of us—only $4,000.00. The treasurer says, "At forty cents per member it would take just ten thousand members to do the giving, and would still leave twenty thousand to give nothing—for I know we have 30,000, if not 35,000 members." Even if we should not have that many members, but should consider only the very conservative figures that our pastors have been willing to report to our statistician, and which are supposedly active, after the 10,000 members had given the $4,000.00 for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, at 40 cents per member from the next 10,000 we could give the Brethren Home Board an equal amount and still have 5,000 active members whose contribution would not be essential to success. So it is a small thing we are asked to do, and we ought surely to measure up to expectations. The Ministers' Fund must have not less than $4,000.00, or 40 cents per member, allowing for a three-fifth shrinkage, and the Home Board is asking for a like amount. Let us make good.

At the Annual Meeting of the New York Bible Society, held in January, the general secretary, Dr. George William Carter, reported the largest distribution of Scriptures ever made by that society. During the year 1925, 958,461 copies of the Scriptures in 67 different languages were circulated. A large part of this distribution was free and the rest sold at cost or less. Over 58,000 volumes were distributed to immigrants arriving at Ellis Island and 120,000 distributed to sailors and seamen from all parts of the world. The missionaries of the society visited the hospitals, the prisons and the institutions for the poor and helpless. There were foreign speaking workers who carried the Scriptures to the Italians, Greeks, Germans, Russians, Scandinavians, and those of other nationalities. All this offers a suggestion to our people who are interested in the distribution of tracts, especially to those living in the centers of population. One of the finest tracts you can distribute is a portion of the Scriptures, or the entire New Testament if you refer, which can be gotten as cheaply as a penny a volume. In every city there are hospitals, prisons, institutions for the poor and helpless and groups of foreigners, where a distribution of the Scriptures would be welcomed and prove a real service. Also some well chosen tracts, setting forth some special truth of the Gospel, or its claims upon life, might be used to good advantage.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Send money for Superannuated Ministers' Fund to J. J. Wolfe, Secretary, North Manchester, Indiana, and for the Brethren Home to Henry Rinehart, Treasurer, Florá, Indiana.

Has your Christian Endeavor society gotten in on the Forward Movement campaign fund yet? The General Secretary, Miss Gladys Spice, reports some new ones on Christian Endeavor page.

President Jacobs continues to keep the brotherhood informed about the things of interest relating to our college. We are indebted to Dr. Jacobs for this service.

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor at Portis, Kansas, informs us that he is now engaged in a two weeks' evangelistic campaign in his own church, he himself doing the preaching and Prof. H. L. Wimmer assisting in song. The meetings began February 14th, and he requests prayer in their behalf.

Long Beach's new church year book, a copy of which has reached us, has this year, in addition to the regular officary, membership roll, reports and messages and statement of the financial system, a very complete constitution and by-laws. It is a very neatly printed booklet of 52 pages.

Dean J. Allen Miller left Ashland, February 16th, on his trip to the Holy Land and to Egypt. He has kindly promised us an occasional report along the way, which, we are sure, will be greatly appreciated. We are publishing in this issue the addresses where he may be reached by correspondence at various times and places on the journey.

The General Secretary, Prof. J. A. Garber, has a number of things of interest to church school workers in this issue, among them being his mention of the fact that March calls for special effort along the line of Sunday school evangelism and training for church membership. Articles of special interest and helpfulness will be found in the March EDUCATOR.

We are in receipt of a letter from Brother W. T. Lytle, which tells us of an evangelistic campaign in which he is engaged at Bryan, Ohio, where Brother E. M. Riddle is the faithful pastor. The meetings were still in progress and we were not informed as to any results, but he speaks highly of Brother Riddle as a pastor and of the fine relationship that exists between him and his people.

We are in receipt of a program for a "Community Training School" at Warsaw, Indiana, February 15, to 19, arranged by the Warsaw-Winona Council of Religious Education and purposed "to give an opportunity to Sunday school workers to train for greater efficiency in Christian service." Evening sessions only are held. Brother C. C. Grisso, pastor of the Brethren church, is dean of the school.

Dr. W. S. Bell, pastor of the largest church in the brotherhood, the First church of Dayton, makes report of the evangelistic campaign recently held with Brother Charles H. Ashman as evangelist and which resulted in such great success, concerning which we made mention in last week's paper. One important element in the success aside from the strong preaching of the evangelist, was the fine preparatory work of the "Seventy."

We are pleased to have reported the work of the Center Chapel church, near Roann, Indiana, where Brother George Swihart is conducting a successful evangelistic campaign, at which fifteen souls had already responded. We are grateful to Brother O. C. Lemert for this report, and we want to assure Brother Swihart, who recently came among us, that we shall be glad to have him make personal use of the Evangelist columns at any time he may desire.

We are glad to note the continued loyalty to the Evangelist on the part of so many of our churches as evidenced in a special way by the maintenance of a place on the Honor Roll, some for as long as eight years. We also welcome the new churches reported this week, namely, Washington, D. C.; Mulvane, Kansas, and Pleasant Grove, Iowa, and we congratulate their pastors on this achievement. We hope they will enjoy the fellowship of the Evangelist family so much that they will never allow their membership to lapse.

Miss Longaker makes the point that disposing of one's estate by process of will is not always a safe and sure way, for wills are often broken by greedy relatives. And true it is, about the only way to be certain that one's accumulations (large or small) will go where he desires, is to have them legally distributed before his death. Wills cannot be depended on, generally; there is one that can however. The last Will and Testament of our Lord cannot be broken; we can depend on that; no one can deprive us of the heritage we have received from him.

We have an interesting letter from Brother G. C. Carpenter, pastor at Hagerstown, Maryland, and we are glad to note his enthusiasm and loyalty in regard to the church paper, and we are informed by Dr. Teeter in his Business Manager's Corner that Hagerstown stands among the five highest in numbers of Evangelist subscriptions. We are grateful for such expressions of satisfaction and confidence. Brother Carpenter calls attention to a proposed trip to Egypt and the Holy Land. It is a trip that all who can afford it would find abundantly worth while.

We were recently in receipt of a novel invitation in the form of a large red heart, inviting us to a Christian Endeavor program for Valentine Sunday at Louisville, Ohio. The printed message properly arranged, read as follows: "Have a heart! Come to Christian Endeavor on Heart Sunday, February 14th, at the First Brethren church, 6:00 P. M. Topic: 'What is Faith, and What Does It Do for Us?' Louis Clapper, Leader." Taking advantage of special days and seasons in fitting ways helps to maintain interest among young people. Louisville's resourcefulness has played an important part in her success in Christian Endeavor.

Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor at Berlin, Pennsylvania, and his good people have wrought a great work in their field in that a beautiful new church stands ready to be dedicated. It is a church of sacred memories to Brethren people, and the old church house was particularly thus enshrined for the local membership, and it speaks well for their vision and courage that they were thus willing to press forward and take leave of their hallowed but inadequate quarters. Fourteen members are reported added to the church during the year just closed. We will all, no doubt, be given an opportunity to see their beautiful building through the columns of "The Evangelist" when dedication has taken place.

Brother Frank G. Coleman, pastor at Flora, Indiana, reports his evangelistic campaign directly to the Evangelist, concerning which campaign we had a brief report last week clipped from the Flora paper that was sent us. But this report is much fuller and also contains a number of other items of interest. In addition to the large number of additions already received, the outlook is the more encouraging in that the pastor informs us that the revival is not yet closed. And that is as it should be. Why should a revival always close as soon as a series of meetings is concluded? It does not appear as though it would at Flora.

Brother B. T. Burnworth writes of his evangelistic campaigns conducted at Masontown and Conemaugh, Pennsylvania. At the former place, where Brother J. L. Gingrich is pastor, there were forty-seven confessions and additions to the church. It was a great victory for the substantial church at Masontown. And the number fourteen seems to have been an equally great victory for Conemaugh where the community situation is difficult. These splendid people have done a fine work under the leadership of their pastor, Brother G. H. Jones, against great odds. And may they not grow discouraged and leave the field in the days to come, notwithstanding the obstacles. It is to be regretted that they are to lose their good pastor, but what will be their loss will be Muncie's gain, and Muncie needs his leadership.

GENERAL ARTICLES

"And I Sat where They Sat".--Ezekiel 3:15

By H. F. E. O'Neill, President Board of Benevolences

The last Sabbath of February has been set aside by the National Conference as the day for the offering for Benevolence Work of the church; both that of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund and the Brethren Home.

There are at the present time for 1926 about eighteen (18) persons who are receiving monthly payments from the Superannuated Ministers' Fund. It will require a minimum of Four Thousand Dollars to adequately meet the demands for this year. The amount may seem large when you think of it in one lump sum, but when you think of it divided among the individual membership of the brotherhood to raise this amount, certainly none of us will need to go hungry to supply the needs of those dependent upon it; and I say honestly, can we do less than help meet the needs of these worthy folks?

I believe it would help if we would sit down for a few minutes and imagine ourselves in the circumstances of these people. Those who have either given their own lives in the public service of the church or who have stood by their husbands and have had no small part in making possible the success of those who have given their lives in this work, or yet those who have been a part of the minister's family and because of very meager remuneration on the part of their father many times they were seriously handicapped in the necessities of life, not even daring to mention any pleasures or luxuries.

It makes all the difference in the world when we can quietly sit and at least imagine ourselves in their place. It gives us a different perspective and I believe if each member of the Brethren church who reads this article will sit down and visualize himself in the other person's place, he will rise up to be more enthusiastic and to give more liberally to the support of this work.

The best possible way to show your sympathy for them and your interest in them is by making a liberal offering for this work on the last Sabbath of February. In addition to those who give in the regular offering of the churches, there are literally hundreds of members who "OUGHT" to make individual subscriptions of from $5.00 to $100 and until many of such individuals really get this on their hearts, this work will have to go begging, or as we say, "living from hand to mouth."

There is one other phase of this work that is sadly neglected and that is that many of our folks have made their wills and many more ought to and include in them from $100 to $10,000, payable to the Board of Benevolences for the Superannuated Ministers' Fund. Think this over and if you have made a will and have not included this interest of the church, make a codicil and add it to the will already made. If you have not already made your will, make one now and include the Superannuated Ministers' Fund. Making a will is like becoming a Christian, not a thing to be put off until you are ready to die, but should be attended to now while you are enjoying good health and the right use of your intellect and your soul will be blessed and happier as it approaches the death experience.

If we will put legs under our prayers all phases of Christian work will progress more rapidly. Do it Now.

New Brighton, Pennsylvania.

How Others View It

It would be a reflection on our twentieth century Christianity to leave these brave veterans in cold neglect while the evening shadows are thickening around them. They should have a large place in the heart of the church and an ample score in her budget. No other cause should have priority over that of ministerial relief.—Dr. E. P. Herbruck.

The Reformed Church

But the day has not yet come when pastors' salaries will permit for the future. It is not likely that laying up a generous surplus sum such ideal state will bless the ministers of the present generation. This being true, the churches do well to make provision otherwise for their faithful servants. It is a happy circumstance that the Reformed church sees the need of this form of benevolence, and is beginning to meet the situation most creditably. The response has been quite generous within the last several years, and we cherish the reasonable hope that soon the sum of $500 annually will be available for every minister at the age of 70 years or at prior disability.—Dr. J. C. Leonard.

The Evangelical Church

The laity of the Evangelical church has said it is right and just that our faithful and loyal ministers, the men who have helped us to find our place in the favor of God and his church, shall be pensioned when the time of their disability and retirement will come. A fund approaching the One Million Dollar mark has been consecrated to this noble purpose. While our faithful people have given, and are continuing to give, we want them all to know that at this writing there are one hundred and forty retired ministers' families receiving help from this great fund and their appreciation of this help cannot be put into print, but can best be realized in the mind of the thoughtful who will consider for a moment what it must mean to have spent your energy and life in a cause that has afforded a living on the basis of strictest economy and then in the days of age and failing strength to have that meager income cut off.—J. R. Mergurth.

A drunken man driving an automobile is the demonstration of the failure of civilization to protect its citizenship. And yet the frogs in the pond are croaking for liberty—liberty for what? to get drunk.

The Vet'ran Preacher

There's a work of love and duty
That devolves upon us all;
There's a tender, pleading message,
And its tones like music fall:
Help our weary vet'ran preachers;
Scatter roses o'er their way;
Rally round them, hasten quickly—
Not tomorrow, but today.
From the wells of deep affection
Now their hearts with gladness fill;
Do not wait their names to honor
Till the pulse of life is still:
Break the box of alabaster,
Pour its oil upon them now,
Make their dwellings bright and happy,
Wreath in smiles each furrowed brow.
They have borne the royal standard,
They have preached his Holy Word;
But their strength has lost its vigor,
And their cheek its youthful glow,
For the frost of age has touched them,
And their locks are white as snow.
Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Though their feet no more shall stand,
From the top of Pisgah's mountain
Faith beholds the promised land:
Soon triumphant like an army
Marching through the realms above,
They will shout the grand old story,
Robed with white and crowned with love.
—Fanny J. Crosby.

Shall we Make the Brethren Home Self-Supporting?

By Frank G. Coleman

"Where there is no vision, the people perish," so said the wise man, so say we all. How to get you the vision is the problem. Since you all can not visit the Home at Flora I am going to take you on a visit to the Home this afternoon. Just step into my car and we will soon be there. In two minutes we are turning into a fine cement drive that leads into the grounds and up to a fine, two story, brick building. We enter by way of a spacious porch, running the entire length of the building, into a very fine reception hall. Should we turn to the right we enter the living apartments of the Superintendent and Matron, but turning to the left we enter a large, well lighted, beautiful living room. Four 9x12 rugs joined together furnishes a splendid covering for the room and has the appearance of one big rug. At the far end of the room are two large ferns which lends a bit of color to the room. A large library table, loaded with good books and magazines, occupies the center of the floor. A davenport is just to the right, while a victrola stands near the door, but better yet, around the room, seated in comfortable chairs are the happy faced ones who call this home. There are eight of them at this time, each busy with their own pastime, but not too busy but what a glad smile of welcome greets the visitors. Were it a Lord's Day afternoon you would be given the treat of your life in joining in the services which we hold for these dear people each Lord's day. Just to see their happy faces and to hear them sing the dear old songs is a joy indeed. A great hall leads directly from the front door to the dining hall with the kitchen in the rear. The rooms for the members of the Home are on the second floor, with every modern convenience at their hand. A basement underlies the whole building, where the laundry, drying rooms, electric plant, heating plant and fruit rooms are located. Do you ask why there are not more people in the Home? Then we must tell you that there are a number of applications but they cannot be accepted because the applicants have no funds or property and the Home is not self-supporting, therefore, they must be refused. If there were sufficient funds, additional land could be purchased and the Home could be made self-supporting from the proceeds from the farm lands. We have the very best environment possible, with the very best Christian people in charge. We have the Home and plenty of room; if we had the support we could open the doors of the Brethren Home to those who stand in urgent need of this help. With the proper amount of support there could do it? Benevolence Day affords the Brethren opportunity be a waiting list instead of a lot of empty rooms. Shall we to lay upon the altar an offering that will make this very thing possible. An opportunity to do a real piece of constructive Christian service that will honor our Lord and bring untold happiness into the lives of many who need just such a home. We know that should you be able to make this visit in person that you would at once catch the vision and do this offering in true Brethren style. There are many things that are yet to be done and the only way to finance these is to depend upon your gifts. Let us therefore, give as unto the Lord.

Flora, Indiana.

Optimistic Regarding Benevolences

By A. L. Lynn

The last Sunday in February is the time for your Benevolence Day Offering. I am optimistic enough to believe that on this day Alexander the Coppersmith will meet with the greatest defeat ever recorded in the history of the Brethren church. Fervently do I pray that Brother Greenbacks and Sisters Silversmiths will be on hand in such numbers that insignificant "Aleek" won't get a look-in. For he certainly has done much evil to the Superannuated Ministers, widows and dependent orphans of pastors, and to church work in general.

The reason for my optimism is three-fold:

- (1) It is a worthy cause. (2) The need is imperative.
- (3) We have the remedy.

(1) It is a grand thing to be young—to have the sight clear, the hearing acute and the step elastic, and all our pulses marching on to the drumming of a stout heart. They were young. Now they are old. The grandest things in all the universe are the old things. Old mountains—old seas—old stars—and glorious old age—if found in the way of righteousness. 70 or 80 years. All for God and making this world happy. Splendid—glorious—magnificent. Because of their heroic faith; self-abandoned, tireless efforts; great exploits, our life is made richer, fuller, deeper. It is a worthy cause we are asked to support.

(3) We have the remedy. God has richly blessed us with this world's goods. Therefore, we have opportunity—likewise increased responsibility. There are manifold scriptures, lucid and insistently emphatic, which unequivocally show what the Christian's attitude should be toward his fellow-men's needs. Reader, what is your attitude toward these scriptural injunctions? Do they strike you as being authoritative? I refer to just two or three passages. Paul says: "If we provide not for our own, especially they of the household of faith, we have denied the faith and are worse than the unbeliever." John says: "Whoso has this world's goods and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the Love of God in him?" "Freely ye have received, freely give."

Generous giving to a Christian cause has a decidedly beneficent effect upon the giver. "It is more blessed to give than to receive," therefore, we should not snub a generous impulse if we wish to grow. Also, giving rejoices the heart of the recipient. A "God bless you" is good, but not good enough. Flatulent hallelujahs may give relief to the one who indulges in the vocal exercise. They certainly do not purchase the necessities of life. "More taffy and less epiphany" is a pungent way of stating the case.

Brethren, if we give as Jesus would have us give, I am confident that the statement of the prophet "at evening time it shall be light" shall become more meaningful to the veterans of yesterday.

Let us make this the biggest, the most generous and LOYAL, SELF-DENIAL OFFERING you have ever made—a real sacrifice—giving up something. They did as much for us, what shall we do for them?

"I did so much for thee, what wilt thou do for me?" asks Christ from Calvary's cruel cross.

Verily I say unto you: 'Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me.'

I permit you to make the conclusion. Money talks.

Give it a chance on the last Sunday in February. It is a persuasive speaker. Lest we forget: Don't give pre-emption to insistent Alexander Coppersmith. Give William Greenback or some larger denomination the floor. I am sure there will be much rejoicing in the brotherhood, and the angelic hosts will join in the sweet accord.

The Preacher and His Message

By George H. Jones

(Paper read before the Ministers of the Pennsylvania District Conference held at Masontown, October, 1925)

I have been asked to present a paper before this group of preachers, and I felt that the best message I could bring would be one pertaining to our calling. Not a message on pastoral work, or the social life of the minister, but one dealing with the man and his message. As to the pastoral field, that is another matter. I am just a bit hesitant as I am neither an authority in homiletics, nor a critic of style in discourse. However what I have to say is the result of some 22 years of observation in the ministry, so it may have some weight.

By way of introduction I may remark in a general way that to do effective work in any field a man must believe thoroughly in his calling. The minister must believe, not only in the usefulness of his calling, but in its peculiar office. He is not his own master, he is commissioned as a steward. Stewardship presents a peculiar relationship, a steward represents another. He is the servant of Jesus Christ. The preacher is before anything else a redeemed man; then only can he be THE VOICE OF GOD.

It is peculiarly true of Christian preaching, that the Message is bigger than the man. There is no other public speaking in which this can be as truthfully demonstrated.

He is the bearer of a divine message—is the "voice of one crying in the wilderness" of sin, the ordained servant of a different order. He is set apart to a specific task; a soul winner; a moral instructor; a teacher of saintly souls; a defender of the faith; an example of truth and holiness. He dare not be original, but the message is the OLD MESSAGE. He dare not change the offer of grace, nor the terms of reconciliation, he is only the voice. He is human, of course, but he must realize that Jesus Christ was also human, that the Holy Spirit dwells in humanity and that God is transforming humanity in his own way, not ours.

The man that wholeheartedly accepts this understanding of his ministry will more and more realize the ideal toward which God is working in him. It is when a man forgets this that he becomes a human scold, a critic more self-righteous than helpful. This perhaps explains why some men become helpless in their ministry and distrusted by their brethren, who are still preaching "the faith once delivered unto the saints." Such a man selects themes and discusses problems that savor more of man than of God—of earth than of heaven. Illustration. Recently an observer in religious matters noted that almost fifty per cent of the themes published in a great city paper dealt with science, literature and art, rather than with the message of the ministry.

One of the dangers of the modern pulpit is the itch upon the part of many a preacher to popularize his message. Book reviews are advised; modern plays are analyzed; Movies are recommended; open forums for the discussion of labor problems; variety is advised for the sake of attraction. The conscientious servant of God looks askance at these innovations—perhaps they are all right, no doubt they are in their place, but the pulpit is consecrated to the Gospel message.

The danger in this direction to the church is that of filling the house of God with lovers of a "soft gospel," pleasure seekers who are trying to fit the Faith to the frivolity of the times, rationalists who are explaining away the miracles, and scientists who are trying to remodel revelation into evolution.

"Recently Dr. Dubois, a French scientist, gave a detailed account of three fragments of three skeletons which have been found in the early Pleistocene strata of Java, and which introduce us to a new species, which is also a new genus and a new family, of the order of primates, placed between the Simiidae, and Hominidae—in other words, apparently supplying the "missing link" between man and the higher apes, which has so long, as well as so anxiously, been awaited. The material is sufficient for a close osteological comparison. The cubical capacity of the skull is about two-thirds that of the human average. It is distinctly dolicho-cephalic about 70 per cent, and its norma verticalis astonishingly like that of the famous Neanderthal skull. The dental apparatus is still of the simian type, but less markedly so than in other apes. The femora is singularly human. They proved beyond doubt that this creature walked constantly on two legs, and, when erect, was equal in height to the average human male. Of the various differences which separate from the highest apes and the lowest man, it is said that they bring it closer to the latter than to the former. One of the bearings of this discovery is upon the birthplace of the human race. The author believes that the steps in the immediate genealogy of our species are: Prothyllobates; Anthropopithecus Sivalensis; Pithecanthropus, only top of skull, erectus; and jawbone Homo Sapiens. This series takes us to the Indian faunal province and to the southern aspects of the Himalayan chain, as the region somewhere in which our specific division of the great organic chain first came into being."

I have no doubt but that all this as related furnished reliable data concerning both the origin and development of our race, but it is a pity that a man cannot find something more inspiring than such "plain evidence" of modern needs, to preach about.

The most effective message is the one with apostolic purpose, with the Baptist's purpose, not that which deals with scientific purpose, or philosophic or even social problems, but that which pertains to the heart, the conscience, and the life. Here and there are some men who can touch upon these themes with skill and effect, but the need of the average preacher is to focus on his calling.

Bible Preaching

What is Bible preaching? It is primarily the "thus saith the Lord." This was the secret of John's success; do not misunderstand me, success, not popularity or fame. It was the secret of prophetic success. It was the secret of the Reformation. It put life, vigor and power into the message of the church fathers. It is what we need today. Bible preaching has been on the decline for some years. It is not palatable. There is less Scripture quotations now than ever before. Exposition is old fashioned. We are less inclined to quote authority from Holy Writ than from some famous school. There are more beautiful literary quotations and poetical effusions than ever before. This is a constant temptation to the scholar. There is a divided appeal, less that of Scripture and more that of human experience. Rather than an infallible rule of faith and practice, there is a tendency to preach the gospel of "the house by the side of the road, the Abou Ben Adhem poetry for a vigorous theology.

There can be no safe substitution for the Bible in preaching. A little dilution of other literature goes a long way, it is excellent for the study, but dangerous for the pulpit. There can be no other inspiration for the Truth of God than the inspiration of his Word. Through it he speaks. From it we get our laws. By it we are taught the highest moral standards. It is the most popular book published. Everybody has access to it, while I confess I do not have Browning's poems in my library. Illustration. I suppose I have a lot to be thankful for, in my ignorance.

Paul preached it in such a way that Athenians criticized it, but Corinthians and Thessalonians and Bereans were converted by it. When a church becomes noted for its Bible preachers, that church is being used of God. It is the best way God has of reaching men.

Some preachers use the Bible for convenience sake: It is good enough to furnish texts and some subjects, but what an effective weapon it is when men use it as a sidearm, rather than the chief weapon of spiritual attack. They talk of liberty of thought and weaken their appeal by ridiculing traditional interpretations until people are asking themselves, "What can we believe?" They cease to be converting and inspiring preachers because they fail to identify their teachings with "thus saith the Lord." History is but the repetition of man's dealing with man, but inspired Scripture is a more cheerful message, it is a history of God's dealing with man and it points out hope as the other points out despair. God's Word is everything in a truly Christian pulpit.

To be fully effective, the message should be full of Christ. The man who hides behind Christ in his message will succeed. He may be unpopular, he may be laughed at, he may even be abused, but he will be saved, he will be right. Jesus is the source of our message. He is the life of our message. He is the Redeemer and that is what humanity needs, even if it does not want it. He is our pattern. Not only ours, but our fellow man's. He may not be acceptable, but he is the only hope of a better day. He may be the incarnation of love, but we must not forget that he used a scourge, at least once, possibly twice, in the temple. Sometimes men need the truth scourged into them as well as to be wooed by love. He is the only conqueror of sin. Sin is still as sinful as of old. Manhattan is as much like Babylon, as any city of antiquity.

It should be full of wholesome doctrine. Truth is dear to God and needful to man. Christ was first the teacher, then the Savior. He said, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." His prophetic office is just as important as his priestly or kingly. His apostles were empowered to proclaim and unfold his doctrine. Each one taught dogma, then practice. The servant of Christ must do the same today to get apostolic results. There can be no practice without doctrine. Truth is in order to exemplification. The modern cry of narrowness when doctrine is preached, is a mistake. The preacher need not be any narrower than Christ. There is no support for the objection to doctrinal preaching. The Bible is built upon doctrine. Philosophy is built on doctrine, so, too, is reason. Religion is first a doctrine, then a life. There is a doctrine of God, of the Holy Spirit, of Christ, of heaven and hell, of sin and of man. Christianity has its tenets. The preacher cannot afford to compromise Bible teaching. He should have the biggest creed of any man. Jesus kept making greater demands upon the faith of his followers with each succeeding revelation. At first they staggered under his exactions, but after receiving the Holy Spirit they accepted all communications without question. The preacher must be a defender of the faith even if he stands alone. He is to awaken the dead and be the instrument to impart abundant life. Doctrinal preaching would solve many modern church problems, even bringing to life the dead.

Considering the character of the man and his message, the preacher must be true to his denominational standards and spirit. When God sets the solitary in families he expects them to be light unto the world. He who makes his home what it should be is the best of citizens. We have vowed allegiance to Jesus Christ, and then to the church in which we are laboring. We are moulded by its history, its teachings, its practices, its principles. We teach those who love, honor and support it, and who have received their spiritual birth in it, hence our messages should uphold what we feel are its own peculiar standards.

In conclusion let me emphasize the fact that the preacher and his message must keep an account for two worlds. The present and past tendency has been to be practical in our preaching, which means preaching more for this world. Sanitation and its bearing upon our physical welfare, the springs of political corruption, the bootlegger and his suppression, the nationalization of huge industrial enterprises, the physical development and recreation of our communities, the educational progress and the making of good homes, these and a score of other welfare schemes have been interesting. It is called practical Christianity. Then there is the glorification of ethical culture. Human sympathy and benevolence, morality, good citizenship, etc. This is all good advertising for the minister and his church, but the question is, does it pay in spiritual dividends? Illustration. The minister who resigned from every club, fraternal order and social organization.

No doubt human betterment has its place in preaching, but spiritual values are of more moment. Eternity looms up and is large with glory or woe for men. Christ taught, "Labor not for the meat that perisheth, but for that which endures for life eternal." Paul tells us "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come?" Again a man came to Jesus, asking about an inheritance, and Jesus asked him, "Who made me a divider over you?" It is true our Lord supplied bodily needs and improved social conditions, but only as subordinate to the promotion of the heavenly Kingdom. He spoke of the world beyond. He presented Heaven as a cureall of life's inequalities and trials and as the realization of a perfect existence. He told of a place of torment to be avoided. He dealt with both time and eternity but gave prominence to the everlasting. It becomes the preacher then to imitate his Master and preach for heaven more than earth. Like him we must project the heavenly spirit into earthly affairs. We must get people into the Kingdom of glory as well as into the Kingdom of Grace. At the great day it will be found that the preaching which secured the most stars in Christ's crown of rejoicing was the man and the message most like him and his message.

Illustration—A great preacher went to hear a man celebrated for his Biblical knowledge. He came home delighted with the clear and brilliant expositions of the truth that he had heard, but chilled with the coldness of the man's intellectuality. It was true, clear, Scriptural reasoning, but that was all.

He went in the afternoon to hear another man, this one noted for his fervor. He came back delighted with the unction and earnestness of the preacher, but it was a fire that scorched. He burned him with his fiery denunciations. There was no room for the blunderer or weakling.

He went again at night and this time he came home instructed and thrilled. The sermon had not only been expository, but it had the warmth of a man in loving earnestness. It had too the light of the patience of God. It was not a fire that scorched, but a fire that warmed. It was the power of the Holy Ghost speaking the truth in love; the Bible ablaze with holiness; the Father God pleading for the return of the wayward child. This was true preaching.

PRAYER

O God, who hast put thy mercy in our hearts through the experience of thy love in Christ, by the incentive of thy Holy Spirit's teaching, help us so to live that we may be true witnesses for thee. Thou hast given us light; aid us through holy living, watchfulness and love to make thy light visible in our lives from day to day. We thank thee for the fellowship of witness with our Lord Jesus Christ and with all his faithful followers. Thou hast put into our hands the torch; help us to pass it on, still all aglow with faith and faithfulness, to others.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT.

The Unlimited Field

By Freeman Ankrum

TEXT: And the field is the world, and the good seed, these are the sons of the kingdom; and the tares are the sons of the evil one.—Matthew 13:38.

These words were spoken by Jesus likely in the house of Simon and Andrew in Capernaum to the disciples, following the speaking to the multitude by the seaside. When opposition developed to his teaching Jesus resorted to the use of parables, which both revealed and concealed truth. The words of the above text are words given in answer to a request by the disciples for an explanation of the Parable of the Tares.

While this production is not meant as an exposition of the Parables of the tares, there are perhaps a few details that may be noted in passing. The sower is the Son of Man, and the field is the world. It may be that we as serious thinking people may need to realize that the world or field is unlimited in extent. There are fences of prejudice, likes and dislikes, that will need to be torn down and removed entirely. The Son of Man as a sower of Gospel seed sowed among the Hebrew people, but to those who took up the burden of good news there came a wider sowing and eventually there broke in upon the minds narrowed by Judaism the fact that this was not a field limited by the boundaries of their own small country. As conviction came zeal increased and we find Paul the master pioneer of missionaries daring suffering in all its forms to spread the seed beyond the borders of the limited locality in which Jesus lived and moved.

While the owner of the field slept the enemy came and sowed tares. Perhaps some of the warnings given by Jesus were given with the fact of the sleeping in mind. Likely he foresaw that scandals and offenses would arise, denials, betrayals, treacheries and deceits would come about and that even the apostles would quarrel among themselves. Thus in the visible church evil would be continually mingled with the good. We have yet in part to realize that the more we sleep at the post, the greater the amount of evil that will predominate in the visible church. Today as we look out upon the wide expanse of the field and see it in all its varying moods with the marks of sin on every side it may be just a little difficult to imagine that there was a time when the evil one had not scattered his tares and the field was a delight to the eye and an inspiration to the soul. Let us turn the pages of time and go back to the very dawn of the Hyleon days of the Old World, then young; it must have been an unceasing delight, a masterpiece of beauty and joy. When the Divine Creators rested from their work and looked upon the products of their own hands the imagination of twentieth century man would be unable to picture the paradise of God in its magnificent splendor as it was when unmarred by sin. Then man came, he was not satisfied to dwell in the midst of soulless beauty. Man was the bringer of the plague, he lost Eden but gained the need of a Savior. With the coming of that which caused the grief and death of generations, man had let in that which he was powerless to remove. Try with all his limited power, he was unable to produce a cure, and it became necessary for the Sower to come. Thus we look upon the field today—not as God made it but as man and Satan have made it. We see the field that had once waved in undescribable beauty blighted as a bed of flowers is stricken by the untimely frost of autumn. As in the days gone by there flashed over the wires of the first telegraph instrument the words, "What hath God wrought!" so we look out upon the marred handiwork of God and say, What hath sin wrought! There falls upon our ears the wailing of the unfortunate and helpless, and we see again what Satan hath wrought. Fellowship, peace and harmony are broken and frayed. Intimate friends made enemies, families broken up and the home circle completely annihilated. The statement of 1 John 5:19 that the whole world lieth in the evil one was never more true than it is today. It is guilty before God and there ascends unto him the groans from oppression and injustice.

Each sunset finds our nation more lawless than the preceding one. Laws are evaded through technicalities and defeated by those who have been sworn to uphold and interpret them. The lawyers and scribes of Jesus' time failed in a large measure in reaching the points of evasion and the loading of technicalities upon their fellow men that some of our modern criminal lawyers have reached. Wealth purchases immunity, and when apprehended freedom, while poverty-stricken and friendless criminals oftentimes suffer without mercy. We make and break more laws than any other country. The calendars of our courts are crowded because of legal intricacies and the lack of a common sense attitude toward the law's intentions. During the past summer President Coolidge said, "If we cannot govern ourselves, if we cannot observe the law, nothing remains but

MONDAY

NEW LIGHT ON THE KINGDOM—Matt. 13:44-52.

Many did not, and do not yet, realize the great and vital significance of the Kingdom; Jesus brings forth new and wonderful meaning to this old conception.

TUESDAY

BANE OF IRREVERENT FAMILIARITY—Matt. 13:53-58.

Familiarity without reverence breeds contempt and unbelief. Those who would know much about Christ must maintain a deep love for him and a devoted attitude toward him, or he will lose the divine charm and wonder of his personality for them.

WEDNESDAY

HAUNTED MEN—Matt. 14:1-12.

As Herod was haunted by the ghost of his sin, as the blood of Cain's brother rose from the ground to witness against him, as Joseph's brethren wert self reproached as they faced him after many years, so are the guilty souls of men ever haunted by the ghosts of their dead sins.

THURSDAY

A DESERT PLACE—Matt. 14:13-21.

There are many spiritually desert places in this old world, places filled with multitudes hungering for the Bread of life, and many dying without its satisfying nourishment.

FRIDAY

TESTING THE DISCIPLES—Matt. 14:22-36.

"Jesus will not have them to be clinging only to the sense of his bodily presence—as ivy, needing always an outward support—but as hardy forest trees which can brave a blast", says Trench, "and this time he puts forth into the danger zone, . . . And by the issue he will awaken in them a confidence in his ever-ready help."

SATURDAY

HYPOCRISY DENOUNCED—Matt. 15:1-9.

We merit the denunciation of Christ no less than the Pharisees, when we exalt forms and ceremonies above heart religion and creeds and tradition above the written word of God.

INNER RIGHTEOUSNESS—Matt. 15:10-20.

That is the only kind that counts in the long run, Jesus insists, and to guard the heart is the thing of supreme importance.—G. S. B.

to have some one else govern us, to have the law enforced against us and to step down from the honorable abiding place of freedom to the ignominious abode of servitude." This quiet man of New England realizes that a country that cannot longer enforce her laws is sliding swiftly toward oblivion. No preacher in the past few hundred years has had as much to contend with, as the Spirit-filled and Spirit-led emissary of the Lord Jesus Christ today. The Spirit of God seems to be slowly withdrawn from the world and instead of men who will fearlessly challenge conditions from the pulpit, oftentimes they are a party to them. Surely the Devil who hates the church must be proud of some of his servants who stand in clerical robes and deny the fundamentals of the Old Book. More and more must the men who at heart fear God and not men, find there is little cooperation from those who should stand with them. Many times instead of churches being composed of Spirit-filled worshippers, they are filled with unconverted sinners. What inducement to the man in the street to come into fellowship with a church when the preacher is dishonest when it comes to meeting his obligations, and the members of the church in the main are there because of business and prestige. The crying need of the church today is for more men who are clean hearted in the pulpit and clean mouthed in the street. There are preachers in every church who have killed their influence because of the language and stories outside of the pulpit, and the Brethren church is no exception.

This is an age in which many men and women have sacrificed their very souls to purchase notoriety. Thus we see while the watchmen have been sleeping, Satan has thoroughly filled the field with all manner of things which will benefit him and detract from the perfect grain which should have been produced in great quantities. He has not neglected one single corner of the field. The jungles of the tropics, the icefields of the arctics, the comfortable habitations of the temperate zones, all have felt the touch of the Satanic power. In savage hut, in the comfortable home of the laborer, in magnificent palaces, he has also plied his art. Surely, surely, unless there soon comes that which will call a halt, the human race must plunge into disaster.

In all the gloom of broken homes, evaded laws, and sin that abounds on every side, there shines one ray of light and that is Jesus. This field that has been blighted is still beloved of God, for God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life. He has not turned his back upon the sin cursed world but here and there continues to gather his own. Even as the Prophet Elijah lost sight of those of like faith, so do we at times in the gloom of night come to the same error. God valued the treasure in the world and sent his evangelists to dig beneath the uncouth surface for the gold hid therein. He paid an awful price, the price of his Son and yet there are countless numbers that continue to trample under foot the matchless price paid for the redemption of the souls of men.

As Jesus looked out upon the approaching crowds of Samaritans who came to him as he sat at Jacobs' well, and pointed out the fact that the fields were ripe already for the harvest, so is there need again to realize that the statement made then was never as true as it is today. This field is teeming with masses of people who are surging in restless waves toward those things which satisfy not. The enjoyment and satisfaction that does come is only temporary. Yet the mistake is made in the pulpit by using the things which in themselves are of passing interest, hollow and unsatisfying, to draw people into the church. There is only one drawing card that will cleanse and satisfy, and that is the lowly Nazarene. Law will never be a panacea for the ills of the world. Legislation may deter but will never prevent crime. We may cover the inflamed place on the Social Body until it will appear as the surrounding flesh but the cure is not in the whitewashing, but must be in a depth that will touch the very bottom of the affliction. Instead of commencing on the outside and working in, we must reverse the order and commence on the inside and work out.

It is brought to our notice almost daily that placing the lawbreaker in confinement does not cure him of criminal tendencies. There is a cure for the world's unrest, there is that which will be a panacea for broken homes, and disrespected parents, there is to be found that which will far supercede the fines and imprisonments meted out on every hand, and only one, and that is the One who has been so maligned today in some so-called institutions of higher education, and among some self styled brainy men,—The Lord Jesus Christ. Truly the field is the world in all its sinful immensity, and the time is short for the reaping of that which will stand when the tares are gathered in their final place of disposition. Let us then enter this field with the Helmet of Salvation and the Sword of the Spirit which is the Word of God, then and not until then shall the Lord of the harvest be satisfied with our reaping.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Ad Interim

By M. M. Hoover

OUR SCRIPTURE

And as they heard these things, he added and spake a parable, because he was nigh to Jerusalem, and because they thought the kingdom of God was immediately to appear. He said therefore. A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. And he called ten servants of his, and gave them ten pounds, and said unto them, Trade ye herewith till I come. But the citizens hated him, and sent an ambassador after him, saying, We will not that this man reign over us. And it came to pass, when he was come back again, having received the kingdom, that he commanded these servants, unto whom he had given the money, to be called to him, that he might know what they had gained by trading. And the first came before him, saying, Lord, thy pound hath made ten pounds more. And he said unto him, Well done, thou good servant: because thou wast found faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities. And the second came, saying, Thy pound, Lord, hath made five pounds. And he said unto him, Thou yound, Lord, hath made five pounds. And he said unto him also, Be thou also over five cities. And another came, saying, Lord, behold, here is thy pound, which I kept laid up in a napkin: for I feared thee, because thou art an austere man: thou takest up that thou layest not down, and reapest that thou didst not sow. He said unto him, Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked servant. Thou knowest that I am an austere man, taking up that I laid not down, and reaping that I did not sow; then wherefore gavest thou not my money into the bank, and I at my coming should have required it with interest. And he said unto them that stood by, take away from him the pound, and give it unto him that hath ten pounds. I say unto you, that unto every one that hath shall be given; but from him that hath not, even that which he hath shall be taken away from him. Howbeit these mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me (Luke 19:11-27).

OUR MEDITATION

The purpose of giving this parable seems to be stated in the words: "Because they supposed that the kingdom of God was immediately to appear." However, in the plan of God, the kingdom was not established, at least in the form the Jews thought, but has been postponed indefinitely. There are, to me, two main teachings in this parable: The promised return of the king to establish his kingdom; and the stewardship expected of the church during his absence.

A brief explanation of terms should reveal that the nobleman is Christ himself,—and where is the noblest of earth's nobility that can compare with heaven's nobleman.

Next, the servants are the "called out" ones in the earth, the twice-born, blood-washed saints, heirs of God and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ. The pound represents the message of the gospel in all its fullness. The command, "Trade ye herewith till I come," surely is the imperative, the "eternal must" incumbent upon every believer in Christ.

The Book is teeming with passages which declare that Jesus will come to earth again. It is, to be sure, a most comforting and consoling hope, the bridegroom will come to receive his bride. Ofttimes we grow weary of life as we are compelled to live in a world where Satan still rules just as far as he can, when it seems our efforts for righteousness amount to little or nothing,—we are wont to pray, Come Jesus, come quickly. But perhaps that is just a little display of weakness, and our trust in God is not doubly secure,—My grace is sufficient."

Jesus will come, and all Christians long for his coming, but as to the time, the human mind doesn't know, and I think it best we do not. But one thing is absolutely certain, and that is, during his absence, the work of propagating the good news of salvation to a dying world is placed in the hands of the men and women of his church, with the aid of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said the gospel must be preached. He surely intended that every mortal should have an opportunity to accept or reject, but owing to our laxness and indifference souls have come and gone and never had this opportunity. What will our answer be? How have we "traded" The parable suggests rewards for "trading", but how can we think of rewards when we consider what we owe Christ, and never can, nor will repay. God loved "so" that he gave his Son; if ye love Christ "so" we will give him our just, honest and complete stewardship.

OUR PRAYER

Lord Jesus, we cannot fathom thy great love and sacrifice. Just give us grace and a desire to be only faithful servants till thou dost come. Amen.

Jesus Teaches Respect for Law. (Temperance Lesson)

Scripture Lesson—Matt. 22:15-22.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 1.

Golden Text—Think not that I came to destroy the law or the prophets: I came not to destroy, but to fulfil.—Matt. 5:17.

LESSON LIGHTS

"Fierce opposition was offered to the tribute law ... which was regarded as an impiety, inasmuch as no Lord could be recognized but God. ... Others offered opposition to the legality of the tax." But the payment of the tax did not endorse the rights of the government, but only the honesty of those who took benefits from it.—Illustrated Quarterly.

God's Prohibitions

"The Gospel of God's Prohibitions" was the subject of a leading article in the "British Weekly," and recently republished in a Boston paper. It pointed out that there is a strong leaning away from prohibition in any form, in any phase of life. We are told not to say "Don't" to the child. (And doubtless there are too many don'ts in the average parent's vocabulary and not enough thought given to constructive direction of youthful energies). But negatives have their place in life and to rule them out entirely is to lose control and let life run adrift. There is reaction on all sides against external control. "Yet the wisdom of God, even when it adapts itself to one stage of human progress, is never out of date, and there may be elements of a gospel even in a prohibition. . ."

"These negative Commandments of the ancient days are at least an indication of something in human nature—a something which is with us still, otherwise there would be no need for rules against picking flowers in public parks or acts against rowdyism in public meetings.

"It is true that a prohibition may sometimes provoke rebellion rather than acquiescence. It is also true that law is often strangely powerless to accomplish its own objects. That was what St. Paul discovered when his failures drove him from law to Grace. That was the lesson of Bishop Butler and many another moralist, that there may be a very wide gulf between a man's sight of his duty and his obedience to what he sees. Yet these things do not alter the fact that through the ages governments and law-makers have addressed the human will as a great reality, and when they have said Thou shalt not they have implied that there were certain degrees of self-restraint if not of positive attainment, which were within the reach of men if only they gave their minds to it.

"The fact that in all civilizations the average citizen likes to count himself law-abiding is a proof that even negative enactments have been of some use in the education of humanity; and the will power which has availed to accomplish this might raise men farther yet if only they were sufficiently

Sunday School News

As reported earlier Field Secretary Stuckey spent the month of January among the churches of Washington and California. He reports a very cordial reception and a hearty response. Reports from others testify to strong addresses and helpful conferences. Brother Stuckey is now working in Northern Indiana.

Birmingham Again

The earlier announcement of the coming Birmingham Convention brought forth inquiries concerning it. A number of persons have expressed a strong desire to attend. Some are planning to do so. The preliminary announcements have impressed Sunday school people with the greatness and far-reaching significance of the meeting at Birmingham. Persons thus informed have difficulty of seeing how they can afford to miss this wonderful convention. Thus it is really not a question: Can I afford to go? But can I afford not to go? It will be a great blessing to the Brethren church to have its full quota of ten delegates. Now is the time for schools that want to be represented to make applications for credentials through the undersigned.

Vacation Schools

Church school leaders are busily engaged preparing for their vacation school session. A suggestive article by Brother Dyoll Belote appeared in the February Educator. Other articles will be appearing in our publications. The writer will be glad to answer questions concerning this work. We have here in the college young people who are desirous of serving as superintendents or teachers in vacation schools, conducted by our churches. Are there churches that will avail themselves of the services of these deserving young people? If not, these young people will have to apply to other churches for a field of labor. They are ready and eager for work. Interested parties may address the writer concerning these workers.

Church School Evangelism

The March number of THE EDUCATOR features church school evangelism and training for church membership. Thought-provoking articles are supplied by Brethren ministers. Each writer calls upon superintendents and teachers to do their utmost to win the young for Christ and to train them for membership in his church. Both ministries represent peaks in church school service. Pastors will find decidedly usable material for instruction classes in the little book entitled: "Studies in the Way of Life." There are twelve lessons which will help to prepare young and old to accept Christ and to enter into the fellowship of the church. This booklet may be had from the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren Church at the rate of ten cents per copy or one dollar per dozen copies.

The Quiet Hour Presented

The following presentation was sent to the California Endeavorer by a former Quiet Hour superintendent of Kings county, California. This would be good for Juniors:

Have something to hold candles such as a cross. Nine girls.

Quiet Hour. First girl reads Bible verse. Candle represents Bible study, Second girl offers prayer, candle represents prayer. Third girl sings song, "Near to the Heart of God." Represents meditation.

Prayer Circle. Fourth girl, song, "In the Garden," represents prayer circle. Fifth girl, same song, candle represents inner prayer circle.

Family Altar. Sixth girl, song, "I'm Praying for You." Represents prayer list.

Seventh girl, song, "Have Thine Own Way, Lord." Represents O. O. U.

Eighth girl, same song, represents Pocket Testament League.

Ninth girl, same song, represents Family Altar.

After this each girl walks to cross with candle in her right hand, letter in left hand, says this candle represents placing candle in a holder in the cross, with left hand she holds the letter in front of her, and after each one has done this the words "Quiet Hour" are spelled out.

Scene: Early morning, large clock in prominent place showing time. Girl enters, takes Bible, sits down and reads. After a moment kneels to pray, while "Near to the Heart of God", or some prayer song is sung. Rises, puts on hat and coat, leaves the room. Song, "Ere You Left Your Room This Morning."

Quiet Hour Visualized

This presentation shows how the Quiet Hour should be kept, first, meditation and worship, then reading of the Bible, then prayer.

Meditation. Scene: Girl seated with bowed head, while someone behind the scene reads the following verses: Psalm 46:10; Josh. 1:8; Psalm 19:14. Then someone sings, "Near to the Heart of God,"

The Hill

It seemed so steep a hill
From where I stood,
My courage well nigh fled,
Try as I would.
But as I nearer drew,
There seemed to be
Some kindly power smoothing it
Ahead of me.
And lo! as I trudged along
Renewed in hope,
There was no hill at all!—
Only a gentle slope.

Radio Messages from the American Indians. Matthew 9:35-38

This is a little Indian boy speaking to you from out in Oklahoma. He has never given any messages over the radio before but he is going to tell you about his life.

"I was born here in this state of Oklahoma on a big farm. My parents were quite poor when I was born, for although their farm was big, the soil was not very good for farming. Several years ago they discovered oil on the land and since then they have sent me away to school. Now, I have advanced until I am about in the same grade at school as other boys and girls of my age. That's the reason I want to tell you my story, for there are other little Indian boys and girls in Oklahoma, who could tell the same story as I am telling, needing help but their parents have not discovered any extra money to send them to school and help them.

"When I was but a small child I learned that years before when my relatives of long ago were living they had been rich. They lived in groups, or tribes as you call them, and traveled about over the country. They hunted wild animals to live on and liked their way of living. Then people came in ships from across the sea and gradually took their land from them and pushed the Indians who were my forefathers, across the country. After many years of this, finally the time came when my people had been driven into so small a territory that they had to change their manner of living entirely. They could no longer wander around the country and live as they pleased, for they did not have enough land for that.

"My people then settled down on the land that was left to them and most of them became farmers. Then land was mostly very poor and that is the reason that I was poor when I was born, as I told you a little bit ago. Now, I want to tell you about my childhood days. Perhaps, I can tell you better if I tell you the new things I have learned since I have been sent to school. I have learned to wash my face every morning and take a bath twice a week. When I was small I was not taught how to keep clean. I have learned to clean my teeth and keep my hair washed and to have my hair cut often, so that it will look nice. I knew so little about how to keep clean before I went away from home that I even slept in the same clothes that I wore during the day, a lot of nights.

"Another nice thing that I have learned since being away from home is that there is a God who loves little boys and girls. I have learned to pray to him each night. I am so glad there is someone who cares when I am bad or good. I am glad there is someone who loves me. When I have trouble learning how to act like other children and learning to talk correctly so that others do not make fun of me, I talk to him about it and he helps me to feel better. I am so glad Jesus came to earth to give his life so all of us can be forgiven of our sins and learn to live better.

"A still different thing that I am happy about learning from my teachers is how to make friends and be kind. I used to play mostly by myself and I did not know much about being friendly. It makes me feel good whenever I am kind to someone and I am making lots of friends among those who go to school with me. Of course I appreciate all the things that I learn in school, the things that go with every education. I like to study history and geography and learn to read and write. My teachers have been so nice to me in helping me to understand the things that are hard for me. I work hard to get compliments from them, for when they say that I am doing well, it makes me happy.

"Now I want to tell you about home. Since I have had a chance to go to school, I have been telling my father and mother how other people live and the things they do. Home is so much happier now for they have been getting new things and making our house so much nicer. Then, too, they have learned to love Jesus like I do, and that makes them happier. The only thing that makes me unhappy is that there are a lot of other Indian children who have not had a chance like I have. I wish that everyone who hears this story of my life would try to do something to help my people. They need to be educated and to be taught about Jesus like I have been.

The Last Will and Testament

"The Sky Parlor," Long Beach, Cal.

February 17, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

Once upon a time (oh, oftener than that, I'm sure!) a man with thoughts and intents most pure, got into his head the notion of showing his devotion to his Lord and Savior, not only by his behavior and his earthly life and daily walk—"but," said he, "I'll make my money talk!"

So he drew up his last will and testament, setting forth this most high and lofty sentiment: "When I am dead and gone, every dollar, stick and stone that I can call my own, shall go to Foreign Missions, without 'strings' or conditions!" And so he passed away, thinking not one would gainsay; but the flowers had not begun to bloom on his simple and humble tomb before "bouquets" began to fly from "friends" and relatives passing by! "Nuts!" said one, tapping wisely on his head; "always a little 'off', I said." "Undue influence," said another—"should have left it to his brother." And a forty-second cousin (so "far-removed" that he had never even seen this relative who had roused his spleen) took pains now to go out of his way—"Base ingratitude, I say—giving all his money away when he knew I needed an auto or two, and my promissory note was coming due, and even a chicken farm wouldn't do me any harm."

And so they got together—these "birds of a feather"—these "friends and relatives, after hurling all their cruel expletives at the head and heart of the departed, until even their cold hearts should have smarted with pain and shame. His memory they did insult, his will ne'er did consult, except as proof of his failing intellect—of his injustice, ingratitude and neglect! They one and all agreed that his will they would not heed. Said they, "He always was a crank, and us he'd never thank for our disinterested advice when he was here, so near and dear!" So to the courts they went, upon one purpose bent. For once they were all united, and their wrongs they recited, and appeared quite delighted when that good will was broken—and Foreign Missions got not a centfare token!

(To be concluded in our next).

Yours in the Master's Service,
 THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

A Chinese Funeral

What is a lucky day for a funeral? If it is in China and you are a poor man, you are lucky to get any day for a funeral at all. For often in China when a poor man dies his body is thrown into the fields for the dogs to eat because the family cannot afford the high cost of a funeral. Sometimes the dead are put into boxes and set up in the graveyard to wait until the family exchequer can stand the strain of paying for the final rites. And in many cases as this never happens the dead are left unburied for all time.

The Rev. George F. Erwin, Southern Methodist missionary in Harbin, Manchuria, describes the funeral of a certain rich Chinese neighbor of his whose body was kept in the house for twenty-two days after death while the fates were consulted as to a lucky day for its interment.

During the twenty-two days of waiting two Chinese bands which occupied booths erected just outside the house, took turn about making the welkin ring with their noises, beginning at some such hour as four o'clock in the morning and much disturbing the neighbors' morning naps. One could not conscientiously term this music, asserts Mr. Erwin, doubtless thinking of those twenty-two sleepless mornings. Also during that period of waiting, religious services were conducted continuously by both Taoist and Buddhist priests.

Preparatory to the approaching great occasion, the family as soon as the man died erected an arbor as high as a three-story house from the front veranda of their home to the street. This was covered with rugs, ornamented with fancy Oriental decorations, and brilliantly lighted with many colored lights.

When the day finally came, Mr. Erwin, taking his Chinese boy as an interpreter, attended the funeral ceremonies. The procession was so elaborate that it required one hour and thirty-five minutes to get it in line for marching, and the line of march, instead of leading direct to the grave, wound up and down the main streets of the city for about four miles. It required twenty minutes for the long procession to pass a given point.

Seen through an American's eyes, many strange things were carried in this funeral procession. Most of them were made of paper and included the following: Two street dancers or clowns; two tombstones standing on the backs of turtles; eight displays of gold and silver, to indicate the great wealth of the deceased; two large houses and two bridges over which the soul is supposed to cross into the next world; eight stands of flowers; four chests of money; two soldiers; a business office with two desks, two men, and a washstand; two life-sized paper horses; twenty-five signboards, representing scenes from ancient Chinese history; a carriage and an automobile; a temple with many gods; a fine house in which the soul will live in the other world; a bedroom; a sedan chair; thirty-four gay banners of many colors; thirty-eight long white banners telling of the man's good deeds and qualities; eighty-two banners, each made of about ten yards of the finest silk, the gifts of friends; twenty-nine large silk umbrellas; an enlarged picture of the deceased carried by four men; a sacrifice to be offered at the grave, consisting of a live sheep, a dressed hog, bread and fruit; and brass bowls of burning incense carried by small boys in bright red costumes.

Twenty-six priests dressed in gay robes walked in the procession, and four bands, one an ordinary brass band and the others of Chinese instruments, were placed at intervals.

Behind all this sixty-four men carried the casket, made of timbers six or eight inches thick and painted with beautiful figures. The family dressed in white followed in automobiles. This man had only two wives, although a Chinese gentleman is allowed as many wives as he is able to support, and some of them have as many as thirty.

About a thousand people marched in the procession, and a great crowd followed. There was one man who had been hired to explode cannon crackers along the line of march to frighten off evil spirits. At the grave most of the things that had been carried in the procession were burned, and thus they passed into the next world for the soul to enjoy throughout eternity.

The cost of this funeral was in the neighborhood of $7,000.—Christian Advocate.

FOREIGNERS IN NEW YORK CITY AND THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

The "Gospel Advocate" for August '6, 1925, has an interesting article on the subject, "What is the church doing for the foreigner in America?" This article is written by Robert S. King. The Record takes the liberty of quoting certain passages from this article which are of special interest to friends of the Bible cause:

The foreign white population of New York is greater than the combined population of Boston, Detroit, and Chicago.

There is one street—Jones Street—that is 445 feet long, and in a short walk of one hundred and twenty steps you will pass buildings that house 1,072 people, including 522 children, representing ten nationalities. You will hear these people speaking Italian, Russian, Polish, Greek, West Indian, Austrian, French, Spanish, Irish, and English... The American Bible Society is doing a great work among these foreign-born of New York in the distribution of Bibles in fifty-three languages among these millions of people.

The late General William Booth, in estimating the dangers confronting the twentieth century, declared that the chief dangers were:

"Religion without the Holy Ghost;
 Christianity without Christ;
 Forgiveness without Regeneration; Morality without God, and Heaven without Hell."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FLORA, INDIANA

After closing our work at Sunnyside we gave our time to evangelistic work until December sixth when we came to Flora to take up the work as pastor. During the fall months we held meetings for Witter, Ankum, Stuckman and Grisso. The Lord blessed our work together and many souls are happy in the Lord as a result of our labors. These brethren are pastors of fine churches that are growing and doing things for the Lord. We are happy to have had the pleasure of working with them. December 6th we came to Flora and found the church in need of a leader, as they had been without one for two months. The first day was given over to the reception of the pastor and family with an all day meeting. The work opened up in fine shape, and on Christmas we put over our White Gift in a very creditable manner, our offering was around a hundred dollars. January tenth we began our revival meeting, continuing until the 31st. The meeting is now history but the memory will live in the minds of the people of Flora for years to come. We were able to have with us to lead in the singing J. B. Long and wife of Los Angeles. We had these people engaged to help us in a meeting at Sunnyside but since coming to Flora we used them here instead. Long is a fine song leader, while Mrs. Long is an artist at the piano, and their work among the children is very effective. This is the second meeting that I have held in Flora. Five years ago Albert Ronk assisted me in a meeting that was considered the best in the history of the church. We are glad to report a new standard set in this meeting as the results somewhat eclipsed the meeting of five years ago. The weather was not the best but there were only one or two nights that the effect was noticeable on the meeting. The greatest crowds in the history of the church packed the building night after night, balcony, Sunday school rooms, vestibules, in fact, every available space was filled. The first week was given over to messages to the church; at the close the invitation was given for the church to take a stand for Christ and the entire church moved forward to attest their earnestness. That night the invitation was given to sinners to accept Christ and from the first invitation confessions were received at every service throughout the entire campaign, with possibly two exceptions. They continued to come until fifty had come forward. Forty-two have been baptized and received into the church, four will go to other churches, while four await baptism. The meeting was remarkable in the ages of the converts, as they ranged from seven to seventy-seven. One man who at the age of seventy-seven had never confessed Christ, came tottering down the aisle, weeping his way to the Cross. Strong men bowed in prayer and eyes filled with tears as men came forward to confess Christ as Savior and Lord. The meeting was remarkable, too, in that several cases heretofore considered as impossibilities were won for the Lord. The revival is still on and others are inquiring as to the more perfect way of life. There will be some to come from the Darwin church by relation which will no doubt bring the grand total to sixty.

The Sunday school has taken on new life, the attendance averaging for the month of January 220, running as high as 245. The church has been aroused and strengthened along all lines and is ready to do things for the Lord. On Wednesday night after the meeting we observed our communion. The people are saying that it was the best communion they ever attended. This speaks for the spirituality of the church. Never have we worked with a people who were as willing to do what they could to make a meeting a success, and if there is any credit to human methods they are entitled to it all. Besides raising the expense of the meeting, which was $411, the good people of the Flora church gave the pastor a love offering of $130, which was gratefully received. We are asking that you continue to remember us at the throne of Grace day by day as we labor for the Blessed Son of God.

F. G. COLEMAN.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

"On the Road to Summerland"

The holiday season was observed with appropriate services by church and Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. The White Gift offering amounted to $150, and the Home Mission offering was $362. The church that is thoughtful of others will never lack for itself.

A novel Radio Concert and Musicale was given by the young people recently. The radio part of the program was more amusing than satisfactory. Father Static and his angel (?) chorus seeming to be in possession of the air. We were reminded of the fact that the radio industry is yet in its infancy and that this may be the reason that the child misbehaves so often in the presence of company. The program, however, was highly satisfactory.

This church is still on the Evangelist Honor Roll. A list of 104 subscriptions was just sent to the Publishing House and there may be more. We are wondering how many of our churches exceed that number. How many, Dr. Teeter? The "Evangelist" is becoming better and better. It is a telling factor in the work of the church.

Some of the Brethren ministers or laymen, men or women, may be interested in "The Churchmen's Pilgrimage to the Holy Land and Egypt." The announcement says: "This Pilgrimage is the first of its kind from America and must not be confused with the average tour or cruise. The tourist sees with his eyes—the pilgrim sees with his soul." Bishop E. V. Shalyer of Nebraska is the spiritual leader and sponsor of this Pilgrimage which is made under the direction of the Temple Tours of Boston, and under the personal directorship of Prof. Albert E. Bailey, said to be one of the best among such leaders. The number in the party will be comparatively small, thus increasing the advantages. The cost is much below the usual amount. Bishop Shalyer promises to open the way to the inner privileges of Holy places and holy things which have never yet been opened to Americans. The writer hopes to join the party, various conditions permitting, but, should it prove possible, would prefer to have in the party more Brethren people, laymen or ministers. Only church people will be in the party. Any who may be interested should write us at once for full information and booklet describing the Pilgrimage. Every minister should visit the Holy Land once during his ministry and the sooner the greater will be the benefit, measured by the increased service rendered the church. The Pilgrimage sails April 8, four days after Easter, and returns June 7, unless an extension tour is made in Europe which would be an added privilege.

G. C. CARPENTER.

BERLIN, PENNSYLVANIA

Our last report from the "Mountain Top" was about the time of National Conference. The events during the fall months were those common to any congregation. Our annual business meeting was held the afternoon of January 1st. Reports showed that fourteen members had been added during the year, that all financial obligations had been met and that there was a surplus in the hands of each treasurer. Perhaps the most outstanding accomplishment during the year was the building of the new church. A new constitution had been adopted during December, and governed by this officers were elected and plans laid for the future. The present pastor received the call of the church to continue for another year from April 1st.

Two events have occurred just recently which will long be remembered by the Brethren of Berlin. January 31 marked the close of services in the church which was dedicated December 4, 1881, under the ministry of Elder H. R. Holsinger. It was a day of gladness, glad at the thought of going into a more adequate place of worship. With some there was a sadness caused by the thought of separation from a place made sacred by years of Christian associations. The message of the pastor at the morning service was in the nature of an appeal. A plea was made that as a people we leave behind all those things which hinder the work of the church, and that we take with us those things which are essential to spiritual growth. Especially that we carry with us the faith which has made us a distinct people. The evening service was informal in nature. Opportunity was given to all present to give expression to the feelings and emotions which might possess them on such an occasion. Quite a number of short talks were given, expressive chiefly of the thought of the spiritual blessings which have been experienced in this place. Twelve or more who were present at the dedication more than forty-four years ago were present on this last day.

On February 7 the congregation began the holding of services in the basement, or social rooms, of the new church, and will continue here till the time of dedication. The attendance at all of the services was large in spite of the inclement weather and a blocked condition of by-roads. There were 227 in Sunday school. This part of the building to be occupied for the present was dedicated with appropriate services. While the building is practically finished, the date when we will dedicate has not yet been fixed. We must make this event late enough to be reasonably sure of good weather. Announcement of date will be made later. Our people here are to be given great credit for the substantial and commodious church which they have built here at this historic place. This building is a credit to our beloved church. A fine Christian spirit has been manifested throughout. We are truly grateful for the words of encouragement and help which have come to us from over the brotherhood. We ask an interest in your prayers, brethren, that we may occupy so as to meet the Lord's approval. W. C. BENSHOFF.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

About two weeks ago, I represented the College at the inauguration of the new president of the University of Akron, Dr. Zook, formerly of the Federal Department of Education, Washington, D. C. About one hundred colleges were represented. Each delegate appeared in the colors of his school, so that the academic procession presented a very brilliant appearance.

The last Faculty party was in honor of Dean Miller who set sail from New York last Tuesday, February 16. As guests we had Rev. Arthur Smith, who sails with him, and Mrs. Smith and Mr. P. A. Myers.

In the absence of Dr. Bame, who has been elsewhere holding evangelistic services, the local men here filled his pulpit for him. He is now at Savannah, near Ashland, in a union evangelistic campaign.

Dr. Bell of Dayton was here last week. He transacted some business with the Publishing House and also with the College.

We are not admitting any student who has failed elsewhere this past semester, as we had some 25 who either failed here or were conditioned. The mortality list has been unusually high here this year, due in part to the fact that we are bearing down a little harder than in former years.

Tuesday evening of this week, Dean J. A. Garber had a social for the men of the school of whom he is the dean. It was a profitable and enjoyable affair.

Mr. Floyd Taber of California, senior, was recently called to fill a week engagement teaching in the Plymouth High School. The superintendent of that place reports most favorably on his work.

Last week's notes reported that we had engaged Miss Harriett of Middlebranch for the summer school. It should have been Miss Harriett Wingert. The last name was omitted.

Professor McClain gave a series of two addresses to the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. at the college recently upon the subject of The Inspiration of the Bible. I think that he met the usual objections to the theory of genuine inspiration and deepened the faith of those who heard him.

The Men's Glee Club recently sang in Chapel. This year we have both the Girl's and the Men's Glee Clubs, but only the former is planning on a trip through our churches. This year we expect to go to southern Ohio, after Easter.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

ANOTHER VICTORY FOR DAYTON

The annual evangelistic campaign of the Dayton church is now history. The meeting began on Sunday, January 10th and closed on Sunday, January 31st. Brother Charles Ashman, pastor of the Johntstown church, was the evangelist.

The campaign was a success from the beginning. The "Seventy" organization had done good preparatory work in a canvas of our district and were in touch with the un-churched people. The music was in charge of our own music director. The choir was assisted by the Rodeheaver Male Chorus and assisted by the Rodeheaver Malt Chorus and Ladies Treble Cleff Chorus of this city.

Brother Ashman faithfully delivered strong and appealing Gospel messages. That were well received by all. Ashman is a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth." Our church enjoyed his preaching and fully cooperated with the methods used.

Outside of a few bad nights the attendance and interest was good. On account of the two intensive campaigns of the past years, conducted by Brother Elmer C. Miller, many thought we could not expect a large ingathering, yet without any undue pressure, the results measure favorable with past years.

There was a total of 90 who came forward. Sixty-six have been baptized and received into the church, one by relation, one by letter and four were reconsecrations. Of the remaining eighteen, some are held back by parental objections and others will unite with other churches or be baptized later. It was a great victory and we are rejoicing in the results. W. S. BELL.

EVANGELISM AT MASONTOWN PENNSYLVANIA

Just six years ago in the last of Brother Martin Shively's pastorate at this place I had been asked to assist him in a meeting with the visible results of 43 additions. Brother J. L. Gingrich at that time having just graduated from Ashland College and married on the same day, came to this his first pastorate, and, during the meeting now reported, a church meeting was held and he received the call for the sixth year. I, of course, remembered many of the fine folk at Masontown and knew they have a fine reputation of knowing how to respect their ministers, and to do many fine things that make the heart of both pastor and evangelist rejoice. I suspected the singing would be good, for some other churches have found it out and have borrowed on special occasions from the Masontown choir. We struck all kinds of weather, though this is not the beginning of a tale of woe, but we worked and prayed and visited for two weeks before we had a confession, and then the last week when the final count was made there were 47 very desirable and substantial additions to the church. For a repeat-meeting in which the evangelist was not new and therefore not a curiosity as a drawing card, and the pastor tried and true, we consider the Masontown meeting a victory for them, for God and the Kingdom. Once more we went away from these fine people, realizing that again they had lived up to their former reputation of hospitality and did not withdraw when the free will offering was taken with just an announcement of the same without solicitation. We thank Masontown and rejoice with them in this victory.

Conemaugh, Pennsylvania

Conemaugh was next without any rest, closing one meeting on Sunday night and beginning the other on Monday. I made my home the two weeks in Conemaugh with the pastor and his good wife, Brother and Sister G. H. Jones, who needs no introduction. Johnstown is his home and all but one of his pastorates have been held around the city. He had also just received a call for his sixth year here, but guess it is no longer a secret that he expects to take up the work at Muncie, Indiana, sometime in the early Summer. I was glad to work with Brother Jones for we had been at Geneva together and so far as I know the only two ever graduating in the Young People's Division of the International Training School from the Brethren church. His work at Conemaugh therefore among the young people was visible, and all you need to do is to ask the young people if they want Brother Jones to leave. I heard regrets from them on every hand. Well, it was a bit unfortunate time for a meeting, and possibly two weeks is too short a time. But the railroad men were not given a chance, they were worked 16 out of every 24 hours and sometimes more. Conemaugh has a problem in that when an American family moves out, two foreign families move in. Well, Conemaugh has some things worth while. First, they have a wonderful building, one of the best in the brotherhood. Then they have some mighty fine folk and when it comes to cooks and good looking folks, Conemaugh ranks high. Now as to the ingathering, they just simply are not there. Five churches had a three weeks' union meeting overlapping ours one week and without a single confession and we had 14, which made us feel pretty good. This would have been an ideal place to have had a reconsecration meeting and report great numbers, but inasmuch as, first, that does not add to the Kingdom new recruits, and second, that to report great numbers and not say that the pastor was the first one to reconsecrate himself and was followed by his most consecrated members, and to try and to make Evangelist readers believe they were confessions and additions, is a modern form of prevarication, we have not resorted to this method. I repeat again there were 14, that's all and that's the truth, and it was a victory and Conemaugh knows it and gave me a nice offering, and I thank them for it, and shall remember their kindness and the fine fellowship we enjoyed with all of them, and especially in the home with Brother and Sister Jones. I hope the shifting that is taking place this spring among several churches of pastors will be changes for the good, but a church certainly can afford to go slow in choosing a pastor, for there is no more vital relation in the Kingdom than that of pastor and people, sheep and shepherd.

Smile

Joke with him who jostles you,
Smile on him who hurries you,
Laugh at him who pushes you.
It doesn't cost a cent!

Don't be carrying round that chip,
Wink your eye and curve your lip,
And from life's sunshine take a sip,
It doesn't cost a cent!

Don't be always first to rile
Your neighbor—give him just a smile,
It will cheer the dullest, while
It doesn't cost a cent!

CENTER CHAPEL, INDIANA

An unique revival service is in progress at the Brethren Center Chapel church near Roann, Indiana, where Elder George Swihart is the pastor and evangelist. This church has been struggling along for some time in a community which is well worked by the churches of various denominations. It was only by the efforts of a few faithful Brethren that it was kept going. Brother Swihart came to its aid like a David, and now the Brethren are rejoicing of the great victory that they now are experiencing. Fifteen have already made the good confession, and the prospects are exceptionally good for more to follow. On Tuesday evening of this week six came forward in response to the invitation. All others in the congregation were members of some church; this again convinces us that the days of miracles are not passed.

This little united church in her untiring prayer led by a man who fears God and nothing else, hates sin and nothing else, is being honored of God.

Brother George Swihart came to us from the Church of the Brethren about a year ago or more, and is proving himself to be a mighty factor in the Brethren church. His messages are convincing. He is able to use God's Word with telling effect. Our Brethren will profit greatly by engaging him in evangelistic efforts. His daughter, Mrs. Mishler, is an efficient song leader and at present she is helping her father in this splendid meeting.

Let us rejoice with the Center Chapel Brethren and pray that God will continually bless them.

energized, guided and strengthened to persevere.

"The negative Commandments are also a reminder of the shepherding of God. The human race has required a great deal of shepherding, and often the ways that men have chosen have been so dangerous and hurtful that barriers and fences are a sign of mercy and not of tyranny. When a mother teaches her little child that he must not play with fire, her 'Thou shalt not' may be expressed in words, or it may be taught by some simple experiment which shows him how hot the fire is, how painful and dangerous. But the lesson is not merely to enforce her authority or to please her pride of place. It is for his safety and for his good.

"And these old prohibitions are fences set up by an All-Wise Care, in love and in compassion for the wayward lives of men—the very same love and pity with which he redeemed them when he bare them and carried them all the days of old. Moderns as well as ancients have often found safety and peace in submitting themselves to the divine prohibition, the appointed limitation."

The Volstead Act, in defining intoxicating liquor as that containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol, simply takes the standard set up by the United States government for many years before the Eighteenth Amendment in its warfare against moonshiners, a standard adopted on the insistence of the liquor men themselves.

Our Individual Responsibility

"Our lesson text has a direct and powerful bearing on the problem of the enforcement of the prohibition law. Our Lord tells each of us that we have a duty to the state and a duty to God. In this case our duties do not and cannot conflict. It is in every way for the good of the state that the liquor trade shall be forever abolished. The same is certainly in accordance with the law of God. No one can be a good Christian or a good citizen and oppose the Eighteenth Amendment and the laws enforcing the act. Each one of Christ's followers is responsible for his influence, exerted to its fullest extent. That influence should work for the social ostracizing of all who are working for the return of the saloon, for the political defeat of all wet office-holders and candidates for office and for the vigorous support of all officers who are trying to enforce the law and of all prohibition organizations. This is no time for straddling fences. It is no time for shirking obvious duty. The war is on, and whoever fails to fight for law and purity is a coward and a traitor. Let men condemn him as he is certainly condemned by the Almighty."—A. R. Wells, Litt.D.

THE NEW YEAR

The new year, that is the year A. D., 1926, has already received a good start as a measure of time. As the years come and go we find that one is pretty much as another, and yet each year should be somewhat different. At least we feel that we are not getting ahead very much unless something different is done. It may be the same old task as usual, but we would like to do it just a little better than it ever has been done before. And this is our wish for the work of the Brethren Publishing House, that it may be able to serve the Brethren church and the cause of Christ just a little better than it has ever served before.

However this can be done only as we receive the hearty cooperation of those whom we seek to serve. We certainly covet the cooperation of all our pastors and Christian workers everywhere.

It has been some months since the Honor Roll has been published on this page, but it is not because there have not been any renewals from the churches, but because there have not been any new churches to add to the Roll until just recently. And now we are glad to be able to announce the addition of three new churches to the Honor Roll.

These churches are Williamsburg, Iowa, with M. B. Spacht as pastor; Mulvane, Kansas, Homer Anderson, Pastor, and Washington, D. C., with Homer A. Kent, pastor.

We surely appreciate the achievements of these churches. It may not be altogether correct to say the Williamsburg, Iowa, church is an entirely new church on the Honor Roll, for this church was on some years ago but had lost out. However it has come back once more and we rejoice with them over their return.

Mulvane, Kansas, is one of the smaller churches in the brotherhood and the winning of this honor in this congregation is due to their new pastor. But Brother Anderson has brought so many of his different charges into this distinguished company that it has almost become a habit with him. We wish that more of our pastors might acquire this habit.

The third church we give special mention this week is the First Brethren church of Washington, D. C. Our young brother, Homer Kent, is pastor of this church, which we believe is his first regular pastorate. He has certainly made a splendid start as a faithful pastor in leading his congregation into this advanced step. While the Washington church had a subscription list that compared favorably with most of the churches that are not on the Honor Roll, yet this latest accomplishment increased its subscription list nearly 300 per cent, and there are a good many other churches left in the brotherhood that might do the same great thing.

We offer special congratulations to these three churches.

While there are but three new churches added to our Honor Roll at the time of this report we are glad to report that there have been renewals from sixteen other Honor Roll churches, bringing the total number to nineteen since our last report.

The renewals to report are, Ashland, Ohio, 8th year, Charles A. Bame, pastor; Berne, Indiana, 6th year, John M. Parr, pastor; Buckeye City, Ohio, 6th year, Alvin Byers, pastor; College Corner, Indiana, 3rd year, C. A. Stewart, pastor; Elkhart, Indiana, 7th year, W. I. Duker, pastor; Fairhaven, Ohio, 8th year, Arthur Cashman, pastor; Hagerstown, Maryland, 6th year, G. C. Carpenter, pastor; Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Third church, 5th year, vacant; Lake Odessa, Michigan, 2nd year, E. A. Duker, pastor; Long Beach, California, 8th year, L. S. Bauman, pastor; Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, 6th year, James S. Cook, pastor; Nappanee, Indiana, 8th year, S. M. Whetstone, pastor; Oakville, Indiana, 8th year, Sylvester Lowman, pastor; Sterling, Ohio, 6th year, M. L. Sands, pastor; Twelve Mile, Indiana, 2nd year, J. W. Clark, pastor, and Waterloo, Iowa, 8th year, Edwin Boardman, pastor.

Altogether this makes a most creditable list, and if you will examine the Honor Roll carefully you will observe that we now have seven churches on the Roll for the eighth year. This should be sufficient evidence to convince any other church in the entire brotherhood that this is the best method for handling the matter of the church paper. The agent of one of these churches writes almost every year, "We can't find any better method and so we are unwilling to abandon the method that has given such satisfaction for so long a time." Try it, brethren, it will do you good.

Several of these churches are deserving of special mention because of the commendable increase in the names on their lists.

These are Long Beach, Nappanee and Hagerstown. Nappanee has added to her list until now this church ranks second in the entire brotherhood in the matter of subscriptions.

Brother Carpenter wants to know how some of the churches stand in regard to the number, so we have taken the pains to look up their ranking and we find that the First Brethren church of Johnstown ranks first; Nappanee, Indiana, second; Long Beach, California, third; Waterloo, Iowa, fourth and Hagerstown, Maryland, fifth. But as there is a difference of only two or three names between Waterloo and Hagerstown, and as Brother Carpenter keeps adding a name or two to his list every few days, he may yet outstrip Waterloo in the number.

Publication Day Offering

We have received a number of splendid offerings for Publication Day, but as most of the churches have not yet sent in their offerings, and as we have already exceeded the space allotted us for this week, we must bring our "corner" to a close for this time.

MONEY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

All money received for Foreign Missions after March 1st, 1925, will be credited as part of the Easter Offering. Churches therefore may take their Easter Offering, if they see fit, any time during the month of March. We are giving this notice inasmuch as some churches in the brotherhood will not have regular services on Easter Sunday and may prefer to take their offerings before that time.

Christian Use of Time

Paul lived in a busy day, and it was crowded with excesses and abnormalities. He therefore admonished at least two of his congregations to "Redeem the time." He asked the Ephesians to "walk circumspectly—redeeming the time." The original Greek for this expression signifies looking around before making a choice. If there was ever a need for that admonition it is now. Life is so embellished that the simple essentials are hard to determine. There is a premium on quick perception, and the premium will increase when the present movie-trained generation of children get at the head of affairs.

Let us remember that a stream that sparkles over a wide expanse has very little depth, and that the life that flits from thrill to thrill has little appreciation of things abiding. This swiftly moving age must be caught by short, catchy messages. The advertisers know that and shall the children of light be less wise? The church is often too formal for the unsaved man, get him with a good tract. New tracts are about ready for the press. Write the Publishing Company about them.

Giving Comfort and Aid to the Enemy

These are critical days for prohibition; not that the outcome of the battle is in question, but because it is the time when every effort ought to be put forth to clinch the victory. In such a time the giving of comfort and aid to the enemy on the part of prominent religious leaders is very hard to understand. One is made to feel like asking them how much they get out of it, or whether they are beginning to find it too difficult and dangerous to get their drinks. If such retorts should be unfair, it is certainly right and just to take them at their words and place them in line with the wet interests, whose cause they are abetting.

Recently the secretary of the Church Temperance Society of the Episcopal church, Rev. Dr. Empringham, gained much first-page publicity by declaring prohibition enforcement a failure and placing his Society on record as favoring a legalizing of wine and beer. The wet press snatched up this bit of news and spread it broadcast over the country. It has developed since that Dr. Empringham's survey was a farce, that he grossly misrepresented the Church Temperance Society, and that his pronouncement was little more than a personal opinion, but the report, false as it was, served the wet interests for propaganda purposes as well as the truth could have done. For before the responsible leadership of that church could get into print with their repudiations of the story, the Episcopal church was wrongly represented in practically every daily paper in the land as opposed to prohibition. This added strength and courage to the brewers and liquor organizations, and increased the confusion and chaos regarding the success of the dry law. Notwithstanding the pessimism induced in many quarters by wet propaganda, the situation is really not discouraging when viewed as a whole. Wayne B. Wheeler, attorney for the Anti-Saloon League, says, "The statement is especially ill-timed now because government documents recently issued testify to prohibition's observance, enforcement and good results. ... Business authorities such as Hoover, Gary, Ford, Scott, Babson, etc., declare prohibition an essential element in our prosperity. An unobserved, unenforced law would not achieve this." Such a "salutary law," as the President recently described it, deserves the support of every churchman, and his Christian profession surely demands it.

Then comes a really prominent Lutheran, Dr. George W. Sandt, editor of "The Lutheran", and upon the occasion of his being chosen president ad interim of the Ministerium of Pennsylvania and Adjacent States, expressed himself regarding prohibition in a manner that very likely misrepresents the rank and file of that great church. He said prohibition was "a mistake at the time when the law was passed", that it was "too drastic and brought us something worse than the saloon, namely, the bootlegger", and that he hoped that "Congress would see some way to modify it." Prominent Lutheran ministers have been quick to deny that Dr. Sandt's position was representative of the Lutheran church and to declare it "most unfortunate that a man in his position should make such a statement at this time." "The Christian forces of America," says the "Reformed Church Messenger", "have a real fight on their hands, and it certainly adds not a little to the difficulties of the situation when leaders of the Protestant forces sound the note of retreat."

An Offensive Movie Trick

(The following editorial was written some weeks ago, but was crowded out of the editorial columns for lack of space. It is still timely, however, as the movie industry is repeatedly guilty of committing sacrilege against the most holy ideals and imagery of our religion.)

The commercialized movie has added yet another blot in its questionable reputation. In addition to its vicious scenes and suggestions and its lowering moral influence, it further brings itself under the just condemnation of all godly people by linking up the Scriptures with some of its seductive creations and attempting to cover its sensuous actors with a suggestion of decency by means of sacred imagery. The "Reformed Church Messenger" not long since took the moving picture producers to task for defiling holy ground by using Bible stories "to give a semblance of respectability to dramas of sex and seduction" and made special reference to a show criticised severely by a certain dramatic critic, Mr. Quinn Martin.

The editor pointed out that "That particular show is now exhibiting its wares in Philadelphia, and the so-called 'star' of the play is lauded by local dramatic critics as 'the most seductive and fascinating of screen vampires.' The management has had the effrontery to run a big advertisement with the picture of the star, and a heading which makes reference to the opinions of three leading newspaper men as follows: 'Visit of the Three Wise Men.' The 'ad' quotes in large letters the words from Matthew 2:10—'When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy.' The lack of delicacy and good taste manifested in this association of the Star of Bethlehem, that led the Wise Men to the birthplace of the Christ, with praise of the performance of a sensuous siren of the films must be manifest to everybody except those in the moving picture business. There seems to be no restraint of decorum and decency which are not violated with impunity in the interests of the box office, and the saddest part of it is that such coarse and offensive tactics, verging on ribaldry and blasphemy, are not more generally resented by Christian people."

This complaint of the indifference of Christian people toward such impudent shamelessness is justified. We have grown accustomed to expecting most anything from the selfish, conscienceless movie industry, and we seldom make much fuss about it. But such an attitude is not to our credit, nor the moral welfare of our communities. The forces of evil desire nothing better than just that indifferent, do-nothing attitude on the part of Christian leadership toward their vicious business. When churches and Christian people hold their peace in the face of such publicly practiced and blasphemous effrontery, the Christian conscience is sorely in need of being stirred to a more lively sense of its responsibility.

Trend of Youth in Regard to War

The conference of college and seminary students of the country held at Evanston, Illinois during the holidays has attracted wide attention and was quite generally reported in the daily press, as well as commented upon by many religious and secular journals. This assemblage has been justly criticized for its immature judgment, its short-sightedness, its unguided enthusiasm and its spirit of revolt toward the church. It was unduly sensitive toward the counsel of adults, and this was perhaps its greatest source of weakness, for these young people might have acted with greater wisdom toward the problems they attacked, if their pronounced lack of information had been supplemented by the knowledge of men of world vision who have proven themselves to be worthy counsellors of youth, neither paternal, nor autocratic, but sympathetic and fraternal.

Nevertheless the reported attitude of these youth toward war is fundamentally sound, and is deserving of special notice in that it indicates the trend of youthful sentiment quite generally, among the conservative as well as the radical. The militaristic spirit is not finding fertile soil in the minds of the young men and women of our land, except in the military itself and in those institutions and schools which promote military training and foster military ideals. There are some youthful militarists among civilians, to be sure, but they are not making much noise and seem difficult to locate. But on every hand the young life of our country, especially the more thoughtful and serious, are demanding that we shall outlaw war, and shall plan peaceful means of settling international disputes. The Evanston statement is as follows:

"1. We believe the church should excommunicate war, dissolve itself from the war system, and refuse henceforth to allow the use of the church as a medium of preparation for, or persecution of war.

"2. Because we favor a positive education for peace, and because we believe that the present military training program of the War Department in high schools and colleges gives war an ultimate sanction, perpetuates the war system, delays disarmament, intimidates students and faculty, and inhibits free discussion, we suggest:

"(a) Abolition of military training in church and denominational schools.

"(b) Abolition of military training in high schools.

"(c) Abolition of military training in colleges and universities, including the immediate abolition of the compulsory features in land grant institutions.

"3. The church should guard and guarantee the right of an individual to follow the guidance of his own conscience when that conscience advises against participation in war.

"4. Because war is a negation of the value of human personality, we condemn any attempt to impose universal conscription of manhood on the United States, such as the proposed legislation before Congress."

A vote taken to determine the personal attitude of the students toward their possible participation in any war, resulted as follows:

Those who would refuse to support any war	181
Those who feel their duty might lie in taking up arms	65
Those who have not been able to reach any decision as to what to do in case of war,	215

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Read about the "Printed Preacher" in the Tract Promotion Corner.

Miss Alice Longaker gives the conclusion of her last week's article in this issue—that is, if you have any money to give away, try the annuity plan.

Brother J. A. Baker makes an appeal in behalf of the little group of Brethren at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, who are anxious for the establishment of a Brethren work at that place, and he challenges some Brethren minister to undertake the job.

If you are not interested in the training of young people for church membership, you should read the March EDUCATOR, and if you are interested, you will not miss it. It offers you some splendid suggestions, a few excerpts from which you will find in this paper.

Brother E. M. Riddle, superintendent of the Stewardship Department of Christian Endeavor, reminds young people again of the Essay Contest and Ashland College Night. Every wide-awake society should get in on these plans.

If your church has not made proper preparations to make sure of doing its full share on that Benevolent Offering, we suggest that you repent of your indifferent attitude and face a bounden duty squarely and conscientiously. See the "Announcement" department for correct addresses to which offerings should be sent.

The work at Hudson, Iowa, notwithstanding its handicap by being a small town church near a city, is nevertheless maintaining a commendable interest under the persevering leadership of Brother L. A. Myers. The various departments continue to function in a healthy manner, and the pastor is laying special emphasis on religious education through his vacation Bible schools, plans for the fifth of which are now being laid. A union evangelistic campaign resulted in one confession, which means an addition to the Brethren church.

Brother Dyoll Belote, pastor of the Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, informs us that an evangelistic campaign is in progress in his church, having begun February 21, with Brother C. H. Ashman as evangelist. He requests prayer in behalf of this campaign and for the success of the work in this difficult field.

We are in receipt of the "Eleventh Annual Statement" of the church at Berlin, Pennsylvania, where Brother W. C. Benshoff is pastor and where a new church is about ready for dedication. We note that this congregation made a cash payment during 1925 on their "New Building Project" of $11,336.39 besides taking care of the regular running expenses of the church. That speaks well for the stewardship exercised by this historic congregation.

A Correction—We were wrong in putting the date of the Dayton Convention in 1882 as we did in last week's Evangelist. The Ashland Convention was held in 1882, on June 29 and 30, and the next year, June 6-7, 1883, the historic Dayton Convention was held, when there was a union of the "Progressive," "Leedy" and "Congregational" Brethren under the simple Bible term, Brethren, and the "Declaration of Principles" was adopted.

"Summer Schools of Missions" for 1926 are announced for two well known religious centers, Winona Lake, Indiana, June 19-26 and Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, June 28 to July 5. These schools are under the auspices of The Interdenominational Committees of the Central West for Missions. The object set forth is "Training for Service", and both the home and foreign fields will receive consideration under the following themes: "Rural Church of America" and "The Moslem World". The announcement will be of special interest to the ladies of the W. M. S.

We are glad to present the likeness of the new Second Brethren Church of Long Beach, California, on the front page and to have a report concerning its dedication in our news department. The young congregation that is to occupy this new sanctuary is the child of the First Church of that city, and needless to say it has strong backing and has the assurance of being well nurtured. Dr. L. S. Bauman, pastor of the First church, preached the dedicatory sermon, excerpts of which are published in this issue. He and his congregation are to be congratulated on the fruition of this splendid piece of missionary endeavor.

Brother George H. Jones, pastor of the church at Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, writes concerning the evangelistic campaign, recently conducted by Brother B. T. Burnworth, who reported last week from the evangelist's viewpoint. The fourteen additions have become fifteen, which result the pastor says is "unusual" in view of the way this field has been kept gleaned, eighty-three members having been added during the past year. We are privileged to reprint from records the resignation of Brother Jones from the Conemaugh pastorate and the Johnstown Tribune, which speaks of some of the many activities in which he served his community, as well as the pastorates in which he has served the church of his choice. He is to take charge of the Muncie, Indiana, church, according to previous announcement through these columns on May first.

It is a most interesting report we have this week from the pen of Dr. A. D. Gnagey, pastor of the church at Altoona, Pennsylvania, and it reveals that the constructive program he has been pursuing since taking charge of that church a little over two years ago is beginning to bear excellent fruit. During a two weeks' evangelistic effort conducted by the pastor seventeen souls made the good confession and the outlook was bright for still others. Very wisely Brother Gnagey is ushering these young people into church membership with a course of systematic instruction in some Christian essentials. This is a matter that is all too widely neglected to the great detriment of the church and the permanent handicap of many an otherwise fruitful life. We are in receipt of several interesting printed programs of worship, prepared by Brother Gnagey for special occasions, particularly Mother's Day and Bible Sunday. The Bible Sunday program was quite educational and was worth preserving by the membership.

GENERAL ARTICLES.

"Who is Jesus?"

By Samuel Kiehl

Years ago the writer had a library book of over twelve hundred pages, whose title was, Who is Jesus? No one need read twelve hundred pages of any book to know who Jesus is. John 3:16, using only twelve words, says, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." These words spoken by Jesus cannot be contradicted. It is written, Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book. (The gospel according to John), but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of God John 20:30, 31. When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of God am? * * * Whom say ye that I am? Simon Peter answered, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God. Jesus replied, Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." An immediate revelation from God the Father to Peter that Jesus is the Son of God according to the preceding scriptures. To a certain man who was blind from his birth to whom Jesus had given sight, he said, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered, Who is the Lord that I might believe on him? Jesus said, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he (the Son of God) that talketh with thee (John 9:35-37.) To the Jews Jesus said, Say ye of him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world; Thou blasphemest because I said, I am the Son of God (John 10:36)? Jesus' own statement that he did say, I am the Son of God.

"It is written" should settle every doubt, and decide every controversy concerning Jesus. The following scriptures testify that Jesus is the Son of God. Mark 1:1, The beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God. Matthew 3:17, (at Jesus' baptism in the Jordan), A voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. John 1:34, (after his baptism). I (John the Baptist) saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God. Matthew 17:1-5, When Jesus, Peter, James, and John were on the Mount of Transfiguration, a bright cloud overshadowed them; and a voice out of the cloud said, This is my beloved Son; in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him. Romans 1:3, 4, Jesus Christ our Lord * * * was declared to be the Son of God * * * by the resurrection from the dead. Acts 9:20, Straightway he (Paul) preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. Praise the Lord! A faithful, primitive, gospel preacher who feared not to tell his auditors that Jesus is the Son of God. Such fearless servants of God are (should be) everywhere in demand today.

How the word was with God, and was God, is made as clear as the noon-day sun in Hebrews 1:8 reading thus, Unto the Son he saith, "Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever." In the preceding quotation God the Father is addressing the Son as God. Since the Son cannot be God the Father he must be God the Son. Two distinct personalities; God the Father, and God the Son, supplying the words understood, John 1:1 will read thus, In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God (the Father); and the word was God (the Son).

Whatever titles Calvin Coolidge may have had from the

ELDER SAMUEL KIEHL
Eighty-nine years young time when he was a school-boy until he became President of the United States, he was (is) always the son of Col. John C. Coolidge, his father. Jesus, conceived of the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary, having so many exalted titles truthfully given him in the Bible, is always the Son of God his Father. And he that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him (John 5:23). Remembering that God sent (gave) his Son, not himself; will remove all doubt concerning the respective personalities of God the Father, and, Jesus his only begotten Son. To illustrate: Mr. Smith has distinct personalities. Smith the father, and Smith the son. Neither is, or can be, a son. The father, and the son are two the other. The same is true of God the Father, and, God the Son, according to the testimony of Jesus the Son of God, who says, My Father is greater than I (John 14:28).

Those who do sincerely believe, and truthfully confess that Jesus is the Son of God, have special power, and gifts that natural men and women do not have (1 Cor. 2:14). First John 5:5 says, Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God. First John 4:15 says, Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. God in the believer for service; the believer in God for safety. Such is the exalted position, both for service and safety, of all who sincerely believe and confess that Jesus is the Son of God. Are we doing so? It is written, No man can say that Jesus is the Lord (the Son of God), but by the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. 12:3; consequently those who have not the Holy Ghost dwelling in them, can make no such heart-felt confession. Why do spirit-filled men, women, and children confess that Jesus is the Son of God? Let us hear Jesus' words concerning those persons. He says, Whosoever shall confess me before men (that I am the Son of God (John 1:49); him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven. But whosoever shall deny me before men (saying, that I am not the Son of God, John 8:48), him will I also deny before my Father which is in heaven (Matt. 10:32, 33).

Dear reader, if you have not yet decided what to do with Jesus, believe that he is the Son of God, and receive him as your Savior and Lord; for it is written, He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life (First John 5:12). To have, or not to have eternal life rests wholly upon what you will do with Jesus the Son of God. The Lord give you grace to say, I will receive him today.

Life is saved from narrowing littleness when a man sees God. Then duty becomes divine, however great its drudgery, when viewed as a part of a divine whole. When a man sees God, he sees everything through God, every common thing is holy, and every bush is ablaze with fire which is never quenched. That is the secret of true life—an expanding consciousness and enlarging obligation.—J. Stuart Holden.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Earlier Days, as I Knew Them

II. Samuel Keihl

By Martin Shively, D.D.

In a recent article which appears on these pages from the pen of Brother W. C. Teeter, we were told not only of the late activities of the congregation at Dayton, but we were also told a bit as to the numerical strength which the church there has attained. The writer is perfectly conversant with at least one period of the history of the church there, for he became its pastor when it could scarcely muster a hundred souls, and when its entire budget, except that part which was shouldered by our district mission board, was not more than $500.00, and it was not an easy matter to provide for even that much of a load. I spent six full years there, and had the great pleasure of seeing the congregation grow to a group of 350 souls, entirely self supporting, and entirely out of debt. Too much could not be said in praise of the leaders who have served since my day, for both Brethren Bame and Bell have made great contribution to the place which the congregation has reached,—that of being by far the largest congregation in our fraternity. Under the leadership of Brother Bell, who has been on the field ten years, it has become a mighty force in the city, both for righteousness, and loyalty to the Brethren plea,—“The whole gospel for the whole world.” Several persons are members of that great congregation now, who have been associated with it for more than forty years, even from its beginning, but among them, is one whose prayer and effort has ever been in its behalf, and upon whom the responsibility of leadership rested, and that one is the man of God whose name appears at the head of this paper. Brother Keihl was born in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, July 23, 1837, and is thus approaching the end of the 89th year of his life. At 18 years of age, ambitious beyond the rank and file of the men of his time, he matriculated in Mount Pleasant College of his native state, and after coming to Ohio a year later, he continued his studies at Otterbein University. While a student there, he gave his heart into the keeping of his Lord, to whom he has been faithful even until now. None can read the rather frequent articles which appear on these pages, written by him, and not be convinced of his unswerving devotion to both God and his Word. He became a member of the Tunker church in Dayton, in 1868, and at the organization of the First Brethren church in Dayton, April 20, 1882, he was chosen to the ministry, and to the pastorate of the infant congregation. For the first five years of the history of this great congregation, he served as its pastor, entirely without remuneration. Beginning with a membership of thirteen, the number grew to 64 under his leadership, as he gave such time as could be spared from his secular duties, for he served as city mail carrier at least a part of this time. He is one of the four survivors of the ministerial group which made ecclesiastical history at the Dayton convention, September, 1883. His life has been an exceedingly active one, both religiously and otherwise. A small man, and spare of frame, quick in word and act, those who know him could never think of him as drowsing, especially when there is work to be done. A man of deep conviction, of intense loyalty to God and his church, always willing to spend and be spent for the advancement of the Kingdom,—that is Brother Keihl. I became acquainted with him 33 years ago, when as pastor at Gratis, I spent a few days in his home, and when later I became his pastor, and continued in that relation for a period of six years, I had abundant opportunity to come very close to him, for in the midst of such discouragements as are common to a weak and struggling church in a great city, both by his presence at every service which he found it possible to attend, and more, by his earnest prayers in behalf of both cause and pastor, as well as his ready and hopeful counsel, he was a source of strength to us all. I shall never forget one scene with which my memory associates him. We had been struggling along with our finances, as may be too common even today, raising needed funds by main strength and awkwardness, mostly the latter, until under one of the most impassioned appeals I had ever made, the church adopted the every member canvass and the weekly pay plan. I made that canvass myself, and on the first Sunday morning, following its operation, as the financial officers sat at a table counting the offering, he came forward to ask what the amount was. When he was told that it totaled something more than $20.00, tears came to his eyes, and he said with prayerful reverence, “Thank God, the Dayton church is assured.” And from that day to this it has been forging ahead. His utterance was prophetic.

His story is told of a great revival which swept over the Scandinavian peninsula, long years ago. Before it ended, thousands had been brought into the Kingdom of the Lord. When inquiry began to be made as to the birth of the era of blessing, and after seeking here and there, it was at last agreed, that it had grown from the quiet, persistent prayer of one unassuming man, who had for years been pleading for just such an outpouring. Thus too, now that the Dayton church has become so great an institution for good in the splendid city in which it is located, not forgetting the strong men who have led, both in pulpit and pew, I am still of the opinion that this quiet, unassuming servant of God, whose prayers in its behalf have never failed to go up to the Throne of grace, has had more to do with it than we can know. The weight of years make it impossible for him to attend the services of God's house with any degree of regularity, but we who know him, know too that he still prays, and his prayers find gracious answer. Under the tender ministry of his loving and faithful daughter, Mary, he approaches the time when he shall rejoin the great company of dear ones who are on the other side, and as he waits, no fear mars the serenity of his soul.

Looking Our Obligation to Our Superannuated Ministers and Their Wives Squarely in the Face

By Wm. H. Beachler, D. D.

I have been thinking considerably about the coming offering for our Superannuated Ministers and their wives. And somehow I have felt constrained to put in writing some of my thoughts.

I shall devote my opening paragraph to the matter of my own personal views even if they may be of indifferent value. I am charging no one with malice aforethought, but I lament that this offering is taken after every other general cause has made its appeal to the brotherhood. I maintain that for purely sentimental reasons this obligation should be adequately taken care of before any other appeal is made. In fact it has been for a long time my sincere judgment that the present plan is not the best way of discharging one of the most sacred obligations resting upon us. I maintain that in the absence among us of a fixed income from permanent endowment, such as has been and is being provided by many of our larger denominations, we should at least place this matter on a basis free from the fluctuations, irregularities, and uncertainties that often follow when we act on sentiment. My charge against the present plan is that the results it yields are too uncertain, and as a rule inadequate. Why not put a stop to this? After this year, why not begin a crusade against agitation and education to the end that every congregation in the brotherhood—big or little—

Now about this proposed offering to be taken February 28th. First I suggest that we ought to view it as a test, and a self-revealer. Is my professed love and loyalty for my denomination superficial, or is it genuine? Is it merely a mushy sentiment or is it a fact? Am I content to give proof and assurance of this merely in noise, or in practical deeds and service? Well, it must go without saying that if we love our denomination we must love the men and women who gave their lives amid great sacrifice to make the church possible. When you hold up before you the envelope in which you will place your support to our aged ministers and their wives, just remember that what you put in, and the spirit in which you do it is a real test as to how deep and genuine your love is for the denomination.

Not only so, but for the sake of the men responsible for dispensing these funds, we ought to give them adequate supply. And only as we do this will we enable those men to do their work punctually and free from embarrassment.

And finally, we ought to cheerfully and gladly make this an adequate offering because the deeper feelings and finer sensibilities of some very devoted souls is involved. Do I need to hesitate to say that after many a man has given his life to the Christian ministry he awakes to the fact in his old age that the most he has here for it is his Christian tie, rich or poor, city, town, village or rural—shall place in their annual budget for current expenses and benevolences a provision for our SUPERANNUATED MINISTERS AND THEIR WIVES equal to 40 cents per member, and PAYABLE QUARTERLY.

This can be done. Why don't we do it? Why not whine less, and complain less, and talk less, and actually set the wheels moving toward the realization of such a plan, or a better plan. As long as we continue with the present plan, and as long as there is a lack of uniform and just support from all of our churches, there will remain occasion among us to feel certain guilt, and shame, and reproach as we look squarely into the face of a sacred and binding obligation. I frankly give it as my conviction that the failure is not in our people but in our methods of handling this matter. These are my own personal views purely. Maybe I am wrong. At all events, the nice part about it is nobody needs to accept a single word I have said if they don't want to. So that's that.

character and his finer sensibilities? This is also true of his wife. And when we discharge this obligation from year to year adequately, cheerfully, and wholeheartedly we are sparing sensitive hearts and natures from needless pain, and reflecting genuine credit on ourselves.

Let us guard against hurtful indifference. Let us keep our hands clean and free of neglect. Let us make this offering big and adequate. Let us do it cheerfully. Let us look this obligation and privilege squarely in the face. Remember the actual, minimum need—$4,000.

The Church God Builds

By Dr. L. S. Bauman

"Except the Lord build the house," wrote the builder of earth's greatest temple ever erected on this earth to the living God, "they labor in vain that build it." That fact stands as true today as it did 3,000 years ago. The church is a divine institution, which Jesus Christ said he would build, and it must be built according to the divine pattern that he and his apostles gave us, or it is builded in vain. In the imperishable documents given to us by the apostles of Jesus Christ, we have the perfection of faith and polity for the structure of the church. The apostolic churches must serve us as models to the end of the age,—not in the sins and imperfections of the human members thereof, but in the faith and polity set forth by the Holy Spirit of the living God.

The church of the New Testament depended solely and directly upon the Holy Spirit for guidance, not only in the discernment of truth from error, but even in the choice of pastors, elders, missionaries and all church officers. Such guidance is altogether possible for the church today.

That church ever stood independent of all worldly patronage, and ignored members as an evidence of success before God. The sin of David was the numbering of the people. As a matter of fact, the divine record of the apostolic churches gives us no clue whatever as to the largeness or the smallness of their membership. Nor is there the slightest evidence that they sought the fellowship of the world's intellectual, influential or wealthy personages. On the other hand, we are told that nine out of ten of her first converts were slaves!

The apostolic church, in its worship, was simplicity itself. Architecture, music, social life and entertainment, all were subordinated to worship and the business of holy living. The life of the modern church has grown so complex that worship is often almost crowded out. A man was once asked at the door of a church: "Well, have you come to serve God once again?" He replied: "No, I have been serving God all week. I have come here to worship him." The church is not built according to the divine pattern that does not subordinate everything else to the one task of bringing men and women, through worship, into intimate fellowship with God. You can depend upon a man truly serving his fellowmen who hold intimate fellowship with God.

The apostolic church was builded and supported by the voluntary offerings of its members. Upon the first day of the week, each laid by in store as God had prospered him. Though the early church was made up of the poorest of the poor, from the standpoint of earthly goods, yet there is never a hint that a dollar that went into its treasury was tainted with the smell of pies, ice cream, chicken-broth or oysters. Today, with enormous wealth, the church is constantly grieving the Holy Ghost with her worldly and oft-times utterly questionable schemes for money-getting.

The apostolic church was a unity of believers in the great fundamentals to salvation,—the inspiration of the Scripture, the incarnation of God in the flesh, the atonement on the cross, the absolute necessity of a new birth, and the resurrection of the body from the dead. Those doctrines were fundamental to apostolic Christianity, and designated those who believed them as "Christians." Those who reject those doctrines, even if right in their rejection, are not Christians in the true sense of the word. Any system of religion that rejects those doctrines, whatever else may be said of it, is not Christianity.

The apostolic church, without qualification, accepted "all Scripture * * * for doctrine, reproof, correction and instruction in righteousness." They affirmed that "God hath spoken unto us by his Son." That ended the matter with them. What the Son of God or his duly appointed messengers said on all subjects of fundamental doctrine, as well as on the subject of the oath, or war, or divorce, or dress, or even hair,—no matter what the world's opinions or fashions might be,—it was taken seriously, and was regarded as utterly final with them. If we know the purpose of the Brethren church of today, it is that the people who take the Bible shall take the whole Bible and take it seriously, as the one infallible guide in matters of faith and human conduct.

The apostolic church believed that prayer was a force and not a farce, and advanced on her knees. Prayer ever held a most important place in the worship and work of the early church that fought and conquered the cohorts of im-

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

He is Here

By Harold D. Fry

TEXTS: "For where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them" (Matt. 18:20). "I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you" (John 14:18). "There standeth one among you whom ye know not" (John 1:26).

Even to the last day was the Savior promising his own that he would never leave them nor forsake them. His presence was to go with them upon every highway, through every danger, and there would come no circumstance in their lives but what they could rely on his word of parting, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." Together with their Master they had not left the bounds of what we call now the Holy Land; yet the Lord Jesus was saying good-bye, as he directed them to gather at Jerusalem, to go through Samaria, through the Roman Empire, unto the uttermost parts of the earth. They went from Jerusalem through Judea and Samaria, sent missionaries to Antioch; the latter city sent Paul and Barnabas and Silas and others to Asia Minor and to Greece and finally to Rome. Rome carried the gospel to the British Isles and the churches there carried the divine word to us in America. Measured with the present extent and kingdom of the gospel, how little was the journey when Jesus said, I go with you! But what greater or more loving God-send could our Lord have given them in the great task of saving the lost, than giving them the promise of the presence of God himself. Jesus Christ our Lord!

But it was before that instruction period of his discipleship when gathered about the table where hearts were drawn to him as never before; and love went out in vain effort to understand his words, "This is my body which is given for you, this do in remembrance of me." Before the time when he returned to show them the things which previously they could not bear—to hearts which as ours, only understood partially, he said, "Where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

I. In the Midst. Precious promise! In the midst! I wonder if Peter yet felt as he did, when he said to his Lord, Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man? Or if John and James remembered when they, one to be the first martyred apostle and the other the longest lived, when they had asked to have fire sent down on their social enemies, the Samaritans; and had asked for the two highest places in the kingdom for themselves? Yes, among sinners like you and me, the Man of Sorrows, had promised to convene. And Philip and the others little dreamed that he meant after death—they could not imagine him dying, much less returning from the grave to meet with them. And so his words I fancy drew little attention at that time. Just so the words of our text, this same precious promise, are familiar to us, and we realize them not. We must learn their lessons; then perhaps we will know that Jesus Christ himself—is present and is regarding our worship today.

Probably a year before this instruction was given, or maybe longer, the disciples were found one night on Lake Galilee alone and in the midst of the sea. Rabbi Jesus had sent them from him after the feeding of the five thousand, that he into the mountain might go to pray. Before sunset the boat had left for the western shore, with the Master slowly ascending a convenient mound overlooking the sea, beloved Galilee. The setting sun far across the Mediterranean was attracted to that barren hill made beautiful by the presence of Jesus, and there with a last loving look the sun recognized the men bent in prayer, its Creator, and shone with golden, scarlet, and violet. With tears of joy that blended a dozen colors in the western sky, the light of the day turned its face to new duties, and sky and sea and twilight gazed at the praying Savior, saw the greater glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ, and in all humility disappeared. The night came on, the Master prayed; midnight found the rugged rocks satisfied with his presence; God the Father was answering the Son and the Spirit strengthened his human soul and body, and dissolved the fearful problems ahead. But the Lord knew his own: they should never pass from his care; and now they especially needed him. It was three o'clock in the morning, and far over the sea, the tired disciples were still rowing. A storm had come up, and since sunset they had made little progress. They were toiling in rowing, weary, and discouraged, and fearful. Lo Jesus saw, he always does; and Lo I am with you! And he came to them walking on the water. In the midst, in the midst again; and the waves quieted before his step; the wind hasted away, and there was a great calm. Jesus was in the midst!

It is always so, where two or three are gathered together; that his peace comes, his joy remains, and his power dispels all grief and worry and satisfies every need. When he takes charge of you, the peace that passes all understanding keeps your heart and mind in him; so that no strife or bitterness or clamor or evil speaking comes from your lips. Let him have his way in your midst. I say, Did the disciples realize his words now? Had they forgot Galilee? and did they apply his presence spiritually? But have you? In his reappearances how blessed was their fellowship as he was again and again in their midst! How he saw each need, though ever so small! And what cheer and faith did each disseminate when in their midst! Yes, friends, it has been so and ever will be—Jesus thus, even when we shall look with John at the scene in heaven," (R. 5:6-10). I want you to remember that the promise here is true, which our Lord gives of meeting with us; and his care will be eternally that given in Revelations 7:17, "For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Now there are promises which refer to his coming again and ruling upon the earth, but this is not one. And many of his words were spoken anticipating the descent and indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the mortal temples of believers, and they are precious too, and vitally important; but this is a pledge of a special presence in the midst of worshipping and serving groups and companies. Though the number be only two or three, I am there also, if met in my name. His presence is felt when we convene in his name and recognize his presence. A use-to-be church in East St. Louis, has an orchestra instead of a prayer meeting. They do not meet in his name. The purpose must be to his glory, and the means, prayer, praise and the study of the Word.

II. I Will Come. We no doubt, have read of personages like our Presidents or Queen Victoria, who, with true greatness, that of humility and plainness, have surprised their subjects by sudden visits and requests when they were unknown. The story is told of the former Queen of England, beloved of all her people, when one afternoon she stole out in the plainest garb, as she liked to do, to walk about in the outskirts of the city. A sudden storm came up and rain began to fall. Whereupon the Queen knocked at a very common house, and asked for the loan of an umbrella. The woman thinking of her new umbrella, and that this stranger did not look like a woman of those parts, brought out an old parasol much the worse for wear. The Queen thanked her graciously and, promising to send it back, resumed her walk. The next day the royal coach drew up in front of the home, empty, but the footman returned the borrowed umbrella. The woman asked him, "Sir, who was the lady?" And the man replied, "Why woman, that was your queen." What regret and what remorse she then had that her queen had been there, and not only had shelter been unoffered, but she had given her the poorest she had. So it is written that some have entertained angels unawares, and do yet. But how much sorer would we be reproached if our Creator, Savior and Judge should visit us, and we should not recognize him, nor do him obeisance?

Did he not say, "I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you?" His first disciples needed comfort, and sometimes we do. Yet the word means more. The Greek word used is Orphanous. I will not leave you orphans. With what fatherly pity and motherly love did the Lord speak when he said, I will not leave you orphans! I will come to you. Yet he spoke of the descent of the Third Person of the Godhead, the Holy Spirit, whom, said he, "I will send to you." This promise has been a mystery to all, and a doubt to altogether too many, that Christ should say, "I" while referring to the Paraclete. But until one understands more of the teaching concerning the Holy Spirit, there are many things misunderstood, and until the Holy Spirit indwells through regeneration, he can not take of the things of Christ and show them unto us. Let me answer the unanswerable by asking another. Our Lord once said, "No man hath ascended up into heaven but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." I know not how my Lord could speak, or rather how it was so that he said that he had come down from heaven, and yet was in heaven. Within the power, and the wisdom of Deity, and not in ours, was it not only possible but true that the Son was yet in the Godhead exercising his office in its relation to the creation and apart from his works, and at the same time had taken upon him the form of our sinful bodies, had laid on his own pure soul our great guilt and was on earth going to the cross. To me it is easier for mortal mind to perceive how Christ could be the Spirit of Christ than to clarify the mystery of his contemporaneous dwelling in heaven and earth. The Holy Spirit is God, and Christ is God, and the Spirit is both of the Son and of the Father; therein Christ is present with us today in this service as the One who passeth human understanding, and whose love and sacrifice for us likewise passes our powers of perception. And if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his. So with the promise of the descent of the Spirit and with his baptism and filling of the disciples from that day to this, in such a way, Christ lives within us by the Holy Spirit, and in every gathering of devout Christians, Christ is present through the Spirit. His presence is everywhere, yet complete and in every place, wholly the Lord. And he is here with you today.

III He is Here. A. J. Gordon had a dream that swung his own life far into the realms of fruitfulness, and increased his own devotion and the spiritual life of his congregation a hundred fold. Not that he was a believer in dreams, not that anyone should take much stock in the unnatural, nervous-wrought scenes of our sleep; but this one was so vividly and consistently put together and so illustrative of divine truth that his memory ever brought it before his own devotional life, and has blessed those who have heard him tell it or, since his departure, have read it. Let me try to tell it as he did. He writes, "It was Saturday night when wearied with the preparation of the Sabbath's work that I fell asleep and the dream came. I was in the pulpit before a full congregation, just ready to begin my morning sermon, when a stranger entered and passed slowly up the left aisle of the church, looking first to the one side and then to the other, as though silently asking with his eyes that some one would give him a seat. He had proceeded nearly half way up the aisle when a gentleman stepped out and offered him a place in his pew, which was quietly accepted. Excepting the face and features of the stranger everything in the scene is distinctly remembered—the number of the pew, the Christian man who offered its hospitality, the exact seat which was occupied. Only the countenance of the visitor could never be recalled. That his face wore a peculiarly serious look, as of one who had known some great sorrow, is clearly impressed on my mind. His bearing too was exceedingly humble, his dress poor and plain, and from the beginning to the end of the service he gave the most respectful attention to the preacher. Immediately as I began my message my attention became riveted on this hearer. If I would avert my eyes from him for a moment they would instinctively return to him, so that he held my attention rather than I holding his.

To myself I said constantly, "Who can that stranger be?" And then I mentally resolved to find out by going to him as soon as the service was over. But after the benediction had been given the congregation filled the aisles and before I could reach him the visitor had left the house. The gentleman with whom he sat remained behind however; and approaching him with great eagerness, I said: "Can you tell me who sat in your pew this morning?" In the most matter-of-fact way he replied: "Why do you not know that man? It was Jesus of Nazareth." With a sense of the keenest disappointment, I asked him, "My dear sir, why did you let him go without introducing me to him?" With the same nonchalant air the gentleman replied: "Oh, do not be troubled, he has been here today, and no doubt will come again." Dr. Gordon goes on to tell his indescribable rush of emotion as he realized the Lord's presence in his church; of how he felt about his sermon, and whether the Lord had approved

IRREPRESSIBLE FAITH—Matt. 15:21-28.

Obstacles often prove a stimulus to faith and likewise test its genuineness. Our Lord sometimes delays, and even seems to obstruct the channel of our blessings that faith may flare forth in greater glory and power.

TUESDAY

THE NEED OF A PHYSICIAN—Matt. 15:29-31.

The need is everywhere, but so much the more where demonolatry and sorcery abound. How inclined we are to shun the scenes of greatest wretchedness and misery! "Kind hearts are here; yet would the tenderest one Have limits to its mercy,— God has none."

—Adelaide Proctor, in Legend of Provence.

WEDNESDAY

I HAVE COMPASSION—Matt. 15:32-39.

That was one reason why his life kept always so fresh and clear and beautiful—it was filled with concern and helpfulness for others. Not a selfish, malarious bog was he, but an out-flowing, life-giving spring.

THURSDAY

LACK OF DISCERNMENT—Matt. 16:1-4.

As were the Jewish leaders, so today there are many who are blind to God's presence, to his provision in daily matters, to his manifested presence in their friends, to opportunities of service, and to the many "signs of the times" on every hand.

FRIDAY

SUPERFICIAL PIETY—Matt. 16:5-12.

Jesus warns his disciples against the vain egotism and superficial legalism of the Pharisees, and the worldliness and unprincipled opportunism of the Sadducees, all of whose hypocritical piety and sordid influence, though evil, is as pervasive as leaven.

SATURDAY

THE GREAT CONFESSION—Matt. 16:13-20.

Whom do you say Jesus is? It makes all the difference in the world how you look upon him. He must be the Son of God to you, if he is to be your Savior; that is the one essential life-giving belief and confession.

SUNDAY

THE PRINCIPLE OF SELF-RENUNCIATION—Matt. 16:21-28.

It is a strange principle; it contradicts the generally accepted ideas of the people of every age, but Jesus insisted that it was true,—that the way to save one's life is to lose it, and then he proved it by his own glorious example.

of this feature and that of the service, and of the building.

Children of God, you alone can feel the prick of conscience and receive the full realization that your Savior is this moment wondrously near. Have your eyes been holden that you did not know him? You meet here on certain occasions, and is it not true for each service when he comes in our midst, "Yet a little while I am with you, and then I go unto him that sent me." Let this thought linger in your mind, "He has been here today and no doubt will come again." We are builded together for a habitation in the Spirit, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." He came here a short while ago, and as if saying, "I am among you as one that heareth," he took his seat with those whom he loves. Does he not know what is in man? Does he not know your needs? Does he not know your heart, whether you are sincere, or whether you are vainly worshipping idols? No doubt the Lord Jesus sees the one here today that all his life with his wife has worshipped money, leaving starving relatives and wronged neighbors to heap their vengeful blood upon him. How hardly shall they that have riches enter the kingdom of heaven? Another, perhaps a woman, is unsaved, little realizing his presence and being unspiritual, not understanding, perhaps scorning the sermon. Does he say to you, unbeliever, You have no part in me; you must be born again? If there is strife among the flock, should he not lead them? So often we would ignore Jesus, and go forward a day's journey, supposing him to be in the company. Women and men, be careful of your plans. Let Jesus lead, and he will reveal to you.

He is here. Have I been so long time with you and yet hast thou not known me? Christian, surrender all to him. Friend out of Christ, accept him, for as many as received him to them gave he the power to become the sons of God. And there standeth one among you whom ye know not! Make this your motto, "All through Christ; in the Holy Spirit; for the glory of God. All else is nothing."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Loyalty to Christ

By Maurine Hostetler

OUR SCRIPTURE

"Having therefore, brethren, boldness, to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus Christ, by a new and living way, which hath consecrated for us, through the veil, that is to say, his flesh; and having an high priest over the house of God; let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering (for he is faithful that promised) and let us consider one another to provoke unto love, and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more, as ye see the day approaching.

For if we sin wilfully after that we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries" Heb. 10:19-27).

OUR MEDITATION

Faithful allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ is due to him as our friend and Savior. He is worthy of the greatest loyalty, for what he has done for us has infinite value.

It is true that in order to be loyal, we must have a cause. To what cause are we Christians loyal? "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). Paul committed himself so thoroughly to the cause of Jesus that he could say: "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and to the Greek" (Rom. 1:16).

The cause of Jesus Christ was the only cause great enough to satisfy this man whose interests were more than those centered around his own nation and race. It extended to the one universal cause of all mankind.

Faithfulness to him necessitates loyalty to the highest interests of his Kingdom. We as Christians should be deeply concerned regarding the extent of the coming Kingdom, being loyal to every cause that will enlarge the number of his people. When we know of a need of this sort we should fulfil it, whether it be supporting a local or a foreign need.

Faithfulness to him necessitates loyalty to the highest interests of all the citizens of that Kingdom as well as being loyal to the highest of one's ownself. Can we be loyal to a person with whom we do not share a common cause? In the terror of the dreaded Roman guards, the disciples fled from the garden and left Jesus alone to his captors. They were traitors to Jesus and his cause. But after it seemed as if death had taken Jesus from them forever, they clung together for his cause. Out of their apparent disloyalty came a devotion that made it possible for them to face persecution and even death,—loyal to the cause. This is illustrated in the lives of Peter and John when they were arrested and brought before the Sanhedrin. Too, we ought to be loyal to our Master despite the seeming persecutions.

Real and enduring loyalty is impossible without a complete surrender to that cause, without deep confidence in its leader, and without the joyous comradeship of other followers.

Every cause is judged, not by what its followers claim for it but to the extent to which its ideals are represented in their lives. The test in any religion is to be found, not in its great books, but in the "letter of recommendation" written in the lives of those who claim to follow its teachings. (In other words the unwritten Gospel). Some people have thought that Hinduism contains more beautiful ideals than Christianity. The immoral lives of the priests, the hopelessness on the faces of men and women striving to win the favor of their gods; gives evidence of how far the ideals of Hinduism have failed to find expression in the lives of the people of India. Let our lives be so lived that we may in no way misrepresent the ideals for which Christianity stand.

Loyalty to him ought to be recognized as a primary principle and duty of our lives. The appeals coming to us day by day to be more loyal to our President in the midst of the great world struggle now going on ought to impress our minds deeply as Christians in regard to the importance of loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ in the great world struggle now going on between the Kingdom of Christ and the Kingdom of Satan.

OUR PRAYER

Let us pray: We pray thee, our heavenly Father to help us to be more loyal to our cause as Christians. We rejoice in thy Son who gave himself a ransom for us: that by believing on his name might not perish but have everlasting life. Teach us to leave our paths of unfaithfulness, and turn to thee with all our hearts. Bless us all we pray thee, and bring us all into thy kingdom as loyal followers. Amen.

"FEET WASHING A CHURCH ORDINANCE"

By Dr. J. L. Gillin

If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet. John 13:14.

I. The Brethren Church Believes That Feet Washing is a Church Ordinance

1. Because, Christ himself washed the feet of his disciples. John 13:4-11. He is our example. 1 Peter 2:21.

2. Because, since the disciples did not understand, at the time, the purpose of it as performed by Christ, it was not done by him merely to cleanse the feet. John 13:7, 12, 13.

3. Because, Jesus argued that, "If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet." Verse 14.

4. Because, he argued that, "The servant is not greater than his Lord: neither he that is sent greater than he that sent him." Verse 10.

5. Because, Jesus said, "For I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." Verse 15.

6. Because, Jesus said, "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Verse 17.

7. Because, Jesus said in the Great Commission to his disciples, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Matthew 28:19. Did he not command them to wash feet?

8. Because, Paul makes the washing of the saints' feet a condition necessary for a widow to fulfill before she should be received into the number of the widows who were supported by the church. 1 Timothy 5:10. If it had not been a church ordinance, why should he have limited the condition to the washing of the feet of the saints?

9. Because, the Lord attached a penalty in Peter's case, if he refused to have his feet washed. John 13:8. If we refuse to obey Jesus in this matter can we expect to escape our Lord's censure?

10. Because, Jesus likened those who heard his sayings and obeyed them to wise men, and those who heard them and did not heed them to foolish men. Matthew 7:24-29.

11. Because, we have the evidence of church history that it was practiced in the early church. A distorted vestige of it remains today in the practice of the Pope of Rome washing the feet on Maunday Thursday of twelve old beggars of Rome.

12. Because, Christian people today need the lessons which this ordinance teaches, as much as did the disciples of Christ's time: (1) Humility. (2) Loving service of our fellow men. (3) Frequent cleansing spiritually.

II. Objections To Feet Washing as a Church Ordinance.

1. "It is an ancient custom which has no application to the conditions of our time, when men do not wear sandals."

Reply. (1) This was commanded only to the disciples, while the ancient custom would have been enjoined upon all the people, irrespective of whether they were Christians or not. (2) Peter did not understand its significance, as he would have done, had it been the ancient custom with which he was familiar. (3) Christ could not have said that they did not understand what he was doing, had it been an ancient custom merely. John 13:7.

2. "No one washed feet there except the Twelve, therefore it was not intended to be kept perpetually."

Reply. The same objection applies to the Supper and the Communion.

3. "The Apostles do not command it after the day of Pentecost."

Reply. (1) Neither do they command the Lord's Supper and Communion, and many other things that we should do. (2) Paul speaks of it as a church rite in his day. 1 Timothy 5:10. He assumed that it existed without any discussion.

4. "It was performed by Christ in a private house, and therefore was not a church rite."

Reply. So was the Communion. If you throw away the Feet Washing, why observe the Communion? No other rite was commanded so plainly, and with so many variations of command as was the rite of Feet Washing.

III. Some Pertinent Questions

1. Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Are you trying to do the will of God as expressed in the plain words of Jesus in John 13?

2. What answer will you make to your Lord, for not obeying him whom you have promised to love and obey?

3. What right have you to refuse to obey part of his commandments?

4. Why not obey this plain commandment of Jesus? Can you give one good reason?

Preparation for Church Membership

"The Brethren Educator" for March contains the following timely editorial:

The stress of Church school evangelism should be accompanied with an equal emphasis upon training for church membership. Too often there is a tendency to be content with merely a decision to live the Christian life. The person having made the decision is rather hurriedly received into church membership, and little is done to build him up in the faith and loyalty which he had professed. This improper neglect of the newly won followers of Christ may account for the early falling away from the church.

Most pastors have recognized this mistake. Many of them have apologized for their neglect, on the ground that they have not had access to material for a study class. To help pastors meet this problem, the National Sunday School Association prepared a little study text entitled, "Studies in the Way of Life." The booklet consists of twelve lessons, the topics of which are given below. Half of these may be followed prior to church membership, and the other half afterwards, or the entire book may be profitably studied by non-church members.

Table of Contents: 1. The Word of God My Teacher, G. C. Carpenter. 2. God My Heavenly Father, J. Allen Miller. 3. Jesus the Master of My Life, J. Allen Miller. 4. The Holy Spirit My Guide and Comforter, J. Allen Miller. 5. The Church My Fellowship, Geo. S. Baer. 6. My Response of Obedience—Faith, Repentance, Baptism, G. W. Rench. 7. My Response of Obedience—Feet-Washing, The Lord's Supper, Communion, W. S. Bell. 8. My Response of Obedience, Anointing, Non-Resistance, Non-conformity, Charles A. Bame. 9. My Constant Renewal—Christian Worship, J. A. Garber. 10. My Constant Obligation—Stewardship, Self, Service, Substance, H. H. Wolford. 11. My Constant Walk—Christian Living, M. A. Witter. 12. Essay Contest and College Night

The Endeavorers of the Brethren church will refer to the Young People's page under date of January 27th and see there a most interesting challenge to many of our young folks. It is to be hoped that none shall take suggestion lightly. It has seemed to the officials of our Endeavor work to be a very fitting way to impress and complete the program for Educational Day, which occurs June 6th.

A special committee should be appointed in every society to canvass the church for those who are eligible to enter the Essay contest in connection with Ashland College Night. This same committee can easily arrange every detail for the program, using the subjects suggested, for the College Night service in each society.

This service will present the best opportunity of the whole year to make an appeal for Life Work decisions. The president or the pastor or both should present the thought of life investment for service. Be sure to instruct the secretary to mail the names of Life Work recruits to the undersigned.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for March 7)

How May We Help One Another?

James 1:22

I read a story the other day that I think you Juniors would like to hear, so I am going to tell it to you.

Once there was a mother who had two little children. The older child was a boy and the other was a very little girl. Now, this little boy was a great help to his mother, for his little sister was blind and he took care of her. The mother as well as the boy always felt very sorry for the little girl because she missed so many happy things that they could enjoy with their eyes. Because they were sorry for her, they loved her all the more and were exceedingly kind to her. The baby girl loved and trusted her little brother as well as her mother, because she knew that he loved her.

Whenever the mother had to go away, she left the little girl to her brother's care. One time she had to go away for several days to earn money for her children. While she was gone the little boy heard that there was someone passing through the village who could heal people of their sickness. Who do you think that person was? It was Jesus, of course. For, these children lived in that country far across the sea where Jesus lived and preached, long years ago. When this little boy heard that Jesus was to pass through the town that day he hurried as fast as he could to the road where Jesus would go but he could not make much speed carrying his little sister, and when he got there, Jesus had gone. He felt very sad and he hunted all about to find someone to take them to Jerusalem, for he had heard that that was the place to which Jesus was going. But, he could find no one.

That evening, just as it was growing dusk, so that people would not see them and stop them, the boy set forth with his precious burden. The little girl was not afraid, but the boy knew that he had a long, hard journey before him. He walked very far that night before he rested and the next morning some kindly merchants took the two children on their camels and helped them to go the rest of the way to Jerusalem.

After he was in this big place he began inquiring to find out where Jesus was. Finally he found him, but Jesus was in a great crowd. He was riding on a kind of donkey and the people were pressing close to him on every side. The little boy slipped through the throng and when he had gotten as close as he could he called to Jesus, and held his little sister up for the Master to see. Jesus heard the boy and looked upon the little girl and blessed her. Then there was great happiness in the heart of the boy and the little girl for she received her sight, so that she, too, from that time on could enjoy the things that happened and have a good time with her brother.

In this story we have several examples of helpfulness. First, the boy was helpful to his mother in taking care of his little sister, and helpful to his sister in taking her to Jesus. Then we have the great helpfulness of Jesus when he healed the child of her blindness. We are to think together on this subject of helpfulness. This lesson is one that we can easily apply to ourselves, is it not? We have chances all the time to be helpful, if we watch for them. Do you ever watch for a chance to help your mother? Sometimes we can take care of our little brother or sister, as this boy did. Maybe they are not blind, and we are very thankful that they are not, but they need to be looked after anyway. Sometimes we can be helpful by just keeping quiet and not disturbing our fathers and mothers when we know that they are not feeling good, or are worried about something.

I know another splendid way of being helpful. Do you know anyone who is sick? If you do know someone, there are lots of things you can do. Maybe you can go to see them, or you can write them a nice letter, or card, or you can send them a magazine, or toy, or flowers. That last would depend on the age of the person and the things that you could get.

Do you know what the Bible says about doing things for others? The references for this week tell about some different ways of being helpful and then that last one, the one in James, gives us a message that sums up all the rest. It says that we should not only listen to the things about Jesus and the words in the Bible, but that we should carry them out. We must not only think about the ways in which Jesus helped those around him, but we must find ways in which we can do things like Jesus did. The last part of the verse about deluding ourselves means that we will deceive ourselves if we think we are Christians when we read the Bible and think about Jesus, unless we try to do things like Jesus did. We shall try to remember to be helpful, shall we not? Ashland, Ohio.

Two Pastors Commendation

class for them. The receiving of folks into the church is just the beginning of a much larger task.

After getting a response from this group I opened the suggestion to the general audience. And further suggested that if there were those present that would like to have the book, even though they could not attend the regular meetings of the class, I would be pleased to include their names for a book. As a result of this canvass, four dozen books were ordered; about three dozen were taken as soon as received. The remaining dozen I have found valuable as a tract to leave in homes where the Brethren position is not clearly understood. Though not exhaustive, it is at least thought provoking and will often lead or pave the way for further instruction.

The class met once a week. The average attendance was about 18. The lesson was discussed informally and opportunity was given for the asking of questions. The interest continued and at the end of the course several asked for MORE. Doubtless I shall be voicing the sentiment of others when I say to those responsible for this little book, give us "Studies in the Way of Life," No. 2.

George E. Cone says:

It is my impression that we have in the studies in "The Way of Life" one of the greatest helps to our churches that has ever been put out, if we will use it wisely and thoroughly. Let us plan ahead and see that our class, if possible, has a number of prospects so that we may have visible results at the close of the class. This we did not do and in that far we failed to reach the desired goal of the course.

We had a most delightful experience in the work and our own soul was fed and our faith strengthened. Not to say that we were educated more deeply in the Word of God thereby. We would recommend the work to anyone who will give the time, thought and prayer necessary to carry out a class. Might we be allowed to give the humble judgment that, if this course is faithfully and prayerfully presented it will do more real good than many of the things we are now doing? We believe that to be the truth.

Now, this is our conclusion, after studying the delusion of so many of God's dear people, whose aims are higher than the church steeple! Experience is a hard but trustworthy teacher, and wills have this one every weak feature—broken they can and shall be through Time 'til Eternity, by those whom one could ne'er foresee as so untrue and unworthy the name of friend and relative!

What then can a person do to be sure that his will goes through without fear of blunder or of plunder, or of being torn rudely asunder? The Annuity Plan is the only way by which one can truly say, "My money is well invested, and can never be molested!"

By our plan of annuity, you have the very best of security, with a good rate of interest for sure as long as your life shall endure—after that, it can be truly said, "He yet speaketh, though he be dead," for the money invested as annuity will live on through all Eternity in the lives that have been touched and won for the Master—saved from woe and eternal disaster!

So, if you have some money that is bothering you (be it a hundred, or a thousand, or a million or two), and you want it put where 'twill be secure, and through Time and Eternity to endure—write for details to your Treasurer true—he will give the particulars to you: 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, is the address that will him reach. Or, if more desirable and convenient, write Dr. J. Allen Miller, your President; or Professor A. J. McClain, the Correspondent; at Ashland, Ohio, either may be addressed—write them, and set your mind at rest. Do it today, without delay—the Lord will repay!

He Couldn't Stop

In a Southern city lives a man who had never given away any money in all of his life, that is, anything more than small change which he had in his pocket when the collection plate was passed.

A representative of a Mission Board went to talk with him about larger possibilities of giving. He went in fear and trembling, for his prospective host was known among his friends as a man who would speak his mind on all occasions rather candidly and the mind that was in him at that time was not a giving mind.

To the amazement of the Board representative the information which he gave concerning the need and the opportunity in the mission field was received with an interest which seemed to increase as he talked. When he presented the opportunity of taking the full support of a missionary, to his great amazement his host said that he would like to do that, and forthwith wrote his check to cover the entire amount necessary for the first year's work. That check was written ten years ago, and it has been followed every year by many others. Recently this man, who is now recognized as a generous donor, said, "That man got me started and I can't stop."

He has contributed literally to a splendid new church in a needy part of his own city, moved his own membership to it and is standing back of it in every way. Lately he has gone into the great business of giving mountain boys an education through church schools. Already he has invested more than $300,000 in the Lord's work. Since the writing of that first check ten years ago, and now he is laying all of his plans to invest about $3,000,000 more in the Lord's work. He is trying to sell a sky-scraper and a bank which is housed in it that he may put the proceeds from the sale into building Christian character. His own time and energy are being devoted to that Christ-like work. Under the process the man himself has grown toward the full stature of Christ.—The Missionary Review of the World.

Protestants of the Earth

Statistics presented to the Stockholm Conference on Christian Life and Work give the total Protestant population of the earth as 195,100,000. The Protestant population of the British empire is reckoned at 46,900,000, divided as follows: Anglican, 28,600,000; Free Churches, 800,000; Church of Scotland, 2,700,000; United Free Church of Scotland, 1,500,000; Irish Presbyterians, 800,000; Canadian Presbyterians, 1,400,000; Canadian Methodists, 1,100,000; Canadian Baptists, 400,000; Canadian Lutherans, 200,000; Church of Australia, 1,600,000; Church of South Africa, 600,000. In continental Europe the Protestant population is said to be: Germany, 40,300,000; Switzerland, 2,200,000; Holland, 3,600,000; France, 1,400,000; Denmark, 3,200,000; Norway, 2,300,000; Sweden, 5,700,000; Finland, 3,300,000; Estonia, 1,030,000; Latvia, 1,500,000; Russia, 1,100,000; Lithuania, 200,000; Poland, 1,500,000; Czechoslovakia, 2,100,000; Austria, 300,000; Hungary, 3,600,000; Roumania, 1,300,000. The same figures give the Protestant population of the United States as 74,500,000.

These figures are probably over-generous to the Protestants. They are based on an estimate of about one hundred and fifty per cent sympathizers or adherents to Protestantism in addition to the actual members of Protestant churches. This would mean only about 75,000,000 Protestant communicants or open confessors of Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior. They number about one in twenty of the earth's population.

"Standing By"

When a missionary started to Korea years ago an old college friend said, "Well, old friend, I won't forget you."

Throughout the years he sent newsy, cheering home letters out to his friend in Korea. He seemed to have a marvelous way of understanding what his missionary friend needed most. Money, clothing, and other supplies followed the letters with an occasional shipment of candy for the missionary family. During the years that have passed since those days of beginnings this donor has grown in wealth and in giving also. Last year he gave to one church enterprise $75,000 and this year he has added $100,000 to his designated giving. One gift built a school in China, another a missionary home in Korea. In the meantime the dormitory of a mountain school has been erected and many other gifts made for designated purposes.

His right hand has not known what his left hand was doing and scarcely any one knows him as a generous giver. He has never been impoverished by his large gifts and reminds one always of the man of whom it was said:

"A man there was, some called him mad,
 The more he gave the more he had."

He began his giving with small sums very early in life before he had great possessions. Now he is a very wealthy man and his gifts run into hundreds of thousands.—Selected.

Let Me

Lord, let me bring a little grace
 To every dark and gloomy place;
 Let me rejoice that I can give
 Some splendor to the life I live,
 A little faith when I am tired,
 A little joy where I abide.
 A touch of friendship now and then
 To mark my comradeship with men.

Lord, not for high renown I ask,
 Let me bring merit to my task,
 A fair companion I would be
 For all who share life's toil with me;
 When heavy burdens weigh me down,
 Grant me the courage not to frown,
 And howsoever my hopes shall end,
 Let me not cease to play the friend.

Lord, let me carry where I go
 Some little joy to all I know,
 Let those into my life be wrought—
 A little faith, a little thought,
 A little mirth, a little grace
 To glorify the common place.
 Lord, let some little splendor shine,
 To mark this earthly course of mine.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HUDSON, IOWA

Days, months, weeks go by before we realize that we are tardy in paying the Evangelist readers the debt of making our church report. We are now far into the fifth year of our ministry here and it hardly seems possible that we are more than six months behind in our report.

We have permitted pressing duties to crowd out time which should have been taken for other things considered less important. But now that last year is gone, as we briefly review our church activities have not been violent, neither have they been faint. The work in some respects supercedes that of other years. Financially, and from the standpoint of business, the church last year was the best for many years. We have suffered very useful and strong members of our body. The loss, by death and other means, of some. Yet the good work of the Finance Committee and the cooperation of each member through the fine spirit of interest and fellowship has made this success possible. Last year our expenses were more than $2,000 and yet this amount was provided by a contributing membership of less than forty. It is true that this represents less than one-third of our total number, but when we consider the number of children, inactive members and isolated members, the burden of much of our work bears down heavy upon the shoulders of a few. Nevertheless we move on without complaint.

The attendance of all our services has been up to average, and in some respects above that of former years. The annual Vacation Bible School was conducted last year by the writer which was well attended, and the work carried on by a loyal corps of teachers. We are already planning the fifth school at this place for the coming summer. The Woman's Missionary Society is one of our most important organizations in activity and service. These women participate in practically every interest of the church. Much credit is due their faithful persevering chairman, Mrs. W. J. Gutnecht. The Christian Endeavor Society has a membership of about thirty, very fine enthusiastic young people. We have the same problem with our young people here that churches have everywhere in the small country town or the country church are having, that of holding and building for the future. Only a few of our young people locate here for life. The Sisterhood Girls continue their work with enjoyment and loyalty to the organization. A very fine group of girls are engaging in this form of service and fellowship. This is the second year of the organization. The first part of the year our Sunday school was above that of former years in attendance and interest, but the latter part of the year the attendance was very much reduced by the unusual weather and bad roads, beginning so early in the fall. We are still suffering from this handicap. But with the coming of spring we look forward to an excellent Sunday school year.

The three churches here united in a three weeks' evangelistic campaign during which the fellowship and friendship of these three bodies was very highly appreciated by all who participate. There was one addition to our church, this being the only confession in these services.

Our work here is very pleasant, although it is characterized by many problems, and tasks which are hard. Yet the people are loyal to the pastor and the church receives their full loyal support.

Remember the work at Hudson in prayer to our Heavenly Father.

L. A. MYERS, Pastor.

ALTOONA, PENNSYLVANIA

It is now two years and past since the writer took charge as pastor of the First Brethren church, Altoona, Pennsylvania. To most of the people I was not a stranger here, having held a two years' pastorate at this place about twenty years ago. Then the people worshipped in an old building, not really suitable for public worship, though the little flock seemed to be happy, and loyal I know they were. Since my coming here a very convenient and up-to-date parsonage has been erected at a cost of above $7,000, and on the very spot where the old church building stood. Since 1911 the people have worshipped in a new church building, which, it was the privilege of the writer to dedicate at the time of its completion.

While a very respectable number of the former loyal people still remains, the church has suffered the loss of two of its leaders, Elder W. A. Harmon, well known to the brotherhood during the earlier years of the Brethren organization, and L. Z. Replogle who made himself apparently indispensable to the little group of worshipers at this place. They have, however, adjusted themselves to the loss sustained, and departure of these men has brought other talent into requisition.

My first work here was the revision of the church roster. The secretary handed me a little book containing a list of the membership, by actual count 202. At the end of the first year the number was cut down to 150 and six months later the figures had dwindled to 100. During the last decade this church has had five special evangelistic meetings, aggregating additions to the number of about 200. Of these probably twenty-five can be "counted on." After careful and painstaking search it was decided by the official board, at the end of the first year, that the basis of membership should be 100. During the year following this adjustment of the church roster the names of six people were added by baptism and letter. The outlook, as is readily seen, was not encouraging, and has not been until recently. It was a case of the "ninety and nine" gone astray and the one safely in the fold. But for the faithful, loyal few, the conditions would have been hopeless. But with their splendid cooperation things have taken a turn for the better. Until the close of the year 1925 but six people were added to that number. January 31, of this year the pastor began a two weeks' evangelistic effort closing February 14. At the evening service, February 7 there were three confessions and Thursday evening of the same week five more. On Sunday morning, February 14, the last day of the meeting, eight more joined the ranks, and since then another, and by next Sunday (February 21) we have reasons to believe the number will have reached twenty, all of them young people ranging from ten to fifteen years. From now on until Easter these young people will be under the care and instruction of the pastor who will give them a series of lessons on what the Christian life really means, how to become a Christian and how to remain one. The lessons will include such topics as these: Who and what is God, why should we worship him and how worship helps us; who Jesus really was, what he taught us about God; Jesus and salvation, from what and to what we need to be saved; God's means of grace; the meaning of baptism, prayer, etc.

During the little more than two years of my pastorate I have had twelve funerals, all but three within the church; seven weddings, two of which were church weddings with ring ceremonies, and, strange to say, the groom in one of which was a Roman Catholic who sang in our choir for a while.

To meet the finances of the church we have adopted the budget system in which not only the interests of the local church but also all the interests of the church at large share. The appropriations for outside interests during the first year have not been as large as we hope to make them, owing to heavy expense in the home church. Early last summer it was decided that during the vacation season the church building should be redecorated both inside and outside. The Golden Rule Class (the name of the young women's class) assumed the responsibility for the inside decorations. The work was neatly done and the church building presents a pleasing appearance. New hymnals for the regular church services were purchased; also new books for the Sunday school. The contributions for the year, including all interests, local and outside activities will average between thirty and forty dollars per member.

All the special days of the church have been appropriately observed, Easter, Christmas, Children's Day, Mothers' Day, etc. One of the best and most interesting of all special days during the year 1925 was Bible Day, in recognition of the four hundredth anniversary of the Tyndale translation of the Holy Bible. It should be said also that the Sisterhood Girls have a very flourishing organization here under the care of Sister Gerhart as Patroness. The Golden Rule Class of the Sunday school is a very active organization which believes in doing more than simply study the Bible once a week. A successful Woman's Missionary Society is maintained.

From the pastor's point of view the outlook at this time is more hopeful than at any other time since his coming here. The work thus far, has been very largely, one of reconstruction, but we have now entered upon what the pastor interprets as active constructive work. It is a great work, this work of building the Kingdom. It is our purpose, with the cooperation of the membership, and under the blessing and guidance of our God and his Christ, to do our bit in the building of the Kingdom which it is prophesied shall some day swallow up all other kingdoms,—the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our God and his Christ. I note with keen interest the growth of the several institutions of the church and the expansion of her varied interests.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

On Sunday afternoon, February 7th, 1926, we dedicated to the Lord our youngest "child", naming her The Second Brethren Church of Long Beach (you will see her picture on the front cover page). Of the Brethren churches of Southern California, she is No. 7 (which, as you know, is the perfect number of Scripture), she is just seven miles from the mother church at Fifth and Cherry, Long Beach, and she cost us somewhat over $7,000 in the building! So you see, altogether she is a perfect and proper child, and we are expecting great things of her!

The total valuation of the property (including the two lots, the building and its furnishings) is approximately $10,000. One of the lots was given by Brother Harry A. Kirby, member of the First Brethren church of Long Beach, and he also donated upwards of $700.00 in the time and labor of himself and foreman. In addition to this, many others of our people gave days of labor along the lines in which they were skilled. All this, together with the money offerings of our church, enabled us to come to our Dedictory Exercises with the property two-thirds paid for. The mother church will take care of this "child" until it is able to take care of itself. Judging from the results of the canvass made from house to house by our committee, this time will not be far distant, as our visitors were welcomed in many homes with interest and promises of attendance.

The house was crowded at its dedication, and the Holy Spirit himself was there, filling us with joy and blessing. Brother Kimmell, Brother Cobb, Brother Jennings and Brother Tay were all there, and our own beloved pastor, Dr. L. S. Bauman, preached the Dedictory Sermon. The Holy Spirit just kept pouring on the joy until we were all joy-full—"slopping over with joy", as some one has said is the true meaning of 1 John 1:4. At the close of the sermon, Dr. Bauman presented a financial statement of the cost of the building and gave those present the opportunity of having a part in the investment. The result was a subscription of $1218.67 (and, as our pastor said, there was not the smell of a chicken supper, oysters, or pies on a dollar of it!), bringing our total indebtedness down to an even $2,000.

Our pastor is to hold two weeks' evangelistic services at this new church, and we are looking forward to great things. "The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad. * * * * The Lord will do great things!"

A TASTER (Psa. 34:8).

EAU CLAIRE, WISCONSIN

On one occasion our Savior said: "How think ye? If a man have an hundred sheep, And one be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine and goeth into the mountains, and seeketh that which is gone astray? and if so be that he find it, Verily I say unto you he rejoiceth more of that sheep, than of the ninety and nine, which went not astray, even so it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." Dear Brethren, will you listen to a few words from one that loves the Brethren church because of the keeping and obeying of the commands of Jesus? Unless some one in our blessed fraternity, a gospel preacher, will decide to do as our dear Brother G. T. Ronk did for Des Moines, Iowa, I fear we will perish at Eau Claire, Wisconsin.

And if there is a man on the ministerial list of the Brethren church that thinks that he might accept the job of trying to build up a church in a beautiful city of about 25,000 people and have the entire charge of the work and all the assistance I could bring to him, both personal and by appealing to our mission board for help in his work and for any information that might be wanted, you can have it by writing to Wm. S. Goss, Secretary, 1714 Summit Street, Eau Claire, Wisconsin, or the writer, J. A. Baker, Mondovi, Wisconsin, R. R. Number 5, Box 113.

(Brother Baker, who is seventy-five years of age, informs us that he has three daughters and a son in Eau Claire, besides some grandchildren, and all are anxious for a Brethren church at that place.—Editor).

CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Following is a report of the Conemaugh meeting under the leadership of Brother B. T. Burnworth.

The Conemaugh church entered into an arrangement by which five churches launched a revival campaign. For two weeks the meeting was carried on and a splendid interest was manifested. Excellent work was done of a preliminary character and then the Brethren entered into their meeting with the momentum acquired through the union services. The union services however were continued another week with just four churches cooperating. They closed without any confessions.

We continued for two weeks under Brother Burnworth's splendid preaching which was given wide publicity through the local dailies and as a result we had (14) fourteen confessions. Since then I have had another applicant for baptism which would make 15. The result was unusual when we consider that within the last year Conemaugh had baptized and received into membership 83 new members. Brother Burnworth did a splendid work and left many dear friends as a result of his labors. God is indeed using him. The congregation bids him a hearty Godspeed in his field of labor.

GEORGE H. JONES.

REV. G. H. JONES TO GO TO MUNCIE, INDIANA CHURCH

Leaves on May 1

Rev. George H. Jones, for the past six years pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church, announced his resignation to his congregation at the services yesterday morning. The church recently called Mr. Jones for another year of service.

In resigning his charge Rev. Jones told his congregation that he had accepted a call to the Muncie, Indiana Brethren church, a call given some time ago but only recently finally accepted.

Rev. Jones is a Johnstown, and has served his church in this city on a number of occasions, spending two and a half years at the Morrellville church years ago, and returning in 1907 for another three-year period. He went from the Morrellville church to Conemaugh. One of the long pastorates held by Rev. Jones was at Gratis, Ohio, where he spent eight years.

During his pastorate in Conemaugh the church has been cleared of debt and over 200 accessions to its membership have been made. He will leave Johnstown on May 1.

Rev. Jones has been active in young people's work for many years and for the past 12 years has been National Superintendent of Young People's Work in the Brethren communion. Locally he has been a leader in the Boy Scout movement, in the Y. M. C. A., and the Sunday School Basketball League, serving as Secretary-Treasurer of the latter organization for many years, and has organized the young folks of his own charge in splendid fashion. The Community Training School conducted by the Y. M. C. A. also owes much to Mr. Jones' work, he serving as one of the members of the faculty.—The Johnstown Tribune.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

The Copper-Kettle Fairy

By Miriam Clark Potter

There was once a fairy who lived in a Copper Kettle in a cook's kitchen. He led a very dangerous life, for every time the cook took down the Kettle to stew something in it he had to jump out quickly, in great danger of his head. The Kettle hung on a peg behind the stove; it was big and clean and shining, and being in it was like being in the inside of a golden drum.

The Fairy spent his time sliding down the sides of the Kettle, tapping on it very lightly when the cook was out of the room, and polishing it so that he might make faces for himself to laugh at. From living in the Kettle so long he had grown to be of a deep copper color, and the tip of his shiny nose shone like the dot of light on a yellow shoe-button.

One rainy day, the cook came into the kitchen in a great hurry, saying to herself: "Cream saucé! cream sauce for the cabbage! I forgot to make it, and they must have it at once, and they are waiting at the table." She snatched the Kettle from the peg so quickly that the Fairy, who had been taking a little nap, as he felt that he could do safely at that hour of the day, did not have time to jump out.

There he was, inside the Kettle, and the cook carried it swiftly over to the mixing-table and dropped a lump of butter and a great spoonful of flour right in upon him. It was like being caught in a snowstorm with a terrible yellow mud underfoot, and the poor Fairy did not have time even to sneeze or to cry out. Then came milk pouring like a burst of white rain; and the cook stamped over to the stove to put the Kettle on.

"Oh! I shall be boiled alive!" thought the Fairy. But just then the woman, in her hurry and peevishness slipped and fell upon the floor. The Kettle flew out of her hand, and the lump of butter, with the Fairy under it, slid under the table; and the milk spread in a little pond all round him.

Quickly the Fairy freed himself from the butter, and climbed up the table leg. So when the cook had picked up the lump, wiped the milk away, and started a fresh sauce, scolding to herself all the time, the Fairy was sitting on a nail on the under-side of the table.

"A narrow escape!" he thought. "I must look out for myself, and never sleep except at night, when there is no cooking. Now I shall keep a sharp lookout, and when she puts the Kettle back I will get into it again."

The sauce was prepared and served, the dishes were washed, and by the time the early afternoon sun came peeping into the kitchen the Fairy's house was hanging on its peg again. The cook left the room for the garden, to pluck some lettuce, and the wee sprite ran lightly across the floor to the Copper Kettle.

But oh, what a state it was in! The cook, for whom the whole day had gone wrong because she did not try to do her work well, had left burned milk and butter and flour sticking to the Kettle, all thick and messy. It looked bad and smelled bad, and the little Fairy began at once to work to make his house all clean again.

The cat, on the hearth rug, lifted her head; she thought she heard a mouse. Then she realized it was just the Copper-Kettle Fairy, and, though she did not like him very well, she let him alone.

But the Fairy worked so hard and scratched so mightily that the Kettle fell suddenly to the floor with a great bang, just as the cook came into the kitchen. "Why, how did that happen?" she said, and ran to pick it up, and again the Fairy had not time to jump out.

"I had better soak the thing," she told herself. "I left it in a hurry, because I did not feel like scrubbing it; the mistress may come into the kitchen and say that I do not do the dishes clean." She had been out in the garden, among the cool lettuce and tomato plants, all sweet and clean and fresh from the rain, and something dusty and disordered had been washed out of her mind while she was there.

She went to the sink and turned the spigot just above the Fairy's head, so that he was drenched with water and was floating round on top of it when she turned the spigot off. It was a mercy that she did not see him, but she was looking the other way and wondering how the Kettle could have fallen from its peg.

The clock and the cat were laughing at her, for they knew who had done it, but she did not see them.

The poor Fairy splashed round in the water till at last he reached the rim of the Kettle and pulled himself out, all dripping. "A great day!" he thought. "This is my second terrible adventure. What shall I do till the Kettle is dry and clean and hung up again?"

On the lettuce that the cook had just brought in was a cricket, hiding under a leaf till he could find a way of escape. He spoke to the Fairy now, and said: "Why don't you go and live in the garden? It is much pleasanter out there, even with the storms and the rain, for the people let us very much alone, and the nights, with the stars and the breezes, are sweet. There is plenty of good sunshine too, and you can make all the noise you want."

"I don't want to make any noise," replied the Copper-Kettle Fairy. "I just want a chance to polish my Kettle, slide down the sides and make faces into it."

"You're a silly thing!" laughed the cricket, as it jumped out of the lettuce and slid through a crack in the floor.

"Perhaps," thought the Fairy. He got down from the sink and went and hid behind the leaky teapot on the shelf, where he always stayed when the Kettle was in use.

Some time, the cat and the clock both think, the fairy will really be caught and taken to the table in a dish of cream sauce, but the people will see him swimming and spluttering round there, fish him out with a spoon, and cry aloud that a real fairy has been discovered at last. But the Copper Kettle knows better than they do, that that will never happen, for it has found out, just from daily living with such a creature, what a clever, lucky, bewitching thing a Fairy is.—The Methodist Protestant.

IN THE SHADOW

FETTERS—Theodore Feters, son of John and Elizabeth Feters, was born in Jefferson Township, Adams County, Indiana, on the 10th day of August, 1872. He departed this life at his home in Jefferson Township on the 11th day of February, 1926, at the age of 53 years, 6 months, 1 day. He spent most of his life in the township where he was born.

On April 13th, 1891 he was united in marriage to Miss Ida Tester of Adams County, Indiana, by the Rev. Louis Huber. To this union were born three children—Bessie, who died while quite young; Grace, of near Steubenville, Ohio; and Bryson C., of Chattanooga, Ohio. This union was broken by death in the year of 1913, July 11th.

On August 8th, 1914 he was again united in marriage to Mrs. Edna Baker of Mercer County.

Brother Feters was converted and became a member of the Evangelical church, then in the year of 1915 under the preaching of Brother A. B. Thomas he was baptized and taken into the Brethren church of which he was a member at the time of his death.

The writer visited Brother Feters during his sickness when he expressed his willingness to depart and be with his Lord. The community has lost an excellent citizen, the wife a kind husband, the children a devoted father.

God knows the way. He holds the key.

He guides us with unerring hand;

Sometimes with fearless eyes we'll see

And surely, fully understand.

Funeral by the writer, assisted by the Rev. McNight of the Methodist church.

JOHN FAIR.

LONG—Beulah LaVonne Long was born March 25, 1918. She died December 3, 1925, aged 7 years, 8 months and 18 days. Beulah was the daughter of Forrest and Hazel Long, who are faithful members of the Smithville-Sterling Brethren church. She was only sick about a week, having contracted scarlet fever with complications which caused intense suffering until relieved by the Heavenly Father taking her home to himself.

The bereaved parents have the heart-felt sympathy of a host of friends. Many letters of encouragement were received during the time of affliction and while under quarantine. May the parents realize that underneath are the everlasting arms.

Funeral services were conducted by their pastor and interment was made in Smithville cemetery.

MORTON L. SANDS, Pastor.

STIMMEL—Robert Stimmel was born near Paris, Ohio, July 31, 1863, and died at Canton, Ohio, February 3, 1926. Brother Stimmel was a member of the First Brethren church of Louisville. The day of his burial was just one month after the death of his wife. His death was caused by a stroke of paralysis. Grief and loneliness caused by his wife's death hastened his death. He suffered in all, six strokes of paralysis during nine years, each succeeding one being harder than the last. Funeral services were conducted from the church by the pastor, R. F. Porte.

MILLER—Andrew J. was born in Tuscarawas County, Ohio, on January 13, 1849, and died at his home in Rittman, Ohio on February 4, 1926. His age was 77 years, and 21 days. He was united in marriage with Miss Nancy Ellen Smucker on December 25, 1879. Five children were born to this union of whom four are living. He was the second child of twelve children, eight of whom are yet living. He was reared in the Mononite faith and for many years served the Lord in that church. Many of the large relationship belong to that fraternity. In 1914 he transferred his membership to the Brethren church at Rittman and always was found faithful to his obligations to the church. He was a willing worker and had a multitude of friends. He was kind, amiable and cheerful. I learned to admire him. Funeral services were held in the Rittman church and there a congregation that taxed the church. Brother Arthur Cashman and Elder Gerig of the Mononite church assisted in the services which the writer conducted. May God bless the family.

J. ALLEN MILLER.

WILT—Elder Samuel W. Wilt was born July 20, 1843, in Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, the son of John C. and Maley Wilt. He was received into the church by confession of faith and baptism in the year 1857, in which he continued as a faithful member until his death, October 30, 1925, a period of almost seventy years. He was chosen a deacon in the year 1874 in the Cowenshannock congregation, Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, and June 5, 1875 was called to the sacred ministry, ordained at Clifton Mills, West Virginia, by Elder Gans of Uniontown, Pennsylvania. His first charge was the Cowenshannock congregation, later he served several other congregations in Pennsylvania. Most of his ministerial labors, however, were in West Virginia and Ohio, in which states he served a number of congregations. As an evangelist he did successful work in the states. He was the author of several tracts and booklets, "The Plan of Salvation," being one of them. He was a strong defender of the faith as held by the Brethren and engaged successfully in numerous controversies in defense of the doctrines of baptism and feet-washing, etc.

Elder Wilt retired from active ministerial service about ten years ago, and at the time of his death his life as minister extended over a half century. He and his brother, Rev. J. W. Wilt of the Church of the Brethren were called to the Christian ministry on the same day of the same year. Last year the brothers celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their call to the ministry. It was a rare occasion, for truly, very few of us can recall a coincident so rare, of two brothers called to the ministry on the same day and continue together for a period of fifty years.

Elder Wilt was twice married, his first wife having died thirty years ago. He is survived by his second wife, Mrs. Emma Dell Wilt, a faithful and devoted member of the Brethren church, Altoona, Pennsylvania; and two sons, Chester and Paul, both at home.

A. D. GNAGEY.

GUTHRIE—John Guthrie, son of Joseph and Nancy Guthrie, was born in Pike township, Knox County, Ohio, on July 8, 1845, and departed from this life at his home in Ankenytown, Knox County, Ohio, on Wednesday evening, February 3, 1926. His age was 80 years, 6 months and 26 days.

On February 1, 1873 he was united by marriage to Rachel Cole. To this union were born three daughters and one son. The mother of these children passed to the eternal world on August 2, 1882, also one daughter, Maude, has preceded the father in death, on September 2, 1913.

On August 5, 1883 he was united by marriage to Anna Staley. To this union two daughters were born. For a period of over 43 years this union has been marked by mutual happiness and understanding. During this time the children grew to the age when they were ready to take their places in the world's great struggle. To all of the children the place where father and mother were, was home. Father was always interested in the welfare of all of his children and always ready to help us in any way that it was possible for him to do so.

In the winter of 1883 father and mother united with the Brethren church at Ankenytown. Father was elected to the office of deacon which office he held until death. For a number of years he was church treasurer and only when the infirmities of age made the work too hard did he refuse to continue in office. He was township clerk and clerk of the school board for a period of 43 years. Year after year the people of Berlin township showed their confidence in him by repeatedly electing him to office. In all his four score years father was very active among the people of his community. He loved the company of his friends, he never forgot his greatest friend, the Lord and Christ who redeemed him from sin and gave him the promise of that eternal inheritance in light. The ministers of the church were always welcome at his home and prayer was the daily order of his long life. On Sunday, January 24, Elders Strasbaugh and Frye with a number of Christian friends gathered at the home, and after singing hymns and prayer the elders anointed him with oil in the name of the Lord. In the weakened condition of his body he feebly tried to join in the singing of the hymns but in full faith and trust in God he received the blessed service of the church, ready for whatever was to come to him. On Wednesday morning, February 3, the end seemed close, and his suffering intense, which during all his sickness he bore with great patience. His spirit lingered in his body until the sombre shades of night had wrapped the earth in slumber, then peacefully and quietly he fell asleep in the arms of the Savior he loved so much. We shall miss him, because he was always jolly and made us all welcome in his home, but we would not wish him back again from the glory world but only to look for the Blessed Coming of our Christ in his Kingdom when we shall meet again never to part.

He leaves on earth to mourn his decease, his wife, one son, James A. Guthrie, four daughters, Mrs. E. D. MacMillin, Mrs. W. H. Leedy, Mrs. Harry Young, Mrs. R. F. Porte; together with these many friends who found in him a true and loyal friend.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. D. Frye, assisted by Rev. G. S. Stambaugh and Rev. R. D. Barnard. Mr. Frye's funeral text was Psalm 116:15.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

YOUR BENEVOLENCE OFFERING

Send your Benevolence Offering to Mr. J. J. Wolfe, Care Peabody School Furniture Company, North Manchester, Indiana. Mr. Wolfe is the secretary of the Board of Benevolences. You have been in the habit of sending money to Mr. Herman Roscoe, our former secretary, for several years. Don't follow habit and make a mistake.

H. F. E. O'NEILL, President,
National Board of Benevolences.

MONEY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

All money received for Foreign Missions after March 1st, 1925, will be credited as part of the Easter Offering. Churches therefore may take their Easter Offering, if they see fit, any time during the month of March. We are giving this notice inasmuch as some churches in the brotherhood will not have regular services on Easter Sunday and may prefer to take their offerings before that time.

L. S. BAUMAN, Treasurer.

The Printed Preacher

The "Printed Preacher" has no fixed place of preaching, for the world is his parish; and while he is powerless in himself, he is ready to be sent wherever there is an opening for his message, and he will deliver it on the spot. It is all the same to him whether it is in the poorest slum or stately mansion, by the bedside or the seashore, in town or in the country, by camp-fire or in barracks, in store or in stable, by road or by rail. If only there is even one to listen—no matter where—he is always ready.

Some "Platform Preachers" have a very decided preference for rich and fashionable audiences, whilst some are only "at home" with intellectual hearers, who can appreciate a brilliant discourse, logical and entertaining. Others, again, prefer speaking to the poor and less learned, being more approachable, less critical; while there are those who have no such choice, so long as their congregation is a large one.

Our "Printed Preacher" has no particular preference. He is bound to no special society; makes choice of no particular class, creed or shade of opinion... and as to the question of numbers, few or many, it does not affect him.

Then some "Platform Preachers" are timid, especially in speaking to individuals—Not so with our "Printed Preacher"—his unassuming fearlessness impresses you as being a most desirable quality in any witness for God. For example, he would be as ready to look a member of the royal family in the face and tell him of another crowned Head, as to tell the poorest beggar in the gutter of One who is "rich unto all that call upon him." He certainly would as fearlessly tell a popular modern theologian of the serious consequences of preaching "any other gospel" than the one brought from heaven by the Holy Spirit, as tell a contrite sinner of the cleansing blood of Jesus Christ the Son of God; or tell him that "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

Then, again, some "Platform Preachers" occasionally consider themselves "off duty!" Our "Printed Preacher"—never. Indeed, more, he knows no "time limit"—"in season, out of season" he is "always ready"—midday, midnight, matters not; it is never too early, nor too late, for his services. "Always abounding in the work of the Lord", might well be said of him. "Patient continuance" characterizes his work. Unfailing readiness, untiring constancy, may justly be claimed for him. He will patiently repeat the same address the same day, as often as any one can possibly find time to listen.

Some "Platform Preachers" feel greatly annoyed when the patience of one of their hearers gets exhausted by the length of a discourse and leaves before it is half finished. Our "Printed Preacher" takes no offense at such slight. If only a few words are listened to, and even if these be opposed by bitter expression of unmerited anger, he will never answer back!

Should it strike you further that his message might be a comfort, or a timely warning, to some friend or loved one over the seas, thousands of miles away, you will find this preacher instantly ready to be sent, no matter where! Nor will the expense of sending him be any impediment, for one of the smallest copper coins of the realm will be sufficient to cover the cost of his journey, even if it be to the other side of the globe; and on such errands he waits not to be accredited by any human organization. He is as ready to be made use of by a little girl of nine or ten as by the greatest potentate or richest millionaire.

No preacher on earth has today such an "open door" as this "Printed Preacher"—obtaining an entrance, and a hearing, where none other can.—The Gospel Message.

The Evangelism We Neglect

That the Christian gospel is essentially a gospel of evangelism is well understood, and wherever that cause is embraced the spirit of evangelism is quite generally manifest. But the evangelism we are most acquainted with is that which has to do with the rescue of wasted and ill-spent lives. We are not disposed to say that this type of evangelism is too much emphasized; it would be difficult to find an individual or a church too much alive in the responsibility that rests upon every divinely-renewed soul for the eternal welfare of those who are living in sin. Rather, most churches would find more favor with God if they were more concerned about lost men and women. There is far too much indifference at this point; too many who are living at ease in Zion; too many who have sipped just enough of the cup of salvation to ease the burden of the Master's compassion for souls. We would all do well to have more of this evangelistic fervor, to be more zealous for the turning of men and women from the darkness of sin into the marvelous light of the Gospel.

But that is not the whole of the evangelistic obligation, and we may rightfully doubt if it is the most important phase of it. There is a neglected part to which the church must give more intelligent and earnest attention if it is to look well to its own future and if it is to make serious claim to having faithfully obeyed the commission of its Master. The evangelism we have neglected is that of saving the children and youth for Christ and the church before they enter into the ways of sin, dissipate their lives, waste their energies and blight their future. And it is strange that it should have been so neglected, for we are now discovering that here our evangelistic efforts are most worth while and fruitful. C. Howard Taylor said with regard to "Evangelism with Young People" (and his words apply with equal force all the way down the teen age and into childhood) that it is most important because "In them life is in the making. Their resources of energy have not been drained. Their substance has not been wasted in either riotous or useless living. They have everything to give to the cause that wins their loyal and eager allegiance. Their sensibilities are keen. These have not been dulled by long years of unheeded impacts. The avenues of approach to their centers of response are wide open. Their habits of life are not yet so fixed as to be hard to change. Their thoughts are easily turned in new directions, giving an entirely new bent to their purposes and endeavors." Indeed nowhere is our labor with human souls fraught with such immeasurably great and far-reaching results as with children and youth.

It must be said in fairness that some of our number have had a vision of the importance and worth of this ministry—the evangelism of childhood and youth—but on the whole our interest in these has been secondary. The rescue type of evangelism, the saving of adults, has been our first interest. Sometimes our eyes have been so centered on adults that we have failed to see the boys and girls. And all too often we have been actuated by motives that were selfish—sometimes to a degree scarcely justifiable. We have wanted so much the folks who could be converted immediately into church assets, that the importance of childhood has been obscured in our impatience to await its growth. We have wanted supremely and almost exclusively the adult because of what he could add to the services, to the influence and standing of the church, to its working force and to its financial strength. Such elements must necessarily enter into the building of strong churches, but that church that allows these things to blind its eyes to the more far-reaching values of youth will some day find its near-sightedness has cut short its life.

Not always has the element of selfishness entered largely into our neglect of the children, sometimes it has been due simply to our failure to realize the importance both to the child and to the church, of an early religious experience and training. We have not taken into account the future possibilities of the child and the youth and so have neglected them. Then others of us have purposely given them little attention because of a depreciation of their presence in the church services. We have looked upon children, often as old as the early teen age, as an annoyance to the older folks and as detracting from the dignity and solemnity of the worship. And practically excluding them from the worship program of the church, where they ought to be forming the habit of attendance and learning the art of worship, we have not provided them even with a children's church service. Still others of us not afflicted with such prejudices, and the larger number of our group by far, we are glad to believe, have had a receptive attitude toward the children and youth and have willingly received them into church membership, but that is about as far as we have generally taken them and as much as we have done for them. We have neglected them thereafter, as if that was all there was to the real task of evangelism. And there we find the lead to many a disappointed church over the results of an evangelistic campaign.

The evangel must be taught as well as proclaimed. It must be understood by the head as well as experienced by the heart. Evangelism must be educational as well as emotional, especially is this true with those of tender years whose ideas are so immature and emotions so easily swayed. We should endeavor not merely to bring them to the point of decision, but also to implant in their minds a reason for the faith that is in them. They must be led not only to accept the Word but to know it and encouraged in the use of it. And just here is our weakest point. We have neglected so universally the educational phase of our evangelism of youth (and for all ages, for that matter) that in almost every church we are reaping the disappointing results. How generally is the experience of pastors, on going into a new field, to be required to revise the church roll downward, sometimes most drastically! How widely are we complaining that our denomination is not growing in numbers as it ought! How many years have our statistical reports pointed to about the same number, when indeed were willing to make reports! Why is it?

Is our plea losing its force for this day? Very few, if any, of us are willing to admit it. There may be many contributing causes, but it is very likely that we shall find the deep underlying cause to be that we have not done our duty to our converts, especially to the children and youth. We have not prepared them for church membership. We have not given them anything more than an emotional experience to hold to in this day of multiplicity of appeals. Indeed it is not surprising that we have suffered and are continuing to suffer such a loss. It is truly a serious situation when pastors tell us they must reduce a church's formerly accredited membership by a half or two-thirds, and then declare they are through with "high pressure campaigns", but it is not to be wondered at, the way we have received members into our churches with practically no instruction, and then have sent them on their spiritual journey still uninstructed. We keep most commendably busy reviving lukewarm members and backsliders and making new ones, but with our very best efforts we sometimes feel that we do little more than hold our own. The fact may be a little more encouraging than that, but it is certainly true that we are not gaining as we ought. And it is becoming more and more apparent that this is one of our chief weaknesses. When we come to give more attention to the prevention of our loss, there will not be so many lost to be saved, and we shall make greater strides as a denomination.

The Proposed Prohibition Investigation

There is much ado just now about a proposed government investigation of the general effect of the prohibition amendment, as recommended by Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Andrews. Such investigation might conceivably have a beneficial effect on prohibition enforcement, and then again it might not. Mr. Andrews' intention is that the public mind is too much confused and disoriented to secure effective enforcement. He deplores the "increasing number of wild statements" and believes a fact finding commission would put an end to such, and quiet the public mind, thus aiding enforcement. In the light of the effect of former investigations, it is difficult to see how such an investigation could effectively put an end to "wild statements." The report of the fact finding commission of the Federal Council of Churches made public last year was seized upon with equal eagerness by wets and dries alike and made the basis of still further "wild statements." Confusion was added to confusion and little good was the result, it must frankly be said. Besides it is doubtful if any such investigation would turn up any new facts. It might however result in putting the dries more generally on their metal, and of arousing the church forces in particular out of their lethargy and dolessness, causing them to realize that the liquor evil is not destroyed, but that only the weapon for effective fighting has been placed in their hands in the form of a prohibition amendment and enforcement legislation.

In view of the expressed desire to know the facts as to the effect of prohibition, the following statement by Andrew J. Volstead, former congressman and father of the prohibition enforcement act, ought to be of interest, especially as it is only a fragment of much dependable data already in the public's hands. Mr. Volstead said on March first, that "the general moral tone of the United States is much better now than it was before prohibition. Despite a great increase in population, there were only 357,493 persons in prisons in 1923, as against 479,787 in 1910. The number of jails for each 100,000 population in 1923 was 99.7, compared with 121.2 in 1919. If a crime wave exists it cannot be laid to the eighteenth amendment." Attacking arguments that drunkenness is prevalent despite liquor laws, the speaker cited statistics that 170,941 arrests were made for this offense in 1910 and only 91,367 in 1925.

Frankly, most of "the wild statements" are made by those who wish to champion an outlawed and vicious cause, and most of the confusion and disquietude of mind are experienced by those who feel the pressure of the law for its violation or by those who have a thirst they find it difficult to quench. Also much of the daily newspaper talk of excessive drinking and corruption of prohibition enforcement agents is wet propaganda pure and simple, designed to bring the prohibition regime into disrepute. But the dry forces cannot afford to sit back in their easy chairs, with too great depreciation of the effect of the constant pouring of such propaganda into the public mind. They must meet it with the facts, which are easily obtained, and keep earnestly and persistently at the task of creating and maintaining a wholesome public conscience and of keeping alive a public sentiment that will back up an honest enforcement of the law.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The offerings that are beginning to come in for the Brethren Home, as reported by Brother Rinehart in this issue, show commendable interest.

Miss Alice B. Longaker, the office secretary of the Foreign Board, writes of some of the beginning-experiences of Mrs. Percy Yett, one of our new missionaries to the Argentine.

Brother B. T. Burnworth spent a few days in Ashland with his family recently before leaving for Beaver City, Nebraska, where he is engaged in an evangelistic campaign with Brother A. E. Whitted and his people.

We are pleased to have a report from Brother Melvin Stuckey, field secretary of the Sunday School Association, and whose work is being so highly appreciated wherever he goes. You will find his message on Sunday School page. We hope Brother Stuckey will let us hear from him more frequently, as the brotherhood wants to know of his good work.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, makes a financial report that is encouraging for the interest displayed. If your church has an obligation to Home Missions, it has not met, the showing will be still better by your meeting it.

Prof. J. A. Garber spent last week at Waterloo, Iowa, where he was one of the lecturers at a community training school in religious education, staged by the Waterloo Sunday School Association, of which Mrs. Frank Wisner, superintendent of the Brethren school, is the president. Along with this wide-awake Sunday school leader, is the pastor, Brother Edwin Boardman, who is also in the habit of of keeping things happening wherever he is.

Brother A. E. Thomas gives good account of himself in his "Radiograms of Evangelism." He has been busy proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ to dying souls, mostly in union campaigns, and success has attended his efforts, in one campaign twenty-five accepted Christ, and in the other forty-five. Both meetings were held in Pennsylvania, and he continues to other such calls in that state.

Brother H. M. Oberholtzer answered a call to conduct an evangelistic meeting for the little group of worshippers at Fostoria, for whom Brother George Walton has been preaching in connection with his school teaching. It proved a surprisingly successful campaign, considering the conditions prevailing, fifteen souls answered the invitation. Brother Oberholtzer proved a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. In lieu of the decision of the Ohio Mission Board and of the recent district conference regarding this mission, we have written more at length following Brother Oberholtzer's good report in the news department.

Brother E. M. Riddle, pastor of the church at Bryan, Ohio, reports an evangelistic campaign in his church with Brother W. T. Lytle faithfully doing the work of an evangelist, and both pastor and evangelist giving themselves earnestly and energetically to the great and important side of any campaign—personal work. Eight confessions were received, besides one who came before the meetings began. It is encouraging to note the place given to doctrinal teaching, both by way of the pulpit and the tract during this campaign. Perhaps it would be well if we had more of this sort of instruction in our churches today.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble writes an interesting letter, relating the principal events of the two months since her last letter. It is worthy of noting what the new Ford means to our missionaries in the way of convenience and increased service. Two significant events reported are the conference of missionaries at Bassai and the announcement of the approaching marriage of Miss Hattie L. Cope and Mr. Chauncey B. Sheldon, the news of which has already appeared in these columns. After this happy union, these two capable workers are to open up a new station, the location of which is reported already being made.

Brother J. L. Gingrich, who has been faithfully shepherding the Masontown, Pennsylvania church during the past six years, reports the work in a flourishing condition. The Sunday school with an average attendance of 211 for 1925 gives special reason for encouragement. He speaks also of the splendid victory in the recent campaign with Evangelist B. T. Burnworth in charge, when, as previously reported, forty-seven souls made the good confession. Brother Gingrich's work has been appreciated by his parishioners, and they will greatly miss him when he leaves, as he informed us privately, to take charge of the Third church of Johnstown April first. He has done a splendid work at Masontown, his first pastorate, and has won the confidence of more than the local church.

NEW SEWAGE PLANT FOR WINONA

From the "Winona", a small monthly news sheet published at Winona Lake, Indiana, by the Winona Assembly and Bible Conference and edited by Brother Albert T. Ronk, we learn that plans for the installation of Winona's new sewage disposal plant are complete and the actual work of construction is now ready to begin. The specifications have been passed by the State Board of Health, and it is said that it will be of the latest type and as good as the best. A new system of sewers will be installed leading to this new plant which will be adequate for every need. A faulty sewage system has been one of the drawbacks to Winona for several years, and Brethren people will be glad to learn that this fault is being remedied.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Great Refusal

By B. T. Burnworth

It was that genius Dante that was known as "The Voice of Ten Silent Centuries." Traveling through his "Inferno" he meets Virgil and calls his attention to the Rich Young Ruler who had made the great refusal. He was only one among the exiles but he was pointed out expressly as one who had betrayed his opportunity. Dante was interested in individuals and so are we as integral parts of the masses, but the sociologist is concerned with the trend of society which is history. LeBon in writing his book, "The Crowd", says significantly enough, "Bees swarm, birds go in flocks, fishes in schools and men in masses, especially when inspired by a great leader." As we therefore study the individual we can understand why nations in a great crucial hour commit political and often spiritual suicide. They sin against their greatest convictions and allow the torch of progress to be snatched from their hand and they sin away their day of of grace and their leadership passes to another.

Some Great Refusals

The princes of Egypt thinking to disobey God refused to sprinkle their door posts as did the humble Hebrews and when the destroying angel passed over they found their first born dead. They made the great refusal.

The patrician refused to hear the cry of the peasantry of France and blood ran down their streets while the guillotine worked overtime, for they would not heed the cry of the needy. They refused.

Pharaoh refused to allow the children of Israel to depart, only to suffer plagues, and finally in despair the permit for the exodus was given, only to follow and be swallowed up in the Red Sea. It was a great refusal.

The European nations refused to arbitrate and now the price of peace will be war debts to be paid by coming generations for a causeless war, but the greatest tragedy of it all is that countless lives have been snuffed out and other countless numbers maimed besides the widowed and the orphaned, which is irreparable indeed.

The Greatest Refusal

The Greatest refusal is when a nation or individual rejects their Savior. Jerusalem lost her soul when she rejected her Messiah and refused to accept his Gospel. The scepter of leadership was theirs. The divine deposit of monotheism was theirs. But in that fateful hour she repudiated it all and now they are a people without a country. Their Messiah came and turned the negatives of Moses into the positives of hope and trust and love. He taught the Golden Rule and the religion of human kindness and brotherly love. But the master still wanted his slaves, the priests still wanted his office and its honor, the tax gatherer, the scribes and other parasites that lived off the poor still wanted to carry on, and the golden hour for the Hebrews passed with the shout, "Not Jesus but Barabbas." Gone their leadership, destroyed is their once beautiful and golden Jerusalem, the ark and the golden candlesticks and world power and influence, all was lost in this great refusal.

The Refusal of Leadership

When the scepter was wrested from the Hebrew race, it was handed to the Greek. Theirs was a mighty civilization. Their sons were as Apollo and the daughters of Helen and Penelope were as beautiful as angels. The Greek ideal was a cultured mind in a strong body. But when their great citizen attempted to preach pure morals to them in the marketplace they too refused to hear the mighty Socrates and gave to him the hemlock cup. He was their chiefest citizen and taught, having the prophet's flaming heart and the logician's mind, that communion with God must come through individual obedience, and no man can receive a revelation from him except he first make an unconditional surrender. But Athens in that fateful hour committed spiritual suicide, and when the enemy came in like a flood she had no manhood to defend her Acropolis.

Is the United States Making the Great Refusal?

History is often the voice of God. Crises in a nation's life may be fraught with opportunity and be pregnant with responsibility. The hand is still writing on the wall. It is a sign of some intelligence when we profit by our own experience; it is wisdom to profit by the experience of others. Surely we are conversant with history. Jerusalem, Athens, Venice, Florence, Carthage and Rome, all fell when they proved traitors to their highest principles and best selves. The outer walls of a city will crumble when serious thinking is superseded by frivolity on the inside. And just as Rome fell when her manhood decayed, Athens fell because of her superficiality, and Jerusalem; when she departed from her deepest convictions so will our great country most ingloriously fail if we presume to make the same fatal mistakes.

There is a lack of seriousness in America today. Yes, we are the richest nation in the world but there are some things money can not buy and many of the most sordid failures in life are those possessing great wealth. Great prosperity has never produced deep piety. We hear more about the "Charleston" than a great lecture.

We had five thousand book stores, now we have fifteen hundred. We read, but it is the headline of the newspaper and the comic supplement.

America is producing no great artists. Our greatest poets, singers, orators and painters are not native sons. We are not creating the atmosphere in which such inspiration buds, blooms and blossoms.

We are not making fine distinctions. We do not distinguish between a pipe organ and a banjo, a holy feast from a social dance, a pleasure yacht from a battleship, between the eternal stars and our own little sputtering torches.

There is a decline of the simple life. This of course must needs be. But the simple life that produced simple faith must not lose its grip on God when life is complex. We must not cut loose the anchor just when the storm is rising, and we need it most. This is a time to make sure we have an anchor that holds. God has not passed us by. Undoubtedly he has placed in our hands the leadership of this century. I am no pessimist. The time is here thought to make a call to the colors.

Jesus accepted the cross rather than betray himself.

Socrates accepted the poisoned cup rather than forsake the truth.

Savonarola accepted the flames rather than keep a sinful silence.

Our fathers accepted the terror of unknown seas and the rigors of a clime to which they were unaccustomed, that they might worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences. Will our sons and daughters wash the crimson out of our flag by forsaking these high ideals?

Finally, will we refuse the remedy? There is just one and never has been more. Babson said we need more "religion in business and more business in religion." What we need is to apply the principles of Jesus Christ in every day life, everywhere. We need to imbibe the spirit of Jesus and give his plan a chance. And the greatest refusal in the world is to neglect or deny Christ as a personal Savior. All who have done just that have failed until now, and you have failed until now, if you have thus far refused to accept him whom to know is to have life eternal. We must not make the Great Refusal as a nation. Then you dare not refuse to accept Christ as an individual.

Mary, the Ideal Home-maker

By Dr. Mary A. Laughlin

When the Savior of mankind was about to be born into the world it was necessary that the little child should have a good home in which to grow up and develop, in which the conditions might be favorable for him to "increase in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man." So we believe that Mary was chosen from among all the women of her time, as having the qualities which best fitted her for the high privilege of mothering the Holy One. Human nature has not changed much in the past two thousand years, and modern young people, who are looking forward to the establishing of their own homes, will do well to consider the character of this ideal home-maker.

Mary was spiritually-minded, else she could not have said, "My soul doth magnify the Lord and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Savior." When she visited her cousin, Elisabeth, their conversation was on spiritual matters; she was no gossip, and scandal was far from her tongue. She was diligent to perform the duties of her religion; at the proper time she presented her babe in the temple, according to the law of the Lord; and she was careful to make the yearly journey to the feast of the Passover at Jerusalem. A maiden with her spirit will delight in the worship of God, and she will be interested and active in the work of the church.

Mary was intelligent; she knew the history of her nation and she could quote freely from the writings of her people. She was not a chatterer; there were certain things that she kept in her heart, while she pondered as to what they might mean. A modern young woman with the same spirit will get all the education she can, and she will not have much time to spend on frivolous pastimes.

Mary was no recluse; she mingled freely with the other women; she attended social functions, as the marriage feast; and at various times was among the crowds who listened to the teaching of her Son. No doubt she attended to her household duties, but she also found time for outside interests. She was hospitable; she was concerned about the comfort of the guests at the marriage feast. A woman with her spirit will try to make people comfortable, which desire is the basis of the grace of hospitality.

Mary was espoused to a man of most excellent family. A good woman can do very much toward the making of an ideal home, but she needs the help of her husband. Some people smile at those who are inclined to think much about their ancestors, but St. Matthew and St. Luke considered it worth while to trace the ancestry of Joseph back very many generations, even to the beginning. Young people make a great mistake when they choose life-mates whose family is not the equal of their own family. There are tendencies to certain diseases which are transmitted from generation to generation in families which are not considered good; and there are mental traits as well as physical characteristics, both good and bad, which persist from generation to generation. Young people should consider whether or not they would want their children to be like the relative of the one in whom they are interested. Heredity is a stubborn force; and it is not often entirely overcome by environment and training; teaching and training can do very much to overcome evil tendencies, but we should not forget that it is as true now as it ever was that the iniquities of the fathers are visited upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.

The writer has traced the family of an erratic clergyman who flourished about 1750; not much is known about him except that he attended one of the early classes at Harvard and that in his later years he faced an ecclesiastical trial for witchcraft and for drunkenness and that he died in poverty; his descendants for the most part have intermarried with good families, but in every generation there has been at least one who was wild and erratic—drinking, brawling, and high-tempered.

In the middle of the eighteenth century a sturdy pioneer preacher carved out for himself a home and subdued the wilderness about him; he built a fort to protect his family and his neighbors from the hostile Indians; and he was the founder and the first bishop of a congregation which is still active; he had a large family whose education was above the average of that period; he was an outstanding character and a leader in everything that was good. But his religion taught him that all men are equal in every way, so his children associated freely with whatever people happened to live near; some intermarried with very good families and some with very ordinary ones. His descendants are now in the sixth and seventh generations, and it is easy to see the difference between the various branches of his family.

If a young man is interested in a girl and does not know much about her family, let him ask his mother—she knows, or if she does not know she knows how to find out. Likewise, a girl should be guided largely by her father's advice in such matters; he is her friend and he knows more about men than she can possibly know. And if she acts contrary to his advice she may regret it all the days of her life.

WRESTLING ALONE

The man who finds his way into the secrecy of life and can get into a solitude, where he can have none with him but God, is the man who will find the utmost about himself and most effectually develop and bring to his own knowledge the powers and faculties that he has within him. It has always been so. God never trained a man for anything great except in solitude. He put Moses up in the silence of Sinai, cloud-girt and lightning-guarded, that none from beneath nor without might intrude. He put Elijah up in Herob, in the rocky cave of the mountain, and let him stay there until he should hear the "still small voice" that would stir him not even as Jezebel's wrathful utterance could. He led the Son of God into the wilderness and let him have his forty days of silence and fasting there, until every nerve in him was tested to its utmost and all the inner qualities of his nature were brought to their highest point of development, and not until then was he fitted for the activities of his incarnate life. And when he wants a man today for anything that is great or true, and wants to make his best out of him, he says to him just as Christ did: "Get into your closet, and shut the door, and talk with God."—From Sermon, "Wrestling Jacob" by Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson.

The Dead Sea Expedition

By Herbert H. Tay

Brother Kent and I counted ourselves exceedingly fortunate in having the opportunity to travel in Egypt and Palestine with Dr. Melvin Grove Kyle, the noted archaeologist. His principal reason for going to Palestine at that time, was to search for Sodom and Gomorrah, the cities of the plain. He graciously invited us to become members of the archaeological party that was to make the trip, and we gladly consented. It was a cosmopolitan group that composed our party, yet each was an expert in his line, and we considered ourselves highly honored to be in the presence of such scholars. Dr. Wm. F. Albright, director of the American School of Archaeology at Jerusalem, was the director of the expedition. He was not only a great archeologist, but also a linguist of no mean ability. He could speak English, French, German, Hebrew, and Arabic, and could read Greek, Egyptian and Babylonian. He acted as chief interpreter between the various nationalities in our party. Professor Day, dean of the School of Arts and Sciences of the American College of Beirut, Syria, was the geologist of the party. He could speak English and Arabic. Naim Makhonley, representing the government, being connected with the Department of Antiquities, could speak English and Arabic. Pere Aloise Mallou, a Jesuit priest, and an expert in ancient flints, spoke French and Arabic. Elezeur Sukenik, a botanist and an engineer, could speak Hebrew, German, Arabic, and very broken English. The remaining members of the party could speak English only. Thus we had in our party, a Frenchman, a Jew, an Arab, and six Americans. Among these there were a Roman Catholic, a Jew, a Congregationalist, a methodist, a United Presbyterian, a member of the Church of God, and two Brethren. Such a conglomeration of nationalities and creeds could well represent this country, hence the expedition was called, "The American Expedition to the Cities of the Plain."

We made the first part of our trip in decrepit Fords. With a maximum of tact, in order that it might occasion a minimum of friction among the variegated crowd, Dr. Albright allocated the seats to those whom he considered the most congenial traveling companions. Brother Kent and I had the good fortune to be put in the same car with Dr. Kyle. The way Dr. Albright juggled the Jew, the Arab, and the Frenchman about to assort them among the other members of the party, and keep them apart, was a masterpiece of strategy and tact. It reminded me of the puzzle of the man trying to cross the river in a boat with a fox, a goose, and a sack of corn. However the Doctor solved the puzzle to the satisfaction of all concerned. So when we had all been deposited safely among the heaps of tents, cots, bedding, grub, suitcases and surveying instruments, and all the heterogeneous mass of material that must be taken on a twentieth century archaeological expedition, we started merrily upon our way.

I use that word "started" advisedly. It was chosen with great discretion. For all we did was to start. We traveled about a mile—perhaps a little less, and then the drivers decided that it was time to overhaul the cars, and put them in shape for the trip. Here we had a fine opportunity to sit down and cogitate upon the intricate workings of the oriental mind. Bret Harte wrote—

For ways that are dark,
And for tricks that are vain,
The heathen Chinese is peculiar.

—but then Bret Harte had never had any experience with Arabs. The slogan of the native of Palestine is, "Never do today, what you can put off till tomorrow." Though these drivers had been notified several days before that they were to make this long trip, yet they never thought of getting their cars in condition, until they had them all loaded, and had started on their way. Though we impatiently fretted and fumed, it made no difference to them. Time is the one thing that those fellows have nothing else but.

However, we finally did get started. We descended the long eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, and stopped in modern Jericho for a short time. There we got some of the delicious oranges that grow in the tropical Jordan valley, and then went on our way. We sped through fields of sweet scented flowers, across the historic old Jordan, and into the country of Ammon. We stopped at Amman, the capitol of Trans-Jordania, ancient Rabbath-Ammon, where we camped for the night. We continued on the morrow, over the plains of Moab, passing flocks, herds, and extensive fields of grain. After several minor mishaps, we arrived after dark, at Kerak, ancient Kir of Moab, where we took up our lodging in a Jesuit Catholic School.

We stayed in Kerak for a day or two preparatory to making our start for the Dead Sea valley, for we must abandon our automobiles here, and take to horses from this point. During that time, we had an excellent opportunity to see a typical Palestine, or literally, Trans-Jordania village that had not been changed by American or European civilization. The village was situated upon the top of a very high hill. The sides of the hill were extremely precipitous, and the city on the top was surrounded by very high walls. It seemed to us that it would have been next to impossible to take that city in the olden days, with the ancient methods of warfare. The houses of the village were of stone, and were huddled together apparently without any order. There were a few straight streets, but most of them were narrow and crooked. The natives regarded us with considerable interest, because except for the few members of the American Mission station, they seldom saw a white face at this outpost of civilization.

The day after our arrival it was noised abroad that we were in town, and wishing to hire horses and pack animals for a trip to the Ghor. If this news had been broadcast from a powerful radio station, and every family had a receiving set, the result could not have been more remarkable. The next morning, before we arose—which was about 5:30—we heard a great tumult in the courtyard in front of the house in which we were staying. We looked out of the windows, to see the yard filled with a motley crowd of jabbering Arabs. When Dr. Albright and Mr. Makhouley went out the door, they were besieged with an army of importunate natives, each extolling the merits of his particular steed. And there they were—black horses and white horses—or those that had formerly been white, large horses, small horses, good horses, bad horses, sick horses and lame horses. There was the most complete line of horseflesh in various stages of decomposition, that I have ever seen. Little boys came, leading horses. Old men were there with their animals. There were donkeys and mules. It was a scene that would have brought tears to the eyes of every sausage maker in the country.

It became the duty of Dr. Albright and Mr. Makhouley to bargain with the owners for the use of their horses. They spent the entire day arguing and disputing with the “mukari” or muleteers over the price they were to receive for the rent of their beasts. The market opened with horses at from five to eight mejedis, and pack animals four and five. However the market was very slow, and because of the low turnover, the market closed in the evening with horses quoted at two and a half mejedis, and mules and donkeys at from one and one-half to two. However, we did not invest even at that figure, and waited for the opening of the market on the following day. The market opened strong the next day, and we found it impossible to get the price down very much more. So we closed the deal, giving two and a half mejedis for the best riding horses with good saddles, two and a quarter for those not quite so good, and a mejedi and a half to two mejedis for the pack animals, depending upon the size. These figures were for the animals, their attendants, and the feed they were to get. To translate it into American terms, a man rented his horse, went along with it to feed it and care for it, and furnished all the feed, and received $1.25 per day if his horse were good, and $1.10 if it were not so good. Our party consisted of sixteen of these mukari, two mounted soldiers as a body-guard, and nine men in our party—twenty-seven in all.

Now I'll have to stop. I have taken all the space I am allowed, and we haven't gotten to the cities of the plain yet. Well, maybe sometime we will visit them before these articles come to a close.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The “Called Out”

By O. C. Starn

SCRIPTURE—MATTHEW 16:13-28

The church is the collective body of those who have given themselves unto a living faith, holy living and unselfish service.

There is much misunderstanding as to the composition of the Church. Those who are critical and antagonistic expect church members to be perfect, rid of all human weaknesses and unable to do anything wrong. It is this foolish conception that keeps many out of this sacred institution. Many times we hear the expression from the unchurched, “If I ever join the Church I will do thus and so.” Many fear they can never reach their ideal and consequently never enter into membership. Then, too, many people feel the Church is too demanding and will take away from them some practices or habits that they do not want to lose. The Church should not make any demands that will detract from the joy of serving her head, Jesus Christ. If in Church creeds there are to be found those unnecessary things that forbid growth, then that particular church is a detriment and not a help and is open to sharp criticism. The Church should function toward the promotion of the spiritual life and not detract from it.

Our English word “Church” comes from the Greek word “Ekklesia” and means “called out.” Called out from sinful living and all things that are antagonistic to God. The second idea we receive from this word is that of “separated from.” “Come ye out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord.” Judah was called to leave the exile of heathen people—to be separated from them. We, today, who are members of the Church of Jesus Christ, are a separate body. We belong to the “called out” group. As such we have specific purposes unto which we are called out. We want to mention three.

We are called out unto a living faith. We immediately recognize this to be the very basis of the Church. In Peter's great confession he proclaimed Jesus as “the Christ the Son of the living God.” Jesus then said, “upon this rock I will build my Church.” I am conscious that around the interpretation of this passage of Scripture hovers the great dividing line between Protestants and Catholics. Also, indirectly, the cause of the literal flowing of blood from many martyrs whose bodies lie in repose in the great catacombs and other burial places of the world. We believe that the Church is built upon a confession. “Whosoever shall confess me before men him will I also confess before my Father who is in heaven.” Hence the basis of church membership is a confession. A confession of what? That Christ is the Son of the living God. This is an absolute demand of Christ. “No man cometh unto the Father but by me.” “No man knoweth the Father save the Son and he to whomsoever the Son willeth to reveal him.” Then beautiful John 3:16, “For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him may not perish but have everlasting life.”

In this confession of faith there dare not be any purposeful doubt. We must be free from any skepticism as to Christ's divinity, or we certainly forfeit the foundation pillars of the Church. Neither dare there be any doubt as to his present existence. It is highly important that people who call themselves Christians be as certain as Job was when he said, “I know that my Redeemer liveth.” Doubt is nasty. It robs one of that growing personal contact and acquaintance with Christ that should be plainly evident in the life of every Christian. Continued doubt will never get one anywhere or resolve itself into good. “He that doubteth is like the surge of the sea, tossed to and fro by the wind.” Oh for a more sincere faith in Christ and in the Church today.

We have used the term “living faith.” This suggests the question as to whether there is such a thing as a dead faith. Yes, we believe there is. It is found in those who made the start and then quit. We dare to say that people who never go to church or even attend several times a year cannot have a vital, living faith. There are living people with a dead faith. Something stopped the growth, some obstruction befell their pathway and it was never removed. On the old farm at a certain time of the year we would go through our cornfield and pull out all the suckers. Many times these had grown quite tall and had a small, puny ear of corn on the end with just a few imperfect grains. This was of no value and besides it had robbed the mother stalk of her perfect ear. It had sapped the nourishment from the parent stalk. So it is with a dead faith, something has robbed the person, has sapped the very essence of a living faith. We should grow in our faith like the tiny stem that grows and grows until it develops into a rose bush with beautiful flowers.

Secondly, we are called out unto holy living. This simply means right living. People may have different ideas as to just what constitutes right living. Some seem to think that shouting and jumping and falling into trances is the method. But this method of itself does not constitute right living. Some churches which practice this method have been closed as public nuisances. The big question is not how much do people shout and pray and see visions but how do they live when they are not making outward signs? All respect should attend unto the one who feels like shouting, if his life is back of it. We contend that it is the daily example of living that counts. Christianity needs no advertisement, no announcer to notify the public that so and so is a Christian. One could dress and appear like Jesus and still not be Christian at heart. Even Satan fashions himself into an angel of light.

Holy living is found exclusively in the Church within the Church. We have been speaking of the outward organization of the Church. Within this are those who know not God, have not the spirit of Christ and are open to just criticism because of their type of living. The Church of Christ loses power instead of gaining because of such people. But the tares and the wheat will grow together until the harvest. It is different within the inner organization which is the real Church of Christ. Into this holy of holies the knocker seldom if ever enters to find good examples. Here he would find holy living. Herein lies the hidden power of the Church's power against which the gates of hell shall not prevail. Here the rich experiences of life are obtained. Here is where people live in, by and through him. Here is the nucleus that produces fruitage. The husks must be removed before the ear of corn is visible. It is the ear, made up of the structure for the grains and the grains themselves that produce the new stalks of corn. This truth applies vividly to the outer and inner organizations of the Church.

Lastly, we are called out unto unselfish service. If we have a living faith in Christ and practice right living, we will be enthusiastic to serve him. Enthusiasm for service is a necessity. It is necessary in order to win a victory. We have never seen a team win a single game if enthusiasm was lacking and we have seen games lost because players had no enthusiasm for the institution they represented. Have we got it within the Church? We can have it, and let us have it. It is the mission of the Church to transform the world. No doubt that the world is as good as it is because of the influence of the many noble lives that have composed her body. There is much need for service today. Many lives to transform; the raising of higher ethical standards; the bettering of economic conditions; substitution of better social practices for immoral ones; realization of the universal brotherhood of man including a deeper fraternal spirit; obedience to civil law; the teaching of the Gospel to the multitudes. One is appalled when he thinks of what there is to do and what little we have done. The land of Egypt depends largely upon the River Nile overflowing its banks for its fertility. She would possibly be a barren desert were it not for this natural phenomena. If we, like the Nile, are bubbling over with enthusiasm for our King much of this gigantic task will be accomplished. Are we happy in the service of the King?

If we would accomplish the great work of life we must have the power of the Holy Spirit within us. Otherwise we will be as powerless as an electric wire without a dynamo. But if we are fulfilling the previously mentioned conditions, we will have this power. If the stream of the water of Life is coursing through our hearts we will be able like the Niagara to turn the wheels of progress of the Kingdom. If we love the Church, let us work earnestly for her enlargement and perfection. The result may not be so much in additional numbers to the Church but in the enjoyment and happiness it brings to us. The Brethren Church, though small in number comparatively, can be as large as any in spiritual attainment and this is the great goal of the Church, it is the price of admission into the everlasting Kingdom of our God.

Are you answering the call to a living faith, to holy living, and to unselfish service?

Gratis, Ohio.

No! Sin is not merely ignorance. It is not merely negative; the absence of goodness as blackness is the absence of light. The prophet has the right grip of this thing. It is a scarlet thing, a flaming, self-assertive, brazen, and impudent opposite of God! In its nature it is something which sets up a positive kingdom against Christ's, something which represents a scheme of life where sin directs and holds open mastery. I tell you, it is something insolently positive that would shake one rule of God. "Your sins are scarlet."—The Continent.

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE TRANSFIGURATION—Matt. 17:1-9.

"A foreshadowing or prophecy of his true form—his distinctive character—comes out in his transfiguration"; "a revelation of deity breaking out in that glorified face appealed to something deeper than sense."—M. R. Vincent.

TUESDAY

ELIJAH PROPHECY FULFILLED—Matt. 17:10-13.

The spirit of the great Elijah, the chief exponent of Hebrew prophecy, was re-incarnated in John the Baptist, the fearless preacher of righteousness and forerunner of the Christ. But the Jewish leaders had neither eyes to recognize him, nor hearts to receive his message.

WEDNESDAY

VISION AND SERVICE—Matt. 17:14-20.

God provides no mountain-top vision without preparing a valley of service. And he who would retain the beauty of the vision must descend to the fields of service that await him.

THURSDAY

TEMPLE TRIBUTE—Matt. 17:22-27.

He who was Lord of the temple, condescended to pay the tax for the maintenance of the temple worship, though he himself had been practically excommunicated by the religious aristocracy, and he provides the feet in a manner calculated to strengthen the disciple's faith in his complete Mastery over all things.

FRIDAY

THE GREATNESS OF HUMILITY—Matt. 18:1-5.

A striking paradox of the Kingdom is the giving of first place to the spirit of humility. No wonder it is so hard for self-seeking human nature to enter therein.

SATURDAY

OFFENDING OTHERS—Matt. 18:6-14.

Jesus is never more severe in his denunciations than when aiming at the man who would ensnare children in temptations so that they are caught in the meshes of sin.

SUNDAY

DEALING WITH WRONG-DOERS—Matt. 18:15-20.

Do not scatter the firebrands if you wish to put out the fire. Do not publish another's wrong-doing, if you wish to save him and prevent a scandal. Counsel with him privately, or with the smallest number possible.—G. S. B.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Joy Through Obedience

By Carl E. Helser

OUR SCRIPTURE

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing seed for sowing, shall doubtless come again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him (Psalm 126: 5, 6). These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy may be in you, and that your joy may be made full (John 15:11). Verily, verily, I say unto you, that ye shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice: ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy. A woman when she is in travail hath sorrow, because her hour is come: but when she is delivered of the child she remembereth no more the anguish, for the joy that a man is born into the world. And ye therefore now have sorrow: but I will see you again, and your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no one taketh away from you. And in that day ye shall ask me no question. Verily, verily, I say unto you, If ye shall ask anything of the Father, he will give it you in my name. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be made full (John 16: 20-24). But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law (Galations 5:22, 23). Greater joy have I none than this, to hear of my children walking in the truth (III John 4).

OUR MEDITATION

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy." The solemn truth of these words may never be fully known in this life. It is of another place than earth that it is written that "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." But the thoughts of the Psalmist must have been, that regardless of one's griefs or sorrows in this life, the great reward which follows in the next more than compensates for all losses.

The word joy in itself is expressive. It signifies a state of mind which is obtainable only through strict obedience. Joy is to the heart what the glowing sun is to a bright and beautiful day. It illuminates, it enlightens, it radiates. It is to its possessor a Heavenly treasure purchased with so many acts of obedience.

"The fruit of the Spirit is—joy." It is said that in a certain room in Rome there are exhibited the busts of the old emperors. Someone has said that they look like a number of prize-fighters, assassins and murderers. The absence of happiness and joy in their lives brutalized their features and hardened their hearts. In the catacombs under the same city, at the same time, there lived the hunted followers of the Lord, and yet all the inscriptions on the walls of those subterranean homes are expressive of the "joy that through all time abides," regardless of circumstances.

Christianity itself is a joy. It expresses joy in the fullest sense of the word. It is synonymous with life, and light, and love. Jesus' memorable words: "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly", bespeak the joy of the Christian. When the Sun of Righteousness shines on a soul the effect is much the same as when the sun of the morning shines from over the eastern horizon and smiles over a valley that has been filled with snow.

Obedience is always accompanied with joy. Witness for example the death of Stephen, tragic though it may seem. Kneeling in that hour of agony he prayed as did Jesus on the cross—"Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Is it any wonder that his face shone like the face of an angel with such unparalleled forgiveness in his heart? Or notice the results of obedience through Philip's preaching in the city of Samaria as recorded in Acts 8:4-9. The immediate result was that "there was much joy in that city."

Disobedience is always accompanied with sorrow and regret. Recall to mind the deceitfulness of Ananias and Sapphira, or read it again in Acts 5:1-11, and note the results of disobedience. Or the experience of the Rich Young Ruler, as recorded in Matthew 19:16-23. So near to the door of the kingdom, yet just outside! Obedience to Jesus' answer would have meant, not only much joy for the young man himself, but joy in the kingdom of Heaven as well (Luke 15:7).

The product of disobedience may be spelled with the same number of letters as the word joy. The product of disobedience is—SIN. The penalty of this young man's disobedience is told in few words—"he went away sorrowful." Obey and rejoice. Disobey and regret.

"Do right though pain and anguish be thy lot.

Thy heart will cheer thee, when the pain's forgot.

Do wrong for pleasure's sake, then count thy gains

The pleasure soon departs; the sin remains."

"These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." Christian joy, unlike the pleasures of the world, is abiding. The world offers the mirth that is of the face and not of the heart, shallow and external not deep and internal. The joy of the Christian shines on like the sun whether the sky be clear or overcast. The world writes happiness in the dust of the street that is swept away by the first passing breeze, but real religion carves its joy on tables of stone that may be read throughout time and eternity.

"Greater joy have I none than this, to hear of my children walking in the truth." Joyful and hopeful words are these from the apostle John. What is the requirement? Obedience. What the reward? Joy. If we have heard the joyful, hopeful words of Jesus, and caught his Spirit, surely ours will be a radiant religion.

"Oh, never sit we down and say

We walk the wilderness today,

The promised land tomorrow.

Triumph and toil are twins; and aye

Joys sun the clouds of sorrow;

And 'tis the martyrdom today

Brings victory tomorrow."

OUR PRAYER

We thank thee our Heavenly Father for the joys of the Christian life. We thank thee that thou hast revealed unto us that through obedience to thy Word we may experience the greatest joy. Help us, our Father, to ever remember that the fruit of the Spirit is joy, and grant that our lives may radiate more of the true Christian joy. Teach us thy will from day to day and direct our thoughts in the paths of truth and righteousness. Help us to ever remember that in thy presence there is fullness of joy, and at thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore. Grant that we all may ever be willing laborers in thy great vineyard. In Jesus' name. Amen.

Garwin, Iowa.

We cannot expect, in the long course of events, to maintain our country on a permanent level of general well-being far above that of other peoples. Even if we could hope to accomplish it, it would bring us little satisfaction. If our prosperity must be gained and held at the cost of the suffering of others, in the long course of affairs, and in a world which has become little more than a great neighborhood, our common sense must tell us, if our self-interest did not, that our prosperity, our advancement, our portion of good fortune must largely depend upon the share that shall be allotted to our neighbors. At the last, those of us who are partners in the supreme service of building and bettering our civilization must go up or go down, must succeed or fail together, in our one common enterprise.—Calvin Coolidge.

LESSON LIGHTS

"Let not Your Heart be Troubled"

Jesus was about to leave his disciples, who were sad and perplexed at the impending separation. Their courage seemed about to fail them and Jesus sensed the heaviness of their hearts and sought to steady their wavering spirits by admonishing them to be strong in faith. "It was faith in the Father that kept Christ serene and peaceful so near his end, and faith in the Father and the Son would uphold the disciples in that terrible time" (Tarbell). Let no trouble have dominion over you, he would say. "Keep yourselves in the love of God, and the peace of God shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus."

"In My Father's House"

Our Lord's chief consolation to his sorrowing disciples is just this: "In my Father's house there are many mansions, . . . I go to prepare a place for you." He assures them that this seeming defeat and this physical separation are really not occasions of sorrow, but of final victory and reunion. And no words of Jesus have been more widely used in relieving the pressure of sorrow and of dispelling the darkness in the valley of death.

"Faith, Hope and Love were questioned what they thought

Of future glory which religion taught;

Now Faith believed it to be firmly true,

And Hope expected so to find it, too;

Love answered, smiling with unconscious glow,

"Believe? Expect? I know it to be so."

—John Wesley.

"I Will Come Again"

These words have been the subject of much diverse interpretation, only two of which we will note here: Dr. Cleland B. McAfee takes the promise as fulfilled in the death of the Christian and writes: "'Myself' and 'ye.' Read it again and stop an instant before each word. Do you not see that he is drawing our hearts to himself and not to a place? The Christian passing out of life is being received not into a place, nor into a condition, but unto himself—Heaven is 'where he is.' How like Jesus it is to make companionship the chief attraction of Heaven!" The more popular interpretation, however, is that Jesus referred to his return at the end of the world. "Jesus will complete his preparations for us by returning and conducting us to the prepared place. The second advent is his chief return to us, and is what he evidently had in mind at this time, though he returned at his resurrection and in the coming of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost; he is returning constantly to his church, and on the death of each Christian he returns and conducts him to the prepared place. The second advent is taught repeatedly in Scripture. It is necessary for the completeness of Christ's work. "If there is to be no decisive and triumphant outcome of the work which our Lord inaugurated, then, there is an incompleteness about it which is hardly reconcilable with any fair idea of its divine origin." —Illustrated Quarterly.

"The Way, the Truth, the Life"

"I am the way, the truth, and the life." The affirming Christ was sure of himself. Moffat's translation reads, "I am the real and living way." It was the word of assurance that the disciples needed that night; they were feeling very much like wanderers. It steadied them then, and it meant still more to them later. And says F. B. Meyer, "Jesus our Redeemer is still the Way. A thousand things have gone, but that remains. It is through his death, and his rising from the dead, and through our daily fellowship with him, that we walk heavenward, and reach heaven at last." And Jesus is the truth. Not that he came to teach men many truths, but to "reveal the truth," as Dr. W. L. Watkinson tells us. "In outside systems (other religions) you have bits of truth, half truths, splinters of truth; in Jesus Christ you have the fullness of the truth, that redeems and perfects and satisfies the human spirit." And he is also the life. "Life," says Dr. M. D. Babcock, "is back of everything. Do you know what life is? No; neither does anybody. Life is indefinable; life is God. Life is measured by the number of things you are alive to. I must have a life that is more abundant than my poor nature. I must have the power of Jesus, and have inside fellowship with him."

The Teacher of All Things

"All that our Lord says of the Advocate in this discourse makes it certain that he is speaking not of a Power, but of a Person. The Advocate is to 'teach' them all things, and to 'bring to' their 'remembrance' all that Christ himself had said to them."—R. W. Dale. There was much truth that the disciples were not ready to receive during Christ's life on earth, truth regarding Christ, his kingdom, their own calling and destiny, and the Holy Spirit himself. They had to grow slowly into this truth, under the tuition of the Spirit. The work of the Spirit in quickening the disciples' memories bore fruit in our four Gospels, and especially this Gospel of John. Nor was this work of the Spirit at all confined to the apostolic age. We have an equal right to the instruction of the divine and ever-present Teacher, and all wise Christians will claim it and enjoy it. Indeed, without it the full and happy following of the Christian life is impossible.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Working With Our Brethren Sunday Schools

By M. A. Stuckey, Field Secretary

Several years ago it was the privilege of the writer to tour the churches of our brotherhood east of the Rocky mountains under the direction of our National Sunday School Association. At that time—and no reason has since existed for a change of mind—your field secretary found the work to which he was called (for one conference year) very interesting, inspiring and challenging.

The present writing finds the same field secretary at work again—having been summoned by the aforementioned board for another year of work. Since the assembly of our Winona delegates work has been carried on in the Mid-West, Illiokota, Indiana and Pacific Coast districts.

Shortly before taking up the active duties of field work the writer was sent to the Indiana conference at Huntington. Opportunity was given by those who formulated the program for a personal address to the delegates there assembled. Leaving Indiana hurriedly we had the pleasure of representing the Sunday School Association and the college of which we are all proud—Ashland—at the Illiokota and Mid-West conferences. In each of these, several addresses were given.

Then began the work of touring and visiting our Sunday schools—a work which has elicited the manifested powers of your secretary. That it has been a strenuous piece of labor there is no doubt. Practically every night is scheduled to the full excepting of course our rest night—Saturday. Numerous calls have come to us from other quarters, nearby, from the Christian Endeavors of our own denomination and others; for the addressing of high schools in a goodly number of vicinities; special requests for general institute work in community training schools; and others the mention of which is not needed here.

The problems confronted still continue to be those of organization and administration; of discipline and teacher training, of devoted and spirit-filled workers. Everywhere are they to be encountered. The fact of their existence indicates a possibility of growth. Let this fact be removed from the consciousness of Sunday school workers and we die; if remembered we grow.

The general interest in our work has proven to be about twice as great as that

A Trip Around the World

For Missionary Committees

Many societies have tried with success a series of monthly missionary meetings representing an imaginary trip around the world.

If it is practicable, a missionary in each country to be visited might be asked to write a brief letter containing a welcome such as might be given to a company of Christian Endeavorers actually visiting the particular field, to be read at the meeting given to that country.

In the week before the first meeting a social should be held. A room may be arranged as nearly as possible like a railroad station, with a news-stand stocked with recent missionary books and periodicals. At the ticket office each tourist will receive free a ticket outlining the journey and giving the dates and subjects of the meetings. With each ticket is a package of envelopes containing suitable missionary leaflets, one envelope for each meeting.

After obtaining these the travelers pass to another room or another part of the room with chairs placed two by two as in a railroad car. When seats have been taken, the conductor explains the course of the journey, mentions the places to be visited, and urges the regular attendance of every member at each of the meetings with as many friends as possible. A newsboy passes through the train, handing each person a missionary book to be read in two weeks and then to be exchanged for another. An important station having been reached, a simple luncheon of sandwiches or cake and cocoa is served.

The first meeting can be devoted to the journey to San Francisco. According to assignments made well in advance different members speak of the home missionary fields on the route, such as the mountain regions of the South, the mining country in Pennsylvania; the Mormon settlements; the Indian villages; the tracts where mining, lumbering, farming, or cattle-raising is the chief occupation; some of the great cities with their problems. At the close the steamer Endeavor is supposed to be boarded, and it passes out of the Golden Gate to the strains of "God be with you till we meet again."

By the next meeting Japan may be reached. The letter of welcome from the missionary there will be read, or instead of it a talk covering the ground will be given by someone impersonating a missionary and introducing the newcomers to the land and the missions. Then should follow other members presenting the main points as to the geography of the country, the people and their customs, the political situation, the religion, and the missionary work. A like programme should be arranged for each country visited.

There should be before the travelers a large map of the world on which their course should be traced, and for each meeting there should be provided a map of the country under consideration, with the mission stations marked.

The press committee should advertise the meetings well in the papers. It will add to the interest if each member of the society can receive an attractive notice of each meeting with a fitting sketch illustrating it. The music committee may see that the music is a helpful feature, introducing some of the native airs of the various lands. Of course much careful planning and faithful and prayerful work on the part of the missionary committee are necessary for success.

The last meeting of the series may be a patriotic meeting celebrating the arrival in the homeland. Comparisons between our country and those visited will be suggested, and the problem of the immigrant should be well presented. This meeting, like the preparatory one, might be combined with a social on a week-night. If an amusing feature is desired, an examination of the tourists' baggage by a customs officer might be introduced. Around the room booths representing the countries visited could be placed. Those in charge of each would wear appropriate costumes and serve suitable light refreshments. Missionary curios would be on exhibition at each booth.

The envelopes distributed at the first gathering could be used to inclose the missionary offering to be taken at each meeting.

An enterprising missionary committee will think of a multitude of features that will add to the interest and value of the plan.—Christian Endeavor World.

Lloyd George and Ramsey MacDonald to be at the World's Christian Endeavor Convention

Endeavorers who attend the World's Christian Endeavor Convention in London, July 16-21, 1926, will have the pleasure of seeing and hearing two famous British leaders, Lloyd George and Ramsay MacDonald, who have definitely promised to deliver addresses at the meetings in the Crystal Palace.

Lloyd George

For years the name of Lloyd George has been known all over the world. He was born in Manchester in 1853 and was brought up by his uncle, a shoemaker. Lloyd George knows what it is to struggle and suffer, and when he became a solicitor he at once began to champion the cause of the poor.

By hard work and application he rose to power in the British House of Commons, to which he was elected. In 1908 he became Chancellor of the Exchequer and created consternation by his daring plans to aid the poor by means of old-age pensions.

In the dark days of the war, when some one was needed to cut red tape and get ammunition to the troops, Lloyd George was chosen and made good. Very soon he became prime minister and led the forces of a coalition government in the war years.

Lloyd George is a Welshman and an orator of the first water. He speaks with ease and beauty and force. One is fascinated, charmed, as one listens. When he is heckled, or when he is interrupted in debate, his mind works with lightning-like rapidity, and his answers annihilate his opponents.

David Lloyd George was at one time a member of the Disciples Communion; he now attends the Baptist church. He is a warm-hearted Christian gentleman who has already made his mark on British history.

Ramsay MacDonald

Ramsay MacDonald, also a former prime minister of Great Britain, is a different type from Lloyd George. He is a Scotchman, born in Lossiemouth in 1866. Since 1900 he has been a leader in the British Labor Party. When his party came into power a year or two ago he was made prime minister and inaugurated policies which he believed would lead to reconciliation between the former warring nations. He has written a number of books on Socialism, but is far removed from the conventional type of Socialist agitator. He is a believer in evolutionary processes in government. Mr. MacDonald is a thoughtful and powerful speaker. He is a force to be reckoned with in British politics.

The British programme committee is on its job and is determined to make the London Convention the best that has yet been held. The echoes of it will reverberate around the globe.—Christian Endeavor World.

SOME ECCLESIASTICAL DON'TS

1. Don't try to please everybody. Whenever you hear of a man preaching so as to please everybody you may safely set it down that he is not pleasing his Divine Master.

2. Don't try to be eloquent; only try to be simple. Trying to be eloquent often leads speakers to say very ridiculous things. The intelligent listener is never deceived into taking sound for sense. So never let your stream of oratory carry you into high-sounding and mixed metaphors. "I smell a rat; I see him in the air; I'll nip him in the bud!" Take warning.

3. Don't offer to other people manna of which you have not tasted yourself. Feed your own soul. Let nothing interfere with, or cause you to neglect, your own spiritual life. Nothing can justify it. Nothing can compensate for it. You owe it to God, to your people and to your own self.

4. Don't be a messenger without a message or a preacher without a doctrine. "Preach the Word."—The Sky Pilot.

Interesting Events in the African Mission

Yalouki, par Boali, par Bangui,
 Afrique Equatoriale Francaise,
 December 7, 1925.

Dear Readers of the Brethren Evangelist:

My letter to you is long overdue, and I find myself with the events of two months to chronicle, instead of one.

Something less than two months ago the mission automobile, with Brother Hathaway driving, drew up in front of our door, and Miss Bickel and myself entered as additional passengers. Miss Bickel had just been making an extended visit to Yaloke, and I was just about to make, as it transpired, an equally extended one to Bassai. Brother Hathaway desired to confer with Brother Sheldon at Bozoum, and so the one trip was economically made to answer for the three purposes. We started late in the afternoon, camping at Gazeli that night, and taking lunch at Yimbeli the following noon, arriving at Bozoum about sunset. The rainy season was not quite over and the road was soft, causing us to be "stuck in the mud once or twice, from which predicament we were in each case extricated by the combined efforts of missionary and interested spectators from the villages. A punctured tire caused another delay, but fortunately our repairs having arrived, we were able to proceed. Mr. Sheldon arrived by tepoi from Bassai shortly after our arrival. Sunday was spent in prayer and conference, and Sunday evening in order to break the long tepoi journey into the Kare Mountains, Miss Bickel and I started out, breaking our journey at a little rest house near the river Njo, which we crossed in a canoe, managed by an enterprising ferryman in the employ of the French Government. Not carrying with us one of the famous "chop-boxes," we drank malted milk from a tin can, ate cheese sandwiches without the aid of plates, and proceeded early upon the last stage of our journey. After the first morning service I walked over to the grave. Enclosed with a hedge of citronelle, just outside of which were the graves of Konerouse, Dirganze and others,—marked with a simple granite boulder, from Bassai's plentiful stock, one stood in silence and read the simple inscription:

James S. Gribble 1883-1923

Revelations 2:2-20

And then we turned from the memory of his brave, short life, and from the inscription which brought to mind his dying words, "Come, dear Lord Jesus" turned to the homes that he never lived to see, to the happiness that he never lived to enjoy, and marvelled as we contemplated, what, in the short space of two and one-half years, God had wrought!

On November third we had the pleasure of celebrating Mr. Kennedy's birthday. As we gather together on these occasions, we forget an hour or so that we are in a heathen land—and as wit and repartee flash from lip to ear, and smiles and laughter crown the day, we turn again with renewed vigor and rejuvenated hearts to our privilege of ambassadorship, rejoicing in the hope of the happy home in heaven, of which our highest earthly joy can be but the faintest type.

On November 6th Mr. Sheldon left us for an extended trip among the Kaba. Preaching had often to be done through two interpreters, Mr. Sheldon preaching in Kare, and the Sango interpretation thereof being again rendered into the Kaba language. Returning through the Boro tribe, he found among them a commendable knowledge of Christ, relating one instance in particular of a man who knew the way of salvation to its minutest details, having never heard, except from his brother, who having been a workman at the Mission had accepted Christ, and returned home to tell his own. Our arrival at Bassai was a continual ovation. Every village was elated over Miss Bickel's return after a seven week's absence, and wonderment was mixed with joy as they discovered that the occupant of the second tepoi was actually visiting Bassai after fifteen months' absence.

We were carried in state up Bassai Mountain the natives rushing out to relieve our tepoyeurs, who were their friends. All was quiet around the Mission Houses. Evidently in spite of the excitement among the natives, we were arriving unannounced. Soon however there was a rush from the living room to the broad veranda, and we were warmly embraced in turn by Misses Myers and Cope and Mrs. Kennedy. Our meeting with Mr. Kennedy a little later was also a happy one. We had arrived just at the close of the daily hour of prayer, and a little earlier than we were expected.

Lunch was soon served, and in the very midst of it, Mr. Sheldon, who had spent the night at Bozoum, arrived.

The days which succeeded were happy ones. My pen trips over the words as I endeavor to describe them.

The daily meetings in the little church on the side of the hill—how deep were my emotions as I attended them! It was the old stone foundation that my husband had laid, being then a storehouse, with a central enclosure where stood his bed. It was the scene of the worst disaster in the history of the Mission when Yama listened to the adversary and filled our hearts with sorrow and his own with woe. And now it was the church, rebuilt on the same foundation—a foundation which had withstood the fire,—a church into which Kare Christians filed quietly and reverently. What a type! The life that was given among them, how truly it, too, had become a foundation, built in turn upon the everlasting foundation, the rock Christ Jesus. Through the fires and the attacks of the adversary, how truly and unflinchingly the church had passed! Friends, what great things the Lord had done for him.

Mail arrived on November seventh, bringing its quota of excitement and good cheer to the missionaries. I had that evening an opportunity to rejoice with them that do rejoice, as my own letters did not arrive from Yaloke until two days later.

Mr. Sheldon returned on November 22nd. We greatly enjoyed his account of the trip and God's hand with him in blessing throughout the journey. Several converts came with him and were baptized the following Sunday.

We received our first news from Conference on November 24th at Bassai, and it was even later at Yaloke, having been unfortunately delayed at Boali by the absence of the administrator.

Thanksgiving Day is never forgotten in Africa. It was a time of rejoicing as we gathered together. Turkey and cranberry sauce were missing, to be sure, but with the spirit of thankfulness, as we praised God for the wondrous things he has wrought in our midst.

December 3rd proved to be a great day at Bassai. Brother and Sister Hathaway arrived for a week of prayer and conference, bringing with them my long delayed mail, many of the letters being of universal interest. The excitement of the afternoon culminated in the festivities of the evening, when everyone was called upon to make an extemporaneous speech, the last of which was followed by prayer for the busy week which was to follow.

The following four days were spent in prayer, the next three in conference, and the last day at Bassai in preparation for our departure which occurred on December 11th. Early morning found four tepois with their passengers and carriers wending their way down Bassai mountain into the cool plain beneath. For Bassai, unlike most mountains has warm nights, the rocks storing the heat of the sun by day, and radiating it by night.

Doubtless you are wondering, since only three of us were returning to Yaloke who the occupant of the fourth tepoi might be? "Thereby hangs a tale."

On December 8, at one of the evening sessions of our conference the announcement was made of the engagement of Miss Hattie Louise Cope to Mr. Chauncey Burt Sheldon. This was followed at a later session by their being appointed to occupy after their marriage the new station soon to be opened among the Banda. And now behold the prospective bridegroom sallying forth to choose the site for the new station which is to be their future home and that of such workers as shall be associated with them.

To resume the history of the journey, we arrived at Bozoum about noon. The afternoon was spent in necessary attention to camp details, in receiving or making calls, and in attempts, more or less successful on the part of some of us, to sleep. The evening closed with prayer, and we returned to awaken in the gray dawn of a cold Bozoum morning.

Shivering we dressed, ate a hasty breakfast and departed, this time in the Mission auto which had been at Bozoum pending our return. Not content with making the long return trip to Yaloke that day we took a side trip of exploration through the tsetse fly district on the Bassangua road. It was a long day without rest, and only a brief stop at Diana for lunch. We arrived at Yaloke at 8 P. M., and found everyone hilarious with excitement at our arrival.

Miss Emmert and Miss Tyson rushed out with a lantern to meet us. Mail was awaiting us. Supper was at nine, and inevitably it was eleven before we retired, an almost unheard of thing for your "early-to-bed-early-to-rise" missionaries, and a dissipation which we could not often afford in the tropics.

Four busy days have transpired since. Preaching and teaching go on in spite of other activities—such as building, housekeeping, etc., and the unusual business of unpacking, settling and repacking for future fittings. For tomorrow Brother Hathaway and Brother Sheldon leave to locate the exact site of the Banda station which will probably be somewhere in the neighborhood of Bumbeo. They will be away over Christmas, but hope to return by New Year's. They will go by auto as far as Bossembali, and then have several days by tepoi before arriving in the desired vicinity.

The work at Yaloke has made rapid progress during my absence. The garage-store-house (combined) are nearing completion, the foundation of the brick church 40 feet by 70 feet, is well under way, and work upon the dwelling-house so often interrupted, is now to be resumed.

At Bassai, the hospital foundation will soon be laid. Also the foundation for the home for native women.

Forced by dire necessity, we are applying for a Mission Concession opposite Bassai to be used exclusively for lepers. We trust in God's own time to follow the necessary temporary structures by suitable permanent buildings. Leprosy, of the macular-anæsthetic type, is spreading so rapidly among our tribes and especially among the Kare that an asylum for segregation and isolation is an absolute necessity.

A baptismal service will take place this evening as there are a number of candidates in waiting, and the missionary brethren will be away until the New Year.

And so history continues to be made in our midst, the Mission continues to grow, just now with unprecedented rapidity and we continue to ask your prayers.

Faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIFFLE.

A Picnic for the Missionaries

The Office Secretary, she of the "Sky-Palor", Long Beach, California p, unto all the saints and fellow-laborers of the Brethren church throughout the United States of America, GREETING! (Thusly, so says my Dictator, is the only correct and scriptural way in which to begin a letter, am I trying to follow instructions, in an effort to be perfect—just once.)

Did you ever hear of having a picnic—a real out-of-doors, honest-to-goodness picnic—on the first day of January? No, I am not talking about California, although we could have such an outing any day of the year, if we wanted to. But a letter has just come from Mrs. Yett—she of the sweet-meaning name of "Lora" (see previous correspondence), and she says that they had such a picnic down in South America, for the missionaries and native workers and Christians. More than that, it was "the day after the night before"—that is, they had had Watch Night Service until 1 A. M. the night previous. That is pretty strenuous for South America, say I! But Mrs. Yett says they very seldom get to bed early, for the reason that they cannot begin their evening meeting until 9 P. M. or later, as the evening meal down there is not eaten until after the flies have retired! (Would-be missionaries please take note that one must adapt herself to the habits and convenience of the natives. Finger bowls and napkins may come later, but when you first arrive, "Do as the Romans do" in the little things that don't really matter. You will find opportunity for much exercise of your Christian grace, tact and love.)

Mrs. Yett writes that so far she is but a listener at the public meetings, although she hopes soon to master the Spanish sufficiently to pass out some of the good things of God's Word she has in her heart, and his message of salvation to those that sit in darkness. She says there is one little girl, 12 years old, down there who repeated the Golden Texts for the whole 52 Sundays of the year! I wonder how many of our boys and girls could do that?

Do not the sacrifices of our missionaries (though they say there are none, compared with the "joy unspeakable" that the Lord gives), their victories over difficulties, their joy in their work for the Master and its fruit (such as this little girl who is hiding God's Word in her heart)—do not these, I say, make your hearts to be joy-full and rouse within you a desire to be more faithful in the part of the work committed to you—your prayers and support of your foreign ambassadors?

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." * * * "My love be with you all in Christ Jesus. Amen."

Long Beach, California.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

THE FOSTORIA REVIVAL

The Brethren church of Fostoria, Ohio is not dead yet. If it was dead, it seems to have wonderfully revived. The little band of not more than fifty members have had many setbacks. The wolves of selfishness, jealousy and strife had torn and scattered the flock shamefully. Many were discouraged and some had given up all hope. The Ohio Mission Board should not be censured for withdrawing its support from the work, nor the Ohio Conference for ordering the disbanding of the work and the sale of the property. Looking at it from the distance, they could see nothing but failure in store for the Fostoria Brethren. However, a few rose up in the midst of their wreck and with faith in God said, "This is the cause of Christ and it must not fail." On their knees they cried to God for grace and strength to go forward. Through the summer they maintained a Sunday school and

Sunday evening preaching services, Brother George O. Walton, of Fremont, Ohio, faithfully administering to them the Word of Life each Sunday evening. The Sunday school attendance was small, but the preaching services were well attended for the most part, I have been told. Early last fall the writer received a request to lead them in a revival campaign. Other urgent duties did not permit my heeding the request at that time and the effort was postponed until January. In the meantime the Ohio Conference authorized the closing of the work and the sale of the property. Still undaunted, the faithful earnestly urged me to come over and help them. Against the advice of some of our leading brethren and without the full consent of my own mind, I finally decided to go and see what could be done, expecting to remain only three or four days. Having arranged for the evening services of our church in Columbus, I went to Fostoria on Sunday afternoon, January 24. I was met at the train by Brother R. T. Keiser, who took me to his home and at his home I was well cared for throughout the short campaign. Thanks for their kindness.

To my surprise, I was greeted the very first evening with a very good audience, considering the circumstances. Having labored among these dear brethren in former days while pastor at Fremont, Ohio, I was no stranger among them and it was a joy to renew the old acquaintances. The spirit of earnestness and devotion was inspiring and I was able to preach with great liberty. The theme of the message was "Sin and Its Forgiveness" and when the invitation to accept Christ was offered four precious souls responded. Such a response the first evening seemed to fairly electrify the whole congregation. We decided to continue the meetings through the week. Another came forward about the middle of the week and we decided to continue over Sunday, Brother Walton taking care of the work in Columbus. Sunday night a splendid young man was converted and on the following Wednesday night five came forward, including a man sixty years old who had never accepted Christ, his wife, his daughter and his grandson, ten years old. To see the gray haired man and his grandson standing side by side proclaiming faith in Christ was a most delightful sight. The next night two fine young men were converted. We decided to continue over Sunday. The tide of victory rose until fifteen souls had accepted Christ and I had the great joy of baptizing them all in the baptistry so kindly loaned to us by the Church of the Brethren. We closed February 10 with a love-feast, which was a very blessed service. Brother Owen, the pastor at Williamstown, his wife and three others of his flock were with us. Also Brother Walton, who, with Brother Owen, assisted in the services.

At the request of the Fostoria Brethren, Brother George S. Baer, the president of the Ohio Mission Board, came over from Ashland and conducted a short business meeting on the last Tuesday evening of the campaign, following the evening preaching services. New officers were elected. Some of the new members were thus given a share of responsibility in the work. A beautiful spirit of harmony and love prevailed. Brother Baer was very pleasantly and agreeably surprised at the turn in affairs and expressed hope for the future. He urged the membership to cherish peace and harmony and to press on in the work faithfully, assuring them that the plan to disband the work and sell the property would be deferred.

A great victory has been won. The cause of the Brethren in Fostoria seems to have been redeemed. While a few are not yet co-operating in the work, they are not hostile to it, and it is hoped that soon all will be working together harmoniously. The revival was surely heaven-born. It was not worked up by man, but was a real manifestation of the power of God. We had no organization and nothing out of which to form one. None of the methods of professional evangelism were used. No printed advertisements were distributed for we had not expected to hold an extensive campaign. It was with much fear and trembling that we entered into the effort, realizing that if anything would be accomplished it would be the power of God. The few that held on had come to the place where they could only rely on God. They could not rely upon themselves for they were so few and so weak. They could not rely much upon their pastor for he was not with them much. They could not rely upon the district evangelist or the Mission Board for they had lost hope. They could not rely upon their evangelist for he seemed wavering. In their extremity they relied upon God and oh how he proved worthy of their trust. Blessed be his name forever! Let everybody that knows the Lord rejoice and pray much for the Fostoria Brethren.

II. M. OBERHOLTZER.

THE FOSTORIA HOPE

If this hope that has flared up suddenly out of the dying embers of the much-kindled missionary fires at Fostoria shall prove a steady glow, none will more truly rejoice, nor be more heartily encouraged than the members of the Ohio Mission Board. And I am glad to confess that at the time of my last visit I was very favorably impressed with the spirit manifested on the part of the members who have taken a new interest in the work, and the way they seem now ready to work together, and some of the new material which has been added through the ministry of Brother Oberholtzer as reported above, gives special reason for hopefulness. The Board's decision to close the work and dispose of the property, which was ratified by the late district conference, was taken only after the most careful and extended effort and investigation, and in harmony with the opinion expressed by most of the members of the mission on the occasion of a survey of the field made by officers of the Board. It was a decision arrived at most reluctantly, and after much yearning and prayer. But man's extremity often proves God's opportunity, and the spirit of revival has fallen on this little group in a most encouraging manner. We shall hope and pray that this may be the beginning of a future, that God's spirit may continually have its way with these people and that their numbers may increase and the field may enlarge, so that we may yet have a Brethren church in Fostoria.

GEO. S. BAER,

President, Ohio Mission Board.

NORTH MANCHESTER, INDIANA

The evangelistic campaign of our church is now history. We had Brother W. H. Beachler, pastor of the South Bend church, as the evangelist and he was aided by our genial and much beloved pastor, Brother J. Raymond Schutz, by the choir who was faithful and also we were favored with some special music each meeting which was greatly appreciated. The meeting began February 1st and closed February 14th, having continued throughout with splendid interest from the first night. We had large crowds and on a few occasions people were turned away for lack of room. The visible results were nineteen added to the church, twelve by confession, all of whom have been baptized and received into the church, and seven came by letter. But who can measure the results of God's seed when sown in faith believing? We feel sure that very many have been given an upward lift and have renewed their faith in the Great God of us all.

May great blessings ever follow Brother Beachler's every effort.

MRS. J. L. WARVEL,
Corresponding Secretary.

BRYAN, OHIO

"The Revival Meeting"

This report shall be confined entirely to the evangelistic effort recently conducted in Bryan. Other interesting items will be given later.

Seven years ago, a special series of meetings were started here by Brother W. T.

Lytle and within a week he was compelled to close on account of the dreadful influenza epidemic. As a result, it has for these several years been the desire of the church to have him return to Bryan. During the interim between his acceptance and his coming the ministers of our town agreed upon a Simultaneous Campaign, with five churches conducting services at the same time. The advertising was mostly done in a union way; too a union mass meeting was held on a Sunday afternoon, at which our evangelist delivered the message.

We worked hard to be ready for the meeting and we believe that we were. A fine spirit prevailed. Even one confession was made before the meeting began. Brother Lytle's sermons were logically presented. They were searching. He had exceptional attendance all the time, in lieu of the fact that four other churches were busy at the same time. For several evenings, just before the sermon, he gave Scripture, and interpretation of same, regarding our distinctive doctrines and ordinances. Tracts too were in reach of all who desired to read them, relative to Baptism and the Ordinance of Feet-Washing.

The pastor and evangelist worked side by side, going in and out of many homes, talking with saint and sinner anywhere. But in spite of all efforts, much devoted praying, and personal work, with the impetus of others at the same task, sinners were hard to stir, so few who stood in need of the gift of God, attended regularly. We believe many people of the community were stirred, besides, eight precious souls confessed their Lord and Savior. It is our hope that a few more may yet come as a direct result of the meetings. As for the other churches, the additions were mostly by letter, only a very small number having made confession for the first time.

Several homes which we expected to enter through their splendid sons and daughters, were not touched, due to the measles. There were from 130 to 200 cases of measles and chicken-pox in the town to contend with during the entire time. It is only out of fairness to any evangelist that we mention the handicaps. It is sufficient to say that Brother Lytle did not preach a compromising gospel. It was straight forward from the beginning to the end.

We pray that his health may continue so good, and that he may be an instrument in God's hands to win many for his name.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

RADIOGRAMS IN EVANGELISM

Home again, after a very severe and hard drive against sin. Everything around about is filled with hope that winter is over and spring is not far off.

Since my work in evangelism has been largely interchurch work my report might not be as interesting as it should be, but my friends are asking and wondering the why and the wherefore of things so I presume upon the readers of the Evangelist to write a few flashes in Radiograms, telling of our work.

Since the holidays it seems as if the Lord has been calling us to work in the East. I left soon after the holidays for Johnstown, Pennsylvania again and my first meeting was outside of Johnstown in a community where there is no church as yet. An Evangelical mission has been established and we were invited to hold them a revival. I had practically the same people to work with as I had in a previous meeting held in Johnstown in November. I sure did have a good time with them. We were up against it for room, but we enjoyed every minute with these good folks. Our meetings continued for three weeks, and Mr. Camlin of Scottdale, Pennsylvania, the other member of our party, was able to be with us to assist in the music over the Lord's Day. Also many of our friends came from the city out to see us, and gave us encouragement. Twenty-five in all was the net result from this meeting which is considered very good for this needy field. I am convinced that such places challenge the very best that is in us and this we gave them. By request we remained over on the last Monday and delivered our lecture on "Americanism" five miles outside of Johnstown. We had a good hearing and were well received.

Our meeting following this was near Scottdale, Pennsylvania. At a central place on the highway a group of people meet every Sunday afternoon in what is known as the Iron Bridge Schoolhouse. This group thought after much prayer that the time was ripe for a protracted effort against sin and a union revival was planned. After due consideration we were asked to hold it, and we accepted the invitation. We began on February 3 and continued until February 24.

I was assisted throughout the meetings by my co-laborer, Brother W. B. Camlin as Choir director and a consecrated young man, Gordon Robertson of Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, as pianist.

It was an ideal place, street cars from Mt. Pleasant and Scottdale and all the neighboring cities brought us good crowds each evening, despite the very bad weather we had.

The room again was too small but we crowded the people in and we observed that the opportunity to do some real work was at hand. We had fine people from all the surrounding churches with us, as well as some of the pastors. Our Mt. Pleasant people came and supported the meetings and we were glad to see them again. I must say one thing, I was amazed at the number of unsaved who came. In the city of Scottdale at the same time a big church meeting was on, house full and very few unsaved, but with us not so. One night we had by actual knowledge forty such people, adults, etc., not bad people either but just those who are doing what great hosts are doing, putting off their eternal salvation until tomorrow. The fight was hard, Satan fought us every inch of the way, but the victory came. In this small community 45 definitely committed their eternal salvation into the hands of the Savior by confessing their faith in him. Besides this, believers were reclaimed into a life of service, or came out to give up all questionable amusements. It is my observation that this must be done if the church is to be a light to lighten the darkness of unbelief. The singing and the playing was indeed a blessed help to bringing men to decision for Christ.

On the Sunday mornings we preached in the neighboring churches. The first Sunday found us in Connellsville, Pennsylvania, in the M. P. church. We had a splendid service. The second Sunday in the U. P. church of Scottdale. This was a restful spiritual service, and we enjoyed preaching to this people on the text, "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree."

The last Sunday I preached in the Church of the Brethren outside of Mt. Pleasant for my old friend, Rev. Myers who was pastor of the Church of the Brethren at Goshen when I was there at our church in a series of meetings years ago.

After a few days at home with my family I am returning to Pennsylvania to hold another six weeks of hard work. My next meeting being a union meeting of two churches at Prittsstown, two miles from Iron Bridge where we expect to begin Sunday, the 28th. Mr. Camlin will open the campaign and I will, if the Lord tarries, join him on Tuesday evening, March 2, and will be there until the 19th. Following this I will hold a pre-Easter cooperative revival of the two churches of Marion Center, Pennsylvania, where Brother McInturff, formerly of Goshen, is pastor. He is already a very active member of the Pittsburgh Conference of the M. E. church, and my meetings are to be held in his church. In fact, it is by his invitation that I was engaged.

We are surely gracious unto the Lord for his blessings to me and mine while away from each other. We are planning greater things for the future. May the Lord bless the brotherhood everywhere. We covet your prayers.

A. E. THOMAS,

North Manchester, Indiana.

IN THE LAND OF COLONELS

A group of Northerners at a hotel in Louisville were poking fun at the partiality of Southerners for the titles of "Colonel," "Major," and "Judge."

"What is a colonel hereabout?" asked one of the group, and there immediately followed a discussion. Finally a colored attendant was drawn in.

"Well, gents," said the negro, "dere's lots of ways to answer dat question. I'se knowed folks who was born kunnels—it jest run in de blood foh generations. An' I'se knowed folks what was jes' app'inted to be kunnels. An' yet others what was made kunnels by bein' kind to cullud people. For instance, any man dat gives me a dollar is a kunnel to me hencefo'th forever."

MASONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Since we always appreciate reading reports concerning our sister churches we feel incumbent to report our work. We feel that the work in Masontown, since our last report, has been above the average in many respects. The church, in general, is in a very flourishing condition. The Sunday school maintained an average attendance of 211 for the year 1925. Last Sunday there were 277 out for Sunday school. All the auxiliaries of the church are contributing their share toward the success of the church.

The latest significant bit of work was the revival in January. Rev. B. T. Burnworth was the efficient evangelist. We experienced many counter attractions. The weather was bad. Despite all these oppositions, Brother Burnworth preached the Gospel in a straightforward manner and we kept on fighting for advanced ground. When folks don't come to hear Christ, we believe in taking Christ to them. After two weeks of service the ice was broken. There were in all 47 confessions, 13 came on the very last night. We closed as usual when the interest was tense and keen. A reception for the new members was given at which time two surprises were sprung on the pastor and wife, viz., a well-filled purse and a birthday cake for the pastor on which were placed 32 candles. In all it was a very pleasant evening shared together. Masontown church is very fortunate, now, in being able to care for the fourfold nature of her youth. She has a fair sized recreation hall. We have every reason to believe that Masontown, if carefully shepherded, has a wonderful future.

which was evinced in our labors three years ago. The reason for such interest is still a puzzle to us, but generally speaking conditions within the body politic of communions have improved and this perhaps is one reason for more harmonious and effective work. Our Sunday schools are growing and improving, and our churches are reaping the results. If we can conserve the gains netted through Sunday school work in the years ahead of us; if we can train, set to work, and encourage our own workers; and if we can indoctrinate them properly, then need we feel little difficulty concerning a growing Brethren church. If we fail at this point our future as a church is gloomy.

Many personal references by others have been made through the columns of The Evangelist to the work now being carried on. Many kind remarks have been proffered by our pastors and laymen favoring our National Sunday School Association, its president and officers, for making the present efforts possible. A repetition of such reports—verbal and written—is unnecessary here. Customary reporting of our work at large by workers in various fields of activity within our church explains the reason for this article. Otherwise it would not appear.

In the immediate future work will be resumed in the Indiana District, inasmuch as some work has been done there already. The Pennsylvania and Maryland-Virginia Districts will be entered next according to present plans. Ohio will be the last territory to be covered.

We are now en route to the east from a brief visit with the Pacific Coast Brethren. A further report will appear later concerning field work with them. Until then the prayers of our workers are earnestly solicited in behalf of our general and personal work. "Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the laborers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth laborers into his harvest" (Luke 10:2).

Lent an Unappropriated Blessing

The Lenten season has been so completely neglected or purposely unnoticed by the great mass of Evangelical Protestants that we scarcely realize the possibilities of spiritual blessings that it holds. It has been practically monopolized by the Catholic, Anglican and Eastern churches, not with design on their part, but by our negligence and blindness. Of recent years, however, there has been a widely growing recognition of the strategic importance of this season as a time for stepping forward in spiritual things. And surely it is entirely right and proper that it should be so. There is no season of the year more heavily freighted, if indeed as much so, with sacred and solemn memories as the forty days which lead up to and include Easter. True, there is no special significance in a particular number or days, except that forty was the number which Jesus himself spent in the wilderness in prayer and fasting, contemplating his great mission and making preparation for the pouring out of his life to the uttermost that he might become the Savior of the world. But for a time preceding Easter, whether few or many days, it is well that we too should pause and give special attention to the tuning up of our spiritual lives and to the contemplation of and a freshly setting ourselves to the great task to which the church is divinely commissioned.

Lenten season is a fitting time for the cultivation of a deepened devotion and a stronger grasp on the spiritual realities. We need a season given over to just such ends, living as we do in the midst of such noise and confusion and having our minds so distracted and possessed by the material attractions and profits of this world. We need times devoted to quiet meditation and prayer, when the soul can regain its composure and the things of the Spirit can be clearly seen and judged by their true value. Every life needs its periods of quiet, its rest seasons, its times of spiritual refreshment and recuperation. Without them we lose those higher qualities of the soul, those finer sensibilities, those keener discernments between shades of right and wrong, which give life its beauty and strength. And into those periods of rest and meditation there should be injected much reading of the Sacred Word and the perusal of devotional books, from which may be gained much substantial help and fortification against the temptations and tests of the work-a-day world. Care should be exercised not to allow the mind to become absorbed in the newspaper, the magazine, or the current novel, which, while they have their place, occupy generally quite too large a place in the life of the average Christian and give direction in too large a measure to his thoughts and ideals. If this period is to prove a real revival to the individual soul and result in a more vital experience in the richness of divine grace, every effort must be put forth to throw about it a spiritual atmosphere.

Furthermore, it would help immensely to enrich the life and to empower it for service if there should be some really honest and sincere effort at self-denial during this season. We might deny ourselves of some luxury in the way of food, clothing, amusement, or means of pleasure, and be much richer spiritually for the experience. Without entering definitely upon a fast "according to canonical instructions," we might resolve upon a more frugal diet and be greatly profited in body and mind, and have something left with which to feed the hungry, as well as to send the Bread of Life to those who are spiritually destitute. Or the craving for some amusement might be curbed—we have perhaps been in the habit of indulging too freely throughout the year any way, and it may be that the exercise of our freedom has been the occasion of stumbling to some weaker one. Especially we would do well to guard our expenditures, and even to sacrifice the meeting of some of our wants that we may be able to give more for the sending of the Gospel to the ends of the earth. Aside from the positive good that may be rendered to others, thereby, the practice of self-denial will help wonderfully to curb the spirit of selfishness in one's own life, which is everywhere an outstanding hindrance to Christian attainment.

Besides the blessing which Lenten season may be to the individual in a devotional way, it is fraught with splendid possibilities of profitable and effective instruction. It is an opportune time to engage the minds of youth, and adults as well, in an effort to gain a fuller understanding of the way of life, and of the larger responsibilities of church membership. The very spirit that pervades the season tends to induce an attitude of serious thoughtfulness and eager receptiveness of the truth. It is a situation that ought to be made the most of, both because it is so advantageous and because the need is so great. Ignorance concerning the word of God and of the rightful claims of the church upon the individual is a glaring weakness, even among church members, that is universally manifest. And the way to the throne of grace and into the riches of eternal truth even among the better informed is not any too familiar. It is pre-eminently a time of instruction, because of the urgent need, because of the great events which the occasion commemorates, and also because the great Teacher himself made it so by his example. The most sublime truths in which he instructed his disciples were enunciated during Holy Week. To fail to make use of some portion of Lent for the instruction of the people in the things of God is to neglect an opportunity fraught with grave responsibility.

Lent is also a strategic time for the fisherman of souls to draw the net for a catch. This fact has been widely recognized and the sacred associations of the season are being very extensively capitalized for evangelistic purposes. Campaigns of both personal and pulpit evangelism are being conducted throughout the land and among all Evangelical churches. And it is fitting that this should be made the special season for evangelism. What period lends itself more naturally to an effective appeal to men to seek salvation than the time when we celebrate the completion of that work of grace on the cross! Nothing has a greater drawing power than the sight of the Savior on the cross, a fact which Jesus himself foretold when he said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." Recognizing this, pastors and evangelists, Sunday school teachers and personal workers take advantage of the occasion by directing attention to the uplifted Christ and pressing for decisions in his name. It is a wise policy and a most proper feature of the Lenten program. It is a good practice even for Brethren people, and it truly holds blessings for us which we have not begun to appropriate.

Educating the Youth for Peace

Many approaches have been made to the question, "How shall we educate the rising generation for peace?" One of the most interesting and fundamentally sound is that of the Ohio Council of Churches. Its plan is to get the young people to studying the problem under the direction of some of the country's most skilled students of international relations. They plan to bring about this desired end by the promotion of a Peace Declamation Contest. It is compiling a book of selections from the writings of such authorities as Sherwood Eddy, Frederick J. Libby, Fred B. Smith, Sidney L. Gulick, Judge Florence Allen and others. These selections are to be recited by boys and girls from fourteen to eighteen—college students are barred—in a series of declamation contests in the churches. "The winner of the prize in each church will receive a bronze medal, the county winner a silver medal, and the winner in each Congressional district a gold one, with three state prizes at the top, equivalent to $500, $300, and $100, to go to the children's higher education." The contests will begin in the local churches from April 11 to 25 and with the state contest on or before June 6th. If any Brethren boy or girl in Ohio should be so fortunate as to win any of the prizes we shall be glad to learn of the fact.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Porte says, in his "Tract Corner" that "the way to keep up is to keep moving." Then perhaps we are warranted in concluding that one reason why some churches are falling down in denominational loyalty is because the minds of the people are not kept moving in lines of denominational interest. Where does the blame rest?

The brotherhood will be pleased to hear from Miss Johanna Nielsen, who is a self-supporting member of our mission band in South America and has been on the field a year. Her message is both interesting and thoughtful, and the appeal which she presents in behalf of the needy fields and the missionaries-in-waiting is fitting and timely in view of the coming Easter offering.

Brother C. A. Stewart reports his work at the College Corner and Loree churches in Indiana, the latter of which he has served as pastor for nearly eight years. Successful revivals have been held recently at both churches, the pastor doing the preaching, the additions at College Corner being fifteen, and to Loree four. The pastor rejoices in the continued loyalty and cooperation of both congregations and the outlook is bright.

It is an inspiring story that comes to us from Philadelphia concerning the late Dr. Russell H. Conwell. It is said that he gave away $11,000,000. And when he died his estate amounted to a little over $11,000. He had invested his entire income as well as his life in those institutions which remain a monument to his great genius. His earning capacity was very great; his books and lectures brought him in a fabulous sum. He also had the power to get others to give. He used his talent for the good of others and for the building of the Kingdom of God.

The church at North Manchester, Indiana, recently enjoyed a season of refreshing during which nineteen souls were added to the church, besides the membership being greatly blessed in a spiritual way. Dr. W. H. Beachler was the evangelist and Prof. J. Raymond Schutz is the pastor. With two such gifted men working together for the saving of souls, it would be a difficult field that would not yield results, even though kept carefully gleaned as is the Manchester church's field. Brother Beachler speaks highly of his enjoyment of the two weeks spent in co-laboring with Brother Schutz and his good people.

Brother James S. Cook tells of his change of pastorates from Turlock, California, and his taking up the work at Martinsburg and McKee in Pennsylvania, the work recently laid down by Brother J. I. Hall. Brother Cook has evidently found his way into the hearts of these people, who are vying him fine evidence of loyalty and support. The condition of these churches is quite encouraging. The Turlock people showed their appreciation of his services in a very substantial way upon his leaving.

We are in receipt of a copy of the "Year Book" of the First Brethren Church School of Dayton, Ohio, a very neat little book of vest-pocket size. It contains, besides a complete organization and goals of school, departments and classes; standard of excellence; suggested list of books for workers' library, the unique feature of a constitution and by-laws for the school. Attorney O. E. Bowman is the superintendent and Dr. W. S. Bell is the pastor.

We mentioned recently in these columns about the New Testament as a tract for distribution. Now we have our attention called to the fact by the American Bible Society, Bible House, Astor Place, New York, that they are ready to supply the entire New Testament in unlimited quantities printed in eleven little volumes at one cent each. The type is clear and easily read. At that rate you can afford to carry a copy of the Gospel of John, or any other Gospel, around with you ready to give away at any opportunity.

Miss Alice B. Longaker writes of the challenging situation in Africa. It is a strange turning of the tables—a few years ago we were praying for an open door, and now we are not able to enter the doors that are wide open. It appears that we have prayed better than we have paid. And what is true of the African situation from that standpoint, is likewise true of the South American field. And a similar thing could be said of practically every field of united endeavor in the homeland. Let us cease praying for open doors for a while and pray for open pocket books.

Brother H. E. Eppley, pastor at Huntington, Indiana, reports a very successful re-consecration campaign participated in by all the churches of Huntington under the leadership of Prof. J. Raymond Schutz of North Manchester. Brother Schutz proved a man of God to these people, giving them the message of God in a challenging way, and it is evident that the spirit of God moved with reviving power upon the hearts of the people. Perhaps it would be well for more communities to conduct a re-consecration campaign occasionally; it should put the churches in shape to do some real evangelism. We congratulate Brother Eppley and his fellow-pastors upon the wisdom of launching such a campaign.

It will be of interest to many to know that a nucleus of Brethren have been gathered together in the city of New York through the ministry of Sister Emma Aboud, who reports fifteen members and twenty baptisms. (Sister Aboud has a laudable ambition, that of building a Brethren church in that great city. We ought to have churches not only in the first city of our land but in many other great centers of population. It has been much to our loss as well as to our discredit that we have not. Brethren people are continually going to these centers for employment and we are losing them because we are unable to care for them.)

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor at Portis, Kansas, reports seven accessions during a recent revival meeting in which he served as evangelist, much to the satisfaction of his church and the community. Eleven additions are reported thus far this year. We are glad to note that Brother Deeter is striking at sin in a specific way and is getting results. Sometimes we are too much inclined to confine our warnings against sin to generalities and abstractions with the result that very often they don't get home, whereas we need to be more specific and point out the sinfulness of profanity, of card playing, dancing, etc., as well as many other kinds of sins.

President Jacobs in his College News mentions the recent High School Basketball Tournament which was such a big success. We imagine the gymnasium and college grounds are never so crowded as they are on these occasions, and especially the last one. It is possibly the best advertising event for the local field that could be devised. It brings students, and we dare say it will help to bring endowment from a much wider local constituency than has heretofore been appealed to in behalf of the college. This makes us wonder if the local community is not being keyed up to a higher point of enthusiasm in behalf of Ashland College than the brotherhood which holds the title and claim of chief interest. It may be that the pastors will find it necessary to fire up their interest a little more in their only church school, to make it more contagious and virulent, until it becomes fatal to indifference, especially in view of the coming endowment campaign under the leadership of Dr. Bell.

A certain Baptist clergyman said, "The best proof of Apostolic Succession is apostolic success." It might be too that apostolic obedience would help greatly to bring apostolic success.

"Give and it shall be given unto you." But some church folks never claim the promise because they expect the Lord to advance the reward before they make their gift.

GENERAL ARTICLES

One Thing Jesus Could Not Do. Matt. 27:42

By Wm. H. Beachler, D. D.

In Saint Matthew's gospel we have the following account: "They that passed by reviled him, wagging their heads, and saying, Thou that destroyest the temple, and buildedst it in three days, save thyself. If thou be the Son of God come down from the cross. Likewise also the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders said, He saved others; himself he cannot save. If he be the king of Israel, let him now come down from the cross and we will believe him."

At no other time in her national history did Israel's leadership appear at so tragic disadvantage as now. Never before in that matchless sweep of history had leadership so utterly abandoned dignity and poise, and cast it to the wind. Never before had blindness become so complete. Never before had human hearts become so thoroughly stone.

Not content with having done their very worst to him; and not content with seeing him helpless on the cross and dying amid indescribable pain and agony, Christ's enemies—his enemies in priestly robes, and in the purple of authority—stand by, wagging their heads, pointing the finger of scoffing and scorn at him, taunting him, spitting upon him, slandering him, breaking his heart. But, in spite of their basest, lowest selves what these enemies intended as their most deadly and wicked arrow turned out to be the admission of one great truth and the declaration of another.

"He saved others." This they admitted. It was a great, outstanding truth. Appalling as was the depravity of these atrophied leaders they had to admit that during his ministry he had saved others. Throughout, and from every standpoint, Christ's ministry was a lifting, ameliorating, saving ministry. It was a continuous program of saving from suffering; from sorrow; from despair; from death; from abuse; from the injustices of a heartless public opinion; and from the evils and the errors of a religion which had lost its warmth and its blood, and had become mere husks and a skeleton of meatless bones. Truly his was a saving ministry! Truly he "went about doing good!" And no matter at what point of human need or human experience his great loving ministry touched, it all pointed toward one sublime, central fact, viz., that the ultimate goal of his coming into the world, and the ultimate goal of his ministry, is to save and redeem mankind from sin and death. His enemies admitted that "He saved others." And through the ages other of his enemies have had to admit as much. The results of Christ's influence, and work, and ministry represents the one argument that cannot be answered.

And in the same breath these same enemies declared a great truth—far greater than they knew. Revelling in the thought of Christ's defeat, and jubilant over his awful humiliation, they hurl it into his sublime face that "He cannot save himself." "He saved others; himself he cannot save." Certainly they are thinking of his physical deliverance. They are reminding each other and Christ that he cannot come down from the cross: He cannot save his physical life. They are telling each other and their dying enemy that if he could come down, then they would believe that he is the King of Israel.

I repeat, in a far greater sense than they could possibly understand, these blind, bitter, murderous enemies of our Lord spoke the truth. Truly, Jesus could not save himself. THIS IS THE ONE THING JESUS COULD NOT DO.

ELDER WM. H. BEACHLER

Pastor First Church, South Bend, Indiana

From the standpoint of his earthly ministry he could not save himself. He never manifested the slightest tendency to do so. He never intimated that he came into the world to save himself. But by word and act he implied just the opposite. There is no evidence that Jesus had any set rest days; that he took any vacations; or that he lingered at rest resorts, or mingled much with the people of leisure. In his old home synagogue and to his friends and fellow townsmen he read:

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he hath anointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted; to preach deliverance to the captives; and recovering of sight to the blind; to set at liberty them that are bruised; to preach the acceptable year of the Lord."

Then he said, "Today is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears," which meant, "This is my program, and today I accept it and dedicate my life to it." Needless to say, no man could carry out such a program and save himself. Jesus was anointed of God to fulfill it and put it through, and not to save himself. And it has always been hard for folks to save themselves when they have been anointed of God. In fact, when we have been anointed of God, the thought of saving ourselves is our last thought. Jesus made plain that he did not come to be ministered unto but to minister. And he disclosed to his disciples that the way to greatness was by the lowly way of service.

It was at once beyond all possibility for Jesus to respond to all of the calls for help that came from weighed down and suffering humanity, and at the same time save himself. But he never turned deaf ear to those cries and appeals: he never shut his eyes to the needs; he never hid behind locked doors; he never fled. Literally worn out and exhausted, I see him asleep in the boat; and my heart is tremendously gripped with pity, and yet with admiration. His zeal and willingness have outrun his strength, and my eyes moisten as I look upon my weary Lord asleep. And yet, how admirable and adorable is he, tired and worn, because he has been giving himself unselfishly to the world! And as he reaches the other shore I note that his plans have miscarried. For those who refuse to save themselves it is very hard to have set hours and fixed plans. Whereas he is seeking a little quiet and a little rest, behold here is a multitude of eager, needy humanity which has come around the lake on foot to find him. And because of his passionate yearning and pity for this multitude, our Lord forgets for the time that he is weary, and he continues to pour out his life in service. He could not save himself. He did not try—he did not desire to save himself.

But we come to that far deeper and more vital sense in which he could not save himself. I look at the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah and I am assured that Jesus cannot save himself. The angel instructs Joseph to "call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins." And again I know that he cannot save himself. He cannot save sinful man and yet save himself. I see a young man of serious, stately bearing appear at the river Jordan: He bears every mark of chastity and self-control. And I hear John the Baptist acclaim him as "The Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world;" and I know that this young man cannot save himself.

I must believe that from a very early period in his life

Jesus sensed the cross, and understood well that he could not save himself. And the unfolding years bear this in upon him with increasing clearness. When I hear him say, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of Man be lifted up," I know he understands. When I hear him say, "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit," I say, when I hear him say this I know he understands. And because he did know and understand that he could not save himself, a whole chain of events find a perfect explanation, beginning with his handing Judas the sop, and ending with his words from the Cross, "It is finished." And because he did know and understand that he could not save himself, his death is at once the most sublime sacrifice the world has ever seen—sublime because absolutely free and voluntary.

How clear is Saint Paul's summing up of the whole matter: "And being found in fashion as a man he humbled himself and became obedient unto death, even the death on the cross." Jesus did not try to save himself in his ministry. And much less did he try to save himself from the cross. Thank God! To open for a lost and fallen world the fountain of salvation, and to receive that name which is above every name, he had to lay down his life. If he could save others he could not save himself.

What startling, what amazing lessons flash out from this! What sobering questions arise in our minds!

For instance: If the church today has difficulty to find herself; If the church seems anemic, and apologetic, and apathetic, I wonder if the explanation is not near at hand? I wonder if we have not all—priest and people—become more concerned about saving ourselves than about saving others? I wonder if we are not all more concerned about saving our money for ourselves, than about using it and spending it to save others? I wonder if the same is not true with our time? and I wonder if it is not true that many, very many parents would rather save their sons and daughters for the easy, comfortable, lucrative walks of life than give them to God for the saving of others? Moreover, I wonder if we are not more concerned about minimums than maximums? I wonder if we do not crave ease, and rest, and the line of least resistance rather than conquest and service. And I wonder if, because of the refusal of the church to have "die" within her, some things which ought to die, she has not forfeited that Divine honor, and exaltation, and power without which she cannot save others? Of this we must be positive and sure, that if the church is to do for a lost and needy world what Christ wants her to do she cannot save herself.

The following paragraph comes from one who speaks fearlessly. Will you listen to his words?

"Like its Founder the church cannot save itself except through saving others. It is unthinkable that a church can save itself in a lost world. For a church exists only to serve, and when effective service ceases the church no longer lives; its soul is dead. Only as it goes out into the world of men and affairs, out where the tides of life are strong and where evil abounds, out where human need is greatest, and there sets a lamp to the feet that go astray and throws a light that leads to a sure goal can the church be saved. Nor does it greatly matter perhaps whether a church that would not be willing and able to do these things should be saved or not."

As pertains to the individual Christian I believe the principle is the same. Jesus said, "If any man will come after me let him deny himself." He said, "He that will save his life shall lose it; and he that will lose it for my sake shall find it." We may as well face the fact that if, as individuals, we are going to have a part in saving others; if we are going to bring a real contribution to the church and the Kingdom; if we are going to bear fruit; if we are going to be more than merely nominal Christians, we cannot save ourselves. Every department of the church of God today is suffering because of the lack of competent, sacrificing service? Why? Simply because too many of use are governed by the standard—How little? and not, How much? Because too many are selfish, indolent, and lovers of ease and rest. But certain it is that we cannot find that larger, fuller life; nor can we hope to be counted among those of whom Jesus said, "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you," if we refuse to have self die, and if we insist on saving ourselves.

I hang my head in shame and self-reproach when I see Henry Martin, only thirty and dying with tuberculosis, set foot on the soil of India, and when I hear him cry out, "Now let me burn out for God!" This man refused to save himself.

In the heart of Africa I see another matchless example, Stanley has been with David Livingstone four months, and now he must go back to civilization. Earnestly Stanley had been pleading with this superb veteran of God to return with him to his native England, to receive every honor and consideration that a proud nation could give to a great son. And in his pleadings he urged the fact that Livingstone was broken in health and aged. But how strange was Livingstone's reply. At four o'clock of the morning his friend was to go, this princely follower of his Lord went quietly and with reserve to Stanley, and placing in his hands his journal, maps, charts, and notes which would make the interior of Africa a known country, he said to Stanley, "God bless you," and turned back weary and sick to finish his task. And it was as much as to say, "My blessed Lord could not save others and also save himself, and I follow in his train." And again I turn from such a scene as this wondering if after all I am just playing at the Christian life. Oh, are we willing to die that we might have the larger life! Are we willing to die that we might save others! "He saved others; himself he cannot save." And to save himself was the remotest thought and concern in his sublime and matchless life.

"I had walked life's paths with easy tread,
Had followed where comfort and pleasure led;
And then by chance in a quiet place
I met my Master face to face.
With station and rank and wealth for a goal,
Much thought for the body, but none for the soul,
I had entered to win in life's mad race,
When I met my Master face to face.
I had built my castles and reared them high,
Till their towers had pierced the blue of the sky.
I had sworn to rule with iron mace,
When I met my Master face to face.
I met him, and knew him and blushed to see
That his eyes full of sorrow, were fixed on me;
And I faltered and fell at his feet that day,
While my castles melted and vanished away;
And I cried aloud: "O make me meet
To follow the marks of thy wounded feet."
My thought is now for the souls of men,
I have lost my life to find it again,
E'er since alone in that holy place
My Master and I stood, face to face."

KNOWLEDGE AND GRACE

The array of Solomon was very splendid and magnificent: he that had the peculiar treasure of kings and provinces, and so studiously affected pomp and gallantry, doubtless he had rich clothing, and the best made up that could be got, especially when he appeared in his glory on high days. And yet, let him dress himself as fine as he could, he comes far short of the beauty of the lilies, and a bed of tulips outshines him. Let us therefore be more ambitious of the wisdom of Solomon, in which he was outdone by none, wisdom to do our duty in our places, rather than the glory of Solomon, in which he was outdone by the lilies. Knowledge and grace are the perfection of man, not beauty.—Matthew Henry.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

(Article No. 6)

The Cities of the Plain

By Herbert H. Tay

There has been considerable discussion as to the location of the "Cities of the Plain." The traditional view is that they were located in the Jordan valley, somewhere north of the present northern shore of the Dead Sea. Of late there has been a growing tendency upon the part of Bible scholars and archaeologists to locate them in the plain south of the Dead Sea. The principal objection to the former view, is that the cities are not there. It is true that the Bible says that they were destroyed, but that does not mean annihilation, and it is very seldom that great cities have been destroyed, and absolutely no trace of their existence has remained. At any rate, since all efforts at trying to locate the sites of the five cities (Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar) in the northern valley of the Dead sea had failed, an expedition was organized to search for them in the valley to the south of the Salt Sea, and it was with this expedition that Brother Kent and I had the privilege of visiting that district.

It was upon Washington's birthday, February 22, 1924, that we arrived in the Ghor es Safieh, the fertile valley south of the Dead Sea. Mr. Carrol, a student of Yale Divinity School, and I set up the tents, while the leaders of our party visited the commander of a company of camel cavalry which was camped nearby, and paid their respects. The next day we called on the shiek of the village of denizens of that district—Ghowarni, as they are called by the Arabs, smoked the pipe of peace and hospitality, which in this case consisted of drinking coffee with them, and then were ready for business.

It must be confessed, that we had faint hope of identifying the sites of Sodom and Gomorrah, only slightly greater hope of finding Admah and Zebolim, so we concentrated our efforts upon the task of locating Zoar. One of the best pieces of evidence we had that it was in this district, although by no means the only evidence, was in the mosaic map of Palestine at Madeba. Madeba was a city of Moab, which existed from far back in Old Testament times. During the early centuries of the Christian Church, a basilica was erected there, in which there was a mosaic floor. At one place in this floor was a map of Palestine and also a plan of Jerusalem, worked in the mosaic. This map locates many of the villages mentioned in the Bible, and among them Zoar. The latter city is located at the south-east corner of the Dead Sea. Thus if we could locate Zoar, we knew from certain statements in the Bible, that we would not be far from Sodom and Gomorrah. Since we were the first party of archaeologists that had ever visited this territory, you can imagine that there was somewhat of a thrill, as we realized that we were treading upon virgin soil.

With Ghor es Safieh as a base, we went out in all directions searching for habitations of the twentieth century before Christ. We visited first, Jebel, Ubrush, suggested by General Kitchener as the site of Zoar, but for many reasons his suggestion must be dismissed. We next located the Zoar of the Madeba map, as Khirbet Sheik 'Isa, about a half mile from our camp. Dr. Albright, Mr. Sukenik and I carefully surveyed and charted it with transit and plane table. It was located on the edge of the plain, and the ruins rose about fifteen feet above the level of the surrounding territory. Yet the only evidences of civilization found, were those which pointed to the occupancy of a village here in ware and coins were found, but they were all earlier than Roman, Byzantine, and early Arabic times. Pottery, glass-ware and coins were found, but they were all not earlier than the fourth century A. D. In order to confirm our beliefs, we sank a shaft in the very center of the mound of ruins, and found no traces of a human habitation before Roman times. Thus the Zoar of the Madeba map was proved to be the city that existed in the Christian era, and was not upon the site of the Old Testament city of that name.

We continued to search the Ghor to the south of the Dead Sea, going as far south as Ghor el Feifeh, but to no avail. The remains of the cities of the plain were not to be found. True, there was abundant evidence of civilization in a bygone age. Near Khirbet Shiek 'Isa, were the ruins of an extensive sugar factory, called by the natives, Kasr et Tuba, or "castle, or house, of dobe bricks." The ruins of aqueducts which were built of stone, and the cultivation of sugar cane at the present time, spoke of the fertility and industry of this district in Roman and early Arabic times. Though the trees have long ago disappeared, yet we saw at Ghor el Feifeh, the well preserved ruins of an olive press. The natives told us that the olive trees had disappeared, because they had been bewitched by a magician.

Failing to find any trace of patriarchal civilization in this region, we moved our camp to a point almost half-way up the east side of the Dead Sea. Here we camped alongside that great peninsula of land that juts out into the Sea from this point, which the Arabs appropriately called the Lisan, or "tongue." We covered the ground thoroughly here for two or three days, and failed to find any trace of that which we sought. We made a trip by motor-boat to Jebel Usdum, a mountain that is composed almost entirely of salt. This is really a phenomenon, being a hill about five or six miles long, and five to eight hundred feet high, that is a great mass of rock and crystal salt. Great salt deposits are to be found at other places around the Dead Sea, but none that are so extensive as this. Its name is particularly suggestive, sounding a great deal like Sodom, and after looking upon the great salt spires of this mountain, we invariably "remember Lot's wife."

However, our search was not rewarded here, except for the novelty of the place, and we returned to our camp late at night, feeling that our expedition had not been a rousing success. But the very next day, a discovery was made, which was worth the entire trip. Pere Mallon was browsing about on the hills above our camp, looking for some signs of flint implements, of which he was finding several, and came upon a grave that had been broken open, and saw some pottery lying about. He supposed that it was an Arab grave of recent date, and that the pottery was Arabic, nevertheless he brought some of it to camp, and it was displayed at the evening consultation. When Dr. Albright saw it, he seized a piece, looked at it more closely, and gave a shout of exultation. Instead of being pottery of recent Arabic manufacture, it came from the time of the early and middle Bronze Ages, that is, from about five hundred years before the time of Abraham, up until his day. The archaeologists of the party could hardly restrain themselves from going up immediately and making further search. But their better judgment induced them to wait till the morning, when we all might go up and investigate more closely. Could it be that we had at last discovered the site of Zoar? Or perhaps it was Sodom or Gomorrah itself! A multitude of conflicting thoughts and emotions surged through our minds that night, as we impatiently waited for the coming day.

We started early the next morning, with surveying instruments, sacks for the pottery, and various other articles necessary for a thorough examination of the site. We found scores—even hundreds of flint artifacts lying all over the ground. We made a large collection, and found that they were divided into two classes. Those which were used as knives, and those which were classified as "scrapers." Our collection was composed principally of the former, and they showed the same design as those found in Jericho, Taanach and Megiddo, and hence confirmed our supposition that we had located a habitation of the time of Abraham. We found several graves, with samples of pottery practically intact, and the pottery again conformed to the samples that had been brought in on the previous day. Thus we were sure, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that we were standing upon the sight of a village that existed in the days of Sodom and Gomorrah.

We were somewhat disappointed however, to find that the site had not been occupied by cities in succeeding generations. From all appearances there has been but one city upon this site, and it did not bear evidences of having been destroyed by fire and brimstone. The only solution at which we could arrive was that this was the location of a "Gilgal" or shrine for the practice of heathen religious rites. The proximity of this settlement to the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah supplies all we need to imagine the kind of worship that was carried on there. Several circles of stone, with a large upright pillar in the center, such as were found on the "high place" at Gezer, confirmed our belief that this was a sanctuary for the practice of heathen rites. One thing regarding it is very significant. From all evidences it ceased to be used at just the time the Bible indicates that the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah took place. Is not this striking proof of the accuracy of the Biblical narrative? Every soul in Sodom and Gomorrah was destroyed, and none were left to perpetuate the unnamable ceremonies that were held here.

But the question remains—where are the cities of the plain? There can be but one answer. They are under the waters of the Dead Sea. Nor is this a wild guess. We know that the ruins of the cities existed in New Testament times. Strabo says, "We are even told that the ruins of their metropolis, Sodom, still exist, with a circumference of sixty stadia." Josephus also remarks that "traces of the heavenly fire, and vestiges of the five cities are still to be seen there." Yet these ruins are not to be found today. But here historians again come to our assistance. They tell us that the surface of the Dead Sea is rising continually. We are told that less than a century ago, one could walk from the Lisan to the western shore of the Dead Sea on dry land. At the time of the division of the land under Joshua, Beth-Hoagla was situated on the northern shore of the Dead Sea, but the ruins today are six miles from the sea. This is the reason. The Jordan river has been carrying down sediment continually, and filling in the northern end of the Dead Sea. This of course would, cause the water to rise, there being no outlet. But when it rose to the top of its basin, it would naturally run over the edge. This is exactly what took place. The Dead Sea, south of the Lisan has been formed in the past few generations, and has an average depth of twelve feet. There can be no doubt but that the plain under this shallow part of the Sea was once the fertile valley in which the Cities of the Plain were located, and was "as the garden of God, before the Lord destroyed the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah."

The Church and the Religious Press

By Bishop James Cannon, Jr.

(Part of an address at the annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches).

the young stories with a distinct moral tendency and impulse.

A vigorous religious press is needed:

First. To furnish an accurate record of religious and church news. It is true that the secular press is giving more space to religious matters than in former years, but the average reporter is not qualified either by training or by comprehension to give careful and adequate news of the church. The desire to make a headline or to create some special interest is so strong that accuracy is subordinated to color. Moreover, few secular papers will give as full a record of church news as those interested in church work should have.

Second. A religious press is needed to furnish an interpretation of the life in the world about us from the Christian standpoint. This does not imply that the secular press does not frequently give a proper interpretation of life. But it does imply that men who themselves are not Christians and who do not look at matters from the Christian standpoint cannot interpret the events of everyday life as they should be interpreted. No more important service is rendered by the religious press than the review of current happenings in the world and the discussion of the attitude of the church with reference to them.

Third. The church press furnishes a necessary medium for presenting and advocating policies and programs of the churches as indicated by assemblies, conferences, conventions and church boards. The secular press could not, even if it would, properly occupy this field. The general public is not sufficiently interested in the policies and programs of the denominations to justify the secular papers in furnishing space for such matters. Furthermore, the religious press furnishes the space and the medium for the exchange of opinions among church leaders on all the varying phases of the Christian life.

Fourth. The religious press is needed for the publication of articles of a denominational nature. Many people get the best of their devotional reading from the pages of the church press. Especially in the rural sections of the country is the religious paper a great help in presenting to

For these and other reasons, the church press is a necessity. But it is a lamentable fact that it is exceedingly difficult to pay the necessary running expenses of a well edited and well printed church paper. Few indeed of the church papers of the present day are meeting their expenses by receipts from advertising and subscribers. The writer was the editor of a denominational church paper for twenty-five years, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that he was able to pay the current expenses out of the current receipts, and it was done only by the restriction of the usefulness of the paper because of inability to pay for a sufficient staff of workers and contributed articles.

The weekly church paper is as great a necessity for the maintenance and development of the work of the church as are the publications of the Sunday School Boards, the Church Extension Boards, the Mission Boards, the Social Service and Temperance Boards and other special literature necessary for the carrying on of the work of the great agencies of the church. The Conferences, Assemblies and Boards recognize the necessity for large appropriations for the preparation and distribution of various kinds of literature in the homes of the members of the church. Each denomination should have a Board of Christian Literature which should consider the needs of the church for high-class weekly, monthly and quarterly publications, and such Boards should be given the authority to subsidize all publications which such Boards may deem necessary for the work of the churches. Either the endowment of the church press, or a yearly apportionment of such amounts as may be necessary to guarantee an adequate church press service would seem to furnish a sensible, if not indeed the only, solution of the present problem.

Certainly, this question is worthy of the most careful study by our church leadership, and if the Federal Council of Churches might perform a very useful service if its Research Department should under the direction of the Administrative Committee make a thorough survey of the church press of the nation and present the facts as they exist today.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Christian's Apparel

By D. M. Panton, B. A., Editor of "Dawn"

Clothes separate men; there are national costumes which sharply distinguish an Arab, a North American Indian, a European. So they reveal classes. The sexes, kings, the poor, infants are dressed differently. Separate uniforms will even sever among people born in the same class: as soldiers, sailors, priests, judges, nurses. So the dress can also disclose the character: the showy, the miserly, the orderly, the slovenly. It is well expressed in our double use of the word "habit." Habit—like a "riding habit"—may express what a man wears materially; and it also expresses what a man wears in character—that clothing of mind and soul which is action; for our habits are all that men ever see, or ever will see, of our souls.

Now Paul discloses that for the children of God there is a suited livery, the uniform of a class. "Put on, Therefore"—because all other distinctions have been lost in that of Christian, and because you have become a "peculiar people" requiring a peculiar costume—"as God's elect, holy, beloved" (Col. 3:12): being the new man, put on the new costume. It is possible to "adorn the doctrine of God" by the ornaments we assume; and as a judge is known by his ermine, or a soldier by his khaki, so we are to be recognized as Christians by the "habits" we wear. As "elect, holy, beloved," all of us, stripped of the old "filthy rags," are already clothed in the priestly robes of white—the imputed righteousness of our Lord: now, spiritually, we are to "put on" the High Priest's robes "for glory and for beauty"—consecrated soul. And what makes it so fearfully important for us all is, that this is the "court dress," the robing for blue and white and purple and scarlet—the wardrobe of the the levee, without which, by court etiquette, it is impossible to appear unashamed in the Palace of the King.

So Paul now fingers a chest-full of soft silks and exquisite gowns—fawns and dove-hues and greys—out of which he draws seven gently-colored but splendidly wearing fabrics. "Put on (1) a heart of compassion"—not a head of knowledge, but a soul of mercy. How lovely it is that our beauty begins with pity! Christianity created the hospitals, the asylums, the orphanages; and there is nothing everybody needs more from anybody else than an infinite compassion. Not suspicion, but pity; not criticism, but pity; not analysis of evil, but pity; to feel the sorrows of others is to fill the soul with an infinite compassion, and the life with an infinite tact. "Put on (2) kindness." Our word "kindness" comes from "kin," "kindred"; the gracious interplay of love which nature has planted in the family, grace is to establish in our wider, holier kith and kin. "Easiness to be used" is the meaning of the original; we are to be obliging in our general demeanor. "Put on (3) humility." Humility is not an undue self-depreciation; but an accurate estimate of ourselves, and a generous estimate of the talents and character of other people. Lowliness is the opposite of haughtiness and conceit. "Put on (4) meekness." "Meekness is love at school, at the Savior's school. It is the disciple learning to know himself, to fear, distrust, and abhor himself. It is the disciple practising the sweet but self-emptying lesson of putting on the Lord Jesus, and finding all our righteousness in that righteous Other. It is the disciple learning the defects of his own character, and taking hints from hostile as well as friendly critics, for the sweetening of his temper, and the amelioration of his character. It is the loving Christian at his Savior's feet, learning from him who is meek and lowly, and finding rest to his own soul" (James Hamilton, D.D.). "Put on (5) long-suffering." No church grace is more essential; ascribed to God throughout the whole Bible, long-suffering gives to the most backward member a chance of yet becoming a foremost saint. Longsuffering suspends judgment in doubtful cases, being exceedingly chary of final censures: it is the opposite of ruthlessness, harshness, overbearingness: it will be silent under misunderstanding, and even insult, with a far-sighted wisdom. A Christ-like spirit always hails incipient repentance, and never exacts an unreasonable humiliation.

The Apostle now selects—shall I say?—a bright scarlet, like a choir-boy's cassock below the white: namely, a blood-cleansed pardon of all offenses on the ground of our own pardon. (6) "Forbearing one another"—forbearing with one another (Govett): 'one another'; for forbearance must always be mutual, as each of us has something—in manner or doctrine, or habit, or association—that calls for forbearance. Forbearance is a refusal to take action when we have a perfect right to do so. "And (7) forgiving each other"—

Our Worship Program

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE UNFORGIVING MAN—Matt. 18:21-35.

Nothing is more important to the followers of Christ than the forgiving spirit, it lies at the foundation of his eternal welfare. But it is hard always to show the forgiving spirit, next to impossible, in fact, unless one's heart is filled with the love and magnanimity of God.

TUESDAY

THE INTEGRITY OF THE HOME—Matt. 19:1-12.

"The centre of power for building up a country in virtue, religion and prosperity lies in the home" (Peloubet). Another has said, "The Star of Bethlehem for morals and religion stands over the home."

WEDNESDAY

CHRIST'S ESTIMATE OF CHILDHOOD—Matt. 19:13-15.

In the midst of the gravity and dignity of our spiritual interests and activities, we are inclined to push the children in the background, but Jesus gave them first place and recognized their needs as supreme.

THURSDAY

WHEN WEALTH HINDERS—Matt. 19:16-23.

Wealth rightly regarded and rightly used is a blessing, but when it becomes the desire of one's life and stands between God and a life of complete surrender it is a menace and becomes a seal to life's doom.

FRIDAY

IMPOVERISHING WEALTH AND ENRICHING POVERTY—Matt. 19:23-30.

Jesus' warning to the man with eyes centered on riches and his assurance to the disciples who had sacrificed all for his sake remind us of the Proverb (11:24) which says, "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

SATURDAY

THE PRINCIPLE OF REWARDS—Matt. 20:1-16.

Many first in service and hardship will receive least reward and many least in quantity and sacrifice of service will receive greatest reward, for not the quantity but the spirit in which the work is done determines the reward.

SUNDAY

JESUS FORETELLS HIS DEATH—Matt. 20:17-19.

The disciples do not understand Jesus's resolutions in going to Jerusalem in the face of the bitter situation; they follow reluctantly. Jesus wants their understanding sympathy, so tells them again more definitely and plainly than before of what they may expect. Still they do not grasp it. And the cross remains to this day very much of a stumbling-block.—G. S. B.

"each other," for mutual offences are pretty sure to come—"if any have a complaint—a ground of blame, a just cause of complaint—"against any"—on church or world—"even as"—just as—"the Lord forgave you, so also do ye": so that forgiving, as it is the hardest, so it is the most Christlike of the virtues. The ground of our forgiving is decisive and eternal. Because pardoned, we are to pardon: within and without the church, we shall have just grounds of complaint, yet pardon is obligatory because our brothers' offences dwindle into nothing to those which God forgave in us. How often do we expect God to forgive us? Then how often are we to forgive our brother? Clemency is the royal prerogative, the privilege of kings: the right to pardon—though, in our case, without the condescension of it—reveals that we have been born again in the Imperial Purple; and the Cross has made it possible for us to forgive everybody, everything.

So finally, the Apostles select the girdle or cineture—a silken sash, I am sure, of heavenly blue—which, in oriental lands, both braces and beautifies the figure, and binds into one the flowing robes. "And above all these things"—outside them, and still costlier—"put on love, which is the bond"—the belt that braces and binds and balances—"of perfectness"—the cohesion of all grace, and the completion of all character. Love is what brings the whole Church, and the whole individual life, into harmony; mercy and kindness, lowliness and pardon are separate graces; but love embraces them all: and love will supply the defects which we all feel in our possession of the other seven; a really loving and lovable temper is a blue overall that will compensate for any missing article in the wardrobe. As the outermost garment is that which meets all eyes and is always the most costly and the most beautiful, so our most conspicuous uniform and our final coronation robe is Love.

The Apostle closes by showing what atmosphere is created in a Throne Room where the Court Dress is already worn; a final exhortation to unity and love in the body catholic, "God's elect, holy, beloved." "And let the peace of Christ"—that rich legacy he bequeathed, in dying, to every child of God—"rule"—not simply exist there, as a secret and feeble grace, but hold absolute sway—"in your hearts"—even though disturbed by mental doubts, or church dissensions, or raging world-wars outside, peace can have its empire in the soul—"to the which also"—the unbroken peace of a loving brotherhood—"ye were called in one body: and be ye thankful." God has been our Peacemaker, and he dwells supremely in a body of peacemakers, and heart-peace is one secret of a steady character and a heavenly calm. "My peace I leave with you: let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Possession vs. Profession

By Gladys Spice

OUR SCRIPTURE

Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith: prove your own selves. Know ye not that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates (II Cor. 13:5)? If ye then be risen with Christ seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God (Col. 3:1-3). And whatsoever ye do in word or deed do all in the name of the Lord Jesus (Col. 3:17). Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth but lay up for yourself treasure in heaven for where your treasure is there is your heart also (Matt. 6:19-21). Wherefore take unto you the whole armour of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the Gospel of Peace; above all taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of Salvation and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God (Eph. 6:13-17). For the word of God is quick and powerful and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit and the joints and marrow and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart (Heb. 4:12) Go ye therefore teaching all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them whatsoever things I have commanded you and lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world (Matt. 28:19-20). Take no thought saying what shall we eat, or what shall we drink, or wherewithal shall we be clothed but seek ye first the kingdom of God and its' righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you (Matt. 6:31-33). My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory (Phil. 4:19).

"OUR MEDITATION"

Let us pause a moment in our activities and really examine ourselves. As a "possessing" Christian we will know that Christ is in us and that we are in Christ. You ask, "How do we know?" 1 John 3:14 tells us that we know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. Again 1 John 3:23-24 says—"And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another and he that keepeth these commandments dwelleth in him and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us."

Then as a "possessing" Christian (a soul that has been born again) we will know, because the things of the world (the things we once loved) we now hate. 1 John 2:15-17—"Love not the world, neither the things of the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life (picture these vices in life before Christ is accepted) is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away and the lust thereof; BUT HE THAT DOETH THE WILL OF GOD ABIDETH FOREVER."

Before Christ comes in we wonder what would be left if we would give up all the worldly things, but praise God! he never takes away but what he returns an hundredfold. Mark 10:29-30—"And Jesus answered and said, Verily I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife or children, or lands, FOR MY SAKE AND THE GOSPELS, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time . . . and in the world to come, eternal life." Isn't that a precious promise? And we know it is true because many have tried him and we all know He NEVER FAILS.

As "possessing" Christians we will not be satisfied to enjoy salvation alone but will have a deep desire to witness for him—to become a soul winner. James 5:19-20—"Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth and one convert him; let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall hide a multitude of sins." He that winneth souls is wise.

Now we will try to examine a "professing" Christian's life. He will have no change of heart. His interests will still lie in seeking worldly amusements. He has not learned that we cannot serve God and mammon. He is embarrassed and bored when in the company of spiritual people. He gets enough church (as he says) in church. He would rather lie in bed on Sunday morning than get up and attend the church service and serve where needed. He thinks attending a few services every so often will pave his way to heaven. Let us remember that the way to Hell is paved with Good Intentions. His Bible is "red" only on the edges. He invariably finds an excuse for not attending the mid-week prayer meeting—too cold, too hot, bad health, company (and naturally they would not care to go along for that is the type of companions he chooses). Oh, there are many excuses a "professing" Christian can find, and always does find—but he forgets that God demands "reasons" and not "excuses." No doubt some are wondering why the writer has used the term "Xian" when referring to the "professor". For the simple reason that he has crossed the very name of Christ out of his "profession." Instead of being blessed with Christianity he is burdened with Churehianity.

However, we have the comforting promise that if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness (1 John 1:9), but we should not forget that Jesus said, "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God."

OUR PRAYERS

Oh God, we come to thee, "professors and possessors", knowing that all have sinned and come short of the glory of God, therefore we confess to thee our daily trespasses, knowing that thou wilt forgive us. Help us to live that we can say to others, without fear of any going astray, Be thou followers of me even as I also am of Christ. In Jesus' Name. Amen.

Jesus Dies and Rises from the Dead

Scripture Lesson—John 18:1 to 20:23.

Printed Text—John 19:23-30; 20:19, 20.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 16:5-11.

Golden Text—Therefore doth the Father love me because I lay down my life that I may take it again.—John 10:17.

THE TRIAL

"Jesus Christ was not accorded a hearing by a single unbiased tribunal, nor before one unprejudiced judge, nor any competent authority. The judges, the jury and the people all knew him to be an innocent man; notwithstanding, they rose en masse, and hurled him to doom and death." "His judges and foes were all swayed by passion and self-interest, and were ready to make travesty of justice."

THE BURIAL

Joseph of Arimathea, probably the modern modern hill village of Beit-Rima, thirteen miles east-northeast of Lydda,—a secret disciple of Jesus, a "rich man" (Matthew), "a good man and a righteous" (Luke), "who was looking for the kingdom of God" (Luke) which Jesus had preached, and "a counsellor of honorable estate" (Mark), that is, a member of the Sanhedrin who had "not consented" (Luke) to the verdict of the Sanhedrin condemning Jesus, went "boldly" (Mark) to Pilate, and asked for the body of Jesus. "He is no longer a secret disciple. The cross transfigures cowards into heroes." "It was no light matter Joseph had undertaken; for to take part in a burial, at any time, would defile him for seven days, and make everything unclean which he touched (Num. 19:11; Hag. 2:13); and to do so now involved his seclusion through the whole Passover week, with all its holy observances and rejoicings." Joseph, however, did not flinch, but even used for burial "his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock" (Matthew).

CENTRAL EVENT OF HISTORY

The great central event in the history of the world is the coming of Jesus Christ into the world, including his life, his death and his resurrection. The centuries circle around his personality. As all the stars of heaven are said to be moving around the star Arcturus in the Pleiades, so all the Bible and all history move around the cross of Christ as their center. "The cross of Jesus must ever remain the one bright center of all our hopes and all our songs," of our love, of all good influences, of heaven itself. "Waterloo," says Victor Hugo, "is the change of front of the universe." Nearer truth is this: Calvary is the change of front of the universe."—Hnrlbut. "Christ's tomb was the grave of the old world and the cradle of the new."—Lamar-tine. The cross is the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God. It resembles the mystic tree Ygdrasil, under whose roots are fountains of wonderful virtues; whose branches spread over the whole world and reach above the heavens and drop honey. As on the cross on the mountain of Oberammer-gan is always in sight, wherever one may walk or live, so always from every part of the world is seen the cross of Christ. It shines like the lighted cross in the city of New York—a cross of shining stars in the heavens, above the lights and sounds of the busy city below.

GLAD WHEN THEY SAW HIM

"If there was a moment of intense, agonizing excitement, you might have fancied it would have been that. There is no excitement. There is perfect quietness in them all; in him who had forsaken the Master, in him who had denied him. He has spoken peace to them, and they are at peace. The beloved disciple can only describe what he felt, what all felt, in the simplest, calmest words." Those words we may well apply to ourselves.

PROOFS OF THE RESURRECTION

"I have been used for many years to study the history of other times, and to examine and weigh the evidences of those who have written about them; and I know of no one fact in the history of mankind which is proved by better and fuller evidence of every sort, to the mind of a fair inquirer, than that Christ died and rose again from the dead."—Dr. Arnold. So Dr. Lyman Abbott: "The resurrection of Jesus is the best-attested fact in history."

The transforming of the disciples—originally but common men—into apostles, who changed the face of the world, through the gift of the Holy Spirit, is a proof.

The very existence of the Christian church is a proof of the resurrection of Jesus. "Faith in mere visions or phantoms may produce phantoms, but not such a phenomenon as the Christian church, the greatest fact and the mightiest institution in the history of the world."—Pres. Woolsey.

The statement of his enemies contradicts itself (Matt. 28:11-15). "His disciples came by night, and stole him away while we slept." (1) Why should his disciples who did not expect a resurrection steal him from the sepulcher of Joseph, a friend? (2) How could Galilean peasants remove the sealed stone and carry away the body without waking the Roman guard? (3) Would these peasants, if they had done this, have risked detection by taking off the grave clothes and carefully folding them? (Luke 24:12). (4) If the soldiers had slept on guard, would they have been exposed and protected by the Jewish rulers?—Illustrated Quarterly.

RENDERING HELP TO SOUTH AMERICA

A Truly Great Sunday School Convention in Korea

Just a few items have been received at the office of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York, concerning the National Sunday School Convention in Korea. That Convention was held in October under the general leadership of Rev. J. G. Holderoft, D.D., Secretary for Korea, with offices recently moved from Pyongyang to Seoul. The paid enrollment was 1945 and the actual attendance over 2,200. No less than nine churches were required to care for the crowds. Even in their optimism, and there is an abundance in Korea, plans were made to entertain only 1000 and the committee declared they were "about swamped." The treasurer, Rev. Charles Allen Clark, D.D., wrote, "It was the greatest religious Christian assembly ever held in Korea and will do much for Sunday schools throughout the land." Plans are now being made for regional conventions in different parts of the country that the influence from the great gathering in Seoul may be effective in all sections. The one in Pyongyang will take place from December 29 to January 5. Among the speakers in Seoul were Rev. E. G. Tewksbury, of Shanghai, and Horace E. Coleman, of Tokyo, both of whom are field representatives of the World's Association in the respective countries.

Some A. B. C's of Christian Endeavor

The following verses, published in the Christian Endeavor World, were sent to that paper by Secretary Hicks of the Connecticut Christian Endeavor Union, who obtained them from a paper entitled "The C. E. Mour Record," published every month by the Seymour (Connecticut) Congregational Endeavorers. It is produced by a committee of two, the committee alternating between the boys and the girls.

Some A. B. C's of Christian Endeavor

- A for Active Christian Endeavorers Training to serve the Lord;
- B for Bible-reading
That we may know our God.
- C for Christ and the church he gave,
Our duty to them is clear;
- D then Determination,
Let temptations hold no fear.
- E means Earnest Endeavor;
Our best is but to try.
- F Friendliness towards others;
Good friends we cannot buy.
- G of course, means Giving,
Giving as Jesus gave,
- H for Honesty in all things,
A good name is best to have.
- I we're sure, means high Ideals,
For without them, alas! we know
- J would not stand for Joy,
As through this world we go.
- K must stand for Kindnesses,
The little things of each day.
- L for Love of Learning
From others the better way.
- M means Money and Missions,
They often our selfishness prove.
- N Neighbors of other races,
For these, Jesus said, we should love.
- O says, "Seize Opportunity,"
"Cleave to that which is good."
- P Means Practise Praying
And get acquainted with God.
- Q is for the Quiet Hours,
To be alone and think.
- R for a kind of Religion
Which teaches us how to think.
- S is for Service rendered,
The working of God through man.
- T tell the Truth at all times,
And not say "can't" but "can."
- U for Unity of Purpose
Which keeps us banded together.
- V for Victors over wrong,
The result of working together.
- W the Wisdom all would seek
Who strive to do his will.
- X we'll ask for eXtra strength,
With trust, our pledge fulfil.
- Y for the Youth of our country
Who are not found in C. E.
- Z for the Zeal of those who are Determined that all shall be.

Our bodies being temples of God, how careful we should be to keep them clean and wholesome—a fit dwelling-place for him,

The God of War

By C. L. Plank

Why should the god of war survive
To chill us with sudden dread?
Why should anger and hate still live
When they should be cold and dead?

Do we weep for our fellow men
When they have sorrows to bear?
Do we sympathize and pity them then
When sunk in the depths of despair?

Why do we fight, when it's sweeter to live
And love in a land of peace?
Why do we withhold when we should give
Our help that war and strife might cease?

Are we the cause of the war god grim
Being alive and at large today?
Out of our hearts then, let us cast him,
And let the God of Peace hold sway.

The god of war is nourished by hate,
By envy and malice and greed;
If we cast him out, 'twill be his fate
To have nothing on which to feed.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Radio Messages from the Land of Christ. Isaiah 54:13

(NOTE—Miss Haun says she is sorry the Junior Notes for last week failed to reach us, but that she wrote them and mailed them early. So they were evidently lost. We are sorry too, because we find some of our readers look forward from week to week for these interesting Bible stories. Miss Haun is doing a good work for the Juniors.—Editor.)

Hello, Junior Christian Endeavorers of America: I have a message for you. I am a little girl, eleven years old. My name is Martha and my home is far away from yours. It is on the other side of the world from you but I live in a town that you have often heard about. It is called Jerusalem. I am glad I can talk over the Radio to you for I like to talk to other girls and boys who are near my own age.

I am going to tell you how I came into the city of Jerusalem. It was in the country of Judea quite a distance from this city when I was born. During the war, I lost my parents and became a refugee in a little town. Just about a year ago I was transferred with a group of other children. We were so interested and anxious to see our new home in the city. As we drew near to the town we could see the great wall with its gates. Jerusalem is built on a hill and we could see it for a long time before we started to wind along the road which passes along the wall of the city. The wall is very high. Finally we came to one of the great gates. There we had to wait for quite a little while before we could go through. The streets of this city are very narrow. In some places where the houses are built right up to the edge of the street they are connected across the street. That is, the third stories of the buildings are built right across right above the street. This makes the streets very dark.

After we had gone over quite a distance of these narrow streets we came to a big square building. Like nearly all the houses that we saw it was built right against the edge of the street. This was not a high building. It was only two stories and very plain. We were soon inside of it, seeing the other children who were there. They took us about the house. It was, and still is, very scantily furnished. There were a number of beds for the children. In one room there were a lot of couches all around the edge to sit on in the day time. At night these were used for beds. One thing about this house that is quite different from the houses in America which some of the American Relief Workers have told me about, is the roof. It is flat and has a railing around it. Whenever the weather is nice we are allowed to go there part of the day to play. Our roof is big and we have lots of fun playing there.

One of the nicest things that has happened to me since I have been in this refugee home for children, is learning about Jesus. I think that it is strange that you children in America are taught more about Jesus than a lot of children right here in the country where Jesus lived. I think that my parents were Christians, but I do not know much about them, for I was very small when they died. We have Sunday school right here in our home. We like to ask questions and learn a lot about how to live Christian lives. Our teachers whom you have sent us from over there in that Big America, are so nice to us. Some of us suffered a lot from hunger and lack of proper clothing until food and clothes were sent us from your land. The time that we suffered most was during the war and for the first few years after it. Some of the little folks who were brought here during the war have gotten big enough to take care of themselves and have been taught trades so that they can go out and earn a living.

The other day all of us were taken in a body to see the wailing place of the Jews. Did you ever hear of that? It is an extremely high wall made of huge stones. At all hours of the day the Jews come to this place and pray for the rebuilding of their city, Jerusalem. We felt so sorry for them. They seemed so sad and earnest. If they believed in Jesus as we do they would be happier, I think. I wish that you could send missionaries to help them like you sent helpers to us. There are a lot of people in this land that was once Jesus' home who need the happiness which belief in Jesus gives. There are many poor people in Jerusalem and the country about.

After One Year of Service

Rio Cuarto, Argentina, Feb. 19, 1926.

Dear Friends:

These are days full of memories, for it is just a year since I came to the land of the Southern Cross, and perhaps as good a way to celebrate as any will be to write a letter to the Evangelist family.

Perhaps you think it has taken me a long time to get started, but maybe since a start is made you may hear from me oftener. Several times letters have been begun, but for various reasons they were never finished.

After even one year things look quite different from what they do at first sight. I think it might not be a bad thing for all concerned if the folks at home would give new missionaries a year to think in terms of a foreign land, before expressing themselves. Certainly one's judgment is not too mature then, but we might save considerable snap-judgment.

However, since about all the new missionary does, that makes any showing, is to write, naturally he feels he owes that to you or you would think he is not earning his salary. Since I receive no salary I felt less of that sort of obligation.

Perhaps I came with what will seem to many a low standard or ideal of missionary accomplishment. Certainly I had no idea of setting this part of the world on fire, never having succeeded nor even tried to do that at home. I knew there was work to be done and that laborers were few, whereas at home they were many; that I would go while many, just as willing and more capable could not; so I came to do my bit, even as I tried to do my bit at home, with the drawback, however of having to speak a new language.

I did not come expecting to find things exactly to my liking, nor that I should find either work or workers perfect. Neither did I come to find flaws either big or little in the work and workers. I expected to find an earnest band of Christians doing their best to make known the Gospel of our Lord and Savior, and in this I was not disappointed. I came to help in any way I might be able, and having a rather vague notion as to what that might be. I have not reached middle age without learning that human nature is pretty much like a mirror and reflects back very much what you present before it. And already I have proved to my own satisfaction, at least, that the people here are very responsive to the love shown them, even as they are very susceptible to any feeling of superiority manifested. I find myself loving some of the ones that at first seemed "impossible." One soon learns to think little of smells and such things when the heart is clean and the spirit of the Christ is manifest.

Now a year has gone and I can truly say, with much thanksgiving, that never for a moment have I regretted coming. It has been a year full of new experiences, new duties, new ways of expressing myself, new customs, new weather conditions (no small thing for one used to Sunny California), new friends, new heartaches, but also new joy.

Already I see the reason for many of the things that at first seemed so strange in the customs and characteristics of the people. Usually, I suspect, that when a nation has a certain custom there is a reason back of it, and we are not wasting our time trying to change their customs. Given a changed heart, whether here or at home and the customs will adjust themselves, and only the grace of God will make either an Argentine or a Yankee change evil customs. The Argentine takes its mate and the U. S. its ice cream sodas, and what matter? But in both lands it takes the grace of God to make a man stop his meanness.

Results may be slow in this land but we new-comers are surely reaping the benefits of the work of those who have been longer on the field, for of persecution there is none; neither is there the old-time fanaticism.

Formerly the work here in the Argentine, as in many other lands, was confined to the larger cities. Today in many of the smaller towns there are little groups of believers who gather in some little "Mission Evangelica." Besides through the work of our own and other Bible coaches, etc., the Gospel is being read in many homes throughout the land. Should the call ring out, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh!" doubtless in these towns and villages there would be someone to answer, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus"; but in so many, many towns there is no one to teach the people and, "How shall they hear without a preacher?" And, "How shall they preach except they be sent?" And, "How shall they be sent when the funds in the missionary treasury are hardly sufficient to last from one

Easter to another? And, How can the work be extended when the Board must send out the word "Cut expenses wherever possible. Funds very low"? And, How can you pray the Lord to send out MORE laborers when the funds will hardly care for the present ones? And, How shall we appear before him unashamed if we have failed to do what we could to send where we could not go?

Workers are ready and waiting to be sent out. Won't you do all in your power to give them the chance to have the joy of service here. In the day of his appearing, how glad you will be for that thing you decided not to buy in order that the money might go to the Easter offering.

Do you know the story of the beggar, who each day sat beside the roadside asking alms of the passer-by? Then one day the wonderful news came that the king was to pass that way. How happy he was! Would not a king give a wonderful gift?

At last he heard the sound of the approaching cortege and as the king passed he presented his little dish, containing a few grains of corn, that had been given him, petitioning alms. But—Said the king, "I am thy king, and it were fitting that thou give thy king a gift."

Surprised, crestfallen, he dared not refuse, so selecting the tiniest grain of corn from the dish he presented it and the king went on his way.

Meditating in angry disappointment the beggar glanced down at the pan with its pitifully small hoard of grain, and behold! There was a tiny grain of purest gold, the exact size and shape of the grain of corn he had given the king.

Then, said he "Oh, that I had given ALL to my king!"

Yours in his service,
 JOHANNA NIELSEN.

New Challenges in the African Field

"The Sky-Parlor, Long Beach, Calif..

March 10, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

A new station has been opened in Africa, among the Banda Tribe. These people are about seven hours' journey (as the Ford truck flies) northeast of Yalouki, on the new auto road that the Government is about completing. It is at this station that our bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey B. Sheldon, expect to set up their housekeeping ("That Office Secretary" months ago sent in Miss Cope's order to Montgomery Ward for "1 rolling pin.") But let us get back to business, and away from romance!

This will be our third station in Africa, and even before it is opened, the Field Council over there writes and pleads for permission to open a fourth.

Mr. Hathaway has sent us a hand-made map of the district over there. There was a peculiar mirror-maze of red-ink crosses on that map, tracking their peculiar way in circles, loops and by-paths. "That Office Secretary" being of an inquisitive nature, counted these crosses and there were exactly 91 of them. Now, what do you suppose they mean? Mr. Hathaway explains that they mark the journeys of your missionaries, and the places at which they have stopped and preached the Gospel—91 places, over miles and miles of travel! That explains why they are pleading for little chapel buildings along the way. As it now is, the missionaries preach from the Ford truck, while the natives stand and listen, out in the torrid sun.

Then, there was another interesting thing brought out in the minutes of their Field Council meeting. The missionaries have resolved to teach the natives to use the military salute as a greeting in place of the hand-shake. Why? As a preventive in the spread of diseases! Leprosy is raising its ugly head over there among the natives,—not to mention other loathsome diseases with which your missionaries come in personal contact daily. That brings up another plea—they want to build a Leper Asylum.

All these wants are truly needs, and are necessary to the health and well-being not only of the natives, but of your own missionaries themselves.

Are you equal to the challenge? The third and the fourth stations, the chapels, the Leper Asylum. Are you supporting your missionaries conscientiously and in such a way that your Lord will some day say to you, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant!" The Easter Offering for Foreign Missions will be the thermometer that will tell whether you are at fever heat in your love for the Master.

Yours in the Master's Service,
THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

TURLOCK TO MARTINSBURG

It has been so long since we have reported through the Evangelist, that we scarcely know where to begin. It might be well to say we closed a four year pastorate at Turlock, California on the last day of August and left on the seventh of September, touring South and East over the Santa Fee trail into Kingman, Kansas, where we spent a few weeks visiting my mother and two sisters. From there we came to South Bend where Mrs. Cook's people live and spent several weeks there.

No, Turlock, we have not forgotten you, and all those gifts, greetings, good wishes, and prayers that accompanied us on our trip. Perhaps you would be glad to know that your gifts in money, as you brought or sent them, individually amounted almost to one hundred dollars, aside from the various other gifts you gave at our parting. We sorrow with you (but not as those who have no hope) at the passing of our dear Brother Doty. We know that his place in the church will be greatly missed, and yet we are assured that his joy has increased. No, we have not forgotten you and are holding you up before the throne of grace.

We arrived in Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, on December first, where we found a hearty welcome awaiting us. We stayed in the homes of Brother J. E. Dilling and Brother Emmanuel Eversole for a few days while they were finishing some work on the parsonage. The work in the parsonage was so extensive, it was almost like moving into a new parsonage. I think the church spent about five hundred dollars in all. They papered the house throughout, made a few changes, and refinished the wood-work, put up new blinds, etc. The young ladies Sunday school class purchased and paid for the installing of a new furnace, which has proved a great comfort these cold winter months. Scarcely were we located in our new home, until we were visited with a large delegation of the church, with refreshments for the evening, and a large donation of canned fruit, jellies, potatoes and other articles that have supplied much of our need through these winter months. While taking Christmas dinner at the home of Mrs. Alice E. Gingrich, the ladies of the church, visited the parsonage, and placed five new rockers, a library table and a hall tree in the front room. There are many donations and gifts from within and without the church which we cannot mention for the want of space at this writing. But the thing we are endeavoring to emphasize is that these dear people are doing all they can to make us comfortable and happy, for which we praise God.

It might be well to note that we are serving two churches, the one here at Martinsburg and the other, a distance of about seven miles, known as the McKee church. We are glad that both of these churches believe the Book. There has been little or no change in the work thus far, and we believe it is going forward nicely. We have baptized five, and have another to be received next Sunday by letter. One of these was received into the McKee church last Sunday. The other five here at Martinsburg. Our revival continued two weeks and two days and then about 18 inches of snow fell, closing up highways, byways and the meeting. I think the devil thought we were about to get something started. The crowds were splendid despite the snow and zero weather; they were increasing every night. Even on Monday night the house was almost filled. It was the first time in the ministry of the pastor, that throughout the meeting in the majority of the sessions, there were more men present than women. A strange phenomenon indeed for this age. Even though we were forced to close down, we believe much good has been accomplished. Some of these men suggested that when spring opened, we have a week or ten days more. At the close of the service the church gave us a love-gift amounting to fifty dollars as their appreciation for the service. But a still greater surprise came last Wednesday evening when fourteen men outside the church presented to the pastor one of the best Scofield Bibles they could buy, as their token of appreciation for the Gospel messages that were brought. Two others paid up a year's subscription for the Martinsburg Herald. I have no idea as to what the rewards will be on the other side for preaching the Book, but some times it pays here.

We hope to begin a meeting at McKee, the 21st of March, and since we have there another fine loyal group, we hope to have something more soon to report. Both of these churches have selected mighty fine and capable leaders for their Sunday schools. Brother J. E. Dilling is superintendent of the Sunday school at Martinsburg, and Brother William Wineland at McKee. So with good leaders already at the wheel, we expect to move forward in the work of the Lord, by his grace.

TWO WEEKS AT NORTH MANCHESTER

I should say, two very pleasant weeks at North Manchester. Beginning Monday night, February 1st, I worked two weeks with Brother Schutz and his people in an evangelistic campaign. Brother Schutz had everything primed and ready to go. It was an intensive meeting from the start. There was little or no lost motion.

Speaking from my own standpoint I never held a more enjoyable and satisfactory two weeks' meeting than that meeting was. The services throughout were characterized by seriousness, prayerfulness, good singing, and large attendance. On several nights people were turned away because no more could get in the church building. Because of the splendid spirit existing between the churches of North Manchester many people from other churches also got a real blessing out of the meetings, as well as the members of our own church. Besides, we are very sure that in many a life there was a consecration. A number of folks also brought their church letters. And not a few for the first time made the great decision. I am leaving it to Brother Schutz to furnish the figures if there are any to be furnished.

My home was with Brother Schutz and his delightful family. I could ask for nothing finer than that. Many of the other North Manchester homes were also open to us with their genuine hospitality. In my absence from South Bend, Brother Schutz took care of my pulpit to the complete satisfaction of our people. In fact I believe South Bend would be willing to trade pastors with North Manchester and I could not censure them at all if they did. Brother Schutz is so widely and favorably known in Northern and Central Indiana that when it is announced that he is to speak, a big audience is assured. I am hoping that very many more of our own Brethren people may have the privilege to know and to hear Brother Schutz.

It was my pleasure to appear before three different gatherings of students of the Manchester College during the two weeks: I addressed the chapel service one morning; at another time I addressed the Y. W. C. A. girls; and I also addressed the Y. M. C. A. My treatment by faculty and students was of the kind that warms the heart. To even a casual observer it is evident that Manchester College is going strong, with a seemingly great future ahead.

During our meetings we had quite a number of students present from time to time. And when I started for South Bend the people of our church gave tangible proof that they believe the laborer is worthy of his hire.

I think I will be permitted to add that in the month of October I spent two weeks with Brother G. L. Maus and his people at Peru in a meeting. We found this field somewhat restricted from the standpoint of possibilities for visible and immediate results. Nevertheless we tried to faithfully sow the good seed, in the firm belief that good seed may bring forth harvest a long time after the sowing. I enjoyed greatly to work with Brother and Sister Maus and their loyal, earnest members. I shall remember with much pleasure our two weeks together, and shall always covet earnestly for Pern progress and growth.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The seventh annual Inter-High Basketball Tournament was held last Friday with twenty-eight teams participating. This is four more than we had last year and is about the limit of our capacity. This was started seven years ago with eight teams. It has grown in favor every year so that this year we had to refuse several schools which applied for a place. Nothing marred the program and it went off as planned.

The College plans to debate the child labor amendment with Baldwin-Wallace this Wednesday at Ashland.

Professor Alva Roper, who is here with a party holding what is called a Church or Religious Chautauqua, played several piano selections at the Chapel hour Wednesday of this week.

Professor J. A. Garber recently returned from Waterloo, Iowa, where he assisted the local churches in holding a training school in Sunday school methods.

Easter vacation will begin this year Wednesday afternoon, March 31, and close Monday evening, April 5. During this time, several Gospel Teams are planning on trips. Several of the teachers of the school will go to Columbus to educational meetings while some have planned work among certain of the churches.

Things are already beginning to shape themselves up for Commencement. Bishop McDowell of the Methodist church will be our commencement speaker. Superintendent J. A. McDowell, of the Ashland public schools, is a cousin of the bishop.

I spoke before the County Ministerial Association last Tuesday on four World Problems Facing Christianity.

Dr. Bame, the local pastor, was in the pulpit last Sunday, after several weeks' absence spent in revival services.

Professor R. R. Haun who is in Chicago studying at the University, writes from time to time that he is enjoying the year there. He has a year's leave. This coming year I am planning on granting leave to some other member of the Faculty. It is only this way that we can keep the College abreast with modern learning. Counting Professors Miller, L. L. Garber, J. A. Garber, Haun, and myself, this makes five who have had the opportunity of study or travel or both while on leave. Others have studied during the Summer also. Professors DeLozier, Puterbaugh, Mason, and some of the special teachers.

SCHUTZ HOLDS UNION SERVICES IN HUNTINGTON, INDIANA

The writer has been in Huntington nearly five years. He has been a member of the Ministerial Association during the entire time. And during this whole period each year some effort has been put forth to arrange for and have conducted a series of union services in this city. Each year brought a failure to consummate plans. Last fall the effort was renewed, and the following plan was agreed upon. A speaker was to be employed and the local Association was to have charge of all plans, and carry them out. A speaker was looked for in many directions. Failure seemed to be staring the group in the face again. The writer finally rose and proposed to the ministers that Rev. Schutz would be the man to fit into our program if he could be secured. This was accepted at once and a committee dispatched that afternoon to present the proposition to him. He accepted.

The services began on Tuesday evening, January 19. The M. E. church was used during the first week. Tuesday night saw the auditorium filled, the galleries filled and some in the Sunday school assembly room. From that night there was no question of attendance. Blinding snow storm, ten below zero, counter attractions, nothing seemed to influence the attendance except upward. The first Sunday evening found us unprepared for what happened. Long before time for the services to begin the great M. E. church was crowded to capacity—auditorium, galleries, Sunday school assembly room and class rooms up and down stairs. An overflow was arranged for quickly and 200 gathered there while possibly 200 or 300 others went home. The services of the second week were held in the Central Christian church. This building was filled night after night. Three services were planned for the closing Sunday night, January 31. At 6:30 in the First U. B. church a service for young people to be addressed by Rev. Schutz and presided over by the writer, who is Vice-president of the Ministerial Association. Seven hundred young people attended this service. Before seven o'clock a messenger brought the word that not another person could be gotten into the main service in the Central Christian church. The number in this service was 1700. When the young people were dismissed an overflow was conducted in the U. B. church. About 200 persons were present. The total attendance in the three services on the closing night was according to conservative estimates, 2600.

Prof. Schutz seemed to be at his best. From the first sermon to the last he held the attention of the crowds at will. His messages were the topic of the conversation everywhere. The newspapers devoted whole columns on front pages to write-ups of the meetings. Every night the preached seemed to lift the standard of Christian living higher until people were saying "what else can he add?" And then the next evening they would come and he would add. His messages were not messages of compromise or of the soft-pedal type. They bristled with challenge and warning. The Christian living advocated was one of real manhood challenging the most heroic efforts of a gallant warrior.

The aim of these meetings was a reconsecration of the church people and not an evangelistic campaign seeking conversions. An opportunity for this was given but not stressed. During the second week a real challenge for re-consecration was given and the response was very marked. The extent of influence of these services cannot be measured. A school principal said to the writer: "I can see a great difference. People are kinder and more sympathetic. They are more thoughtful of each other." Any city that may be looking for a preacher to conduct union consecration services will make no mistake in securing the services of Brother Schutz. He is a fearless preacher and will render valuable service in any church to which he might be invited.

COLLEGE CORNER AND LOREE, INDIANA

College Corner

As we scan the pages of the Evangelist eagerly looking for news from the field and anxious to know how the church in general is getting along, it dawned upon us that perhaps others were just as anxious to know something about what we were doing as we were about them. We are now in our third year's work at College Corner, Indiana. Although not a large number yet a very loyal and active membership. In October we held our revival, Brother Harley Zumbaugh leading us in the song services. While it was our third meeting, it was by no means lacking in interest. Night after night the brethren came and worked and prayed earnestly and God honored our efforts by giving us fifteen souls, many of them heads of families which made some very substantial material from among some of the best families in the community.

Our Sunday school is moving along in a splendid way under the leadership of Brother John Knee, who is a live, wide-awake superintendent. Our attendance often goes beyond the number on the roll and seems to be on the increase. Our Sunday evening audiences are many times beyond our expectation. It is indeed a pleasure to work with such a fine group of people who feel a responsibility in the church and do not place it all upon their pastor. They did not forget us at Christmas but remembered us with some very substantial gifts, for which we were very thankful.

Loree

While it has been a long time since you have had a report from this place, we are by no means dead or inactive, but holding the fort. We are now in the eighth year of our work with these good people and feel that together we are forging ahead for the Master. In the seven and one-half years of services here we have seen many changes. Many of our brethren have gone to their reward and many new faces are now filling their places and assuming the responsibility of the church. One thing that makes us rejoice is to see many of those whom we have been permitted to take into the church, holding responsible positions and carrying the burdens of the church. While there are a number who are not active whose names are on the church book, yet those who are active are very reliable and are always ready to encourage and stand by their pastor. While we have thought that our work here should be brought to a close, they don't seem to think so. The Sunday school helm is still in the hands of our efficient superintendent, W. A. Shinn, who has held that office for a number of years and is now County Superintendent. And while he was busy looking after the county work, our school was left in the hands of one of our younger brethren, Edward Lippold who handled it in a splendid way. On Christmas eve we began our meetings with a fine and enthusiastic audience. Each evening they came, prayed and sang together and were willing to listen to their pastor as he tried to bring a gospel message which was no small task, as this was the fifth meeting we have held here. The visible results were not so great from a numerical standpoint, yet very substantial—three young men and one aged mother. There was a fine spirit manifest. They did not forget to make us a very substantial gift for our labors which makes us feel that they appreciated our efforts though weak they were, and we were very thankful. We have some very fine Sunday evening audiences. Our heart rejoices to see so many young people going to the house of the Lord. If we have been able to accomplish anything in either of these places, it was through the lovingkindness and mercy of our heavenly Father, and to him be the glory for ever.

They are still in need of food and clothing in some places. There are a lot of children who go down to the center of the city every day to get their food. Their homes are so poor that they can not get enough there.

The Bible says that those that help the poor shall be happy. I hope that you Junior Christian Endeavorers can help in sending supplies and workers to our land, for if you do you shall be blessed. You can pray for us even if you cannot send much money and when you get older maybe you can send others or come yourselves and preach about Jesus to these people who need him so much.

I hope that you have liked my story about my life in this Bible city. You can think about some of my descriptions when you study about Jerusalem at Christian Endeavor.

PORTIS, KANSAS

Just a brief of GOOD News to Evangelist readers and Brethren. Just closed our mid-winter revival services on Monday evening, March 1st, with a great VICTORY for the Lord. We began Sunday, February the 14th. On the fourth night a heavy blizzard came and blocked the roads to such an extent that traffic was tied up on country roads for several days, so not many of our country people could get in for the meetings. However, we had an average attendance of a trifle over 120 at each service, which was real good considering that the evangelist was the pastor, and the choir leader was Prof. Wimmer of the high school faculty. He is a splendid leader and a fine spirited man. He is a member of the U. B. church, but works with any of the churches in our town whenever called upon.

Each evening service was preceded by a short season of prayer by faithful ones in the basement room of the church. These, we feel, were a great stimulus to the working force, and especially to the pastor.

Well, the final result was seven new converts, all of which were baptized and confirmed at the closing service on Monday evening. Two others who had been baptized some time ago, were also confirmed and officially received into the church. This makes 11 new members added in 1926 already. So we continue to work and to labor in this good field. The Lord has wonderfully blessed us in our three and a half year's service among these good people. We love to work with them, and may his kingdom continue to be built up. PRAISE his Name!

One Thursday evening we perched on the subject, "Just to 'Old Cusses'." One hundred forty-two people listened. One business man came and asked that we print him a sign for his place, "Use No Profanity", and the Mayor of the city came and asked that we make a sign and place it on the public croquet grounds in the city park. So I guess many minds were stirred up for 'cleaner speech.''

NEW YORK CITY

"Greetings from the Big City:"

Dear Evangelist readers, it has been several months since you heard from us. Several brethren have desired us to write you of our baby work begun here five months ago in the big city of New York. We surely feel small in the midst of over five million people. But we are glad to have a big God on our side.

I had the privilege of baptizing 20 adults thus far, 15 of them are regular members.

It will interest you to know that some were baptized in Hudson River under heavy rain. Again others were baptized in a small Baptist church in New Jersey, and still others in an improved baptistry, buried too. And for the last two, we had the largest and handsomest Baptist church in Brooklyn, while the electric storm raged outside. "Praise God for the Baptist churches.

We have not grown more rapidly because we are greatly hindered by being where we are. As the church we hold our two weekly services in is not suitable. We have a room within the church building down stairs Sunday afternoons; and on Wednesday nights another room up stairs. Yet we thank God a few are finding us and come now and then. As we pay a small rent we can not do better till we get a store where people can come in from the street. Please pray for us that God may soon open a door and provide the means.

God has wonderfully granted me a street permit, through the police, to preach anywhere in New York. This will mean much as many who know and heard me when I had a place here before, will get in touch again.

On Wednesday, December the 23rd, we held our first communion and Lord's Supper. There were 15 of us. The dear Lord's presence was felt by us all. The members who thus remembered him for the first time said, It was wonderful. It was because he, the Wonderful, was there with us. A lady Bible teacher in this Presbyterian Modern church was excited about our doings, said all sorts of things to me—such as others say against "that night," adding, said she, "I follow the teachings of our great Bible teachers." I replied, "We follow the teachings of the Great Teacher, the Lord himself." She said, "oh"—we went on with our feet washing.

We are expecting to observe the ordinances again around Easter. We trust we can do so in our own mission. Brethren, pray for us.

May God who gave us a vision of New York and for New York two years ago, put the same on every Brethren heart, that we shall unitedly pray for a wonderful church for our brotherhood and for the spread of a full gospel which is so badly needed here.

You would say "Amen" if you could see us stop people on the streets and lead them to Christ, whose name they had loudly cursed a few moments before.

I am giving to the Brethren here gladly and gratis my services since the work began, how much longer, I do not know.

Brethren, pray for us and all other fields, that we may not only grow numerically but spiritually.

In his service,

EMMA M. ABOUD.

IN THE SHADOW

LONGANECKER—Gladys Engle Longanecker, wife of Wm. Longanecker, of the Dutchtown community, passed on to her eternal reward, on January 3, 1926, at the age of 30 years. She united with the Brethren church at Dutchtown under the ministry of Elder Thomas Plew, and lived a beautiful Christian life. The writer ministered to her in spiritual things during her long illness, and always found her resigned and patient in the will of the Lord. She leaves a father, mother, two brothers, one sister, a husband and two children. May the Lord care for them tenderly in their hour of sorrow. Funeral services in the Dutchtown church, in charge of Elder B. H. Flora and the writer.
C. C. GRISSO.

STONEBURNER—John Stoneburner of near Dutchtown, departed this life at the home of his son at the age of 81 years. The writer brought to him the message of salvation on his dying bed, and for the first time he accepted Christ as his Savior. Into the hands of a just God we commit his spirit. In his going he leaves a wife and one son. Funeral services held in the First Brethren church in Warsaw on December 16, 1925, conducted by the pastor.
C. C. GRISSO.

SNELLENBERGER—Mariah Snellenberger, wife of the late Chas. Snellenberger of East Warsaw, passed out of this earthly life on February 7, at the age of 85 years. The husband preceded her in death just one year. She united with the U. B. church early in life. Funeral services at the First Brethren church in Warsaw in charge of the writer.
C. C. GRISSO.

HOLBROOK—Goldie Holbrook, wife of John Holbrook, died at the family home, four miles east of Warsaw on February 24, 1926, at the age of 33 years. She leaves a husband and two children. She lived a consistent Christian life. From her youth she was a member of the U. B. church. Funeral by the writer in the First Brethren church in Warsaw.
C. C. GRISSO.

LICHTY—Ann Ashenfelter was born in Ogle County, Illinois, May 13th, 1855; died very suddenly at Hastings, Nebraska, at the home of her daughter, February 17th, 1926, at the age of seventy years. She was married to John Lichty at Falls City, Nebraska, in 1873. To this union five children were born, Albert, who for some time was Business Manager of our Publishing Company; Frank, who is now a Trustee of Ashland College; Marie, who has for a number of years been identified with the Woman's work of the church; and Guy Lichty a pillar in the Falls City church; Mrs. Chester Stump of Hastings, Nebraska, at whose home Mrs. Lichty died. These estimable children survive her, Brother Lichty having died in 1919. She was a fine Christian woman, and gave largely of her time and money for the advancement of the Kingdom. Funeral services conducted by the undersigned, assisted by Brother A. B. Cover.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

GOSNEY—Theodore LeVerle, son of Merl and Blanche Gosney, born in Portis, Kansas, September 21, 1925, died February 21, 1926; aged 5 months to the hour. The little one had bronchial flu for nearly three weeks. The pastor used for a text, "My beloved has gone down into his garden . . . to gather lilies."—Song of Solomon. Funeral service by the writer.

W. K. DEETER.

KENSINGER—David C. Kensinger was born May 19th, 1862, and departed this life here February 5th, 1926, aged 63 years, 8 months and 16 days. David Kensinger attended the Brethren church at Martinsburg, and was a splendid singer, but never united with any church until December 12th, when the pastor was called to his home, where he made the good confession in Christ and he and his sister Margaret were both baptized the same night and received into the church. Our brother had not been well for some time, and he grew steadily worse and was confined to his bed two weeks before his death. The services were held in the Church of the Brethren at Fredericksburg, conducted by the pastor and assisted by Brother Brumbaugh.

J. S. COOK.

HUSTON—The Grim Reaper has recently visited our congregation and thus added the following names to the ever increasing list. Amy Hughes Huston answered the summons February 2. Our departed sister was born January 29, 1865, at Hudson, Illinois. She resided with her parents until she came west to be married, which event took place at Atchison, Kansas, February 18, 1884. They made Falls City their home, where they reared their family and lived together until six years ago when her husband died. She continued to reside here after her husband's demise. To the union the following children were born: Mrs. May Helmer of St. Joe, Mo.; Guy P. Lot and Edna Hone of this place, and Charles Huston at Bloomington, Ill. Two daughters, Grace and Jennie Lutz, also an infant boy preceded her in death. She is also survived by one brother, Henry Hughes of Bloomington, Ill., and a sister, Mrs. Frank Vaughn of this place, besides a host of friends. Sister Huston was of a quiet, unassuming disposition but lived an exemplary Christian life. She very seldom was absent from church services, and manifested her interest in the organizations of the church. The funeral was held from the church by her pastor, the undersigned.

A. B. COVER.

WALL—Robert H. Wall was born August 25th, 1852, and died January 20th, 1926, aged 73 years, 4 months and 26 days. He had been a member of the McKee church for several years. Brother Wall had been a cripple for some years, and suffered considerable pain the last few weeks of his life here, but was only confined to his bed a week. The services were conducted by the writer.

J. S. COOK.

FINN—James Finn was born in Jackson county, August, 1860, and departed in peace February 18th at the age of 65 years, and six months, heart trouble being the cause of his death. Brother Finn and wife united with the Fairview Brethren church 37 years ago during a revival conducted by Brother I. D. Bowman, when Dr. Tombaugh was pastor of Fairview, and each succeeding pastor. I am sure, has realized Brother Finn's loyalty and support.

There remains to mourn his departure his dear wife, who so faithfully stood by him and spared nothing for his comfort during his illness.

There are also three sisters, Mrs. Mary Landrum, and Mrs. Wm. Cramblett of Jackson County, and Mrs. John Humphrey of London, Oregon and one brother John Finn of Columbus, Ohio. The deceased was laid to rest in the Washington C. H. cemetery. Funeral services by the pastor and writer.

S. E. CHRISTIANSEN.

KELLER—Miss Fannie Keller was instantly killed on the morning of January 20, 1926, when she was struck by an automobile while crossing the road in front of her home in Shady Grove, Pa. Deceased was aged 46 years. For a number of years Miss Keller made her home in Greencastle, Pa., but for the past 18 months had lived in Shady Grove. There survive her mother, Mrs. Geo. Keller and one sister, Mrs. Geo. Deardorff, both residents of Chambersburg. Miss Keller was a faithful member of the First Brethren church of Waynesboro, Pa. The funeral was held in Shank's church near Greencastle, conducted by her pastor, Rev. J. P. Horlacher.

DESSIE M. HOLLINGER.

HIGHBARGER—Mr. J. W. Highbarger, Waynesboro, Pa., departed this life Nov. 12, 1925 in the 55th year of his age. He met an accidental death by falling while taking down some electric wires.

The church here owes to Mr. Highbarger a debt of gratitude which it can never repay for it is to him more than to any other one man that we are indebted for having a Brethren church in Waynesboro, he having assumed the greater part of the responsibility of getting the work established here, sacrificing time, energy and money to accomplish this worthy purpose. Concerning the struggles and obstacles incident to the building and establishing of a new church, no one knew better than did Mr. Highbarger and his estimable companion.

Those ministers who early in our church history served the church here well remember Mr. Highbarger's home as one of comfort, sympathy and encouragement, where a minister remained as many as two or three weeks at a time always a welcome guest.

For many years he was church treasurer as well as treasurer of the Sunday school which he was also instrumental in starting. He was superintendent of the Sunday school for many years and teacher of the Upstreamer Class of which the writer is now teacher. As we look back over our brief history as a church we feel that we have not fully realized his worth to us as a church. Always interested in the welfare of the church his presence both financial and spiritual shall be greatly missed, but we bow in humble submission to his will. Our sympathy and that of a host of friends goes to his widow and daughter who remain to mourn their loss. The funeral service was held at his late residence in charge of his pastor, Rev. J. P. Horlacher. Interment is Green Hill Cemetery, this city.

DESSIE M. HOLLINGER.

DOTY—Clois Edgar Doty was born October 14, 1848, at Sunbury, Delaware County, Ohio. He departed to be with his Lord January 29, 1926, from his home in Turlock, California, aged 77 years, 3 months and 15 days.

He leaves to mourn his departure, his beloved wife Anna; four sons, Wilbur, of Turlock, Oscar of Portola, Walter of Mantague, and Paul of Don Pedro, California. Also four daughters, Mrs. Constance Flory, of Lemoore; Elsie Vary of Modesto, Minnie Holgate of Turlock, California, and Ruth Norton of Denver, Colorado, besides a number of grandchildren and a host of friends.

Services by Brother Platt of Manteca, assisted by the writer.

KENNETH R. RONK.

ANDREW—Mollie Kieffaber, daughter of Rebecca and Adam C. Kieffaber, was born Nov. 5, 1868. She departed this life Feb. 17, 1926, aged fifty-seven years, three months and twelve days. Her entire life has been spent in this community.

On Sept. 15, 1889 she and Thomas Andrew were united in marriage. This union was blessed by seven children, four boys and three girls—Jessie R., wife of Arthur T. Fulkerson, now residing at Aurora, Ill.; J. Fred Andrew, of Orleans, Ind.; Robert E. Andrew; Glenn T. Andrew of Dana, Ind.; Ruth R., wife of Charles Autin of Winslow, Ind.; Wilbur E. Andrew of Indianapolis, Ind.; and Edith L. Andrew of Indiana University. The entire family survive her with the exception of Robert who died in France during the last days of the recent war. Also surviving her are many other relatives and friends. She was baptized Oct. 5, 1884 into the Church of the Brethren and became a member of the Brethren church Dec. 12, 1915. She has always been a faithful and zealous member of the church she so much loved. Services by the writer.

NEIKIRK—Hattie Brant Neikirk, daughter of Margaret and John Brant, was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, Sept. 16, 1853, and died at the home of her son near Milledgeville, Ill., Feb. 15, 1926, at the age of 72 years, 4 months and 29 days. She was united in marriage to Benjamin F. Neikirk, April 7, 1874. To this union were born three children—Mrs. Maggie Bradway, Mrs. Lottie Roan-erick and Mr. Edward Neikirk, all of Milledgeville. Mr. Neikirk passed on before nearly twenty years ago. On June 3, 1904, Mrs. Neikirk joined the Brethren church of Milledgeville, in which faith she remained to the day of her decease.

Funeral services were held from the First Brethren church of Milledgeville. Dr. Kauffman of the Lutheran church offered up the prayer, Elder Z. T. Livengood of Lanark, a friend of many years standing, delivered the sermon and the writer took charge of the other services at the house, church and cemetery. Many are the relatives and friends who extend to the children their heartfelt sympathy.

GEO. E. CONE.

KELLY—Frank Kelly, son of Wm. and Lydia Kelly, was born June 7, 1857, died February 16, 1926, aged 67 years, 8 months and 9 days.

He was a faithful member of the Brethren church at North Georgetown, Ohio, for 27 years. His illness was of long duration but he bore it all with patience and faith in Jesus. Funeral services by the writer from John 11:21-25.

ALVIN BYERS.

RIDDLE—Hiram Riddle, departed this life February 23, 1926, aged about seventy-two. He was a member of the Mt. Olive Brethren church nearly thirty years. Many members of the church follow their Lord afar off; this should not be; neither do I consider a church paper interesting reading that pretends to fight the Devil with a pair of boxing gloves on. It is certainly necessary for the watchman in this day and age of the world to give warning with no uncertain sound. Brother Riddle leaves a wife and two brothers and a host of friends to mourn the loss. Services by the writer.

The Law of the Bicycle

A Chinese officer was interested in a bicycle that he saw standing on the veranda of a missionary's house, and inquired what kind of a cart it might be. "How do you ride it?" he asked. The missionary explained and rode around the compound several times. But the mystery was not solved in the mind of the Chinese. "It has only two wheels!" he exclaimed. "Why does it not fall down?" "When a thing is moving, it can't fall down," said the missionary.

And the principle he announced can be applied to many things. There are useful movements started in our churches, and societies, and in our individual activities, that, for a time, promise fine results. Then, in common parlance, they fall down. The wheels will not move of themselves, and when interest and enthusiasm begins to lag, and the running grows careless and intermittent, they fail. The way to keep up is to keep moving.

What God Requires

How inclined we are to lay hold of perfectly good statements and turn them to our advantage! Some one, appealing for the consecration of men, said, "It is easy to give money; God does not need your money, he wants you." Seizing upon that statement a man of means who loved his money more than he loved God and the extension of his Kingdom, gave as an alibi for his close-fistedness, "God does not need my money; he does not need anything from man." And he would have been entirely true, if he had not stopped there. God does not stand in need of anything from man. "The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith Jehovah." "The cattle upon a thousand hills are mine." "If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fullness thereof." All is God's and there is nothing that he has not. But he has entrusted much to man's care and keeping, and God requires that what he has entrusted to man's keeping shall be put to use and caused to multiply that when he demands an accounting, he may receive his own with usury. He countenances no buried talents. This is a truth that many Christian people forget, and they go on hiding their money from God, keeping it wrapped in the napkin of their selfishness, as if it were really their very own and they were never to give an account of their stewardship. No one can look upon his possessions and say these are mine, and refuse to share his goods with others of God's creatures, in the face of the great need in the world today, the many who are without food and shelter, the vast numbers who are suffering from the ravages of disease and war, and the innumerable host who are without the light of the Gospel and the blessings of a Christian civilization. God will not hold him guiltless who hoards his talent and refuses to trade with it in the market of the world's need that it may bring forth usury in service.

The chief weakness of American Christianity with regard to finances, however, is their growing recklessness and wastefulness in expenditure. In this they are partaking of the spirit of the age. American people have forgotten the value of money, and are spending freely, almost madly, on non-essentials, to say nothing of what is spent on illicit booze, gambling, tobacco, vicious theaters, dancing and attendant evils. Pointing out this evil, a contributed editorial in "The Evangelical Messenger" of recent date said, "There is no question but what we are passing through a spending orgy. Recognizing this tendency in American life, an outstanding football player will forfeit the privilege of graduation from his university, capitalize his playing ability, and, if newspaper accounts are reliable, in three weeks of playng, accumulate the sum of $100,000. While it is but natural to pass judgment on the individual player, nevertheless, what he has been able to do, because of the response he has received from an amusement-loving public.

"This condition of affairs presents a supreme challenge to the Christian church. Just how far Christian people are helping to swell the expenditure of money for non-essentials is for each individual Christian to answer. In view of the apparent ease with which the American people are spending money for personal gratification, it would be a sad commentary upon American life if the various Christian and philanthropic enterprises should be made to suffer because of lack of funds. And of all Christian enterprises, the missionary cause is one that MUST NOT FAIL."

No, it must not fail, and yet if Christian people continue to participate in this "spending orgy" as they have done, where will the church get the money to continue the advancement of the Kingdom's interests? And if it fails, will not the Lord require an accounting of us? Then what will we say? Can we plead poverty in the face of our needless expenditures? What shall we say when faced with the record of American people spending annually $1,823,279,783 for tobacco, $808,906,990 for confectionery, $107,304,100 for perfumes and cosmetics, $92,232,280 for gum, and only $44,000,000 for missions, home and foreign?

The source of our weakness is our failure to recognize the fact of Christian stewardship. There are Christians aplenty who will acknowledge it, but are unwilling to give practical expression to their faith in it. Mission treasuries are empty (as well as the treasuries of many another church activity) and mission boards are being compelled to retrench, because so many who profess the Lordship of Christ will not give him so much as a tithe for the propagation of his cause. We act as if everything belonged to us, that we were lord of all we possess, and we spend almost everything for the gratification of our personal desires, while the work of the Lord is compelled to beg for even a retarded growth. There are some, and thank God, an increasing number, who do not forget that it is required of a steward that a man be found faithful, but all too many are indifferent or unwilling to face the requirements. "Will man rob God?" It sounds a harsh question, but the Almighty himself is the author of it. So let us bravely face it and accept the Lord's own answer to it. "Will a man rob God?" Yes, he says, "ye have robbed me." What shall we do about it? How shall we right the wrong we have committed? This is what we may do, what we ought to do, what we are commanded to do, (and with the command goes the promised blessing for obedience). "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." That is what the Lord requires of us as stewards to faithfully recognize and acknowledge his ownership.

Bible Distribution and Reading Crusade

Two very simple but essential things with regard to the propagation of Christianity are the wider distribution and reading of the Word. Notwithstanding the fact that the Bible is the most widely circulated book in the world, there are still vast numbers, even among civilized peoples, who do not possess a copy, and among many who do possess it, it is very little read. We take it for granted that most church folks possess copies of the Bible, though the startling fact has been forced home upon us that there are many who do not. But the big problem is to get people to read it, to the solution of which problem many suggestions have been made.

To this end a nation-wide Scripture reading crusade was launched during the month of February by the Department of Evangelism of the church of the Disciples of Christ. Using the slogan, "A Chapter a Day Keeps the Tempter Away", the members of the churches were urged to read one chapter a day during the month from the Book of Acts, which contains exactly twenty-eight chapters. Emphasis was laid on the fact that copies of the Book of Acts could be purchased of the American Bible Society for one cent each, and that these portions could be easily carried and read on the train, in the school room, at the office, in the shop, etc. These suggestions were taken up with enthusiasm, and so numerous were the orders received by the American Bible Society, it is said, that their stock was soon exhausted and more were required to be printed. Dr. D. A. Abbott, editor of the Christian Evangelist, estimated that no less than 500,000 members of the Disciples of Christ churches were reading the Book of Acts during the month of February.

This was a unique event in American church history, but it was not only amazingly successful, but eminently worth while. It always means much to get church members to reading the Bible regularly and devotionally. It would do more than the average revival meeting accomplishes for the spiritual quickening and the stimulation to loyalty of the church membership if all could be started upon a habit of devout, daily reading of the Word. Along with that would naturally go, or would soon follow, daily prayer, and then, behold, we should find the coveted revival of the family altar, or a very good substitute for it, an accomplished fact.

Such a campaign, as did the one referred to above, would bring about a greatly increased distribution of the Word, or portions of it, among the church members. Such a feature would in itself encourage them in Bible reading. But it ought to result in more than that; it ought to go beyond the membership and cause Bible portions to be distributed among large numbers of non-Christian people. It is a type of missionary that every one can cooperate in, and it would tend to produce a wide-spread, wholesome, intelligent interest in religion that would be fertile soil for evangelism. We need not wait for the launching of a national campaign; any local church can undertake it.

The Birmingham Convention

Word has come to us that strong delegations are being made up in various parts of the country for the great convention at Birmingham, Alabama, April 12-19, 1926. Special railroad rates, as we have previously explained, have been secured on all roads, and large groups are planning to drive through in automobiles. Some are planning to camp in the beautiful hills around Birmingham, which the city is putting in shape for the use of delegates by providing conveniences.

The program is expected to be exceptionally strong. President Coolidge has promised to be present to address the convention. The devotional periods are to be conducted by President E. Y. Mullins of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary of Louisville, Kentucky. We remember with pleasure of hearing him on occasions and can assure all that he will bring something that will abundantly repay anyone for the trip, if nothing else were gotten. He is a man of power and fine scholarship. America's greatest religious educators will be on the program. Conferences will be held and ministers will have ample opportunity to get help. It is expected the 7,000 leaders representing a large number of the Protestant denominations will be present.

The first International Conference of the Young People of North America will be held in connection with the convention. The young people of any church would do well to endeavor to have at least one delegate there to bring home as much enthusiasm and ideas as possible. It will also pay any Sunday school, where at all possible, to send one adult representative. Any member of the Brethren church considering getting in on this great convention, should write to Professor J. A. Garber for reservations.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Are you beginning to see the value of using tracts? Read the Tract Corner, and put a tract corner in your church, specialize in Brethren tracts.

During the presence of the members of the Board of College Trustees in Ashland this week, a number of them called at the Publishing House. We are always glad for Brethren to give us a call when visiting in our city.

Last week we had a report of the recent evangelistic campaign held in the Portis, Kansas, church, written by the pastor. This week one of the parishioners gives his impressions and speaks highly of the good resulting from Brother W. R. Deeter's preaching, and from certain of his sermons in particular.

From the report of Brother Homer Anderson, we learn that the Bethel church, near Mulvane, Kansas, of which he is pastor has been severely tested by reason of heavy financial losses of many of their members. Also Brother Anderson is desirous of securing some second-hand Bible commentaries.

We are glad to hear from Brother N. D. Wright of Racket, West Virginia, and to know that his people are still standing by their guns and facing forward. They made a net gain of three last year, and showed their loyalty to the general interests of the brotherhood by making contributions when requested, the latest of which was for the benefit of the Publishing House, received by the Business Manager with due gratitude.

The First church of Philadelphia is rejoicing in victory, for on the fourteenth of February they made good on their purpose to liquidate the debt on their church property, and that in spite of severe weather. When a people set themselves to a hard task with the consecration that these faithful Brethren manifested, success is sure to crown their efforts. Brother Paul Miller, the capable pastor, is accomplishing a fine work there with the cooperation of the splendid lay leadership with which that church is blessed.

President Jacobs' report of the enrollment of Ashland College as reaching the total of 512 is certainly gratifying. It speaks of growth and enlarged influence. There is every reason for Brethren people to be proud of their only church school. But while we give ourselves up to a feeling of elation over this commendable advancement, let us not forget the responsibility that a large, first-rate school carries with it. It means, and will increasingly so, larger gifts for endowment and equipment. Let us thank God that we have a school of which we can justly be proud and unfalteringly face the financial task that is ours.

Brother Homer A. Kent, pastor of the Brethren church of Washington, D. C., gives us a report of an evangelistic victory among his people as a result of the campaign conducted by Dr. W. S. Bell of Dayton, Ohio. The numerical results were thirty-two confessions, including a number of reconsecrations. The pastor is encouraged not only by this added strength of numbers, but also by the loyalty and activity displayed by the splendid group of young people which that church possesses. That augurs a bright future for the congregation.

The pastor of the Milledgeville congregation in Illinois, Brother George E. Cone, reports all departments at work and moving forward. He speaks with gratification concerning the intercessors in the Woman's Missionary Society, an uplift for which many a pastor has had reason to thank God. At this point we are made to wonder if the men of our congregations are lifting their share of the burden of intercession, or are they slipping behind in this, as it appears that they are in the matter of missionary information? Brother Cone is soon to enter upon an evangelistic campaign in his church and requests the prayers of the brotherhood in his behalf.

In Prof. J. A. Garber's Sunday School News he states that only three of the ten delegates allotted to the Brethren church to the International convention at Birmingham have been provided. Surely others ought to take advantage of this unusual opportunity. Perhaps some church could send its pastor, or Sunday school superintendent, as the Sunday school of the Johnstown First church is doing. We want to congratulate this school on seizing this opportunity of honoring their worthy superintendent of forty-five years, a record that would be hard to duplicate anywhere.

The secretary of the Indiana Mission Board calls the attention of Indiana churches to the fact that many of them need to pay up their apportionments for this year. Indiana churches are not alone in the fault, but surely there is need of some definite instruction to the point of paying district mission apportionments promptly. It is difficult to think of any duty more urgent than meeting this obligation without delay. Besides Indiana's mission work has been attended with a success that should encourage promptness. And now it is announced that one of their veteran and successful mission workers, Brother J. L. Kimmel, is about to undertake a new work in behalf of the district at Fort Wayne. He is worthy, as are the other mission pastors, of the district's most loyal support.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Outlook for Missions in Argentina

By C. F. Yoder, Ph.D., Senior Missionary to Argentina

At the time of the discovery of the new world South America was populated only by Indians. The Spanish and Portuguese who founded colonies intermarried with the Indians to a large extent and a mixed population grew up which now numbers over thirty millions. There are still some fifteen millions of Indians of pure blood and twice as many inhabitants who are immigrants or descendants of immigrants from Europe. These latter are the progressive element who are developing the country.

South America has natural resources and advantages fully equal to those of North America, and with inhabitants of like spirit would be equally desirable as a place to live. While much of the continent is in the tropical zone, yet the land is high and the climate is not incompatible with comfortable living for white people. South America will no doubt develop as rapidly in the present century as North America did in the last.

Of the South American countries Brazil is the largest and Uruguay the most progressive, but Argentina is only second in both, and on the whole is perhaps the most influential of all. The climate is mostly temperate and the people of European blood. Most of the inhabitants could go to North America and in a few years pass for native North Americans. They are somewhat different in temperament but should not be treated as inferiors on that account. The inferior conditions are the result of causes for which they are not wholly to blame, and when it is the work of the missionary to largely remove through the Gospel, so that the population of Argentina and of the Americas and all the world may become homogeneous in that One in whom all things in Heaven and on earth are to be united (Eph. 1:10).

One of the chief causes of the inferior conditions in South America in government, in education and in morals, is the religion that has dominated during the four hundred years since colonization began. The first explorers conquered the Indians with fire arms and forced them to accept the Roman Catholic religion. That does not mean that they were taught just as Catholics in North America are taught. The type of Romanism brought here was the mediaeval type.

As any student of history knows that was a very degenerate type and not really deserving of being called Christianity. There never has been any effort on the part of the Roman church to give the Bible to the people, and the teaching of the Bible has been so utterly perverted that there is scarcely one fundamental truth that remains. The people have been taught to worship the virgin Mary rather than God himself, and they bow before the images of so-called saints just as heathen do before their idols. They have one image for one thing and one for another. Each saint has his special work, and each province has its special patron saint. Sometimes an image will be punished, beaten, turned to the wall or thrown into a well, if the desired petition is not granted. Many of the images are believed to work miracles and some shrines attract thousands every year, and the priests at these places become immensely wealthy through the fees and offerings received. But most of the people who go on these excursions are curiosity seekers or those who exploit the rest. Gamblers and pickpockets, harlots and liquor sellers make up a large part and these shrines become centers of vice and contagion.

Romanism has always been the foe of liberty and freedom of conscience and was reactionary at the time of the war of independence in South America, but after liberty was won then she pretended that her images had won it. Several years ago several churches had a bitter controversy over the question as to which of them possesses the genuine sword of San Martin, which, they say, he promised to donate to the virgin in case she would grant the victory.

The government once granted to the Jesuits the richest province of the country, that of Misiones, and they had full power over it, and as a result made a disgraceful failure, leaving the inhabitants in virtual slavery and worse morally than before. "Like priest, like people," says the Word, and South America is a living example of the truth of the statement. No words of any missionary have been any stronger in painting the corruption of the South American priesthood than those of one of the popes himself. A devout Catholic and prominent literary man from Spain told me on the boat coming down, that he never goes to church in South America because he does not believe that there is a priest in all South America fit to hear confession. This is the attitude of most of the men who still remain Catholic, but the vast majority of the men have turned away from all religion to infidelity. They have been familiar with the deceit and corruption of the church from childhood and have lost all faith in it. Of the educated classes not one man in a thousand goes to church or professes any religion whatever. Some have turned to Spiritualism and some to Theosophy, but the most are simply indifferent and are seeking money and pleasure.

We do not need to speak of the corruption of the Roman church here, nor do the people like to hear us speak of it. They say that they know all that better than we do, and they speak of it much themselves. We are not here to condemn but to save. We preach the straight Gospel and seek the lost just as we should in any part of the world, and though we labor under the handicap of preaching a religion which is already discredited, yet by faithful visiting, tract distribution and open air preaching, we can reach those who will not come to the missions to hear the preaching, and out of the many called a few are chosen.

The people however, have never been accustomed to think of Christianity as obliging them to live holy lives. Romanists can lie and swear, cheat and steal, drink and carouse and be as immoral as they please and still maintain good standing in the church, provided they keep up their attendance at the confession and outward profession of faith. The result is that it is very hard to get them to understand that to be good evangelical Christians they must come out from their evil companions, abandon their evil habits and actually follow Christ. It is much easier to get candidates for baptism than to maintain the proper standard of living among those baptized.

The whole system of Romanism tends to destroy individuality. Doctrines are given cut and dried, and no one may dissent from them. In the confession the priest acts as an outside conscience and suppresses the working of the God-given conscience. The people are treated as small children, unable to read God's Word with profit and therefore prohibited from reading it, and the result is that as they are never trained in personal responsibility they are not prepared for it when they enter evangelical missions, and it takes a long time to discipline them enough to be self sustaining and self governing. Left to themselves they soon fall into dissensions and decay. Many flourishing churches have gone down in this way.

The time is coming, however, when there will be a great change. The church, conscious of its losing out in its spiritual domination, is seeking to strengthen its political hold. The people, however, are not obedient as formerly, and the priests cannot command so many votes and consequently cannot dominate so many politicians.

There is a growing demand for separation of church and state. The mass of the people do not care to be taxed to raise over twenty million dollars a year for the support of a church in which they no longer believe. Several South American countries already have separated church and state and Argentina is taking one step after another in preparation. The most recent is the omission of a provision in the budget to pay the expenses of an ambassador to the pope. In due time the people will be free from this great apostasy that has been a blight upon the world for so many centuries.

But infidelity never has satisfied the aspirations of good people and never will. The people who have turned away from religion will come back again and if they do not find the true Gospel they will take up religious fads and find themselves again deceived. Now is the time to plant Gospel missions in all the towns of the country and press the campaign of evangelization until all shall have had an opportunity at least of knowing that Jesus is something more than an image on a cross or in his mother's arms. It is time that they should know that there is a living, present and powerful Savior who saves from sin here and now and whose followers really follow him.

South America is the "neglected continent" because the most of the missionaries have felt called to the more romantic work among the naked savages of Africa or the heathen peoples of the orient, leaving these people of South America, who are too much like ourselves in appearance and civilization, to perish without a saving knowledge of the Gospel. What if they are not clamoring for it? That is because they do not know its value. What if they are slow to obey it? That is because of their life long prejudice against it. God's Word will not return to him void, and the faithful sowing of the Word in South America is bringing and will bring the blessed harvest of life eternal the same as in any other country.

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he may thrust forth laborers into his harvest."

Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

(Article No. 7)

The Samaritan Passover

By Herbert H. Tay

Of all the experiences which we had in the Land of Palestine, perhaps none made such an impression upon us as the Samaritan Passover. Our emotions as we witnessed this oldest of existing religious ceremonies, which has been perpetuated for thirty-five hundred years, cannot be described. It was a privilege which we shall long appreciate, and its memories shall ever remain vividly impressed in our minds.

We were highly honored just after arriving in Nablus, the Biblical Shechem, and the home of the Samaritans. He was very cordial, inviting us to accompany him to the Samaritan camp that afternoon, where he would show us about, and explain about the Passover. It was a gracious invitation, but we were forced to decline with thanks, for we had only a limited time in that vicinity, and our program had been so arranged that we could not go that day. We were much flattered by the call, however, for there were no fewer than one thousand people at the Passover on the following day, and the fact that we received a visit from the son of the High Priest not an hour after arriving, was a distinct honor.

Though we could not accept the invitation that day, having planned a trip to the summit of Mt. Ebal, from which we had the wonderful view of the Holy Land described in the first of these articles, yet we did go up to the Samaritan camp on the following afternoon. We had spent the morning at Samaria, seeing the ruins of the ancient capital of Israel. After climbing the steep ascent of Mt. Gerazim, we were met at the summit by the son of the High Priest, who escorted us to his tent, and showed us the ancient scroll of the Pentateuch. This is ancient copy of the first five books of the Bible, written upon parchment, which the Samaritans claim was written by a grandson of Aaron, the high priest. However, the best archaeologists say that this manuscript cannot be older than the Christian Era, and was written some time after the times of the Apostles. Whether the manuscript which we saw was this ancient one is a question because the Samaritans have two, one of which, is quite recent, which they usually exhibit to travellers.

It might be well to pause at this time, to explain who the Samaritans are, and why they perpetuate this ceremony so faithfully every year. After the Assyrian and Babylonian captivities, when the people returned again to the land, the two southern tribes settled again in the vicinity of Jerusalem, and the ten northern tribes settled in the portion of the land which they formerly possessed. The Jews were careful to maintain their separate identity, but the Israelites intermarried with the Gentiles of the land, and became a mixed race. This was in disobedience to the express command of God, given many centuries before. So, because the Israelites became a mixed race, and the Jews had continued to remain separated from the Gentiles, the latter would have no dealings with the former. In the time of Christ the Israelites were called Samaritans, and that name has persisted until this day.

At the present time, their number is fast diminishing. At the Passover which we attended, but 157 Samaritans remained.

But now, to go on with the story. On the tenth day of the first month (Ex. 12:3) seven lambs are chosen from the flock, and the congregation of the Samaritans moves, with these lambs, to the summit of Mt. Gerazim, which rises high above Nablus on the south. In accordance with the Commandment, the lambs are kept under surveillance for four days for ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month (Ex. 12:6). This does not mean that the lambs are to be kept tightly penned, but that they are to be kept separate from other lambs, in order that they may be inspected to see that they meet the qualifications of Passover lambs. Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of the first year (Ex. 12:5). The Samaritans are very careful that the lambs are perfect. It is said that once it was discovered after killing a lamb, that he had a physical imperfection, and it was necessary to burn the entire lamb in the fire, for he could not be used in the Passover ceremony. During the time that the lambs are being "kept up," the Samaritans themselves live in tents. We were sorry to see that these tents were the regulation British army tent, which they had purchased from the army after the war. It would have been much more picturesque, and much more in keeping with the characteristics of the wilderness wanderings, if they had retained their tents of goat's hair, such as those which the wandering Bedouin tribes use today.

Just outside the camp, is an enclosure, walled about with stone walls about four feet high, in which the ceremony of the passover is held. About an hour before sunset, the High Priest goes into this enclosure, and leads in the ritual of worship of the priests and congregation. This consists of prayers and songs, some of which are read, others of which are repeated or chanted from memory. The posture in prayer is much like that of the Mohammedans, and since the Samaritan custom is older, we conclude that the Mohammedan style of prayer is taken from the Jewish or Samaritan. It is interesting to note that the men and boys only, take part in the ritual worship. The women are sometimes interested spectators, but do not take part.

Just before sunset, the lambs are led into the enclosure, and are held by seven young men, standing in a semi-circle. Then, just at sunset, two priests quickly and deftly cut the throats of the lambs, and they are allowed to bleed to death. And ye shall keep it up until the fourteenth day of the same month: and the whole assembly of the children of Israel shall kill it in the evening (Ex. 12:6). The last clause of that command is held to mean "between the evenings," that is, at sunset, so that is religiously adhered to, as the time of the killing of the sacrifice.

The killing of the lambs is accompanied by the loud shouts of the men, and the shrill screams of the women. They are shouting and crying for joy. As we stood there, and realized all that the shedding of the blood of those lambs meant to them, we would readily understand why they should cry and shout for joy. At the moment that the blood gushed from the severed arteries, a young man was there to catch it in a bowl, and he ran hastily and placed some of it on each side and over the door of each tent. And they shall take of the blood, and strike it on the two side posts and on the upper door post of the houses (Ex. 12:7).

After the lambs have bled to death, boiling water is dipped from two large cauldrons, and poured upon them, and the wool is plucked from them. This requires some time, but as soon as one of the sheep has been plucked, he is hung by the hind feet, upon a stick, which is held upon the shoulders of two men. Then the priest cleans the lamb, taking out the entrails which are burned in the fire. And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning, and that which remaineth until the morning ye shall burn with fire (Ex. 12:10). During the process of cleaning, he is very careful not to break a single bone, for Jehovah commanded, Neither shall ye break a bone thereof (Ex. 12:46). After the entrails are taken out, (Lev. 3:4-5) and all the fat is removed, (Lev. 7:23-25) the priest rubs salt into the carcase, and it is placed upon a long wooden spit. However, previous to this, the right fore-leg and shoulder are removed, and placed on a special spit, for they are for the High Priest and his family. He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part (Lev. 7:33).

After all the sheep have been placed upon the spits, heads, legs, and all, without breaking a bone, except to detach the right fore-leg for the priest, they are taken to the oven. This consists of a pit in the ground about six or seven feet deep, and about four or five feet in diameter. It is lined with stones from top to bottom, and a fire has been kept burning in it for several hours. Thus the stones are almost red-hot when the lambs are placed in the oven. The sticks with the lambs upon them, are placed vertically in the oven, and the top of the pit is then sealed with a lattice of wood, over which damp grass is thrown, and the whole sealed airtight with mud. Thus the directions are observed, which direct them to Eat not of it raw, nor sodden at all with water, but roast with fire; his head with his legs, and with the purtenance thereof (Ex. 12:9).

It requires about three hours for the lambs to be sufficiently roasted, and when we were present at the feast, it was shortly after eleven o'clock at night when the oven was opened. This part of the ceremony was attended with great excitement. The attendants at the oven, feverishly tore away the mud and grass, threw aside the lattice, and drawing the lambs upon the spits from the oven, they ran into the enclosure. Men were shouting, women shrieking, and babies crying. There was a scene of wild confusion, as the Samaritans, fully dressed, with hats and coats on, began to hurriedly tear the meat from the bones, and gulp it down. They gathered around wooden bowls in which the meat was placed, according to their families. Now, for the first time, the women had a part in the ceremony, and were eating just as hurriedly, and just as excitedly as the men. These actions are in keeping with the commandment which says, And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes upon your feet, and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat it in haste; it is the Lord's Passover (Ex. 12:11). While they are hastily tearing the meat from the bones with one hand, they are holding in the other hand, a roll of unleavened bread, in which is wrapped some sort of herb. They alternately take a bite of meat and then a bite from this roll of bread, for they must obey the commandment, And they shall eat the flesh in that night, roast with fire, and with unleavened bread and with bitter herbs shall they eat it (Ex. 12:8).

During the eating of the lambs, and after they have finished, they are very careful not to let any of the flesh drop to the ground, and what is dropped, and what remains uneaten, is carefully gathered up, and "burned with fire." for There shall no stranger eat thereof (Ex. 12:43).

After the lambs are consumed, and the residue is burned, the Samaritans go to their tents, shut the doors, and remain within the tent until sunup on the following morning. Then they make a pilgrimage to the sacred rock, upon which they claim Abraham offered Isaac, where another short service is conducted, and the ceremony of the Passover is at an end. We did not remain upon the mountain until the morning service, for the part of the Passover which followed so closely the Biblical description, closed the night before, when just before midnight, they went into their tents and closed the doors.

This has been but a bare description of the Passover, as we saw it. Many of the interesting details must necessarily be omitted because of time and space. But if this short description has served in some way to arouse in you the emotions which it did in us, as we realized that we were looking upon the execution of an ordinance that was instituted by Jehovah himself, then this article shall not have been in vain.

SUFFICIENT MINISTERS

But as Charlotte Bronte wrote, "There are some consolations . . . too fine for the ear not fondly and forever to retain their echo; caressing kindnesses—loved, lingered over through a whole life, recalled with unfaded tenderness, and answering the call with undimmed shine, out of that raven cloud foreshadowing Death himself." No man can speak those consolations as can the preacher. The vision sustaining humanity's ideals and endeavors may draw from many springs; but the only stream by which its sorrows may be tranquilized to strength and patience is that which proceeds out of the throne of God. In Matthew Arnold's words, "The Cross still stands, and in the straits of the soul makes its ancient appeal." And life, bewildered, broken, lonely amid its memories and hysterical among its hopes, knows no figure as authentic as the spokesman of the Cross.—From the book "Sufficient Ministers," by Joseph M. M. Gray. Published by The Abingdon Press.

LIKE FLOWERS

Christians are like the several flowers in a garden, that have each upon them the dew of heaven, which, being shaken with the wind, they let fall dew at each other's roots, whereby they are jointly nurtured and become nourishers of each other.—John Bunyan.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Silences of Jesus

By S. C. Henderson

TEXT—"HE ANSWERED HIM NOTHING." Luke 22:9

We have all been impressed with the matchless swords of Jesus. They are so full of wisdom and beauty. We have learned to love them. They are spirit and they are life. Some may be likened to white glistening pearls of great price. Others sparkle with the iridescence of diamonds. Others still are like apples of gold and pictures of silver. In parable and paradox the Master speaks his mighty messages of truth. Here is the Golden Rule for our manner of living with our fellow men; there is THE Way, the Truth and the Life for our salvation; the precious promises for broken and troubled hearts. We may say with them of old time, "Never man spake as he has spoken. We do not wonder that the common folk heard him gladly. He said, My words they are spirit and they are life." His words are enduring for he makes testimony, "Heaven and earth will pass away but my words shall not pass away."

BUT THERE WERE GREAT IMPRESSIVE SILENCES IN HIS LIFE AS WELL AS WORDS. These silences are of no less importance than his words. They are full of meaning. We dare not pass them by unheeded because each have its own peculiar message for his followers. Perhaps we would like to have heard the Master's words on some of the mighty perplexing problems that have puzzled the minds of men in subsequent days. But outside the realm of the spiritual he did not venture. But if you will study his silences you will find them as expressive in wisdom and emulation as his words.

The words which we men and women use are not always the most eloquent. Sometimes actions have spoken louder than words. Old Thomas Carlyle wrote,

"Silence is as deep as eternity, and speech as shallow as time."

Perhaps a very common fault is that we all talk too much. During the war, the soldier boys' letters were censored. Many words and lines were blotted out, because they told too much. The newspapers found that their press reports were curtailed and expurgated rigidly because they gave too much information to the enemy. It was a lesson in careful and cautious speech. In one of the army camps they posted up a notice like this:

"A WISE OLD OWL SAT IN AN OAK,
THE MORE HE SPOKE THE LESS HE HEARD, AND THE LESS HE SPOKE THE MORE HE HEARD,
LET US BE LIKE THE WISE OLD BIRD."

Our president is known as "Silent Cal." That is because he has the happy faculty of keeping silent. The other day, we served on a committee where there were several prominent business men of our city. I noted that in the discussion of a certain important problem, that these men kept silent, while others did the talking. Their silence spoke with weight of reserve and disapproval. It spoke at the decisive moment, more strongly than words.

The story is told of a youth that was sent to old Socrates to be taught oratory. On meeting the wise old man, the youth kept up such an unceasing talk that the old philosopher got out of patience with him. When the bargain was struck, he found that Socrates had charged him double. The youth protested, but the teacher replied, "I find that I must teach you two arts—one how to use your tongue and the other how to hold it." The world is still in need of teachers that will teach men how to hold their tongues as well as to use them. It was James, the Lord's brother, who wrote about putting a bridle on the tongue. James knew about the decorum of silence and meditation. I know some folks who think that noise is the manifestation of power and the essence of logic. But old Elijah found God not in the fire, nor in the tornado, nor the earthquake but in the still small voice. It was not in the noise of Pharaoh's court but in the still open spaces of the desert of Midian that God first talked with Moses. It was in the wilderness that the Lord himself met the tempter and overcame him. Paul after his conversion went away into Arabia to think on the mysteries of the Gospel.

IN REVIEWING THE SILENCES OF JESUS, LET US FIRST NOTE HIS SILENCES OF DELIBERATION. You will remember the incident of when the message came that Lazarus was sick at Bethany. He seems to ignore the message. Three days pass and then he finally says to his disciples "Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." "Yes," reply the disciples, "If he sleep he will rest from the fever." Then he tells them that the youth named Lazarus is dead. He keeps the real purpose in the background of his delay, until he calls the dead man to come forth from the tomb. Silence had accomplished an establishment of faith in a far greater impression than many creeds and confessions could. It was done that they might believe in him as the Christ.

Again and again he employs deliberative silence in his work. He does not advertise himself in luring headlines. He makes no ado over what he is about to do. His method of work was spontaneous and unheralded. Many folks love to keep their doings before the people and strive for popular applause in a loud and vociferous manner. But Jesus held the people in the better way. He always kept them in suspense and he kept them interested. They wondered what he would do next, or what he would say next. Perhaps we are often foiled in our manner of advertising. We promise big things and folks are disappointed. We fail to measure up to what is down on the bill.

AGAIN JESUS USED SILENCE AS A FORCE OF ARGUMENT, WHERE WORDS WERE POWERLESS TO BRING THE DESIRED RESULT. One of the seemingly strange and unnatural occurrences in his ministry was the excursion into the coastal plain of Tyre and Sidon. You will recall that it was here, he was besought by the Syrian woman to heal her little daughter. "AND HE ANSWERED HER NOTHING." He seemed so cold and unsympathetic! So very unlike the Lord we know and have read about in the rest of the Gospels! Here he is face to face with a mother's love—the most holy and sacred loves of human-kind. He takes the attitude of cold chilling silence. But this mother is not repelled by it. Her love for the little daughter is far too deep and strong for that. She persists by casting herself at his feet in the dust and praying him to have mercy and heal her offspring. Then he says, "I AM NOT SENT, BUT TO THE LOST SLEEP OF THE HOUSE OF ISRAEL (?) I am thinking that the Lord's cold attitude is telling on the disciples. Even through their cynical race hatred there was a feeling of human sympathy going out to this mother and her little child. They heard the woman's despairing cry. What true man could turn a deaf ear to it? "Lord, help me." In it there is agony, disappointment and tears. But Jesus answers, "It is not meet to take away the children's bread and cast it to the dogs." She is not repelled by the reflection of being a dog—even a dog loves its puppies. "Yes, Lord, if not bread then even the crumbs that fall from the children's table! The disciples were beginning to see the point. They were bigoted Jews. Their Master was of that race, and they felt that he was all their own. Their race antipathy and scorn made them consider all alien folks as unclean dogs. Jesus had been silent on the great defect of racial pride. He had not dared to use it in Galilee, or Judea. But at this incident humanitarian pity for this Gentile mother and her helpless sick child had touched their hearts with sympathy that makes all the world akin. Yes Jesus, had seemed so unkind and unfeeling, that even a stiff Pharisee would have ventured to have forgotten his pride and would have given pity. Then Jesus, seeing the impression made upon his disciples, HEALED THE CHILD and COMMENTED, "SO GREAT A FAITH I HAVE NOT FOUND EVEN IN ISRAEL." The silence was greater and more impressive than words. No teaching on Race Prejudice he might have given, could have taught these men that the Gentile woman was not a dog. Our Lord had played his silent role. They saw with their own minds that a Gentile was even capable of faith. It was a thing to ponder over. It was something that was to become a truth and a conquering dynamic in the afterdays of the church. That they were to teach all nations. His silence was a convicting argument.

Again we find the Lord using SILENCE AS A DISAPPROVAL. There is a silence of consent and a silence that gives condemnation. We can lie with a silence the same as we can with words. We can keep silent when we ought to speak in the defence of truth. WE CAN ALSO USE SILENCE AS CONDEMNATION. In that group of business men the other day, I saw the silence of disapproval. They literally froze out the opposition. I was reading the other day of a preacher who was addressing a group of men. He thought that he would use their patriotism to conjure with, so he indulged in applauding war. He was expecting to be greeted by applause. But there was no applause. A dead and repressive silence followed, demonstrating that his audience was not with him, and their silence disapproved of what he said.

You remember how the sinful woman was brought to Jesus by the Pharisees, who were seeking to trap him. Moses said that such as she should be stoned, but what would he say? Not a word did Jesus say, stooping down, he wrote on the ground. Silence—his inquisitors felt that now for once he was in their trap, he was in a dilemma. They pressed him for his answer. Then he slowly raised his head and said, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone." Then he bowed down and wrote again in the dust. Silence! Silence! Like when you can hear the tick of the clock in the night! One by one they slipped away condemned, conscience-stricken and defeated, by the silence of Jesus.

AGAIN JESUS WAS SILENT ON SUBJECTS BEYOND HIS AGE AND HUMAN KEN. What Jesus might have revealed to a Sir Isaac Newton, a Galileo, a Laplace, a Kelper, an Emmanuel Kant, if they could have had a personal interview with him! But Jesus remained silent on these things, that the ages were to reveal to man. He came to teach the Gospel and way of salvation and not that the earth was round or revolved about the sun, or that far away to the west lay the great continents of North and South America. That was not his mission, or purpose—neither could his age understand these things. Jesus never puzzled those poor fishermen with those things. Thomas was doubter enough, John was mystic enough, Peter was materialistic and visionary enough without them. So Jesus was silent, because they could not bear them, and it was not his mission. The Creator hid his many secrets here and there so that his prying children would get the pleasure of finding them out.

THEN JESUS WAS SILENT UPON THE THEMES OF THE SOCIAL WORLD. Slavery was a festering sore upon his age, yet he was seemingly silent upon it. But his Golden Rule and the royal law of Love was uncompromisingly in opposition to slavery. His was an age of despotism, yet he raised no revolt against kings and despots. Yet he said to his followers—"HE THAT WOULD BE GREAT, LET HIM BE A SERVANT OF ALL." "Call no man Rabbi," etc. His Gospel breathes out the spirit of true democracy. He did not directly declare himself against the evil of strong drink, yet HE DID SPEAK IN NO UNCOM-

PROMISING TERMS AGAINST LUSTS AND FLESHLY APPETITES OF THE WORLD. He taught that his subjects were not militaristic—that they that used the sword should perish with the sword. His was a message of Peace on earth, good will to men."

Again Jesus was silent on some of the deep mysteries that human Pandoras have been prying into. He was all too brief concerning the beauties of heaven. "IF I TOLD YOU OF EARTHLY THINGS AND YE BELIEVED NOT, HOW SHALL YE BELIEVE IF I TELL YOU OF HEAVENLY THINGS?" "I have many things to tell you but ye cannot bear them now." "If it had been so I would have told you," he said. He wanted men to live their heaven here, so they would not be lonesome when they got there. It was enough to know that human intuition was true. He did not let men believe a lie by silence. He did not give us any Psycho-culture that we might bridge the fixed gulf between the two worlds. He did not tell men the exact date of the end of the age, or of his coming again, as so many deluded folks have professed to know since. He told his followers, "IT IS NOT FOR YOU TO KNOW THE TIMES AND SEASONS THAT THE FATHER HATH SET WITHIN HIS OWN POWER." Not even the Son knoweth. So he was silent on those things that he did not profess to know about.

FINALLY JESUS WAS SILENT UNDER ACCUSATION. We read, "But when he was accused of the chief priests he answered them nothing." He was silent before Governor Pilate, "He answered him not a word." He kept

PLACE SEEKERS—Matt. 20:20-28.

Place-seekers are those who seek position and prestige to satisfy their vanity or greed; but there is an ambition that is wholly legitimate—that seeks position only because of the service it makes possible.

TUESDAY

JESUS RESTORES SIGHT—Matt. 20:29-30.

The cry of these blind beggars was not heard in vain by him whose compassion was only equalled by his power, nor is he less willing or able to bestow his grace today upon those who are living in the darkness and misery of sin.

WEDNESDAY

A PROPHECY OF FINAL TRIUMPH—Matt. 21:1-11.

Though from a fickle crowd, Jesus was willing to receive from them this demonstration as foreshadowing his final triumph as the Prince of Peace when all nations shall place their wealth and glory at his feet

THURSDAY

CLEANSING THE TEMPLE—Matt. 21:12-17.

"This is a type of the work of Christ in the heart, in the church, and in the world, cleansing them from all sinful habits, customs, feelings and acts.—Peloubet.

FRIDAY

A CHALLENGE TO FAITH—Matt. 21:18-22.

"If ye have faith!" A living, vital faith! Ah, that has ever been man's weakness, and is now. We are marking time, or slipping back because we lack faith. What excuse have we for allowing anything to hinder us in the face of the challenging promise, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing?"

SATURDAY

HIS CRITICS CONFUSED—Matt. 21:23-27.

Jesus neither lost his head in rage by his heckling critics, nor did he cast pearls before swine by engaging in a fruitless controversy with them. He deftly stopped their mouths by throwing them into confusion. Bitter critics can never face poise and wisdom.

SUNDAY

FUTILITY OF MERE PROFESSION—Matt. 21:28-32.

You may confess Christ and enter your name on a church roll, but if you withhold obedience and service, your profession counts for nothing. Even the deep-dyed sinner who turns to God with love and obedience has more favor with God than you with your respectable, but disobedient life.—G. S. B.

his peace when arranged before Herod. "HE WAS LED AS A SHEEP TO THE SLAUGHTER, AND AS A LAMB BEFORE HER SHEARERS IS DUMB, SO HE OPENED NOT HIS MOUTH." At his trial and accusation when men accused him falsely and offered false testimony he kept silent. Not once did he show anger or resentment, nor did he lift his voice in his own behalf. It was not that he had naught to say that he held his peace. Bruce Barton says, "There are times when nothing a man can say is nearly so powerful as saying nothing. Every executive knows that instinctively. To argue brings him down to the level with those whom he argues; silence convicts them of folly." Once Dr. Talmage gave a young man who was being severely criticized and was seeking a course to pursue, this advice:

"Remember boy that silence is never so golden as when you are under fire. I know it for I have been there." Ole Bull, the great violinist, was once offered newspaper space in a big New York daily to reply to his critics. He said, "I think it best that they write against me, and I play against them." How true it is that if a thing is right it will prevail: there is nothing that can put it to confusion. It will plead its own cause. How many fail to see that silence is the best argument when under fire. It may be hard to bear. We may be tempted to break silence in defense, or with our fists. But silence is best. When Dr. Lyman Beecher was asked to reply to some of his enemies who were printing anonymous letters against him, he replied that he had once learned his lesson, that he was crossing a field one evening with an arm load of books, when he suddenly met a small animal that crossed his path, and he hurled one of the books at it, resulting in such a bad smell that he decided to let such animals alone hereafter. He gave good advice as many can testify. Nothing makes an enemy or critic so at a loss as to treat him with silence. He soon runs out of argument.

So Jesus was silent before his enemies. It was not the silence of ignorance or guilt, but the silence of prudence. We still need the lesson. Jesus was never more kindly and expressive than when he used silence as an impressive lesson to his followers. "AND HE ANSWERED HIM NOTHING."

Prayer

O Lord, guide our hearts and lips when and how to speak and when to refrain from speaking. Help us to be discreet with our lips before men that we may not sin against thee. Help us to be still before thee and know that thou art God. Amen. Fremont, Ohio.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Cleansing of the Temple

By Donald Bame

OUR SCRIPTURE

Then, as the Jewish Passover was near, Jesus went up to Jerusalem. In the Temple Courts he found those who were selling bullocks, sheep, and pigeons, and the bankers seated there. So he made a whip of cord, and drove all the sheep and bullocks out of the Temple Courts. He scattered the bankers' money, and overturned their tables, and said to the pigeon dealers:

"Take these things away. Do not turn my Father's House into a market-house." His disciples recollected that Scripture said—

"Zeal for thy House will consume me." Upon this the Jews asked Jesus:

"What sign are you going to show us since you act in this way?"

"Destroy this temple, was his answer." "and I will raise it up in three days."

"This temple," the Jews replied, "has been building for forty-six years and you are going to raise it up in three days?" But Jesus was speaking of his body as a temple. Afterwards, when he had risen from the dead, his disciples recollected that he had said this; and they believed the words of the scripture, and what Jesus had said (John 2:13 to 25—The Twentieth Century N. T.)

OUR MEDITATION

There are several points to be observed in this passage of Scripture. This is a passage which shows the unerring positiveness of the character of Jesus. He went to Jerusalem. He went to the temple, of course. He found the Jews defiling the temple with their earthly dealings. He made a whip. He drove out all the beasts and scattered the tables of the bankers. The action is swift and sure. Judging from the passage Jesus did not stop to ask why, when, or what, but he acted at once. He did not hesitate to consider, "What will the people think," nor did he attend to the protests, if there were any. He did not worry about whether the people would hurt him or not, but he went ahead with what he knew ought to be done. His action was decisive. Perhaps many of us could take this particular part of the example to heart, and thereby save ourselves needless faltering and wavering in similar times of stress calling for a decision.

Jesus had his mind made up; he did not need to quaver until he came to a resolution as to what was to be done. This fact alone undoubtedly helped to overawe the guilty men in the temple. They too knew they were wrong and Jesus' quick action was all that was needed to cause them to give in to being driven away. Decisive action on the part of the Christian is one of his most valuable aids in overcoming sin. The men in the temple were numerous enough to overcome Jesus if they had chosen to do so, but his action was so inevitably right that they could not resist. The danger of sin is put out of the way of the Christian in the same way; if he is firmly enthralled amid the security of his faith he is saved.

His disciples remembered, "Zeal for thy House will consume me." Matthew Henry takes this to mean (using the old version), that Jesus had such great zeal for the sanctity of the House of God that he was "eaten up with his emotion" to the extent that he forgot himself long enough to forcefully drive the offenders out of the temple. But we would rather agree with Rev. Frank Scott, who thinks that this quotation refers to the persons who desecrated the temple in the belief that they were doing right by making the exchanges handy for the people. He further warns us to be careful that we don't get zeal for God confused with our own stormy and tempestuous passion. In this connection he advises us that we must keep our zeal sternly under control so that we may regulate it and use it in a way that we are sure will please God.

"Destroy this temple," said Jesus, "and I will raise it up in three days." All commentators which we have consulted on this topic agree that by this statement Jesus meant by the "temple", the body. It is in this reference that another lesson crops out. Jesus drove the bankers out of the temple, and as he has done this, so can he drive the sin out of our lives. We have heard speaker after speaker say that the only way to conquer the human body is to let Christ have full sway. If we let Christ come into our lives he will not only help us to overcome sin, but if we give ourselves over to him completely he will remove from us the dangers of temptation by driving thought of evil out of our minds.

This is of supreme significance to the Christian. The fact the Christ can and does drive sin out of a person's life, providing the person is desirous of letting Christ have his life. For some it is the only hope; for others it is an additional blessing that Christ is able to work in men's lives so mightily today.

OUR PRAYER

Lord Jesus, help us to surrender our lives just now, and may we realize that thou art the One who is All-mighty. We know that if we give thee full sway in our lives thou wilt help us to overcome all evil and wilt give us fruitful and happy lives. Bless thy people everywhere just now. We pray in thine own dear Name. Amen.

Review: The Gospel of John

Devotional Reading—John 17:1-8.

Golden Text—These things are written that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name.—John 20:31.

LESSON I

The Son of God Becomes Man—The incarnation of the Son of God is the central, basic fact in Christianity, and the answer of the soul's deepest need and most persistent longing.

"Christ is not a word you observe, but the Word. Every prophet was a word of God. Every great or good man since the world began, who has added anything to the general fund of virtue or of truth, has been a word of God. Galileo was God's word to science. Luther was God's word to religion. But Christ was the Word—the full and complete thought of God—uttered once for all, expressing the very soul of God with such entire precision and finality, that of him it may be said, 'The Word was with God, and the Word was God' (Dr. J. W. L. Dawson).

Golden Text—And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten of the Father) full of grace and truth (John 1:14).

LESSON II

Five Men Believe on Jesus—Christian discipleship meant for Andrew, John, Peter, Philip and Nathaniel learning the divine way and endeavoring to walk in it. And what a wonderful change was wrought! Dr. Dawson says: "the disciples were humble persons, living ordinary lives, until they obeyed the call of Christ. The call of Christ, obeyed in absolute faith, has again and again produced an enormous enlargement of the uses and capacities of life in humble men. Grenfell is no one till he finds Christ; from that hour he moves upon the path of greatness. William Booth is no one till he obeys the call of Christ to larger service; from that moment the man grows in moral and intellectual stature, till he towers above his age. There is no telling to what greatness a man may grow if he will but yield himself utterly to the will of Christ, and of all adventures which may attract us there is no adventure so marvelous as following Christ."

Golden Text—Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world. John 1:29.

LESSON III

Jesus and Nicodemus—The New Birth is as essential to entrance into the spiritual kingdom as the physical birth is to the entrance into life. "Of water"—a reference to the necessity of the washing of repentance symbolized by the water of baptism. "Of the Spirit"—a reference to the need of a positive attachment of the inner life to an abiding source of moral help. When a man by repentance and faith has been born anew of water and of the Spirit, he has already entered the Kingdom of God."

Golden Text—God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life. John 3:16.

LESSON IV

Jesus and the Samaritan Woman—Spiritual worship is the ultimate goal of all our forms and ceremonies. The essential thing is not where God shall be worshipped, but how he shall be worshipped. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth."

Golden Text—With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation. Isaiah 12:3.

LESSON V

Jesus Feeds the Five Thousand—"The miracle was meant for a token of Christ's Messiahship, no doubt. But also it was the natural expression of his real loving care for man's bodily wants, and, in that aspect is, along with the other, quite invaluable. Also it was meant as a symbol. Jesus is the bread for men's souls. It is the task of the church to hold forth the bread of life to the whole

It is heartening to note that church school workers are diligently applying themselves to the great work before them. The task is so stupendous that an increasingly large number feel a sense of inability. In addition to reliance upon the Master Teacher for light and leading these conscientious workers are giving themselves to leadership training.

Waterloo, Iowa

During the last week of February a County School of Methods was held at Waterloo, Iowa, for the training of workers from the schools of Blackhawk County. This was the third school of the kind, and was said to have been the best. It certainly was splendid from almost every angle. The attendance was remarkably good. It was gratifying to see busy people come regularly and promptly for five nights, spending about three hours in close work each evening. It was particularly gratifying to observe that our Brethren folk were in the forefront. Mrs. Pauline Lichty Wisner, superintendent of our Waterloo school, was chairman of the executive committee. She was assisted by Brother Lester Miller, assistant superintendent at Waterloo school. Pastor Boardman was faithfully on the job. Brother L. A. Myers and three of his workers of Hudson were over every night, and completed their courses. The Brethren and the Church of the Brethren tied for second place in attendance. There were seven instructors; the writer had the privilege of conducting the course in Adolescence Psychology. It was a real pleasure to share in this school, to have closer contact with our Waterloo workers, and to see the First School in action on Sunday.

Birmingham

Enthusiasm for the rapidly approaching Birmingham Convention is becoming more intense. Reports from the International Office indicate that reservations are being made in increasing number, and that the full quotas will be taken. It is important therefore, that Brethren proceed without further delay to register with us. Later churches not having taken their full quota will be asked to surrender their unused credentials for the benefit of others who would like to go. We certainly will want our allotted ten. Rev. O. C. Starn, of Gratis, Ohio, has the honor of being the first to send check for $3.50 covering his credential fee. Others are following his good example.

Surprise Superintendent

The School of First church, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, has made possible the attendance at the International Convention, of their honored superintendent and his good wife. For forty-five years continuously, Brother Albert Trent has superintended one of the largest and best Sunday schools of the Brethren church. In recognition of his distinguished service, the school voluntarily presented him with a purse on the occasion of his seventieth birthday with the credentials and the request that Brother and Sister Trent avail themselves of the privileges of the Birmingham Convention. This certainly was a gracious and a generous act of those who have shared the benefit of the faithful services rendered by these splendid workers. Other schools in the brotherhood may want to follow this good example.

Young People Too

It should be noted that provision has been made for a Young People's Conference on the days of April 16 to 18. The Brethren church has been granted the privilege of sending ten delegates to this conference. Persons between the years of sixteen and twenty-four are eligible. Reduced railroad fares may be secured as in the case of the adults. Entertainment will be provided in the homes of Birmingham on the Harvard Plan. The registration fee is $1.50. This fee carries with it the privilege of attending the main sessions provided such request is made with the registration. Here is a fine opportunity for churches to do themselves a great service in selecting promising young people, and sending them to this great conference for vision and enthusiasm.

A Substitute Leader

By L. M. Stowell

(What a Christian Endeavor Boy's Courage Accomplished)

I was a boy of sixteen, living in a small village in Massachusetts. Our Christian Endeavor society of the church had established a custom of once a month of exchanging leaders with societies in nearby towns. This particular month my father was to represent us at the meeting in a church in a town across the river and about three miles distant the shortest way. There was no bridge unless we went seven miles down the river; but luckily this was in the winter, and the river had frozen hard enough to provide fairly safe crossing.

The Friday before the meeting, however, my father was called to nurse a sick friend, and soon realized that he could not leave to meet his scheduled appointment; so he asked me to notify our society president. I do not know what prompted me to do what followed, but after I told the president of my father's inability to represent the society at the appointed time I then asked if I could not substitute for him. Somewhat astonished, for he knew that I had never done more than read a Bible verse or other simple passage in the meetings, he said of course I could if I wished, he would be glad to have me.

So in the short time until Sunday evening I prepared for the meeting, and with a young man friend began the cold walk up-town to the bank of the river, and started across the quarter mile of ice. We crossed in safety, but slipped and fell occasionally in the slippery darkness, and eventually reached the church. We entered, and found a goodly number gathered and waiting, for we were a little late. After briefly introducing ourselves, for we were entire strangers, we began the meeting.

Well, it seems that the pastor of this church had literally built the entire organization. As a brick-mason he built the edifice with his own hands. He likewise through his great personality had recruited and developed a faithful following in the church, and in both cases it was observed that he had built well.

The response through the meeting was wonderful. It seemed that everything possible was being done to make the meeting fruitful and helpful; and as for the leader, he really had never experienced a happier and more joyous sensation, in contrast to the shaking and nervous manner in which he had gone to the pulpit platform an hour previously. The pastor congratulated us, especially after we had apologized for the substitute the society had been forced to send; and in general a most delightful atmosphere seemed to pervade the entire meeting.

Upon later return to our society I took a regular place on the leader's schedule, and for years afterward was active among the officers in the Christian Endeavor Societies of other towns and cities where my work called me, also while in college. I even preached in small community churches which had to depend upon the students when there were not enough funds to maintain a resident pastor, and even had an offer of one church and parsonage upon completion of my last term there.

This was all due to the encouragement received at that first meeting as my father's substitute. Yet it was first necessary to volunteer, and it must have been the heavenly Father who provided that opportunity and from whom the directing urge was inspired. I have often felt since that the later years of life have been and are a glorious reward for the courageous offer made at the age of sixteen by that scared and frightened son of a Christian father, as well as a very bashful and retiring youthful member of an earnest but small Christian Endeavor society in a rural church.—C. E. World.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for March 28)

Choosing Sides. Matt. 6:24; Acts 5:29

The sun shone smilingly over the long smooth cement walk. Mary Lou had the happiest thought. She wanted to have a nice long skating party with some of her chums until supper time. The day was one of those first pretty days in early spring when all boys and girls as well as grown folks like to be out enjoying themselves. But, another thought came to this little girl. She remembered that she had planned to go away that evening and that if she was to have her lessons for the next day, she must study them before supper. She must choose between having two happy hours of skating and having her lessons prepared for the next day. Which would you Juniors choose if you had Mary Lou's problem? It is not very easy, when we want to play and have a good time, to listen to that small voice within us that tells that we really ought to get our lessons. Mary thought things over very carefully to herself and this is what she decided to do. She said to herself, "I'll go in and study my lesson first and I'll see if I can get through with them in time to skate just a few minutes yet before supper." Then she went to work and fifteen minutes before supper time she was ready to have a nice skate down the street and back before she ate. She felt so good about having all her lessons studied that she enjoyed skating a lot more than she could have, if she had skated without studying first.

Mary Lou made the right choice. I wonder if we Juniors stop and try to think things out and to do the right thing when we have choices to make. Do you think about the work that must be done when you are tempted to play all day? If we try hard enough, we can choose the thing that we should do.

Do you know that little poem about the children who told their mother that they loved her and then instead of helping her the first two went off to play and left everything for her to do? You remember the third little girl, don't you? She, too, told her mother that she loved her, but instead of playing she went to work and helped her mother with the work. 'This little girl, I am quite sure thought about how nice it would be to go out and play, but she knew how much her mother had to do and she made the right choice, she chose to be a helper for her mother instead of just having a good time. We Junior boys and girls can choose rightly if we try. Let us try.

There are two kinds of lives that we, while we are still young, can plan to live. We can plan to live for ourselves. I mean by that, that we can plan to think always of our own happiness first. If we live this way, the thing that we will always be thinking about will be, what good will this thing do me? When someone asks us to give our spending money for missions we will say, "Why should I do that?" or "Will that help me any?" When we are asked to help someone who is sick or needs a friend, we will say, "Will I receive anything for doing that?"

Now the other kind of life is just the opposite of the above. If we choose the other kind of life, we will live for others. We will say to ourselves, "Will this thing that I wish to do help anyone?" or "Am I doing this just for my own happiness when I might be helping someone else to have a happy life? You know the name of this kind of living, don't you? When we decide to live for others and try always to think of others more than ourselves as Jesus did, then we are being Christians. So, while we are still very small boys and girls we can make the choice between living Christian lives and living selfish lives, just for ourselves. We have to make this choice either of the one or the other, some time. In one of our scripture references for this week we find that Jesus says, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." This means that we can not serve God and still live for our own pleasures. Mammon means riches. In other words, Jesus is telling us that we must make a choice. We want to choose to serve God, so let's choose while we are still small and have long lives that we can live for him.

Now, there is one thing that I want to try to explain about this idea of choosing to live for others rather than ourselves. I do not want you to think that we are not to be happy. Do you Juniors know that we can be happier when we are making others happy than we can when we are thinking about trying to be happy ourselves? This is rather hard to understand. You will just have to try it. See if you are not happier when you have given someone else a good time than when you have spent a lot of time trying to have a good time with your toys and games all by yourselves.

We want to choose to be Christians and to

What Christianity Has Wrought in Japan

A Tribute by a Japanese Editor

The following tribute to the place and power of Christianity in Japan, not by a minister or missionary as the sentiment expressed might indicate, but by a non-Christian Japanese editor, is of the utmost significance to all interested in the triumph of Christianity in the heathen world, and should result in strengthening our courage and confidence as we face our particular part of the task of world evangelization, as we are now called upon to do. The story is practically the same the world around, wherever the Gospel of Christ is given to the people it saves the souls of men and gives them the peace and satisfaction that is everywhere sought but nothing else can supply, and at the same time it elevates the nation, regenerates its customs and ennobles its ideas. Its leavening influence is beginning to show in South America, where the genuine article has been introduced. It is even enlightening the heathen darkness of central Africa. And the tribute paid to Dr. Mott and to the elevating power of Christianity is but typical of the praise that is everywhere being given to Gospel heralds and his message, except of course, Mr. Mott is one of the most outstanding leaders of Christianity in the world. But the evaluation of Christianity is the important thing, and of this the keen-eyed editor is cognizant. It is such a universally satisfying and all-sufficient and powerful Gospel that we are called upon to do our part in propagating, particularly in two fields—the Argentine and French Equatorial Africa.

We are indebted to Dr. Howard B. Grose for the communication of this editorial, written by Mr. S. Sheba, editor-in-chief of "The Japan Times and Mail," one of Tokio's great native dailies. The occasion that inspired the comment was the arrival of Dr. Mott on his sixth visit to Japan. Says Mr. Sheba:

"Dr. John R. Mott, in whose honor dinner was given by Viscount Shibusawa, Baron Sakatani and others in combination with the Tokyo Y. M. C. A., requires no introduction as he is a well known figure in Japan. He is here, indeed, on his sixth visit, as an old friend of the country, always in its interest. We are glad that our social leaders are doing him the honor, none deserving more genuinely than he the gratitude of this country for substantial good done to it, as on the occasion of the earthquake catastrophe of 1923. However, he is a man above desiring to have praises sung, although we do not think that Dr. A. B. Schneider, President of the Tohoku Gakuin, exaggerated in the least when he spoke of Dr. Mott at a reception held at the Kaibin Hotel, Kamakura, on Tuesday, 'as the greatest religious leader at present in the world,' than which a finer tribute cannot be paid.

Dr. Mott's present visit on these shores is especially interesting, indeed gratifying, as it is said to be in response to the invitation of the National Christian Council of Japan, which wishes to have his opinion on the questions of the service that the Japanese Christians may render to the world and of services the world's Christians may render to Japan. We have no doubt that Dr. Mott has liberally benefitted his hosts with valuable counsel, so that the Japanese delegates to the World Christian Evangelization Congress at Jerusalem in 1927 may know what to say and how to act. For our part, we take the present opportunity to put on record our view, as a non-Christian independent observer, of what Christianity and Christianity and Christians have done to this country."

Says he:

"It is common enough to say that Japan has won her present place in the world through her prowess at arms, as if mankind had no criterion for judging the greatness of a people but the brute instinct to kill each other. No, that is not the only criterion, nor yet the main criterion. There is a higher standard, indeed, the highest standard, namely the quality of civilization. What is it that has given Japan her present civilization? It may be claimed that Japan has had centuries of oriental civilization, that has prepared her to rise to a higher plane of humanity and enlightenment. But no amount of sophistry will hide the fact that it is the Christian workers and Christian civilization that have lifted Japan above the darkness of old ideas and backward customs and put her on the path of progress and higher culture.

"Modern Japan may have been an apt pupil; but she has had her days of tutelage and her tutors have been neither Buddhists nor Confucianists, but the Christians with their Christian civilization. Thirty years ago we had extraterritoriality removed, not because we had our own enlightened judiciary system, but because we went heart and soul into mastering and adopting the Christian system and ideas of justice. We are today received to all practical purposes, (except alas, in emigration question), as equals in the most advanced centers of the world's civilization, and that not because we are the descendants of people of the highest bravery, with a noble code of chivalry, but because we have succeeded in assimilating the Christian standard of ethics and morality as well as Christian good manners.

"Let us ask then who it was that taught us in this struggle for uplifting ourselves. The answer is perfectly simple. The Christians and Christian ideas of love, humanity, justice and propriety, therefore, Christianity. Japanese Christians professing their belief in the Bible and going to churches may not be very large; but the Japanese men and women who think as good Christians do without knowing it and are propagating and acting up to Christian ideas are innumerable. In fact it may be said, without exaggeration, that if Christianity as a religion be making but a slow progress in Japan, the Christian ideas may be said to have already conquered the country.

"Take the Christmas festival, for instance; it is fact becoming a national institution, the traditional idea of celebrating the anniversary of the birth of the Lord of Peace appealing strongly to the Japanese sentiments. In Tokyo, at all events, the Christmas season has become one of rejoicing and fraternity. Or take fiction and magazine and newspaper articles for popular reading; in Japan, one cannot help being astonished to see to what extent their writers are guided by Christian ideas.

"For this Christian conquest, of which we are not ashamed, we must admit that we owe it to Christian workers, foreign and Japanese, especially workers like those who are represented by our great visitor, now in our midst. We sometimes think that these workers would be the more welcome to us and accomplish more if they did not talk so exclusively of religious topics. None the less we cannot deny that they are doing us a world of good. These are our plain but frank words of welcome to Dr. Mott."

"Out in the Bush"

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Calif.,

March 17, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

A letter from Miss Myers has just reached "The Sky-Parlor," written from "Out in the Bush"—if you can picture what that means! Miss Myers and Miss Cope (the bride-to-be), went on an itinerating trip together, out in the wilds! We here at home, in the midst of the civilization of cities—electric lights, paved streets, and "all conveniences"—can scarcely realize the surroundings and the sensations which these two women must have had as they traveled alone through the jungles and wilderness of the Heart of Africa. But even though among wild beasts and with no persons for miles and miles except those people black of skin (and some of them blacker still of heart), they were kept safely and in perfect peace—yea, more than that, they had the "joy unspeakable," and left joy behind them as they traveled on!

Miss Myers writes that their journey this time took them among a wild tribe which had recently resisted the authority of the French government and had to be subdued by force of arms. These two lone women found much work for their hands to do, and as they bound up the wounds received by these savages in their warfare with the French, they told them "the old, old story of Jesus and his love."

Did we say that they were alone? That reminds us of those three Hebrew children who were cast into the fiery furnace,—but the Son of God walked with them through the fire! Even so it was "Out in the Bush"—the Son of God was with them and revealed himself through your two women missionaries, and four stalwart men were pricked to the heart by the "good news" of the One Who loved them enough to die for them. These four men came, confessing their sins of murder,—yes, of cannibalism even,—and expressed their hearts' desire to have this Savior for their very own!

Does such work pay, dear Members of the F. M. S.? Sometimes we count the cost in dollars and cents, and think in our hearts that we have given just about enough to Foreign Missions. But those who are giving their very lives, and are facing all the dangers, sacrificing all the comforts, losing health and shortening life—these say, "In all things, we are more than conquerors! If you folks at home could only see the need and realize the privilege of preaching the Gospel to those who have never heard it—nothing could hold you back in your giving!"

As a woman missionary once said, "Give until you feel it, and then give until you don't feel it!"

Yours in the Master's Service,
THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

TO THE INDIANA CHURCHES

Your district mission board has no other means of securing funds than by appealing to the churches of the district. And so to you we come. It is a sad fact that many of them have not paid their apportionment or any part of it this year. Now the Brethren church in our district has a great opportunity. The Macedonian Call is coming to us from some of the larger cities of the district. We are now trying to answer this call which is coming from Fort Wayne, Indiana. We are purchasing property, and Brother J. L. Kimmel, one of our most reliable and experienced mission workers, is going to take up the work. Fort Wayne is one of our fast growing cities to which many Brethren people are going, and these will be a total loss to our church unless we establish a church there, and this can be done without any burden upon us if each will only contribute a small amount each year.

Can we rest easy in our own churches on Sunday when we know there are numbers who would like to worship in a Brethren church in these places, but cannot because there are none to go to? Many of our mission pastors have to wrestle with financial problems to keep the wolf from the door, when they ought to be giving that time to the church. Brethren, this ought not to be. It is the case because we have failed to measure up to the standard. What are we going to answer to our God when we come before the judgment bar with this guilt upon us? Now the burden is not grievous if each one will only pay their apportionment which is the small sum of 60¢ per member, we can relieve these pastors of some of their burden and reach out and do some extensive work. We can only do what you make it possible for us to do. We are patiently waiting for your check which is needed now.

There may be some who would like to give a check for the Fort Wayne work. If so please tell us and we will see that it finds its proper place.

C. A. STEWART, Secretary.

FIRST BRETHREN—PHILADELPHIA

Rainy days can be happy days, in fact the happiest day ever at the Philadelphia church was a rainy, a freezing winter day, that ended with thunder and lightning. But it requires more than rain or cold to frustrate so complete a victory as that which was won on February 14, 1926.

For one year God's people had been praying, planning and working to raise sufficient money to clear off the mortgage on the Philadelphia church. On February 14, 1926, we agreed to trust God to send the needed funds so that on February 14, 1926 we might meet and burn the mortgage. During that year many of our members learned some precious lessons in self-denial. Old overcoats were forced into another year's service by several consistent Christians who realize that "trusting" and "doing" are twin brothers. One woman told me that her husband had called her to account for having bought no new clothing lately. He was told that he need not expect to see her in a new dress until her pledge money was paid.

With such consistent trusting and doing, upheld by such a mighty heavenly Father, of course we sent that old mortgage clear out of sight. We ourselves saw it go. Brother Harry Cassel put the match to it and while it burned the audience stood and sang, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." Over $8,000 was raised which was enough to pay the mortgage and the interest which had accrued during the past year, leaving enough to renovate the main auditorium.

February 14, 1926 was indeed a most notable day and we wasted not a minute of it. Sunday school began at 10 A. M., followed by morning worship. At 1 P. M. dinner was served to a crowd so large we had to spread the tables twice. Who says Brethren are afraid to come out in bad weather? At 2:30 P. M. we had our Jubilee Service—the service that we shall never forget. Supper was served at 6 P. M., after which we had a union Christian Endeavor service. Then followed our regular evening service completing a twelve-hour season of rejoicing with the Lord. But even twelve hours proved not long enough for we find ourselves still rejoicing.

RUTH A. BLUE,
Corresponding Secretary.

REVIVAL AT WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Brethren church at Washington, D. C. is happy to report the success of its revival campaign which closed in victory Sunday night, March 7. Dr. William S. Bell, pastor of the First Brethren church, Dayton, Ohio, was the man whom we were fortunate to procure to lead this special series of meetings.

Long before Dr. Bell arrived in the city, plans had been laid, prayers had been offered and intensive work had been done in the church and community, preparatory to his coming. So when the evangelist appeared he found the church waiting for a great meeting.

At the very outset, Monday night, February 15, Dr. Bell began to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ in a straightforward manner. He wasted no time on preliminaries of any kind, but set to work to present the claims of Jesus Christ upon the souls of men. The sermons were plain, uncompromising and convincing. Christ, our Lord, was exalted, so that none could fail to see him. From the very beginning of the meeting there was good interest, a fine spirit manifest and a good attendance. The weather also was good which added to the farther opportunities of the three weeks.

The first break in the services came on the first Sunday, when two young women took their stand for Christ. From then on conviction increased. Ten came forward from the Sunday school upon Decision Day. The last week of the campaign was replete with blessing. Not only were the unsaved brought to Christ, but the church itself was stirred to more fervent endeavor. The closing day was really the climax. Many came forward and yielded themselves for the first time. A beautiful service closed the meetings. The church was crowded, interest was evident and Dr. Bell delivered a challenging and convicting message on the subject, "How Shall We Escape, if We Neglect?" In response to the invitation that was extended, nine individuals came forward. This made a total of thirty-two, including reconsecrations and first time confessions. Fifteen have already been baptized and received into the fellowship of the church. More are ready for the following mid-week service. We thank God for this victory. We believe the spirit of evangelism has been awakened within the church, and that many more will profess their faith in him in the weeks that are ahead. Dr. Bell left us for Dayton, immediately following the close of the service. He left with a place of sincere regard in the hearts of the people because of his untiring efforts among them.

One of the most gratifying and encouraging aspects of our meeting was the loyalty of the young people who volunteered their services in singing and personal work. Such loyal service is highly commended by the pastor, and speaks well for the future of our work here. There were sixty-five young people present at the last Christian Endeavor meeting and a splendid inspirational service was enjoyed.

Washington Brethren rejoice in the glorious victories thus gained and by their impetus we hope to press on for "the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

HOMER A. KENT, Pastor.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Enrollment

The enrollment of the school this year is very encouraging and I am sure that the friends of the College will take pardonable pride in the general growth experienced within the year:

First Semester:
Arts College	251
Seminary	49
Second Semester:
Arts College	241
Seminary	43
Loss first semester	32
Gain second semester	16
Total, without duplicates	316
Resident extension	39
Saturday	67
Enrollment in Voice	50
Total all college	422
In Piano	64
In Violin	30
In Expression	10
Total, without duplicates	512

I think you will agree that 512 is not exactly a small school and if we were to have them all here at any one time, they would fill our chapel three times and over. We sustain no preparatory courses so that the total listed at 422 contains the name of no student who is not the graduate of a first grade high school.

Ashland held a double debate this past week with Baldwin-Wallace on the child labor amendment question but without decision at either place. Our men did well and we are of the opinion that we won at least in one case.

Word has been received at the College from Dr. Miller. He expressed himself as well and also hoped that the College is prospering and making large plans for the future.

Dr. Shively spent several days at Manchester College in order to acquaint himself with their methods of handling their finances, endowments, etc.

Several of our students have been sick, three returning to their homes but nothing serious has developed.

The Annual meeting of the College Board takes place March 16 and I hope to report later that we have planned on a big program for the future of the college. Prospects are so encouraging that now seems to be a time to plan for further advances.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

MILLEDGEVILLE, ILLINOIS

It has been a considerable time since a report has been sent in from the Milledgeville church. The reporter for the Evangelist has not been well for quite a while, so we will take it upon ourselves to write a report this time.

The work of the church here has not been at a standstill even if we have failed to get quarterly reports into the Evangelist. Every church has its own difficulties. They may be peculiar to the particular church and they may be such as are common to church work everywhere. For the most part the attendance has been very good. The Gospel has been set forth in the various services. The one thing the pastor regrets is that there have been no additions to the membership thus far. Our evangelistic effort is planned for March 21st to April 4th, inclusive. We are attempting this special effort with the local workers entirely. We crave your prayers that God may bless our efforts.

The Woman's Missionary Society is very active and accomplishing a great deal in their field of work. Doubtless they will be able to give a commendable report of their work along all lines when the time comes for that report to be given. The pastor is especially thankful for the large group of intercessors in the society. Beyond doubt such a group is a greater strength than one can possibly know, both to the local work and to the general work of the church.

I must not forget to say that there has been a rather large and active Sisterhood of Mary and Martha organized since last report. They have made and sent close to two hundred and fifty bandages to the African field. It is a little doubtful whether they will be able to reach all of the goals because of not being organized until after the beginning of the year. However prospects are that they will measure up during the time that they have been organized. Watch them grow.

The superintendent of the Sunday school has been doing some re-organization work since coming into office the first of October. The school was doing a splendid work in the months and years before. It is now organized, as near to a standard of grades as we know how to make it. Attendance has been on the increase. We hope and pray that the Lord will see fit to add to the Sunday schools from week to week, for through this source comes our greatest number of additions to the church, as we all well know.

The Christian Endeavor has been uniformly well attended most of the time. It too has taken some new steps in the past few months. One of the most noted changes is that of the adoption of the pledge system for the raising of the necessary finances to conduct the affairs of the Society. In one month this system has changed the society from an indebted institution to one with a credit to its account. Then too it is training for the future church. In all the branches of the work here there are some difficulties. We praise the Lord for what has been done and confidently expect to be led into even greater accomplishments for him. We rejoice in the victories of other places in the brotherhood and invite you to rejoice with us. We pray for his blessing upon the work throughout the brotherhood and invite you to pray with and for us.

Notes on the Sunday School Lesson

world. The church has enough to feed the world (Dr. J. M. MacLaren).

Golden Text—Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall not hunger, and he that believeth on me shall never thirst. John 6:35.

LESSON VI

Jesus Heals and Saves a Blind Man—This miracle is typical of Jesus' power to give spiritual sight. Dr. Tarbell states that its significance lies in the two-fold fact that Jesus "brought spiritual enlightenment to those who, like this man, realized their need of him, and he increased the blindness of those who, like the Pharisees, believed not in him nor in their need of a Messiah."

Golden Text—I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. John 8:12.

LESSON VII

Jesus the Good Shepherd—Dr. Lyman Abbott tells us that "A door is not merely to be admired; it is an entrance way. Christ is the Door by which we enter in unto God; he is the Door by which God enters in unto us." "I am the good shepherd."—With these words Jesus changes the figure of himself as the Door to himself as the Good Shepherd. "I know mine own and mine own know me even as the Father knoweth me, and I know the Father." Here he expresses the depth of love existing between himself and his disciples.

Golden Text—I am the good shepherd, the good shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep. John 10:11.

LESSON VIII

Jesus Raises Lazarus from the Dead—The soul's yearning for immortality is given its strongest assurance in the declaration of Jesus, "I am the resurrection and the life." He thus asserts his supernatural character and divine relation to life. Next he declares that it is possible for him to communicate to dying and dead men a life that triumphs over death, that laughs at change. And then he states that the condition on which he gives to dying men his immortal life is trust in him.

Golden Text—I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he die, yet shall he live. John 11:25.

LESSON IX

Jesus Teaches Respect for Law—While discharging the duties imposed upon them by human conditions, men must never lose sight of the duties imposed upon them by the relationship of God.

With regard to the Eighteenth Amendment, the uncertainty is not whether national prohibition shall become an American institution. That is already decided. It is how rapidly America shall move toward universal observance of a principle that has been written into her charter, and through this to a civilization that will inevitably set a new mark in human attainments."

Golden Text—Think not that I came to destroy but to fulfill. Matt. 5:17.

LESSON X

Jesus Washes his Disciples' Feet—Then he poured water into a basin and began to wash them with the towel wherewith he was girded. Dr. G. F. Knight has said, "A daily cleansing I must have for daily sin, and daily grace is as needful to me as daily bread." How more beautifully and impressively could this universal need be continually borne home to the Christian's heart than by the observance of the ordinance of feet washing?

Golden Text—The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. Matt. 20:28.

LESSON XI

Last Words of Jesus with his Disciples—"Heaven sometimes seems distant and unknown, but if he who made the road thither is our Guide, we need fear to lose the way. We do not want to see far ahead—only far enough to discern him and to trace his footsteps" (Dr. Henry van Dyke).

Golden Text—I am the way, the truth and the life. John 14:6.

LESSON XII

Jesus Dies and Rises from the Dead—Jesus Christ has finished his part of God's work on earth; are we doing our part? On a crucifix in an eastern monastery are inscribed these words: "Tot pro tu: quo pro me?" This much on thy part: how much on mine?"

Golden Text—Therefore doth the Father love, because I lay down my life that I may take it again. John 10:17.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

It is not really time for us to report, but we are in somewhat of an unsettled state just now. This church is caught in one of the most notable bank scandals in the history of the state of Kansas. The lowest depositor up to the highest lost all they had, where all the bonds and money, and even homes have been mortgaged that the owners knew nothing about. The financial strength of Bethel are heavy losers. It is not alone the Bethel church, but all the churches are caught in the same boat.

Weather conditions have hindered our attendance, but February 28 we had 75 at service; March 7, 60. We are not bounding, but coming. WE ask your prayers to the end that the Bethel church might remain steady in fellowship with God even in her financial losses. The writer is asking through the Evangelist for information where he might locate a good

There are ferns in the garden of the soul as well as flowers. There is the fern of patience, and the fern of long-suffering, and the fern of meekness. And the great Gardener of the soul delights in the ferns, and purposes to save them from destruction by "the garish day," and so he takes us into the shade, the shade of disappointment, or the shade of sorrow, or the shade of seeming defeat. But it is a very blessed shadow, for it is "the shadow of the Almighty." And here the ferns commentary. A number of old ministers are going home to glory, leaving their libraries behind, and some have no sons or relatives that want to use their books. And new books are very high, and those books would be just as good if we could find them.

Address your information to the writer, state your price and what books you have. We will also pay transportation of books that we can use.

MID-WINTER REVIVAL AT PORTIS

At the January business meeting of the church, plans were discussed for a mid-winter revival at Portis, and the members in general felt the need of the meetings. The principle barrier to pass was finances for an evangelist and the meetings. It was finally decided to use home talent throughout; thereby lessening the cost of the campaign.

At the call of the church Rev. Deeter consented to do the preaching and plans were completed for the meetings to be held, beginning February 14, and continuing two full weeks and ending Sunday night, February 28. Professor H. C. Wimmer, of the local high school, a very efficient song conductor, also consented to lead the choir.

There was much enthusiasm concerning the meetings, and everyone seemed willing to help and hungered for the messages which our most sincere pastor delivered. The messages were an inspiration to all and helped many to see better things in their path, and inspired them to greater heights. Rev. Deeter drew marvelous word pictures, which were so plain and sincere that one could not help gleaning good from them and see the better way. The pastor specially emphasized the Scripture, "He that taketh the name of the Lord thy God in vain, will not be held guiltless." In his sermon, "Just Ole Cusses", Rev. Deeter showed and pictured the sin and wrong in the use of profanity. This sermon was of an extraordinary type, straight to the point, and delivered with such power and sincerity that it had a strong effect on many. It is often the unusual and novel that takes effect and arouses one to action, and this sermon was of that type. The good of this sermon alone can be seen about town, as evidenced in business houses, where the use of profanity is prohibited.

Another of the pastor's principal sermons was, "Is There a Hell?" Again he gave a word picture and evidence that touched the hearts of many. The discussion brought in recent developments along that subject, and of the stand taken by some men widely known, that there is no hell.

Rev. Deeter's closing sermon, "The Judgment", was exceptionally vivid. He spoke to a packed house and many went away resolved to do better. The pastor took a firm stand against dancing, profanity, and card playing and showed the end of the path such things lead to.

In general, everyone was benefited by the meetings and it was a great success, not alone from the numbers that confessed Christ, but that everyone realized that they shall reap what is sown. There were seven confessions during the meetings and nine taken into the church on Monday evening, March 1. Although roads were impassable a part of the time and weather not of the best, the attendance for each night averaged nearly 125 people; which was mighty good considering conditions.

Much praise is due Rev. Deeter for his work and sincere efforts during the meetings.

JOHN LEO TURNER.

RACKET, WEST VIRGINIA

I have been impressed for some time to send report of our existence here, and after reading the editorial in Evangelist No. 9, this impression became strong enough that pencil and paper were taken in hand. The article spoke of our slow gain as a church, and of the neglect of children; this no doubt is true in both cases, but I am sure our gain as a church would show quite a difference if the fragments that remain were gathered, that nothing be lost. I have sent in report of our congregation here at Racket several times, but it seems to have failed to reach the Brethren Annual, possibly went to its own company. (the waste basket). I have also reported names of ministers that have been dropped from the list, that are still active and in good standing, but fail to see them numbered with the just, I have wondered who reported them dead, or what it was that moved the one taking statistics to drop them.

And to mend the matter, and give us quite a send off, I notice in the last Brethren Annual we were elected by a big majority and placed in the uncertain corner.

It seems to be no trouble for the secretary of the Home and Foreign Missionary societies to find us, also the Brethren Home; our donations seem to go to the spot and are worth one hundred cents on the dollar, even if it is from a doubtful corner.

(Note—It should be stated in fairness to the editor of the Brethren Annual, who is the General Conference secretary, that he is dependent on the District Conference secretaries for his list of churches and their pastors. Then the district conference secretaries, who, in many cases, are the statisticians, are dependent upon the prompt reporting of pastors to him. It may be that our good brother sent his report to the wrong party or address, or it may be that he sent it too late to be incorporated. The General Conference secretary waited long, after making repeated requests for data to make the Annual lists complete. Yet Brother Wright has a point, which Brother J. L. Kimmel also has often insisted upon, namely, that many of our members are never reported, so that our actual numbers are greater than they appear to be.—Editor).

Here is where a shortage is shown that really does not exist. But with all of this we are glad to say that we are willing to take of the crumbs that fall from the Master's table and have been progressing reasonably well, considering the many appeals the enemy has these days to draw people away.

Our gain last year was four, loss by death one; we lacked a few of the hundred mark, but are not going to wait till we have ninety and nine before we go after the stray sheep.

Now in order to show our faith by our works we herewith send a small donation for the Publishing House. I am sure the Lord that took account of the widow's two mites, and not even a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice, will place it where it belongs, and will drop no name from the Lamb's book of life without the ability to give a just and satisfactory reason.

Yours for a closer walk and higher plan.
N. D. WRIGHT.

The Silent Missionary

Rev. W. F. Jordon tells of an experience in Ecuador, just north of Quito. Arriving at a village where he put up for the night he was eating his evening meal when the mistress of the inn entered accompanied by a man of medium stature whom she introduced as her brother.

The man's name was De la Torre. When a young man he had gone to Quito to take an examination to become a school teacher. While there a friend brought a tract to him which proved to be the parable of the sower. The announcement on this tract stated that any one who might wish the entire Bible could secure it by writing the address. He wrote for the Bible and in due time received it. He read it, became a Christian and reared his family in the Christian faith. His family was a light in a dark, superstitious land because a Christian missionary distributed tracts. The tract gives its message whenever the needy one is ready to receive it. The distribution of tracts pays the distributor and the one who receives them.

Missionary Criticism that Emphasizes the Urge

Notwithstanding the growing popularity of foreign missions today, there is some criticism of it. In the main, however, it is not worth dignifying by giving it notice. The great task of the church is going forward in spite of every adverse criticism and hindrance, and will continue to do so. But there are types and kinds of criticism that are so foolish and groundless that the very making of them reacts with additional emphasis on the invaluable fruit of the missionary enterprise, and the urgency of pressing the work with all possible speed and consecration. Such is the attack published in "The Atlantic Monthly" for July, 1925, on missionaries and missionary methods, which Rev. A. D. Woodworth, D. D., missionary to Japan, exposes in "The Herald of Gospel Liberty." He gives the gist of the attack as follows:

"In the South Pacific there is an island called Taputea whose inhabitants seventy-five years ago numbered about six thousand people. Missionaries first went to these people and so disturbed their system of government, their religion, and their customs that the people all died off. So much for the missionaries. But the article referred to, states that after the missionaries went, trade followed. Trade in drink was one of the means by which the white men made money. But foreigners opened plantations also. As the natives had no desire to work, since they needed no cloth for clothing and their food could be plucked from the trees, the enterprising planters taught the natives the use of opium. When the natives would do anything to secure opium, the plantations prospered until the natives died off. This end was hastened by the fact that the sailors who frequented the islands introduced a new set of nameless diseases which took off the population like flies.

"And were the missionaries responsible for all this? Dr. Wainright says that such an argument is as silly as to say that since a wife-beater beats his wife with a broom, if brooms had not been invented, wife-beating would never have been. Missionaries have gone to China. Are they therefore responsible for the fact that representatives of the American Tobacco Trust stand on the streets in that land giving cheap cigarettes to men, women, and children, with the slogan, "A cigarette in the mouth of every man, woman and child in China." The whalers were in Hawaii before the missionaries went there and the process of the extinction of the natives began for the same reasons that the people of Taputea perished. The assumption is that if the missionaries had not gone to these islands, other men than missionaries would not have gone, and native customs and health and happiness would have continued. But it has not been so anywhere else in the world. Trade is bound to open up a way to make money, just as the Hudson Bay Fur Company opened up a way to buy the furs of the Indians in all the regions of Canada."

Truly, business and the corrupting factors of our civilization are not waiting for the missionaries to lead the way into heathen lands; they are forging ahead and making business and adding civilization's diseases and efficiency at corruption and physical wreckage to their already-acquired depravity and vicious practices, so that without the fortifying influence of the Gospel, they quickly succumb. The shortcoming of the church has been that it has been too slow in undertaking and possessing the unevangelized fields; it has waited too often until organized and commercialized vice, and unprincipled business have sowed the seeds of corruption and so prejudiced the people against every thing that comes from the so-called Christian countries, that the missionary finds his task doubly hard. This fact we need to ponder well and be profited by the warning. Such criticism as mentioned above is silly and does not merit such public consideration except for the fact that it emphasizes more strongly than any favorable argument could, the importance of getting the heathen evangelized and Christianized before liquor, drugs, civilized vice and disease do their destructive work. Let us see in such criticism a situation that calls for the utmost consecration of life and substance for a speedy carrying of the Gospel to the ends of the earth.

"Join the Easter Parade"

That is what the merchants are urging the people to do at this season of the year. They are flooding the masses with "invitations" to "Easter Style Shows" and impressing upon them that they should get in line with a new gown and bonnet, or a new suit and hat, and be ready to march in the Easter parade. And that is about what church-going on Easter Sunday has come to be—a parade for the display of new articles of wearing apparel. And the current of public opinion is going so strong in that direction that many of our good ladies (and men too, though to a lesser degree) feel ashamed to appear on Easter morning without something new to display. Thus business is commercializing Easter, the most sacred season of the year, and church-goers are diluting the spirit of the day with pride and vanities, and not infrequently actually profaning it with envies and jealousies growing out of competitive displays.

It is time that Christian people were endeavoring to curb this tendency and to put more of serious purpose into their church-going on Easter Sunday. This ought to be true of course of every Sunday. In view of the world's crying need, we would do ourselves credit to indulge less in the common extravagances and superficialities, which fashion dictates. We would not be severely critical, yet it is not wholly uncommon to find a Sunday morning audience giving as much the appearance of a style show as the most select social event. This is not conducive to truly spiritual worship at any time, but somehow it seems more incongruous on Easter morning than at other times. At such a time, if ever, we should go to church with high purposes and deeply moving thoughts. Hearts should be filled with profound rejoicing, hopes given renewed assurance and aspirations quickened and made more spiritual. And anything that lessens the possibilities of such fruitful meditation and truly successful worship, or compromises such a highly spiritual state of mind, can well be guarded and avoided. Assuredly we can control our thoughts, and our spiritual frame of mind is not necessarily determined or induced by what we have on, but that person who is greatly concerned about new Easter garments, who approaches the house of God on that sacred morning vividly conscious of the effect of the display she is making, and critically surveys every new thing that may be paraded forth, will doubtless find such an attitude noticeably weakening the spirit of worship.

We cannot keep on increasingly making Easter the "coming out" time for new clothes without losing proportionately the real significance of the day. To the extent that men and women make themselves human models for the display of fashion's latest decrees, to that extent they find it more difficult to give proper rating to the soul and spiritual realities. If the mind dwells upon superficialities, we shall become superficial. (And men may be tempted in their way almost as sorely as women. There are duds among men as well as fashion slaves among the gentle sex.) At no season would our Lord have us to be anxious about what we shall put on, but we imagine he must be especially displeased at such mental and spiritual dissipation as we come into his house on Easter morn; and always does he desire of his worshippers that they shall worship him in spirit and in truth but it seems that such an attitude should be especially satisfying to him as we approach his holy presence in commemoration of his resurrection.

May the spirit of devotion so grip us, that our hearts shall have no desire to "join the Easter parade", and that even though we may wear some new things, they shall not clutter up our hearts, and if indeed our minds shall rest upon them at all, they shall be to us only symbols of our new garments of character.

Newspaper Referendum on Prohibition

It is not a matter of news, but an item worthy of comment, that the wet interests have launched a newspaper referendum on Prohibition. It is encouraging to note the number of city and town papers that have refused to have any part in this propaganda scheme. It is not surprising, however, that high principled papers, such as stand for law enforcement and orderly procedure, should keep aloof from this trick of the wet interests. It is only what we would expect of them, but if your daily paper has taken that stand, let its management know that you appreciate it. The encouragement will do it good.

There are, of course, a goodly number of daily papers, some of them of very great circulation, that have not the courage of their convictions, or else are still in league with the liquor interests, so they may make a considerable demonstration. It should be born in mind, therefore that such a poll will be no true indication of the direction of popular sentiment on the Prohibition question. Our readers will recall how misleading was "The Literary Digest's" poll of two years ago. Its figures for Ohio showed sentiment favoring the liberalizing of the Prohibition Amendment, but in the election following on proposed state amendments to that end, the dregs carried the election by an overwhelming majority. Similar results occurred in Michigan, and even in California. And this newspaper poll is just another effort to unsettle and discourage the people, and to give the wet representatives in Congress some slim ground on which to base their argument that the people are demanding a modification of the liquor law. It will fail, and the masses of the people will surely see through this effort to trick them out of their victory in the long-fought battle with the liquor interests, but it is well for us to be on our guard lest they be given too great encouragement and thus enabled to cause us unnecessary trouble. Therefore, do not co-operate. At every proper time, every Christian ought to exercise his right of suffrage, but this is not such a time. Do not vote in this newspaper straw poll.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

"What is your religion worth?" asks Brother Porte in his Tract Corner. Read it.

Send foreign mission offerings to Dr. Louis S. Bauman, 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, California.

Miss Alice B. Longaker recounts the arguments of a man who "didn't believe in foreign missions." We meet those kind of folks every little while but they are usually the kind who have a death grip on their pocket-books and do not believe in any kind of missions or their church activity that would cost them anything.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble gives us an interesting account of her trip from Africa to France, where, on the Isle of Porte Cros she has located herself for a season of rest and study. Retracing her steps from the field, brought her in touch with a number of things that called forth sacred memories related to the opening days when the crying prayer was for an open door into a great, needy and difficult field.

Brother Melvin A. Stuckey, field secretary of the National Sunday School Association gives us a very interesting report of his work among the Coast churches and of his careful observations on the trip. He says he thoroughly enjoyed his travel and fellowship in the west, and we can well believe he did. His good report shows it. We shall look forward with pleasure to his next.

The church at Morrill, Kansas, where Brother Austin R. Staley is the enterprising pastor, rejoices in the possession of a newly enlarged church, dedicated free of debt. Brother A. B. Cover preached the dedicatory sermon. The improvement doubles the Sunday school equipment, and will doubtless be an incentive to increased growth. We are promised a picture of the church in the near future.

The Christian Endeavor society of Hagerstown, Maryland, shares with the brotherhood a report of an interesting and unique program recently enjoyed. The president of the Brethren society of that place happens to be the president of the County C. E. Union, which fact doubtless has something to do with the high quality of work done by the Brethren society, as well as the fact that the pastor, Dr. Carpenter, has never ceased to be an enthusiastic Endeavorer. Let us hear of the interesting events of other societies.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes of some of the difficulties confronting our work in Argentina. It is well that we should know these that we may know better what to expect. This will not be allowed to interfere with our optimism regarding the field, we are sure; it should only make us more intelligently optimistic. The optimism that is really an asset is that which takes account of all the difficulties and handicaps, and yet continues confident and persistent at the task. This is the only kind that will finally prevail in atheistic, priest-ridden South America.

From Roanoke, Virginia, comes an interesting report of progress. Brother Herbert H. Rowsey, an Ashland College graduate of a year ago, is the aggressive young pastor. He and his talented wife, formerly Miss Harriet Becknell, are proving themselves worthy leaders. This is especially noteworthy because Brother Rowsey was a member of the Roanoke church before he entered college to prepare for the ministry. Brother J. P. Horlacher, of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, was called to Roanoke to assist in an evangelistic campaign, which resulted in five confessions. Seven persons have been added to the church membership since last report.

The College Endowment campaign was the one big problem considered by the college trustees at their recent meeting, concerning which President Jacobs makes report. Dr. Bell is soon to start upon the church phase of it. He also states that Prof. C. L. Anspach is to be absent a year on leave to complete the residence work of his doctor's degree. Prof. R. R. Haun is out this year for the same reason. Prof. J. A. Garber went east on a similar mission two years ago. Thus in these men, as well as in others who are contemplating such work, our college will soon have a number of men in addition to the president with the highest scholastic degree. This will not only add to the efficiency of these men but will increase the prestige of the college. And that, in turn, will make it all the more worthy of your adequate support.

SOVIET GOVERNMENT ALLOWS PRINTING THE BIBLE IN RUSSIA

It has been extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the last four or five years to get Bibles into Russia. A few shipments for which permission was secured by Russians from their government have been admitted. All others have been stopped, whether sent by way of the Black Sea, the Caucasus, China or the Pacific ports. Permission, however, now has been granted to print considerable editions at the government printing offices in Moscow and Leningrad.

There are no plates at hand from which to print these Scriptures and the changes in spelling required by the action of the government would make old plates valueless, if available. The American Bible Society, as a Christmas present to the Russian people, has offered to pay the cost of making a new set of plates, amounting to $10,000 or $15,000. The version is to be the same and the general appearance of the book will be the same as the earlier editions. The books will be circulated without purpose of profit for the good of all religious groups in Russia, and under their supervision and direction.

The Why of World Evangelization

By Chas. H. Ashman, Member Foreign Board

The most marvelous possession is Christianity. Christ is the wonder of the ages! The Bible is the infallible and indestructible revelation of God. Redemption through the atoning sacrifice of Christ is the sure and only means of salvation. The church of Christ is the custodian of all these marvels! But, behold a great mystery! For almost 2000 years she has possessed Christianity, yet, today, only one-third of the inhabitants of this earth profess any belief in Christ and one-third are practically ignorant of him at all. This is the great mystery! Why has not the church proclaimed the precious Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth?

But, why should she? Why should we evangelize the world in this generation? Why seek to do what all preceding generations have failed to do? Why should the church bleed herself of precious lives and money to send the light of Christianity to those who sit in darkness? What are the basic reasons which should form our missionary appeal? What motives ought to prevail and guide in our missionary zeal? Why, yes, why ought we to pray for missions, study about them, and give generously to them? What is the WHY of WORLD EVANGELIZATION?

Certain motives have been advanced within recent years which we consider beneath the church to adopt. Some have advanced the motive of developing and insuring the social, industrial, and political future of the heathen countries. A professor from Chicago University recently wrote, "Today the missionary enterprise is being shifted from a program of rescuing souls from eternal destruction to the ideal of a long campaign of education and social regeneration." This appeal is made strong in most current Mission Study Books. Their chief concern seems to be to describe the social, industrial, and political conditions of the heathen people with the chief appeal to send them our American civilization as personified in education, improved machinery, and democracy. The spiritual needs of the heathen receive but scant attention! Now, we are concerned about the social, industrial, and political needs and future of the heathen. We covet for them the best educational systems, the comforts of our Western Civilization, and the best form of government feasible. We want them to have schools, machines, hospitals, etc. BUT, is this the WHY of WORLD EVANGELIZATION? Send civilization to these benighted peoples without Christianity and you have thrice cursed them! Christianity will improve their condition socially, industrially, and politically, but this is not a sufficient motive for missionary endeavor.

Others have appealed to the MOTIVE OF FEAR. The Christian nations are becoming somewhat afraid of the non-Christian ones. There is developing RACIAL FEAR. It is known as the "rising tide of color." The Caucasian race is becoming afraid of its supremacy. This is after all what is back of the slogan, "America for Americans." There has recently been manifested INDUSTRIAL FEAR. Christian nations are becoming afraid that the surplus of raw material in Africa will burst out and destroy Wall Street gambling; that the unlimited supply of cheap labor of the East will crush labor unionism. This has been the basis of our emigration restrictions. Some have suggested MILITARY FEAR. The non-Christian nations can count hundreds where the Christian nations can count dozens. There is a fear lest they shall some day become armed and conquer us. Thus, in recent years this motive of fear has been advanced for world evangelization. The appeal has been made to Christianize the heathen, teach them brotherly love, so they will stay where they belong. But, this is not a sufficient motive for world evangelization.

In America, there has been advocated the MOTIVE OF SELF PRESERVATION. It has taken this form, "We must Christianize the heathen or the heathen will heathenize us." This process is going on in America now! America, over-confident in what she has believed to be her inherent power, has considered herself a "melting pot" into which the heathen coming to her borders leaped and soon were melted into her ideals and institutions. But, the stubborn fact is that thousands of them are not melting. Thus there is going on a heathenizing process. The foreigners are changing our Lord's Day from a day of rest and worship into an European holiday. They are establishing their heathen religions until from within the United States of America, we could gather representatives for a World Parliament of Religions. There is some appeal, especially for HOME MISSIONS, in this fact. But this is not a sufficient motive for world evangelization. Self-Preservation is a motive beneath the church of Jesus Christ to adopt.

The SUPREME WHY OF WORLD EVANGELIZATION IS THE SALVATION OF LOST SOULS. The heathen are lost! "For as many as have sinned without the law shall also PERISH without the law." Dismiss the error that, because the heathen have never heard, they will be saved. All heathen are lost by nature just as all others are. Christ is the only means of their salvation.

God sent him to the whole world as the only way to be redeemed. Without him, they are lost. With him, millions will be saved. This motive has been the driving power in the lives of such great missionaries as Carey, Livingstone, Taylor, Gribble, Yoder, and thousands of others. It is sufficient for genuine Christians today. Souls are perishing,—we have the life line and the life boat. Souls are dying, —we have the light. This is sufficient for a true Christian as a missionary motive. Supposing the inventor of the match had kept it secret? Supposing the discoverer of electricity had hid his discovery? What if the discoverers of the anesthetic and anti-toxin had refused to divulge to the world the results of their research? What gross selfishness! What heathenism! But, what about Christians who say, "I do not believe in missions. I never give to missions?" Is not this the grossest of selfishness? Is not this heathenism? As an offering for foreign missions was being received in a certain church, a prominent member of the church as the plate passed him, said to the steward, "I do not believe in giving to missions." The steward replied, "Take some out then, this is an offering for the heathen." And, the steward was right. That church member was revealing an heathenish turn of mind. If you are saved and those not so fortunately situated through the incident and accident of birthplace as you, have never heard of Christ, that is the WHY OF WORLD EVANGELIZATION.

Closely co-ordinated with this is the motive of our PERSONAL DEVOTION TO CHRIST. Rev. Hugh Kerr said, "Only one motive is adequate to send men to foreign fields and to keep them there—love and loyalty to the Lord Jesus Christ." One does not need to know all about the unsaved millions and their conditions to be fired with missionary zeal. ONE NEEDS ONLY TO KNOW CHRIST! Christ intended himself for the whole world. He spoke in world terms, gave forth a world vision, proclaimed a whole gospel, instituted a world church. His COMMAND is, "Go ye therefore and teach ALL NATIONS." His prediction for his church was, "Ye shall be my witnesses—unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Now, if we love him, we will evangelize the world for him. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." If we truly love him, we will carry out his program and obey his commands. I seriously question the sincerity of one who claims to love Jesus Christ and gives little or nothing to foreign missions. I cannot see how the heart can be in sympathy and accord with Christ and ignore or refuse to obey his command to evangelize the world. Personal devotion to our Lord drives us, impels us, propels us forward in world evangelization.

It is to these two motives,—personal devotion to Christ, and the salvation of lost souls, that we make our appeal for an increased offering for our world evangelization program. These ought to send you to your knees intercession. These ought to stimulate you to study and research. THESE OUGHT TO UNLOOSE YOUR PURSE STRINGS AT EASTER TIME.

Every Man A Debtor

By Louis S. Bauman, D.D., Treasurer Foreign Board

"I am debtor," cried the greatest of all the apostles, "both to the Greeks and to the barbarians.  so as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also." A debt is something every honest man will pay, if it is within the limit of human possibility. If a Christian is anything, he is an honest man—and an honest man pays his debts. It is very difficult to reconcile Christian character with the habit of neglecting to pay that which we honestly owe. Refusing to pay a debt is nothing less than respectable stealing.

There is a sense in which no Christian is ever free from debt. This is the sense in which the great apostle proclaims himself a debtor. Moral and spiritual obligations are as much debts as are pecuniary obligations. Moral obligations rest upon us, not so much from the standpoint of what men have done for us as because of that which Jesus Christ has done for us.

We once read the story of a man who saved the life of a comrade, but in doing so lost his own. As his life ebbed away, the man he saved asked frantically, "What can I do for you?" The dying man replied, "Nothing for me, but somewhere in this great world, I have a crippled brother. If you ever have a chance, please do him a good turn." The chance came, and when it came, he considered it not a matter of charity, but a debt, and paid it.

Even thus it is with Christ. Our giving unto the Lord is not a matter of charity but of actual debt. Christ died for us and in his dying, he purchased us life eternal—in fact, every blessed hope of the future is dependent upon his atoning work. What can we do unto him? Nothing, insofar as he personally is concerned. Nevertheless, remember that Jesus said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Recall, if you will, the teaching of Christ in the parable of the two debtors as recorded in Matthew 18. Here we found that a certain king had a servant "which owed him ten thousand talents, but forasmuch as he had not to pay, his lord commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children and all that he had, and payment be made." Whereupon the servant begged for mercy; and, "The Lord of that servant was moved with compassion and loosed him and forgave the debt." Then we are told that a fellow servant owed this forgiven servant a small sum of money, and because it was not paid, he threw his fellow servant into prison. Whereupon, the king learning of the incident, called the servant he forgave unto him, and said, "O, thou wicked servant, I forgave thee all that debt because thou desiredst me. Shouldst thou not also have had compassion on that fellow servant, even as I had pity on thee? And his lord was wroth, and delivered him to the tormentors 'till he should pay all that was due unto him."

Every Christian should weigh those words carefully. If our Lord has paid the tremendous debt we owe, it makes us debtors to our fellowmen, and if that debt is not paid, beware lest we also, with the unsaved, be "delivered to the tormentors." The principle Christ laid down is set forth in these words: "Freely ye have received; freely give."

Moral obligation rests upon us from another standpoint also,—that of stewardship. God is the Giver and absolute Owner of all things. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." God has the absolute right to ask tithes. Under grace, man is a steward, and a steward holds and administers that which he has as a sacred trust. After all, the greatness of our stewardship is not to be seen so much in the wealth God has placed in our hands as in the Gospel which he has placed in our hands. Verily, God "hath committed unto us the word of reconciliation. Now then, we are ambassadors for Christ * * * We pray you, in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." This simply means that if men are to be saved through the Gospel, those who have been saved by the Gospel are under absolute obligation to give the Gospel they have received to others. If they fail to do so, the blood of the heathen will rest upon them in the Day of Judgment! No wonder Paul cried out: "Woe is me if I preach not this Gospel!" Understand it, giving to missions is not a matter of charity to the heathen—it is a matter of debt,—of tremendous obligation resting upon every saved man and woman. Mere charity may claim a little of your spare cash; but, debt, if you are an honest man, comes in ahead of all, even of your necessities.

Medical students are graduated under promise to make known any great discovery. It is a moral obligation resting upon them. The distinguished scientist, Lord Kelvin, was once approached by a pompous young, would-be scientist who asked him which one of all his discoveries he considered the most valuable. Lord Kelvin bared his head, and replied: "The most valuable of the discoveries I have ever made was when I discovered my Savior in Christ Jesus." Assuredly, a far greater moral obligation rests upon every Christian to make known to men his discovery of Jesus Christ, the Savior of the soul, than upon a medical student to make known his discovery of some remedy that will save the body.

It is the burning shame of the church that she has not given the message of eternal life, through Jesus Christ, to every human being in this world! It was a deep sense of the danger of such a shame that caused the great apostle to cry, "I am debtor!" We trust that every member of the Brethren church will feel this same sense of obligation as we approach our Easter offering. Brother, you can't meet that tremendous obligation to the heathen who are without the Gospel, with a paltry gift of fifty cents or a dollar! Listen! In the words of another: "If Jesus Christ is everything to me, I know he can be everything to every man; and, because I know it, then woe is me if I will not do all that is in my power to let every man who does not know Jesus Christ, share with me. There is no escape from this logic. If I live Jesus Christ, which means if I am loyal to him, which means if I keep his commandments, I am in touch with everybody to the ends of the earth who needs him, and I cannot wash my hands and say, 'You must excuse me from this matter.'"

Job, whom God himself pronounced a perfect man, in making his defense against the accusations of unrighteousness on the part of one of his friends, declared that he had not "eaten my morsel myself alone." What a splendid defense! How many Christians receiving the Bread of Heaven from the wounded hands of the Master, are satisfied to eat their morsels alone! We cannot think of a monopoly as being righteous. Monopolies are monstrous in proportion to the value of the article monopolized. How monstrous then is a monopoly of the Gospel by a few Christians in one part of the world, while vast multitudes in another part of the world have never once heard it!

Huber, the great naturalist, observed that a wasp or an ant would not stay alone to enjoy some precious morsel, but would go to the nest and immediately return with a host. It might be well to say to some Christians these days, "Go to the ant, thou sluggard, consider her ways and be wise."

The Brethren church has upon the great mission continents of Africa and South America, man for man, and woman for woman, as fine a band of missionaries as ever crossed the seas! We do not believe that any one personally acquainted with them, will deny this statement. Now you who sit in comfort in your happy homes on Easter Sunday, stop and think! If these missionaries go forth, cheerfully leaving home and loved ones and sometimes, as in the case of the Jobsons, their own precious babes,—if they forsake all fond associations and surrender all the bright prospects and cherished plans of earth,—if they go forth to uncongenial climes, to master difficult languages, to dwell among strange peoples, living patiently and perseveringly, amid hardships and dangers, what ought you at home to do on Easter Sunday to make their work possible? I tell you, my brothers and sisters, if I can figure it out aright, it is going to call for more than sitting back in your seats to sing:

Waft, waft, ye winds his story,
And you, ye waters roll,
'Til like a sea of glory,
It spreads from pole to pole!"

Moreover, it is going to call for more than filling a few "Mite Boxes" with pennies. Children may, but you grown-ups cannot, meet your obligation to Jesus Christ on the Day of his Resurrection with a handful of coppers, or nickels, or dimes! Let your gifts be according to the measure of your debt, as much as in you is!

Laborers and Funds

By Minnie Deeter, Missionary to Africa, on Furlough

God is looking to two groups of people to carry the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the world. They are dependent upon each other and neither can be omitted from God's great plan of evangelizing the world. Both are equally responsible for the accomplishment of this plan. Therefore, they must have a vision of the possibilities that confront them and a sense of the great responsibilities God has intrusted to his church. Loyal cooperation must be their unit of strength and a far reaching effort their goal.

These two groups are composed of first the "home guard," the faithful sons of God at home who are giving of their substance and their time in prayer to forward this great enterprise. I wish I had the ability to picture the great place the beloved brethren at home have in this work. It is their work and we missionaries are their representatives sent forth by them under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. So it seems to me that every child of God has a share in this great work, whether he is on the field or at home. It is through their efforts that mission property is purchased; schools, churches, dwellings and hospitals erected; and our missionaries are supported and traveling expenses paid.

The second group are the missionaries who have been sent forth to plant, water and reap, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Besides spreading the Gospel and being the means through which Christ is gathering out his bride in a heathen country, they are the pioneers of many improvements related to the uplifting of humanity which can only come about under the influence of Christianity. Such as the raising of the position of women, the prevention of disease and death and the reckless drains of vitality. They also promote recreations that are healthful and moral. They realize and condemn the oppressive systems of tribal customs. They strive to impart the influence of education and they see behind the black countenance the potentialities of manhood and womanhood. But above all else they are willing to give life itself that Christ might be lifted up in a dark land.

Much more can be said when one stops to consider the rapid growth with which our work has advanced in Oubangi Chari district. By the crowned efforts of a little more than a decade we have a growing church of more than a thousand in that dark, isolated corner. Yes, the demands of the Gospel are far more than we can supply because of the shortage of workers and funds. With but one or two exceptions every tribe touching our now occupied fields have no missionaries and are looking to us for light. Then to the north of us lies the great Chad district with its rich and fertile land, but being pressed down upon by the followers of Mohammed until the space of a few years will see it fall down and worship the false prophet. Thus the great need to press forward is constantly confronting the missionary. Surely the Brethren church has a great allotment through the effectual door opened to her in the many untouched tribes surrounding her stations in French Equatorial Africa.

But alas! there is a stone in the road that leads to the opening of new tribes and the advancement of Christianity there. It is the lack of financial force. And this stone can only be removed by the "Home Guard". Now we have much to praise God for as a church because we have only just now come to the stone; we have advanced without much hindrance so far. But what about the future! We are at the place where we can open stations in new tribes in the near future if there is cooperation.

Let us take a look at some of the struggles of other churches for a minute, not in the way of criticism, but that we might study some real mission problems. The following is quoted from the "Congo Mission News," October, 1925, No. 52, page 2:

"The committee of the C. M. S. has been obliged to reduce its budgeted expenditure for the year 1925-26 to £475,000, which involves a reduction of £7,000 in passages and outfits, which must mean the keeping back of some missionaries and recruits; (2) a reduction in the number of missionaries employed; (3) postponement of all new building plans in the mission field; (4) the reduction of grants for evangelistic, medical, and educational work; (5) a reduction of home expenditure."

"The M. E. C. M. Home Board were compelled to make a tentative estimate for 1926 involving a reduction of twenty per cent below that of 1925, which represented a reduction of twenty per cent below that of the previous year. The A. P. C. M. income has increased about ten-fold in the last quarter of a century, and more than doubled in the last seven years, yet even they have received a set back. The B. M. S. have had a gigantic struggle to get rid of £277,747 on last year's account. Generally speaking, the situation is serious, and any large outlay for a forward educational program is clearly ruled out. We are therefore driven to ask if anything additional can be accomplished by the mission staffs and their adherents."

Moreover I am told that a certain large denomination has had to recall over a hundred missionaries from its fields of service last year. Will the Brethren church ever encounter such conditions? She will unless she avails herself of every possible means to go forward. Why pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers when they are compelled to be recalled from the field or even to hold back those who are willing and ready to go? Truly, I believe the churches of the homeland are being held responsible for far more than they have begun to realize. So let us pray that such a burden of responsibility will be given to our churches that she will put forth every effort to advance as God has planned. Then we will be able to send forth laborers without restraint.

The Woman's Part in Our Foreign Mission Offering

By Mrs. Fred C. Vanator, Member Foreign Board

The Easter Mission Offering should make a special appeal to the women of our church this year since we are taking on the definite support of the Bassai Station in Africa. Our women have always shown a deep devotion to the foreign work, but this year may we make it a stronger effort than ever before! We can only grow stronger by using our entire strength, for in the use of this strength do we gain more power. May our offering this Easter not be lessened by our W. M. S. effort but may it be greater because of our added interest. As we read the appeals that come from the foreign field, we dare not do less, or even the same, but if we would have the work progress we must do more.

Foreign Missions—No One Opposed

By Prof. A. L. Delozier, Member Foreign Board

Some things in our day and age are hard to justify. Indeed it may be questioned whether many activities and employments today have any "raison d'être" at all.

One of the greatest second-hand book caterers in our country has this note in his latest catalog: "Homo sum, but a good many forms of human activity don't concern me in the slightest." Alas, how true that if you are really homo—a man, you are shocked by much that is puerile, or perchance even "monkey" like. But there are activities for which one may make some apology. There are other activities and movements for which there is at least one good reason that is apparent to all. There are many things in the Christian church that are seemingly debatable, at least they are debated. This is unfortunate in some cases.

But when we come to consider the great Foreign Missionary movement every class of speaker, haranguer, or writer will endorse it as the greatest and most effective and worthwhile thing in which we humans interest ourselves. I am impressed with this fact. The modernist is quite liberal usually, but he believes in foreign missions. The conservative man may lack vision at times, but where is there a man so conservative today that he does not believe in foreign missions? The Sociologist may handle parts of the Word of God rather carelessly, but he seems to see the point when it comes to this matter of carrying the Gospel to the "backward races." The business man may say: "You can't be in business and be a Christian", but still he believes in foreign missions because he knows that at least it helps big business and that ultimately it helps his business. Statesmen may be, and frequently are, shortsighted, incompetent and "small", but they usually believe in the importance of foreign missions. What does this all mean? It indicates that the foreign missionary movement has "made good", has justified itself and has come to be one of the indispensable things of the world.

That is all very fine and we are glad to note that it is too, but to us Christians, the "drive", the "why" back of foreign missions is much stronger and more effective than the foregoing would indicate. We enter into this work, not to help business, geography, science and a multitude of other things that benefit as by-products from this great Christian achievement. We send missionaries, but above all, missionaries go, because our Master and theirs bids us do this piece of work.

Scriptures are quoted so often on this subject that I hesitate to quote any, yet a few passages are fundamental and must be learned. The Easter message is a missionary message—"Go tell." But the risen Lord continued to instruct his apostles. In the great prayer of John 17 he had said "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world" (Vs. 18). One day, after his resurrection, he appeared to the apostles and said: "Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you" (John 20:21). On another occasion when Jesus had assembled his followers and was instructing them, he said: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth" (Acts 1:8).

And then of course we have his last message as he ascended: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing (In German, Norwegian, Swedish and other languages it is "dipping". See also Literary Digest, March 7, 1925, page 88). them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe (i. e., celebrate, or comply with) all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen" (so be it).

Why disobey our Lord when he is so clear in his great Commission? This verily means a whole Gospel for the whole world. It challenges us to do our best.

Where Men Win By Losing

By Prof. A. J. McClain, Secretary Foreign Board

"Whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall save it."

With these words our Lord turns the wisdom of this world up-side-down and proves that so-called "economic laws" do not necessarily hold good in the spiritual world. Whoever heard it said, by any of those who instruct us in such matters, that the way to gain our fortune is to lose it! Go to any of the great "captains of industry" and ask them for the formula of success, the secret of acquiring wealth. They will all tell you that the initial axiom of the business world is "SAVE." Save and you will succeed.

It is otherwise in the Kingdom of God. Here the "savers" lose and the "losers" save. In this blessed sphere men win by losing. Here the Highest Good for man is described as "Blessedness", and "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

There is some solemn instruction in all this for the church of God; yes, for the Brethren church. The watchword of the hour among various Protestant bodies has become "conservation"; we must husband our resources, it is said. And certainly, from certain viewpoints, this is wholesome advice. But the following of such a course in too thorough-going a manner may bring disaster upon the church.

It has been suggested that of late years too much attention has been given to Foreign Missions to the injury of our more internal interests. If the words of our Lord be trustworthy, as we firmly believe they are, no amount of sacrificial giving either of life or of substance to the great work of Foreign Missions can possibly injure our internal interests as a church. To affirm the contrary is to deny validity to the declaration of Christ, "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall save it." And experience confirms his Word, for it never has been proven that any church has been injured by giving too much for the salvaging of a lost world. On the contrary, I think it can easily be shown that the pouring out of life and substance for Foreign Missions has always benefited those churches which have followed this course. Interest in Foreign Missions invariably brings new life into the veins of every activity of a church. Local congregations, counted as good as dead, have become powerful and living through the quickening touch of missionary effort. The great problem in the church is to get the minds of men off themselves. Anything, regardless of its nature, that will accomplish this objective is a good thing for everybody concerned and for every interest of the church. And the appeal of Foreign Missions seems historically to have been the most successful means of getting men to forget themselves.

It is beside the point to say that the thousands given to Foreign Missions could better be used at home upon our own internal interests. The real question is, would we have these thousands available if it were not for the appeal of Missions? I am not unsympathetic toward the internal inter-

Whether the subject is the resurrection or another, we often fail to see the true Scriptural meaning; first, because the Scripture itself has been distorted by man's traditions, second, its meaning is blurred by prejudice, and third, by men's effort to find in it what they want.

FRIDAY

THE GREAT COMMANDMENT—Matt. 22:34-40.

"The heart of love," some one has said, "is a fountain of living waters, and the commandments are the channels through which the streams flow out. The commandments are the fences by the roadside which show Love the way it should go.

SATURDAY

THE SON OF DAVID—Matt. 22:41-46.

Christ, who was the Son of David, was yet the Lord of David, whose yearning, reverent spirit anticipated the worship due unto his holy name.

SUNDAY

THEY SAY AND DO NOT—Matt. 23:1-12.

Teachers of the law usually do that; that was why Jesus made complaint against them. They were sticklers for the very letter of the law in their teachings, but they were far from the spirit of it in practice. Their example influenced in the wrong direction more strongly than their words pointed to the right.—G. S. B.

ests of our church, such as College, Publications, Benevolences, etc. But I am also firmly convinced that these very interests profit most when the Great Commission of the church is put above all. There is a striking instance of this in the Apostolic church. The church at Jerusalem would have confined its preaching to the homeland, but fortunately for all concerned one Apostle could not forget that he was "debtor to all men, whether Jew or Greek", and it is not long before we find Gentile churches sending money back for the relief of the "poor saints at Jerusalem"! Raising the budget for "Benevolences", if you please. "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall find it."

This great principle is sublimely exemplified in the life and work of our Lord Jesus Christ. "Existing in the Form of God," possessing all the incommunicable glory and attributes of the one true God, "he counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped" as a robber would grasp something which was not his own, but "emptied himself", forgetful of himself in view of man's need to the point of laying aside all the glory which he had with the Father, at the same time 'taking Servant-form' in order that he might finally die for man, "even the Death of the Cross." But this is not all. "Wherefore, the Apostle writes, God hath highly exalted him, and gave him the Name that is above every Name, that at the Name of Jesus every knee should bow." And so out of loss he gathers gain. It is not otherwise with the church which is his body. If we forget ourselves, we shall be remembered. If we lose our lives, we shall save them. If we humble ourselves, we shall be exalted. If we empty ourselves, we shall be filled. If we cast away our bread, it will be returned again to us.

Lately there has been some discussion regarding the future of the Brethren church. The question has been raised as to what the future may bring forth, whether growth or decrease, whether life or death. It is a question close to the hearts of those who love the church; there is little use trying to push it out of sight and pretend to ignore it. But the most disastrous thing that can happen will be for us to become too introspective, too much concerned with saving our own denominational existence. This is the surest road to decay and death. Let us rather forget ourselves, and follow our Lord in pouring out our life for those who are "without God and without hope in the world." If we as a church will do this, our future is assured. No church, while giving itself without stint to the cause of Foreign Missions, can ever perish from the earth.

The Clarion Call

Mrs. A. B. Cover, Member Foreign Board

To all God's children there comes "The Clarion Call," the first note of which is "Go Ye." To be sure we are not all called to foreign lands in person, but in spirit the call is unavoidable. Being born again of water and of spirit, we eagerly desire to be used to the best of our ability in serving our Lord and Master and our neighbor as ourselves. So keen should be our realization of "Go Ye" that we in the home land should feel the same joys, the same aspirations; share the same feeling for the unsaved heathen, share the same heartaches and sorrows as those of our loved ones ministering in far away lands in the proclamation of the Gospel for us, yea, in our stead.

The second note of the clarion call, "Pray Ye" rings like sweet music in the soul of our hearts, when they are attuned for service. Prayer gets things done. We do not always know how, but we do know they do. Unsurmountable objects are removed; circumstances change, hearts soften, stubborn wills bend, new fields of endeavor open, yea, even pocketbooks fly wide open, for nothing can resist the power of this spirit current when used according to God's will. Daily, humbly, intelligently, we must be at the throne of grace interceding in behalf of ourselves and our loved ones across the sea.

The third note of the clarion call, "Give Ye", unifies the melody. With our emotions aroused, with our electric power house properly tuned in, we are ready to render unto God his portion of the possessions he has given in trust; not only his portion, but our love gift which is indeed the only offering, since his tenth is a debt we owe. "Give Ye". How? Wholeheartedly, "freely, not grudgingly, nor of necessity for God loveth a cheerful giver." Giving is a privilege, not a duty. It must motivate from a spirit of love and be given in a spirit of meekness, joyousness, and willingness.

The need of our Easter offering has been before us during the year. The harvest is great indeed, and is being gleaned just as rapidly as you and I are willing to respond with our substance. Our gifts at this glad season of the year determine the advancement or curtailment of God's kingdom in darkest Africa and priest-ridden South America. Our ambassadors across the sea are pleading for more helpers and our prayers. Without an increase in our gifts their plea for help will be in vain. Without the united power of our prayer the work will also suffer loss. Let us therefore one and all on bended knees seek God's guidance and give as he directs and we shall have all and above that which we shall need, for the greatest cause in christendom.

Will It Pay?

By U. J. Shively, Member Eoreign Board

Not long ago a manufacturing company needed more room and more capital. The business was growing, and orders were coming in faster than their output, so they must enlarge their capacity. To secure the necessary money was the problem. There was one way, and that to sell some stock. To get monied people enough interested in this enterprise to invest some money, promises of large dividends with no taxes were made. Now the large income looked good to some people and large and small amounts were invested. Later during a business slump the company went bankrupt and the investors lost principle, interest and all. This did not pay.

When we invest in our Father's business of The Foreign Missionary Society there will be a different settlement. It will pay. The work is growing. Orders are coming. Results are seen in men and women accepting Christ. Just think of it, in these few years over 1500 in Africa becoming his followers, and many in South America, with the several stations opened. We must enlarge our borders and send forth more workers.

But as the call comes for funds some will raise the question, what interest will it pay? They want their money to work for them, so what income will they receive?

"The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world and all that dwell therein." David declared that every beast of the forest and the cattle on a thousand hills belonged to Jehovah. "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts." Everything belongs to God and he will redeem all his promises.

"Honor the Lord with thy substance and with the first-fruits of all thine income, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy presses shall burst out with new wine."

Devotional Reading—Rev. 1:9-18.

Golden Text—Because thou hast seen me, thou hast believed: blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed. John 20:29.

LESSON LIGHTS

Christ Appears to His Disciples

On the first evening following the morning of the resurrection Jesus appeared to the disciples, gathered in a secret room behind closed doors, for fear of being sought out by the enemies of their Master, and said, "Peace be unto you," then he showed them the scars in his side and hands. Then they rejoiced in the assurance that it was their Lord.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman is credited with this story: "An associate of mine and friend of years, Dr. Henry Ostrom, has described an African prince visiting the African settlement at the St. Louis Exposition. He was clad in citizens clothes and the people from Africa appeared in their native costumes. When this stranger proclaimed himself a prince they ridiculed him. However an aged man said, 'I can tell whether you are a prince of the royal blood,' and he ran his fingers down the back of the neck of the one who claimed to be a prince and found the scar that was there, the mark of his royalty. Then the aged man fell upon his knees with all the others to worship him. And Christ stands before us as the Lamb that was slain; scars in his hands and feet, in his side and back and on his brow. He is our Redeemer."

Jesus and Doubting Thomas

Thomas was not present on the occasion of Jesus' first appearance to his disciples, and behold, how much he missed! He missed the presence of his Lord, as well as the fellowship of his friends. Jesus came with resurrection blessedness and power, and with a message of eternal significance and Thomas was not there. Just so, many an absentee from the church today has missed the very thing he needed supremely, and when the message is passed on to him, it seems so strange, so unreal that he will not believe it.

Thomas was slow to believe and was much dependent upon the evidence of sense, but he was honest in his doubts and sincere in his quest for light. Jesus was patient with him and tactful and met the challenge of the doubter with a fairness that impressed him. And as Bishop McConnell says, "The revelation called Thomas to a faith that he had never before known. His exclamation of devotion showed that, slow as he had been, he leaped at once to a confidence that was all his own but that was beyond anything he had ever before known. 'And he did not need to reach forth his hands; he only needed to see the face of his Lord, and he exclaimed, 'My Lord and my God!'"

The Assurance of Immortality

Christ's Resurrection Is the Assurance of immortality for all who receive and obey him. The resurrection of Christ is the assurance that death does not end all; that there is an existence beyond death. The soul does not die with the body, for Jesus' soul did not die with his body. As Jesus said himself, his death was like a grain of wheat cast into the ground, from which grow the stalk and the fruit.

"The Great Easter Truth is not that we are to live newly after death—that is not the great thing—but that we are to be new here and now by the power of the resurrection; not so much that we are to live forever as that we are to, and may, live nobly now because we are to live forever."—Bishop Brooks.

Peter's Restoration

The Resurrection of Jesus meant more to Peter than to the rest, more even than to John the Beloved. It means a chance to throw himself at his Master's feet and ask his forgiveness. He knew he need not now bear the burden so long as he lived—the burden of sorrow for unforgiven sin which weighs heaviest of all burdens.

Peter's Restoration to the place among the Apostles which he had previously held is recorded in our lesson for today. As the group sat together after the breakfast on the shore of the lake, Jesus said to Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these?" More than the other disciples. The question itself referred back to the denial. Do you really love me, you who cursed and swore that you never knew me? Yea, Lord, thou knowest that I love thee.

"Mr. Moody used to say that the Lord spent forty years in teaching Moses to be something, another forty years in teaching him to be nothing, and still another forty years in showing the world what God could do with a man who had learned these two great lessons. Jesus dealt with Peter in much the same way. He first taught him by the grace of God to be something and then to be nothing, and afterward he was ready for the Holy Spirit and the Pentecost."

Working With Our Brethren Sunday Schools

By M. A. Stuckey, Field Secretary

(On the Pacific Coast)

A trip to the Pacific Coast is no longer an opportunity of a life time. It is now a privilege that many enjoy yearly and which affords a traveler many interesting experiences. During the month of January and part of February we had the opportunity of visiting the great Northwest and the Golden State. As reported before in the columns of this paper, the following shall be a cursory resume of some observations made on our recent trip.

The Pacific Coast Brethren, excepting of course those of the state of Washington, enjoy each year a climate of almost unsurpassed nicety. Even in Washington the weather bureau indicates a yearly temperature of a very modest nature. Freezing and extremely torrid spells are not the ordinary thing in the region of Seattle and its surrounding vicinity. The cool, invigorating breezes blowing in over the warm water currents of Puget Sound keep the western part of this state in an atmospherical condition very much to be desired. Mr. M. B. Summers an uncle of the writer, is the government meteorologist for this region, and he avers that many tourists prefer the climate there to that of Southern California. In the eastern part of the state, however, different climatological changes are to be observed. Sunnyside and Spokane, both being on the eastern sides of a dividing mountain ridge, experience a more varied type of weather conditions.

The climate of Northern and Southern California is not like that of the commonwealth of Washington. Our people there think of themselves as dwelling in America's "Beulah Land" and a visitor has good reason to share their enthusiasm and satisfaction. The fact that many easterners make their sojourn to this land for winter living is indicative of its worth. It is not unusual for an Ohioan entering the Golden State, with its almost perpetual sunshine, barring Northern California, to meet friends and faces of other fellow Ohioans; and of recently made as well as old acquaintances of other states.

Then too, this territory is prosperous and attractive. Agriculture is a booming industry of ten months' duration in the north, while the south claims a ranch productiveness through the whole of a calendar year. Orange and lemon groves abound everywhere. English walnut orchards of many acres comprise a part of the extensive and well-irrigated land of this state. Palm and eucalyptus trees grace the roadsides and add much to the attractiveness of villages, cities, and the rural sections. Mountain peaks capped with an eternal whiteness remind one of the "snow Lebanon."

It occurred to us while visiting there that California is one, if not the very best of all territories in our land for the establishment of new mission points. Villages and cities are experiencing a phenomenal growth. Witness, for example, North Long Beach where we have a new church. The steady increase in population in this place is remarkable. The Brethren of the Long Beach church have been responsible for the erection of a new edifice in this growing vicinity and have established a precedent for some of our other larger churches. It is very interesting to note that they are beginning this new work with the establishment of a Sunday school and some of the experienced officers and teachers of

Endeavorers of Hagerstown, Maryland

Greetings from Hagerstown First Brethren Christian Endeavorers:

On March 7, a broadcasting day was held in Christian Endeavor at which time letters from the different places below mentioned were read or broadcasted to the society.

Station J. A. G.—Ashland, Ohio, J. A. Garber, President Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union.

Station G. M. S.—Pittsburgh, Pa., Gladys M. Spice, General Secretary Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union.

Station C. S. E.—Chattanooga, Tennessee, Chas. S. Evans, All South Dixie Section of United Society Christian Endeavor.

Station C. M. W.—Baltimore, Maryland, Carroll M. Wright, Executive Secretary Maryland Christian Endeavor Union.

Station A. B. C.—Falls City, Nebraska, Rev. A. B. Cover, Organizer of our Society.

Station G. C. C.—Hagerstown, Maryland, Rev. Dr. G. C. Carpenter, Local Pastor.

Many special talks and special music featured the evening's program, which was enjoyed by all. This society has been very active and has the distinction of giving to the county an Endeavorer for President, one as Junior Superintendent of Christian Endeavor and one as a special worker.

Each Sunday evening the program is arranged different and the attendance has been increasing on this account. All credit is due to the work of the prayer meeting committee who meets every week with the leader to plan for the coming Sunday evening program.

This society broadcasts to all Brethren Endeavorers to help push the great wheel of C. E. forward this year to a greater goal and better achievements than even can be expected by our Brethren National Officers.

Come On! Endeavorers, Let's start immediately to work, take on new vigor and with renewed interest, press forward to the goal. A 100 per cent Christian Endeavor Society in every Brethren church. We can and we will do it." Won't you help?

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

What Does Easter Mean?

Mark 16:1-8

Once there were twelve men who were friends and who had one other friend whom all of them loved very much. This one, whom these twelve loved so much, was a teacher and preacher. He traveled about the country doing good things for everyone he met. He loved the little children and blessed them. He helped those who were sick. He was always kind and good. Now, wherever this one went, the twelve friends followed him. He taught them very wonderful lessons about life and he taught them to do wonderful things. Is it any wonder that these people learned to love their leader with an extremely great love? Some of them considered the great teacher to be a very dear friend.

One day, a very sad thing happened. The great teacher was called into court. One of those who had seemed to love him became his enemy had made trouble for him. At court he did not receive kind judgment like he deserved. Instead the court decided to treat him as though he had done some great evil when he had not really done anything that was wrong. You see, Juniors, he was so great and good that many people were jealous of him. Then the people who were jealous took the leader of the twelve and murdered him in the cruelest way that they could think of. He had such a loving spirit that he even forgave the people who did this great evil but imagine the sadness and loneliness of the twelve who had followed him daily. Some of them were afraid lest the same thing might happen to them that had happened to their Master. All of them were lonesome for the leader who had loved them and had been kind to them. They were so unhappy without him and for three days they wandered about the country. Some of them stayed together. Others separated from the rest of the group. They had once hoped that their teacher would become a ruler and have a great kingdom, now that he was dead they felt hopeless and sadder than we boys and girls can possibly imagine people feeling. Thus as I said before, they wandered about in grief for three days.

At the end of three days, the most wonderful thing happened. A woman, whom these twelve knew had been a friend of the great teacher, came to them and told them something that they felt was too marvelous to be true. She told them that the Master Teacher was alive again and living on the earth. Can you think of the great joy that these friends felt? At first they could not believe the story but before long they found that it was true, for they saw him with their own eyes. Just think of that great happiness. The one that they thought was gone from them forever was alive again. Their loved teacher was once more among them. It is hardly possible to realize the greatness of that happiness in the hearts of these men.

Do you know who this teacher that I have told you about is? I suppose that you have guessed before now, that I was telling you about Jesus and his twelve loved apostles. I have told you the Easter story, the story of our Savior who died and rose again. I have told you about the wonderful happiness of these twelve great friends of him, but do you realize, Junior boys and girls, that we, too, should feel this great happiness on Easter Day. These twelve apostles of Jesus were happy because their Leader was alive again and was with them again, but do you know that the Resurrection, Jesus' coming back to life again, means even more than that to those of us who are Christians? Because Jesus arose from the dead, we know that we shall live again after we have died. Just think of the greatness of this happiness that we have because Jesus lived again after he had died! Do you see that we should be very happy on Easter Day when we think of this, just as the friends of Jesus were on that first Easter Day, long, long ago?

These friends of Jesus wrote letters and told about their teacher. One of them, John, tells us that Jesus said that after he left them he would go and prepare a place for them and for all of us in which to live after we die. This is in the first part of that very beautiful fourteenth chapter of John. He arose from the dead, so that we might hope to live after we have died and moreover he has gone into heaven to prepare a place where we may live when we shall go to join him. For these things we Juniors, as well as all who believe in Jesus, should be very happy on Easter Day. Shall we think of these things and try to feel happy like the apostles of Jesus did? Let's think of the happiness of those friends of Jesus and of the great happiness that is our own joy because Jesus arose and then we shall make this Easter mean more than any Easter has before.

Argentine Difficulties

It is common to read of missionary lands where the natives seem to be pleading for missionaries to tell them of the Gospel and come by hundreds to accept it. Argentina is not one of those countries, nor is any of the Latin American countries. What hunger for the Gospel there is must first be created and those who accept the Gospel are the chosen few who yield after much personal teaching. We would not for a moment cause the impression that we are sowing on stony ground which should be abandoned for more fertile soil. We are sowing in good ground, but it must first be prepared. "A great door is opened and effectual,—but there are many adversaries." Like Paul we are debtors to all men and must preach the Gospel to the Argentinians as well as to the Africans and though Paul plant and Apollos water, God will in due time give the increase.

It would be far more to my liking to write of the encouraging things of the field, but in order that the brethren and sisters in the homeland may realize more the need of their prayers and cooperation I am going to mention this time some of the chief difficulties which we have to overcome by your help.

1. The first difficulty for an American worker is the language. While Spanish is not a hard language to learn so as to live among the people, yet to use the exact language of teaching is no easy matter. There are hundreds of idioms and ways of expressing ideas that are utterly different from the English idioms and if one translates literally, as is natural, comic mistakes result. There is a difference even between the Spanish of Spain and of Argentina so that there are quite a number of expressions in the Spanish Bibles that we must use, which if we read them just left on the early morning train of January people here who have given them these meanings. I have read of a missionary who at once on arrival learned the translation of "God is good" and went out into the streets repeating to all he met "Si, Dios es bueno." However it requires several years of practice to use the language with confidence and to use it perfectly one must begin in youth.

2. A second difficulty is the climate. I will not emphasize this point a great deal for Argentina has an excellent climate compared with some countries, but compared with the United States we find this climate somewhat enervating. We cannot do the same amount of mental work here as at home. In the summer the days are long and so warm that the people take "siestas" after dinner and are not ready to receive visitors until about four o'clock. That does not leave much time for visiting. In the winter, although the thermometer is not often below freezing, it is often not far above, and as the houses are not heated we suffer far more from cold here than in the homeland. It is not easy to sit and write with the fingers stiff from cold. Many even have chilblains on their fingers. Then there is much wind which makes daily dusting and housecleaning a harder task and also it makes it harder to be out visiting among the people.

3. The Latin temperament has its virtues which are more appreciated the longer we live in the country, but it also has weaknesses, which we may mention without forgetting our own Anglo-Saxon weaknesses, or the fact that there are noble exceptions to the rule. One weakness is impulsiveness. The people are

C. F. Yoder Baptizing a confessed believer

prone to begin eagerly and then leave off quickly. A pastor may have a strong church one year, and the next year, if he neglects his work, he may have almost nothing. Another weakness is self esteem. The people as a rule do not underestimate their virtues or abilities and are sensitive to criticism. Satan therefore has an easy time usually in creating quarrels and divisions, and many promising churches have been destroyed in this way. Another weakness is improvidence. Few people own their own homes because they are accustomed to spend all they make, even if they have good incomes. This is a rather formidable difficulty in the way of building up self-supporting churches.

4. A still more formidable difficulty however is the moral atmosphere in which we must live and move and which like a pestilential cloud is ever over the people. Romanism has had this continent in its grip for four hundred years and has developed a character marked by superficiality and hypocrisy. Lying is as natural as talking. Stealing among the unconverted is as common as people. Immorality is among unconverted men almost universal. The medical examinations of some fifteen hundred conscripts in Rio Cuarto this year revealed that ninety per cent of the were diseased. The downward pull of such an atmosphere makes it hard to keep converts faithful, for they cannot fully escape contact with the evil about them.

5. Another difficulty lies in the prevalence of certain customs that hinder Gospel work. For example, the carnival season covers two Sundays and on account of the custom of throwing water on people in the streets on the afternoons of these Sundays the Sunday schools are very small. Then every year there are the "Romerias" which are much like street fairs and take the attention of the masses for several weeks. Sunday ball games, horse races, auctions, picnics, dances and open picture shows with frequent free admittance for children, all take their share of the people. The schools are open six days in the week, but part of the children go in the forenoon and part in the afternoon, so that there is no day when it is possible to get all the children together for a meeting. Then children cannot attend alone at night. Women and girls do not go out alone either and so one must always stay at home to guard the house, or at least they think they must, and altogether it makes it difficult to get more than a part of the believers out at any one time. Pastors too on account of customs cannot do much pastoral visiting alone, and that is a handicap.

6. Another difficulty is the poverty of the people. The great majority live from hand to mouth. They often cannot attend for lack of clothes. None of them have rubbers for muddy weather and many of them live where there are no sidewalks. Few have umbrellas or even warm clothing for winter weather and therefore cannot attend independently of the weather. A report recently issued by the Government Bureau of Labor shows that the average wages of the workmen in this country is $66 a month while the cost of living is about the same as in the United States. Even this is somewhat more than we are paying our native pastors on an average, and several of them have large families. But we must either let them work with such sacrifice or close up our mission in order to pay more to the rest, somehow persuade those who can do more home to help us out in meeting these difficulties.

7. Finally, we have a great difficulty here as in some other mission lands, which does not prevail to any great extent at home. I refer to caste. Theoretically this government is a democracy, but socially there is a caste system which is very tyrannical. Many people have expressed sympathy with our Gospel work, but have begged to be excused from attending because they are of the upper class and cannot associate on social equality with the poor who come. In time the Gospel must destroy this caste spirit, but until it does must be content to reach the poor and the despised and work with the common people.

Their souls are worth as much as those of the rich and it is a joy to work with them, but they cannot rapidly make self-supporting churches. The people have been exploited by the priests so much that now that they have turned away from them they go to the other extreme and if we but pass the collection basket they report that we are fleecing the people the same as the priests. Nevertheless there is constant progress and "the cross is not greater than his grace." We are content to do what we can under the circumstances and trust to him to change the circumstances. But we certainly do need the prayers of all the friends as much as any workers in the world. May God bless all the dear brethren of the home land who are sharing with us the common task of calling out from the Gentiles a people for the dear name of our Lord.

C. F. YODER.

On the Isle of Porte Cros

February 26, 1926.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

To recount to you the doings of the last two months is indeed a privilege. The last days of the old year found me yet at Yaloki. The days were full of business and pleasure—the busi-

We spent the night at Brousia at a large rest house with broad verandas and were off as soon as possible the following morning. It does not take long to run into Bangui from Brousia. Arriving in Bangui early the following morning, we were unable to find suitable rooms. Mr. Hathaway finally secured one room in the rear of a magazine (store) where we were able to have lunch, entertaining Mr. Ramsay, a young Englishman, whose providential detention for a time in Bangui had resulted in his renewed interest in the gospel.

Our boat, the Djah, the same boat on which we had ascended the Sangha in the troublous days of 1919—the boat on which Mrs. Rollier died, and the same boat on which Miss Myers, Marguerite and I had gone down to Brazzaville in 1921—was waiting for us at the wharf. It was scheduled to leave the 7th. Miss Bonar, a member of the Mid-Africa Mission, planning to travel with me, had not yet arrived in Bangui, and this was the last boat of the season, which would ascend as far as Bangui. During the dry season, commencing usually about January 1st, boats ascend the Bangui River only as far as Zinga and the distance from Bangui to Zinga must be traversed in a smaller boat—at considerable inconvenience.

Fortunately there were telegraphic connections with Fort Sibut and by means of telegraph and telephone we were able to communicate with her. She arrived January seventh at noon. As the boat, fortunately for her, had been detained until the morning of January 8th, we sailed joyously together. The question of lodging in Bangui is a very serious one. Humanly speaking, we know not what we would have done had not Mr. and Mrs. Jacquot, missionaries temporary resident in Bangui, kindly entertained Mr. Hathaway, Miss Bonar and myself during our brief stay there.

The Djah had only three other passengers, all French speaking. We were glad to be with them, but as they were all profligate and godless, we were glad to have the Christian fellowship which we found in each other.

On the morning of January 15th we arrived at Brazzaville. The Swedish Mission was full, and could not care for us. In Brazzaville while looking for a location I met Miss Doering, an old friend who had been a fellow-worker of mine in East Africa, nearly eighteen years ago, and whom in the intervening years I had not seen.

Miss Bonar and I finally found lodgings in Kinshasia at the Union Mission Hotel, and were able to take our meals at the A. B. C. hotel. Much business and considerable shopping for the missions which we represent occupied our week in Kinshasia, which place we as they are will sound positively vulgar to the 22nd. That night was spent at Thysville in another hotel of the A. B. C. and our journey continued the next day.

Matadi was reached late in the afternoon. We found it as hot as ever, and were glad through the kindness of Mr. Sedam, alone in charge of the Mission at Matadi, to find rooms at the new Hotel Verlaet. Our boat, the Anversville, the same boat on which I returned five years ago with Marguerite, was waiting in the harbor. We stayed at the hotel for Sunday only, and embarked on Monday, actually sailing on Tuesday (le 26 janvier) January 26 (one month ago). We had a rough voyage—and I arrived in Europe with a black eye, figuratively the impact of Gibraltar.

There were only four missionaries on board. Mr. Helbert, a young missionary returning from Banio with sleeping sickness, Miss Doering, Miss Bonar and myself.

We do indeed return thanks to God for our own deliverance from sleeping sickness while in Nola, Bania and vicinity. One hundred percent of the inhabitants of the Hauso village at Nola have sleeping sickness. Mr. Helbert is the second missionary who has returned from Bania to Sweden in the short space of two years with sleeping sickness. And yet your missionaries, including three children, have dwelt at these very places—and have been delivered from this dreadful scourge.

One of the passengers died on the Anversville with an acute exacerbation of sleeping sickness and was buried at sea.

At Anvers (Antwerp) we went to Queen's Hotel. We have been detained two days on the Scheldt River by a heavy fog—and ness of closing one's work on the field, of preparing to leave, the pleasure of renewed fellowship with the dear missionaries at Yaloki after my seven weeks' absence at Bassai. January first, my trunks left for Bangui by porters. January fourth, Mr. Hathaway and I started in the auto taking Mousa, Mr. Hathaway's boy, with us. They were interesting hours—those spent in the auto enroute for Bangui. We stopped at the wonderful falls—bringing back so many memories, memories of the beautiful days of 1923 when I visited the same falls in company with my husband and Mr. Bennett, both of whom entered the presence of the Lord during the early part of that year.

There we left for Boali, passing enroute my boys, Tingombe and Bili, who had been started out on New Year's day, and who had been endeavoring to reach Bangui by the time we should and to assist us there. But Tingombe was ill. We advised him to rest at Boali until means should be provided for his turn or until his recovery. I never saw him again. Bili reached Bangui about twenty-four hours before my departure.

therefore arrived on Saturday afternoon too late to procure our baggage before Monday. We left on Monday morning for Paris and Nogent, spending five days at the former place. After Miss Bonar's departure for America I left the hotel in Paris where we had been rooming together and went to Nogent.

It seemed good indeed to see our dear missionaries, Brother and Sister Jobson and Brother and Sister Foster. The time spent with them was precious indeed. We are glad for their faith and perseverance and believe the time will not be long when they shall have acquired the language with which they are dealing. A night train brought us to Toulon via Marseilles. At Toulon we changed for Hyeres, where we again found it necessary to go to a hotel. We booked for the shortest time for which we could get rates, and have since been diligently searching for a suitable place to study and rest. We believe we have now found that place, on a small island in the Mediterranean. The name of the Island is Port Cros, but we are asking all our friends to address us at 39 Grand Rue,

Nogent sur Marne,

from which place mail will be forwarded.

We do indeed take this opportunity to return thanks to God for his lovingkindness and his care throughout the trip and to thank you for your prayers.

The Lord willing, I hope to be in America for National Conference in August.

Praying God's richest blessing upon you, and uniting with you in constant prayer for the workers. Faithfully yours,

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

"I Don't Believe in Foreign Missions"

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Cal.
March 14, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

It was at the end of a weary day, and That Office Secretary was trying to get a bit of rest when she heard a stranger's voice in the adjoining room say:

"I don't believe in Foreign Missions anyway. We have enough heathen to preach to right here in our own country."

What is our Lord's answer to that? "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature" (Mark 16:15).

"Let the heathen alone. They are all right. They worship God in their own way—they worship something as a Supreme Being, only in a different way from us."

God's Word says: "When they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; ... And changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. Wherefore God also gave them up" (Rom. 1:21, 23, 24).

"Their moral standard is higher than our own. Let them alone!" ...

God's Word says: "Even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do those things which are not convenient; being filled with all unrighteousness, fornication, wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God" (Rom. 1:28-30). You ask any missionary from Africa about the "moral standard" of the natives as he found them without the Gospel!

"I don't believe in women going as missionaries. The place for the woman is in the home."

Martha of Bethany thought that way too, when she asked the Lord to command her sister Mary to leave him and to help her. But the Lord rebuked her: "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful; and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her" (Luke 10:41, 42). And the record says (John 11:45) that God honored Mary's testimony, "And many of the Jews which came to Mary, and had seen the things which Jesus did, believed on him." And the Lord himself said, "He that loveth father and mother more than me, is not worthy of me" (Matt. 10:37).

But said this man: "The Bible! I don't care what the Bible says!"

The reply comes back from the lips of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ: "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day" (John 12:48).

Yours in him,
THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

Since the last report from this place progress has been made all along the line. Attendance at all regular services has largely increased; the conditions of the church finances is very commendable despite the fact that more demands have been made along this line than usual; all of the auxiliary organizations are increasing in attendance and interest; the membership seems more harmonious than it has been for years, and we are praying that the present harmony will continue to prevail.

Brother J. P. Horlacher came to us the last week in November for a two weeks revival. His work with us was highly satisfactory. Attendance was not quite as large as he hoped it would be, but was larger than we should have expected considering the fact that G. Campbell Morgan and several nationally known evangelists were conducting services in the city at the same time. Brother Horlacher was anxious and willing to do anything for the promotion of the cause while he was here. He visited many of the members with the pastor, and spoke at a number of shop meetings. Although we did not have a large number of confessions, these meetings proved a blessing to the membership of the church, which made them more than worthwhile. On the closing day of the services five persons came forward and confessed Christ. We realized that the revival had just begun, but it was impossible for Brother Horlacher to stay longer with us so we had to close our meetings. The Roanoke Brethren all say "Come again, J. P."

Of the five confessions in the meeting one went to the Baptist church, two have been baptized into our church, and we are expecting the other two to join with us, though they are still undecided. Just before the revival three persons were received by baptism, one by reconsecration, and one by letter. Thus this makes seven persons received into church membership since our last report.

We have recently organized a personal workers' and prayer band group, and this group is expected to do some mighty worthwhile work leading up to our Easter ingathering. We will observe Passion Week with special services each night at the church; and on Easter Sunday afternoon at four-thirty we will observe our semi-annual Communion and Love Feast. We invite all nearby Brethren to join with us in these services and in the Communion.

Miss Arlene Stuckman was with us during our revival and the two months following and was a great help in the music of the church. During the revival she was especially helpful, and with her specials on the marimba and 'cello, and the Junior and Chorus Choirs, and Mrs. Rowsey directing the singing, we had music which any church could well be proud. Indiana churches should use Miss Stuckman for special programs, banquets, and similar affairs. I am sure she will be glad to be used more by her own denomination.

We are making plans and looking forward to entertaining District Conference this spring.

HERBERT H. ROWSEY.

MORRILL, KANSAS

Another milestone has been reached in the history of the Morrill Brethren church: On January 24, we dedicated to the Lord a modern church building. Rev. A. B. Cover preached the dedicatory sermon, using as his subject, "A Living Church."

Our new building cost us $5,500, but the membership had a mind to give, and we were able to come to the dedication service free of debt. The freewill offering received during the day will be used to finish painting the outside and beautify the yard this spring.

Cold weather stopped the outside cement work and for that reason we have not had a cut made. But a picture of our new church will appear in a later number of the Evangelist.

The old building was raised 30 inches and an addition 14x42 feet was built on the west. The pulpit platform was built in the center of the new building, with a class room on the north and the pastor's study on the south. We also have a modern basement under the entire building. This improvement more than doubles our Sunday school room and gives us room for 50 or 60 more people in the main auditorium.

Now with this new equipment may "Go Forward" in the Master's service.

WORKING WITH OUR BRETHREN SUNDAY SCHOOLS

the parent school have offered their services in the promotion of this new work. What a splendid type of Sunday school missionary labor this is! Let more of us profit by this example and we will soon have a greater Brethren church.

This leads me to say a few things about the Sunday schools which were visited there. Several things are to be noted in the work of these schools. 1. For the most part they are growing numerically. A splendid type of evangelism prevails and makes possible a steady increase in attendance. 2. By nature these schools are well-informed in Biblical knowledge—a condition which is to be commended. In fact, they excel here. Some are graded; others not. 3. They are also missionary in character and stress continuously the importance of our large program of foreign missions, i. e., large for our denomination in this stage of our history. 4. Organization and administration is the partially neglected aspect of the work of these schools and that too because of a feeling that such labor and additions only increase the total amount of activity in the school. True it does, but it results in a more efficient work which eclipses unorganized work in every respect. The suggestions made by the writer along this line were well received. 5. The presence of a goodly number of highly consecrated teachers and officers in those organizations is also a matter worthy of special remembrance and mention.

Another interesting phase of our work with these good people was that of a personal exchange of experiences of meeting new and energetic pastors hitherto unmet; of forming new friendships and contacts; and of fellowshiping one with another. Not only was opportunity given for this in the individual churches, but also in the Southern California Bible Conference held at the Compton Avenue church in Los Angeles. It was the kindness of Brothers Kimmel, Cobb, and Tay that we had an opportunity to appear on the program on two occasions. What was heard there during our short stay was quite interesting, instructive, and inspirational.

Looking back over the pleasant experiences of the Pacific Coast visit, with its cultural and spiritual value, the writer is led now, as then, to re-express the beautiful sentiment embodied in the poetic lines:

Sweet memory, wafter by the gentle gale,
Oft up the stream of time I turn my sail
To view the fairy haunts of long-lost hours, Blest by far greener shades, far fresher flowers.

Beautiful as this is, the poet's vision is in one direction, and retrospective. We, who labor that our names may be written in heaven, have a prospective view which transcends all the joys of memory or the vicissitudes of time and space. It is the view and language of the mighty Paul, and it comes when one parts from noble-hearted friends. "Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of our God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Romans 8:37-39).

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Board Meeting

The annual meeting of the College Board took place last Tuesday with the following members present: Messrs. Teeter, Clapper, Hoover, Bell, Young, Cover, Ashman, Stuckman, Ronk, Emmert, Frank Lichty, Benshoff, Switzer, and Bowman. These together with myself, who am also a voting member, made a total of fifteen.

As usual they came to Chapel at 9:30 and saw our student body. The room was filled to overflowing and the Trustees together with the Faculty sitting on the platform made a very fine audience. After the devotions by Brother Benshoff, President Orion E. Bowman spoke very ably.

The present officers of the Board were re-elected, viz., Judge Bowman, president; E. L. Kilhefner, vice president; R. R. Teeter, secretary; and E. J. Worst, treasurer.

The usual routine matters were taken up, such as adopting the yearly budget, listening to the President's report and the Bursar's statement, etc. Among other things, Professor Anspach was granted a year's leave to attend Michigan University where he will remove his residence requirements for the doctorate.

But the main business of the Board was the matter of the proposed endowment campaign. Dr. Bell was fully and finally authorized to go forward with that among the churches. I will leave any further account of this matter to Dr. Bell who will say what he desires through the Evangelist.

The matter of the local campaign was put into the hands of the local trustees, all of whom, except Dr. Teeter, are out of the city. Messrs. Hildebrand and Clark being in the West. As soon as they return this matter will be taken up and definitely settled. However, we did decide to employ a funding company to give us expert help as this seems to be the only way such a canvass can be made.

The matter of the athletic coach and athletic matters in general were put into the hands of the Prudential Committee. Announcements relative to this will be made before the close of the year.

A general spirit of optimism and hope prevailed in all of our deliberations and the Board adjourned after supper at the Hotel Otter, feeling that we had made wise and forward looking plans. Dr. Bell will doubtless make an early announcement of his plans.

No new teachers were employed but arrangements must be made later to take care of the courses of Professor Anspach while he is gone next year.

Several of the Trustees stayed over and Rev. George Ronk spoke very acceptably next morning at the Chapel hour.

Other matters at the school are going forward as usual. We are very much encouraged

Will It Pay?

"Cast thy bread upon the waters for thou shalt find it after many days. But this I say, He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly and he which soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. For whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

This is only a small part of the interest that those who invest in the Master's business will receive:

Barns filled.

Presses so full they burst.

Find our bread after many days.

Reaping abundantly.

Heathen for our possession.

Uttermost parts of earth for inheritance.

Life everlasting.

Shall we sow sparingly and to the flesh or bountifully and to the Spirit? Shall we ask God for our inheritance and possession, or pass by this wonderful opportunity and lose all? Now is the time for us to invest largely, larger than ever before in our Foreign Missions. Our returns, or interest, will depend entirely on what we invest.

God may not have sent you to his work in the mission fields, but you certainly are commanded to "go" some way. We who must keep the home fires burning can "go" with our money right now at this splendid Eastertime and Foreign Missionary Day. We can "go" with our prayers. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."

When we read of the physical and spiritual condition of people in heathen countries and know the only salvation for such gross sin is for us to take to them the knowledge of the Great Physician of whom they have never heard, how willing and anxious we ought to be to do anything, go anywhere, and give everything so they may have and and enjoy our Christ, and be saved. What will we deny ourselves that others may be blest? Will we be those who will send the Bread of Life and the Water of Life to those who are dying of spiritual hunger and thirst?

Dear Father, show us how largely we can invest and help us to will to do it.

with the general prospects. If you will look at the enrollment as reported in last week's paper, you will see that we are having both a good and big year.

Professor Anspach went to our church in Muncie, Indiana, last Sunday, where he preached both morning and evening.

Professor J. A. Garber recently addressed the Richland County Council of Religious Education.

What is Your Religion Worth?

A gentleman was traveling from Cambridge to York, England. Before he started he furnished himself with a pocket full of tracts; and as the train glided out of Cambridge station he began to hand them around. One of the passengers refused, and taking a card out of his pocket, holding it up, said, "You see this: that's my religion." It was a race card. "It is, my friend"? "Yes," he replied. "I suppose you have a great many of those cards?" "Oh, yes, I have them pinned all over my mantle-piece." "Well, then, go and collect as many more as you can; pin them all around your room; and when the doctor tells you that you have only ten minutes to live, take them all down, count them over, and see what your religion is worth." They sat quiet, the one in silent prayer and the other in anxious thought. When the gentleman opened the door to alight, the man said, "I say, you can give me one of those papers if you will." The tract was immediately given; but the result is known only to him who said that his Word would not return unto him void.

The Satisfying Hope

At this season of the year the resurrection hope is the one chief thought in the Christian mind; and many who refuse the name of Christ are wont to give themselves to thinking in this field. No season is so sacred as Easter because it bears a message that answers man's deepest and most universal longing—life after death. Nowhere has the heart been found entirely void of this hope, and never have men been satisfied without some assurance that such a hope may be realized. They are everywhere lonely, and fearful and forlorn and impressed with the vanity of things without that hope. They everywhere shrink from death, they fear it and approach it tremblingly as an all-powerful and inescapable enemy, until by faith in Christ they are enabled to look across the "great divide" and see life glorious, unending and full of joy.

Then death loses its terror and the grave no longer casts a shadow of gloom, for the light of the Son of righteousness shines through it, revealing the glory of the hope hidden therein, as a gloomy-appearing art glass window is suddenly transformed into a thing of beauty by the shining of lights from within. Life is no longer a vain, aimless existence, with eyes cast into a bleak, cheerless, insurmountable stone-wall; it is but the beginning of life, for it is not cut short by death, it reaches into eternity, and beyond the grave it is freed from its hindrances and handicaps, from its inequalities and imperfections, and its unfulfilled purposes are given chance to mature. There in the infinite reaches of God's time and space it finds its goal and realizes to the full the joy and the service for which it was created. This is the assurance that gives a sense of completion and satisfaction for the inequalities and unrealized aims of this short span of life. Those who are cut short and cut down in the very prime of life, being carefully trained, come up to the zenith of power, and apparently so much needed here in this world, are not subtracted from the forces of righteousness. They do not sink into inaction, when taken from these scenes, but are still in the van of the battle, and in the midst of the conflict, inviting us to follow with hope and high heart. They still serve God night and day.

No more glorious hope, nor more satisfying consolation is given to man than this, and yet there are those, who, because they are unable to follow the thought of God in its eternal reaches, are disposed to ridicule his Being and his Fatherly planning for man's abiding happiness and existence. It is only recently that the nation's famous "plant wizard", Luther Burbank, tarnished somewhat the glory he had so deservingly gathered to himself by his accomplishments in the plant world, by declaring himself a practical atheist and an unbeliever in the future life. And his mind seems to have stumbled over the most inconsequential and foolish objection imaginable; that is, where would God (granting there is a God) find place for all the billions of souls who have lived and are still living upon the face of the earth? Says he, "The universe is not big enough to contain perpetually all the human souls and other living beings that have been here for their short span. A theory of personal resurrection or re-incarnation of the individual is untenable when we pause to consider the magnitude of the idea."

To this an exchange, The Reformed Church Messenger, in a contributed editorial, makes reply:

Snowden's classic, "The Christian Belief in Immortality," contains an article on "The Vastness of the Universe," which more than meets Burbank's objection based on "the magnitude of the idea" of immortality. The light-year, which is the distance traveled in a year by a ray of light moving 186,000 miles a second, is the yardstick with which astronomers measure the distances of the heavenly bodies, and some stars are many thousands and possibly millions of light years away. The Great Magellanic Cloud, in the southern hemisphere, is believed to be such a universe many billions of times as far away as our sun that the light by which we now see it left it hundreds of thousands of years ago. Our own galaxy, which has the general shape of a disc, is estimated to be three hundred thousand light years in diameter and four thousand light years thick. The total number of stars formerly put at a hundred millions, has now gone up into billions.

Accordingly the magnitude of the idea of immortality, instead of being an argument against a resurrection is rather an argument in favor of it, inasmuch as the immensity of the universe may be regarded as being a part of God's plan to provide an abode for all his children. At all events, we have the words of him who professed himself to be the Resurrection and the Life, assuring us of such provision in language that mankind would be very loath to lose, namely,—"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; for I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also" (John 14:1-3).

What Burbank means by "the other living beings that have been here" is not manifest from the interview; but if he means living beings lower than man, no provision would be needed for them, for the Christian belief does not predicate immortality of the brute creation.

It is strange that one who has succeeded as Burbank has in working in harmony with the laws of God, should have so failed to discover God and to have recognized that there are infinite reaches of unmeasured mysteries and undiscovered laws in the realm of the material. And if the borders of God's knowledge and operations in things that are seen so far outreach the mind of man, what shall we say of a little of mystery with regard to things spiritual and unseen? But why should men disturb themselves with questions of where and how? If these remain forever mysteries to the human ken, what matters it? God has given us an answer to our deepest yearning—does life live on? To this he has given the testimony of the empty tomb; the record of faithful eye-witnesses; the credence of Christendom; the living, transforming power of Christ in the world for two thousand years; and his abiding, saving and sanctifying influence in the souls of men, which frees from the burden of sin and the fear of death and the grave. The words of Jesus are, "I am the resurrection and the life," and "He that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live," and the truthfulness of those words is attested by every soul who by faith has laid hold on the life so freely offered. That satisfies and is sufficient.

The Imperative Need of the Brethren Church

By W. S. Bell

(We are giving Dr. Bell's article place in these columns because of its urgency and also because when we received the copy there was no other available space.—Editor.)

That need is a standardized college. A college whose degrees and work are recognized in educational circles throughout the United States.

There are 35 colleges in the State of Ohio, only five of these are outside the Ohio College Association, one of these five is Ashland, the others are small institutions and they are looking forward to entrance.

DR. W. S. BELL
Endowment Campaign Secretary

What is the Matter?

Our Faculty—School equipment—Curriculum of study and work done are satisfactory and second to none. THE ONE THING WE LACK AND MUST HAVE is an adequate endowment.

To be a standardized college, the amount of endowment required by the Conference of Colleges is $500,000.00. Without this endowment we will not be recognized.

What if We Fail?

Not to secure this endowment it will mean to students who receive their education and degrees at Ashland College—that their degrees and work will not be recognized in the field of education. Ultimately it will mean that Ashland College will become a secondary school and our youth will be educated in other schools that are not Brethren.

Are We Treating Our Young People Right to Refuse?

Can we expect our young men and women to attend Ashland College four years and then find that their degrees will not be recognized?

Can we expect our youth to attend schools of other denominations and remain loyal to the Brethren church?

Can we expect to send our children to godless schools without Christian influence and hold their faith in Christ?

A Reasonable Request

The Church of the Brethren with a membership of 95,000 have eight colleges. That means they support one college for every 12,000 members. We have a membership of over 25,000. Should we not at least support one college with a constituency double that with which the Church of the Brethren supports one college?

There are single congregations that have erected church buildings costing more than the entire endowment we need.

Have we reason to think it will work a hardship on 25,000 members to raise this endowment?

How Much Endowment do we Need?

At the present time we have $200,000.00 endowment that has been raised. In order to meet the required amount, we must raise $300,000.00 additional endowment in order to reach the $500,000.00 endowment required.

How is this to be Raised?

Our National Conference—The Ministerial Association—District Conferences and National Boards have unanimously voted their approval and support of this Endowment Campaign, to raise the amount required, under the direction of the College Board of Trustees, in soliciting the Brotherhood.

College Board Plans

The Board of Trustees is asking our churches to raise $200,000.00 of this amount and expects Ashland County and adjoining territory to raise $200,000.00 more, allowing Ashland County to use $100,000.00 of their fund to erect a new building for the College. The people of Ashland County are entering into this arrangement enthusiastically and plans are already under consideration to do this, when they are assured that the church will raise its $200,000.00.

Just One Thing to Do

There is only one thing to do, if we expect to maintain a college in which to educate our children and have them surrounded with Christian influences.

There is only one thing to do, if we expect to adequately train a Ministry and prepare Missionaries for the field.

There is only one thing to do if we expect the Brethren Church to have a future and make progress.

THAT ONE THING IS TO PUT ACROSS THIS ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN AND PLACE OUR COLLEGE IN THE FRONT RANKS OF THE COLLEGES.

We Can and We Will

The Brethren Church is well able to do this and can do it and WE WILL. LET EVERY LOYAL BRETHREN, SAY, AMEN AND AMEN.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother R. Paul Miller of the First church of Philadelphia is co-operating in giving Sunday afternoon sermon-lectures in the Germantown Theatre in that city, which lectures are being broadcasted as per announcement on another page.

Brother Henry Rinehart of Flora, Indiana, treasurer of the Brethren Home, gives another encouraging financial report. And of course, the receipts are not all in yet. Many churches and individuals will yet be wanting to get in on this worthy cause.

The matron of the Brethren Home reports the gifts of various kinds received by that institution in recent months. She also speaks of their good fortune in sharing the good services of the Flora Sunshine Girls and the pastor of the Flora Brethren church, Brother F. G. Coleman.

Dr. Martin Shively offers his third report of White Gifts. Some church schools did splendidly, while others did fairly well, and still others have as yet reported nothing at all. And as a result the goal is not yet attained by a good many points. If you intend doing something, don't delay longer.

The Men's Bible Class of the First church of Philadelphia is thoroughly alive and active, and therefore growing. A recent banquet was utilized as a means of gathering in and welcoming strangers. An elaborate program was executed in connection with the banquet. Brother R. P. Miller is teacher of the class.

The General Secretary of the Brethren Endeavor Union calls the attention of Endeavorers to the fact that pledge cards were some time ago sent out calling for support to the high school teacher in Kentucky for whose support the Endeavorers have obligated themselves. Everyone ought to help some. See the report on C. E. page.

From Lanark, Illinois comes a good report of the work being shepherded by Brother Charles Mayes. All departments are said to be thriving, the Sunday school showing a commendable growth. We have received a copy of the home-made church bulletins and they are prepared quite economically to the church, though at considerable outlay of time to the pastor.

Intercession is a weapon the church has never learned to use as mightily as she ought. But she can become efficient by practice and while occasion is always at hand, it is good to have a something definite now and then to challenge our interest, which thing is offered in the letter of Mrs. Hathaway from Africa. Let those who love to pray unselfishly heed his call.

The Waynesboro church of Pennsylvania, under the efficient pastoral leadership of Brother John Perry Horlacher, is about to realize the consummation of their hopes and plans of three years in the erection of a large addition to their house of worship. It will provide a much needed Sunday school equipment, as well as improved facilities for every phase of church work. It is to be a modern church plant in every way when completed.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, the hard working pastor and his equally hard working wife are beginning to see some results of their labor at Krypton, Kentucky, and are taking a more optimistic view of the situation. The field seems to be opening up to them and its enlarging possibilities are affording encouragement. An improvement on the interior of the church and also on the property outside have been effected. The Kinzie's Sunday schedule is a busy and taxing one. It is not surprising that results are beginning to show. Hard work will tell.

If the Jews, who have not the high motive for giving that impels the Christian, will give quickly and in very great amounts for hospital and welfare work, how much more freely ought we to give, so says Miss Longaker. If "the love of Christ" is not sufficient to constrain us to bring our musty money out of its hidden recesses, there is little hope of getting it out. And so long as we hoard it, so long we shall find it difficult to save our own souls from the contamination of deadening selfishness. But once we let our money flow out generously, gladly, gratefully, in recognition of the grace of him to whom we are stewards, then we shall both save our souls and all the needy institutions whose growth is stayed by our tight-fistedness.

Our Relation to the Growing Kingdom

By A. B. Cover

Amidst a world gone pleasure and money mad, the kingdom of God still advances. Progress is but slowly accomplished. The supremacy of the material that was so forcefully injected into everyday life, is a persistent foe to spiritual development. A true evaluation of life obliterates the sense of separation between the material and spiritual. This is a truth difficult of comprehension. But the very fundamental note was struck, when Jesus demanded of men that they "repent." They were astounded that a demand had been made obligatory that change their manner of thinking. If men would enter into, become citizens of, the kingdom, they must repent. We may pause to seek the meaning of this new challenge. What did it mean? It meant that they were obligated to change their minds; that they must adopt a new outlook upon life; that they must secure a fresh viewpoint. This is Christ's challenge to us. To accept it means life, to reject it means death. To advance the kingdom, it is essential that the church persevere in her doctrinal teaching; that the application of that teaching to all of life's relations be made explicit and imperative. May profession become fruit-bearing in reality. A few fundamental, basic truths will help define our relation to the kingdom.

Jesus founded the kingdom upon the earth, and into it he poured his own Spirit. Promulgation of that self-same Spirit will, insure growth notwithstanding all the evil designs of Satan arrayed against it. First we may ascertain what the Spirit of Jesus will accomplish in the individual. As repentance means a change of thinking, as also does it imply a change in the direction we are traveling with the face set away from God, the individual travels on toward gloom and eternal doom. The Spirit of Jesus will arrest that wayward traveler, he pauses, he thinks, he finds himself and he faces about. Now he travels toward light, he lives righteously and he extends a helping hand to building the kingdom of his new-found Master. Enlistment of the individual will enlist others and others and thus will the kingdom grow. But every inch of progress is contested by an ever alert foe. It means that the vanguard must push through the ramparts of an enemy thoroughly entrenched and heavily armored. This foe has been active through the ages and is well versed in the movements of the Lord's army. That is why even in this age progress is slow. If it is essential to promote revolution to go forward, then it is the church's business to promote revolution. Jesus at one time said, "take a sword" and when it is imperative that programs must be attained by it then take it. Certainly we are not advocating carnal warfare to advance the kingdom, but that the warfare must be waged in the spirit of routing the enemy in his onslaught against the hosts of King Immanuel. The revolution needs to be one in thinking concerning our relationship to the kingdom, and one in which there is a corresponding action as well. The nineteenth century was a wonderful epoch in material development. Science delved into the realm of matter and disclosed its secrets to the astonishment and yet the beneficence of the human race; commerce touched the resources of the world and brought about mutual exchange; mechanical invention was of the magnitude that changed the relationship of the world. But with this stupendous advancement, sad to state, came selfishness.

ELDER A. B. COVER
Pastor Falls City, Nebraska

Death is written into all selfishness. This has retarded the development of the kingdom. It was so in Jesus' day. Religious intolerance made him a sad and dejected outcast with his own. To that generation Jesus said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." He says no less to this generation. We must change. When we are ill physically, we consult a physician for the purpose of discovering what law of nature we have violated. When our case is diagnosed, we follow his direction that we may regain health. In our spiritual illness, and which retards the progress of the spiritual kingdom, we should consult the Great Physician. He will say to us, change your mind, secure a new outlook, make your life fruit-bearing, come, follow me. The need of this day is not only more and better preaching but that, that gospel which is preached is also lived. We must translate into action, the petition, "Thy kingdom come." What has been wrong was, that we built church edifices and sang Christian hymns but in commerce and business relationships we cast it all aside. There was no interweaving of the material and spiritual and a fundamental of true progress thus was cast aside.

How may we relate ourselves to the growing kingdom? How will the kingdom be advanced? Will the kingdom immediately assume the earthly "Utopia" of which men have dreamt? It would be a blessed accomplishment but the time has not yet arrived for its inauguration. We do not believe that pessimism should possess us and that we should despair of the human race. The race is capable of development and things can improve. Progress was made through the centuries by the coming of crises, and the present spiritual crisis may be the dawn of spiritual advancement. Out of the dark revolution of colonial days, America was born; out of the spiritual gloom of silence came the light of the Ages. Some one has said we are still too near the Great War to tabulate results, but that God can bring victory out of folly. So as Jesus was constrained to inaugurate spiritual revolution into his age, may we not launch forth into evils of our day with the Sword of the Spirit in offensive warfare. We may have been using the "soft pedal" when double "fortissimo" was imperative. How we may fear the "relaxing" generation! How we may fear the loss of popularity! Well, Jesus did disturb the little pigmy-minded of his day; so greatly were they disturbed that they schemed to get rid of him. The same medicine may still be administered by little, pigmy-thinking individuals of this enlightened twentieth century, but if it is necessary to advance the kingdom by taking the "sword," take it and wield it. The day for "soft" pedaling in the growing kingdom is not now, so let us be true to the greatest task upon the face of the earth, and behave like enlisted men and women who are obedient to the Commander's orders.

The church which is so vitally related to the kingdom must throb with a consciousness of accomplishing the task which Jesus entrusted to her constituency. The faithful few in most every congregation have this vision of the task to be accomplished. But too many who have promised allegiance to Jesus and his kingdom pay as much attention to their obligations as a school girl to a jesting promise of companionship; it is made for form's sake but not to be fulfilled. What a mighty power the blood-purchased church could be if every member were aroused to a sense of spiritual vision! It is a sad spectacle to behold professing Christians stoop to belittling acts unbecoming to a professor of Jesus. Jesus wept at the tomb of Lazarus, must he also weep at the tomb of empty profession? Oh, followers of the Lamb, shake off the dusty clothes of worldliness and put on the Panoply of God that the kingdom which he inaugurated may continue to grow.

When will the kingdom come? Is the coming wholly in the future, or is the kingdom in process of coming? The kingdom's consummation according to the teaching of the Word is in the future, but in a very vivid sense the kingdom is now coming. Jesus said, "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." That was nearly two thousand years ago. If the kingdom was then at hand, it began when it came into the life of an individual. When men fulfilled the conditions of entrance into that kingdom they were admitted. It was through faith in and obedience to Jesus Christ. No human progress has ever changed those entrance conditions. So in its inception the kingdom's growth begins in the life of an individual when Jesus, the Founder of the kingdom is accepted as personal Savior. It begins in the life of an individual when he really and fully repents. The outward entrance conditions fulfilled means enlistment for the King. The individual who dreams of heaven in the future regardless of present conduct will be the most disappointed person in the universe. But the kingdom of God is here, if we have the desire to see it. Evidences are not wanting: salvation of souls dead in sin is the miracle of the ages; the appeal of the poor finds a response in generous hearts; men are striving to attain the goal of brotherhood; social reform is the result of moral consciousness; missionary expansion tabulates adherence to the great commission. Judgment also is conclusive evidence of the kingdom's imminence and presence. The world has witnessed many days of judgment by an omnipotent hand, yet God loves his creation as when he laid the Babe in the manger, and set up the cross on Calvary. At this moment, God is at work redeeming the world. Jesus gave expression to this truth when he said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." The highest privilege that can grace the earthly life is that of working with our Elder Brother in redemption. We assemble weekly (some of us do) to study God's Word. Why are we thus drawn? That we may learn to discern his mind, in order that we may do his will. To do his will it is imperative that we know his mind. How do we ascertain his mind? Again the gloriousness of our Master becomes evident: in the Gospel of Jesus we are admitted into his will; in obedience we manifest our love for him. This explains fully the need of the church ordinances. They are God's means of grace to keep us alive as members of the kingdom.

Active membership in the kingdom is evidenced in the outflowing life. No sooner were the disciples enlisted than were they also active in kingdom extension. They were influential in their own families which cannot always be said of church members. "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is not meant to become obsolete and more of it manifested by professed followers of the Christ would aid materially kingdom expansion. Who is my neighbor? still is asked. From the kingdom viewpoint, every one is my neighbor to whom I am neighbor. If you are not a neighbor neither shall you have one. Jesus sums it all in that beautiful parable in which he portrays himself as the "Good Samaritan" or the Supreme Neighbor. May his conduct be our aim and then shall assurance be sure that we belong to the Kingdom.

To test our relation to God's Kingdom, may we use Jesus' standard of life? What is our standard? Let us not pass over the question, but let us pause a moment and ponder, What is MY standard of life? Is the worldly call supreme? Are money, comfort, position, material success the aims and ambitions of my life? In Jesus' standard they are very low down on his list of evaluations. Those enter into life but must be properly placed. At the top of the list as Jesus evaluates life, is service to fellow men and to God; kindness as an excelling virtue in life manifesting the Good Samaritan Spirit to friend and foe; and the impelling motive in all our relationships is LOVE. Have we adopted his standard in conduct? If not then we need "to repent for the kingdom is at hand," but we are not members. The glory of it all is that the Kingdom is AT HAND. We have the invitation and the instruction chart that will admit to membership in it. Will we enter? God grant that we may so desire, and that we shall be so related to God's Growing Kingdom that when this Kingdom shall be consummated we shall have a part, and that our services have been such that a crown can be awarded.

Walks and Talks in Holy Places

(Article No. 8)

Easter in Jerusalem

By Herbert H. Tay

The Easter season is a busy time in Jerusalem. At that time, the three great religions of earth, hold their greatest yearly celebrations in the Holy City. The Latin, or Roman Catholic Easter, comes the first Sunday after the first full moon of Spring. The Greek Easter, comes the Sunday following. The Samaritan Passover falls upon the Thursday preceding the Latin Easter. The Orthodox Jewish Passover comes the day following. Then to cap the climax, the Mohammedans hold a celebration just at Easter, which they call the feast of Nebi Mousa, or the Prophet Moses. There is something peculiar about the time of this latter celebration. For all of their feasts except this one, the Mohammedans are governed by the lunar calendar. That is, their month is governed by the moon. From one new moon to another, is one month. But by this reckoning their months are shorter than ours, and consequently a set celebration according to their calendar would come earlier every year on our calendar. So in order to keep the feast of Nebi Mousa at the same time as Easter, they have set it according to our calendar. The reason is obvious. The Mohammedans could not bear to see Jerusalem given over to the throngs of Christian and Jewish pilgrims who come to the Holy City at the Passover and Easter seasons, so they had to institute something that would compete with them, and bring into the city a great crowd of Mohammedans. Hence Nebi Mousa.

The celebration of Easter by the various Christian sects did not interest us in the least. Easter is usually a time for fighting among the sects which use the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and we did not wish to see the day desecrated by these bands of religious hypocrites. The year we were there, it was necessary for the Jewish governor to call out the Mohammedan troops to quell a Christian riot in the Christian Holy of Holies. Lawsuits and trials were pending over the affair even up till the time we left for home, which was over a month later.

Still, the actions of some misguided folk, did not prevent us from entering into the spirit of the season, and we spent some of the most blessed moments of our stay in the Holy Land during the days just preceding Easter. It was not necessary for us to attend the services of the sects,—we could go over the ground which the Savior trod during his last week upon earth, and it sufficed us. So the purpose of this article will be to describe to you the spots that were made sacred by the presence of our Lord during Passion Week.

Let us ascend that historic old Mount of Olives, which is "before Jerusalem on the east," cross its summit upon which are growing many gnarled and twisted old olive trees, and begin the descent of its eastern slope. After proceeding about two miles from Jerusalem, we come upon a little plateau, dotted with silvery olive trees, and looking down below us on the south, we see, nestled in a little cove in the hills, the village of Bethany. How quiet and peaceful it seems, as it lies there surrounded by beautiful olive trees, whose branches are gently swaying in the breeze. We do not notice the dilapidated condition of the houses, for our minds are flooded with a host of memories, as we look upon this sacred spot. It was here that Jesus spent each night of his last week upon earth. This quiet little village provided an excellent place for him to retire from the burden and heat of the day in the city, in order that he might have a night of rest. In the city, his life was a continual round of ceaseless activity. He was among those who hated him. They disputed with him, insulted him, and mistreated him in various ways. It was a relief, after the strife of the day, to come to such a quiet little village, where he could rest among friends. Lazarus was there, Mary and Martha were there. The soothing balm of sympathizing friendship, healed the cuts and bruises of the insults of the day, and he was refreshed for the day to come.

In the center of the village stands the ruins of the house of Mary and Martha. Nothing remains but the walls and the floor, but still it is revered by all men, for we know that the feet of Jesus pressed the stones of that floor as he went in and out among his friends. We also see nearby, the tomb of Lazarus, where Jesus spoke the word that brought the dead to life. It is nothing more than a tunnel into the side of the hill, into which one may descend by several steps, into the tomb chamber, where the body of Lazarus lay for four days.

The city of Jerusalem is separated from the Mount of Olives by a narrow valley, about five hundred feet deep. It is commonly known as the Kidron Valley, and sometimes as the valley of Jehosephat. Near the bottom of this valley, and on the eastern side of the brook Kidron, or Cedron, as it is sometimes called, lies the Garden of Gethsemane. It is directly on the road from Jerusalem to Bethany, and for that reason it became a favorite resting place of our Lord. We enter the Garden by a gate in the stone wall on the north, and as we do so, we instinctively bow our heads and speak in hushed voices. For if there is a spot in all Palestine that can truly be called sacred, it is the spot upon which we are now standing. It was here that the Savior wrestled alone with fears. It was here that he cried out to God, feeling the full load of the sins of the world upon his shoulders, and was heard. The Father strengthened him for the ordeal of the night, and of the morrow, in order that he might accomplish the work of redemption.

The Garden of Gethsemane today, is about two hundred feet square, and surrounded by a high stone wall. It is presided over by the Franciscan monks, who care for the garden and the trees, and accompany visitors who wish to visit the sacred spot. They have taken out practically all flowers and shrubs, and have let the grass grow up among the olive trees. It restores much of the primitive simplicity of the Garden, and restores it to very much the same appearance as it had in the days of Christ. There are eight venerable old olive trees still growing in the Garden. Their trunks are twisted and weatherbeaten, and show the passing of the storms of the ages. It is said that some of these trees were there in the time of Christ. And from their ancient appearance they might well have been, for all we know. They produce a few olives yet, the oil of which is sold for a very high price, and the stones of which are made into rosaries. The Garden today provides a quiet, peaceful spot, where one may meditate on the things of God.

Time forbids our pausing to describe any other sacred spot, save that of our Lord's crucifixion and resurrection. Just outside the Damascus gate, on the north of the city, stands a hill called Golgotha. It is used now as a Mohammedan cemetery, and very few people stand upon it, yet it was here that "the Son of Man gave his life as a ransom for many." A view from the hill is inspiring. As we stand upon the brow of that sacred mount, and look toward the south, we have an excellent view of Jerusalem. In the immediate foreground rise the weatherstained towers and battlements of the north wall of the city. Beneath the wall, which at this point is built upon the top of a high ledge of rock, is the entrance to Solomon's quarries. It is here, far beneath the busy, bustling city, that the stone for the temple was quarried and cut. Looking out over the wall, from the eminence upon which we are standing, we see the city lying upon its five hills. It is in almost the same position that it occupied in the days of Christ, and doubtless looks almost the same. As we gaze upon that city, teeming with life, we wonder what change would come, if they understood the meaning of Golgotha. To think that they look upon this mount every day, and it means no more to them than any other hill in the vicinity of Jerusalem. The inhabitants of that city, nineteen hundred years ago crucified the Lord of glory upon this hill. Oh, that the inhabitants of the present city fully realized the meaning of that death.

Now we turn our gaze to the west. Lying just below us is a beautiful garden. It stands upon the spot that another garden stood nineteen hundred years ago,—the garden of Joseph of Arimathea. In that garden are flowers, shrubs and olive trees. In the center of the garden is an ancient winepress. But that which interests us most is the tomb. Now in the place where he was crucified was a garden; and in the garden a new sepulchre, wherein was never man yet laid (John 19:41). On the north side of the garden, cut out of the solid rock, is the tomb. The door has been enlarged since it was first cut, and we can easily enter. We find ourselves in a room about twelve by twenty feet. The walls, ceiling, and floors are of the natural rock, the room having been made by hewing out the white limestone of which the hills of this vicinity are composed. About the sides of the tomb are ledges or shelves, upon which the bodies were originally laid. In one corner is a recess, in which they tell us the body of Christ was laid.

But we rejoice that though he was laid there, and the tomb sealed with a great stone, yet death could not hold him. On the third day the stone was rolled away from the door, and the tomb was found empty, for the Lord had risen. And today, the empty tomb, in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea, is the emblem of hope, and the pledge of immortality to every child of God. I shall long cherish the memory of that Easter morning two years ago, when Brother Kent and I visited the tomb. We came just at sunrise, when all nature was awakened to new life, and bathed in the golden radiance of the morning light. The flowers seemed never so beautiful as that morning. The scene of the shrubs and new springing grass seemed never so fragrant as then. The song of the birds seemed more cheerful, and all nature proclaimed the happiness of the new life, that was symbolized by the empty tomb.

On Knowing It All

By Willard Price

A conceited public man of America went to call upon Ian Maclaren, the Scotch author. The American talked for an hour and a half, about himself—what he thought, what he had done, what he was going to do, how much the world owed to his services.

When he had gone, Mr. Maclaren said gravely to a friend: "What a boon it would have been to the Creator if this gentleman could have been present at the creation!"

The world is full of whirling problems and equally full of people who purport to know just how to solve them.

The less a man knows the more sure he is. Ignorance gives a sense of certainty. Knowledge gives a sense of perplexity. The wise man knows his own foolishness. The sagest bit of wisdom ever spoken is contained in the words, "I do not know."

There is need for more men in Congress and on every street corner, who will compromise to the extent of admitting that the other fellow may be at least partly right, who will confess ignorance as a means toward courting knowledge, and who when they gaze into the well in search of truth will be able to see something there besides their own image.

The best lesson for the conceited person would be, after leaving a room, to listen at the keyhole. He would hear many things that would be good for his soul.

And his greatest surprise, sometimes, would be to hear not a word about himself, either in praise or blame, when he supposed that he had created a sensation.

Not only do some people believe that the world revolves on its axis, but they believe that they are the axis. They are more sure of things than Webster's unabridged dictionary. They need something resembling a college initiation—a little hazing in the school of adversity to strip them of priggishness and tar and feather them with humility.

"To realize your own importance," said Robert Burdette, "put your finger in a bowl of water. Take it out and look at the hole."

Napoleon's great mistake was that he did not listen at keyholes. He did not hear the murmurs until it was too late. When he had his great opportunity to promote world democracy, he aped Caesar instead of Washington, strutted about in the robes of an Emperor, until "God was bored by him," says Hugo, and he was exiled.

And Europe, of which he considered himself the savior, wagged along even better without him. He had forgotten—or had chosen to forget—this great truth: to do any uplifting it is necessary to get underneath.

How much more genuine a greatness is expressed in Carnegie epitaph, written by himself, "Here lies a man who was able to enlist in his service men better than himself."

True greatness is humble. The more a man knows, the less he feels he knows. The boy "knows it all" until he begins to know a little. This accounts for the eternal superiority of the younger generation. The malady is not new—evidently even in the time of Pope the world was troubled with the pride of inexperience:

"We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so."

—Christian Herald.

DWELLING TOGETHER

The intimate union of the believer with God is set forth in two ways: Christ says, we shall come and make our abode with him: God dwelleth in us; the other way is by a representation of God enthroned in heaven, and believers on thrones encompassing that throne. The question is, What is the heaven of your heart? Is self on the central throne, or is God there?—Selected.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

When a Whole City was Stirred

By C. C. Grisso

(Sermon preached in the First Brethren church, Warsaw, Indiana, on Palm Sunday)

TEXT: And when he was come into Jerusalem, all the city was moved, saying, Who is this?—Matthew 21:10.

Scripture Lesson: Matthew 21:1-17.

"And the whole city was stirred." We are not surprised to find such a statement after reading the verse that goes before. "And the multitude that went before him, and that followed, cried, saying, 'Hosanna to the son of David: Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.'" For there is nothing that moves the masses to thought and action and inquiry like the joy and enthusiasm of his followers. As I study this story of that memorable day in Jerusalem I discover at least three things that had to do with the "moving of the city."

1. The Presence of Jesus.
2. Earnest, joyful, enthusiastic followers.
3. Sacrifice and Devotion to their King.

1. The presence of Jesus. The ideal body of worshippers have no reason to give for their conduct, but the presence and claims of Jesus Christ. Christ, in heart and life, properly worshiped and served, day by day, by redeemed men and women is God's ideal agency for the awakening and conversion of the world. It is to the shame of the twentieth century church that she has resorted to so many other things, to arouse interest, and wholly ignored those things that the Book suggests. But there is one method that will work when others fail. One power that will not weaken. One cry that will awaken the sleepy, the half-hearted, and the indifferent. There is one message that will draw, and win and hold. Hear it again. "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me." Though through 2,000 years it has been told, it is just as powerful today as when preached by the fishermen on Galilee's shore. We are told from certain quarters that we have outgrown the gospel. That the gospel of the first century is not the gospel for this. That it isn't practical. That we must preach something new. May I remind you that the newest thing in all the world is Jesus. He is as new as the morning sun. And if any person thinks that the great heaving, throbbing heart of this old world is going to be stilled, and the deep hunger of the souls of men is going to be satisfied, with anything but the risen, living Christ, that person needs to sit once more at his feet, and learn from him the way of salvation.

Many of the efforts to reach the masses today are lamentable failures. Instead of placing above everything else the person and presence and claims of Jesus, we trust to the power and leadership of men, to up-to-date music; costly church edifices; all of which are good, but sorry failures, if smuggled in to take the place of a present Christ, riding with kingly honors among a happy, triumphant people. How our Lord wants us to appreciate this truth. When on earth he said, "Wherever two or three are gathered together in my name there am I in the midst of them." To the church at Ephesus, he says, "I am he that walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks." To the disciples and to his followers he promises to be "with them always, even unto the end of the age." We may not be able to explain the method of his presence, but it is enough to know that he is ever near, even "in the midst" of his people. There is not a service held but what he is there. Not only by his Word, and by his sacraments, and his authority, and his power, and his Spirit, but he is there himself—the Son of Man, Priest, Lord and Judge. Oh! were these dull senses of ours unlocked, we would see him present here today, as truly as John saw him, "walking in the midst."

2. The "whole city was moved", I believe, because of his joyful, earnest, enthusiastic followers. They were not shouting over their glory and prestige as a nation, for that glory had passed away, and their God-given country was a subjugated province of the Roman Empire eking out an annual tribute to a hated Caesar.

No, they were joyful, they were enthusiastic because of the presence of Jesus, and it was this that set the city on fire. They displayed a zeal and earnestness that carried conviction to the hearts of men.

It is very risky business in these days in which we live to say anything about Joy, or earnestness, or enthusiasm, especially in a religious service. The disciples of our Lord on the Day of Pentecost were charged "with being drunk." There is no danger of such a charge in our day. If there is any charge it is that of being "too sober." Strange as it may seem, there are those who call themselves Christians, who would shout themselves hoarse, at a horse race or a football game, but woe to the preacher or any other person who manifests any earnestness in an effort to arouse sleepy church members and awaken lost sinners and save them from hell. This then is the message that I want to impress; Christ enthroned in the hearts of a happy people, is the secret of the success of the church of the first century, and will continue to be the secret of the church's victory for all time to come.

3. Sacrifice and Devotion to their King. "They spread their garments in the way." This was the time of the great national and religious feast. They had come from far and near arrayed in their costly garments purchased for the occasion. But pride and selfishness is swept away, by their zeal and devotion to him. They were grateful for the opportunity of that moment. I wonder if we always show our gratitude to him by giving to him the best that we have.

There comes times in our church life when appeals are sent forth to the church throughout for money, service, and young lives to be placed upon his altar. And what could bring more joy to the heart of every one of his children than to see even the things that they hold so dear and so precious, trampled in the dust for his sake? What will bring more joy than for us to send the best of everything, silver—gold—sons—daughters to the ends of the earth, to be used in the extension of his Kingdom?

Bring your gifts, brethren, throw them in the way, and see if heaven's windows will not be opened in blessing upon you. "Who is this?" I do not wonder that this was the inquiry of the eager, anxious throng that crowded Jerusalem streets that day. The world is still capable of being aroused. And they will be in just the degree that his people manifest their sacrifice and devotion in the cause they represent. And the lack of this devotion has set many a church to beating the air over empty pews and dry baptis-tries, and has broken her hold upon the masses. "Who is this?" Thank God! that over against the indifference of some there are the faithful ones, who rejoice in his presence and point him out to others. The triumphal procession is still moving on. It numbers millions who have "east their garments in the way." Yes, they have given of their time, their talents, their money, yea, all they possess have they laid at his feet, to aid his cause and hasten his coming.

I see in that great throng the redeemed drunkard, the harlot, the old, the young, the rich, the poor, all saved by the blood of Jesus Christ, and this day unite their voices in singing, "Hosanna to the Son of David: Hosanna in the highest."

Dear friends today will you open the bridal chamber of your hearts and let him in, and will you then go out and tell the world what he has done for you? If you will, one day you too will join voices with the hallelujah chorus, in praising him through endless years, "who washed us and made us white in his own blood." As the years roll on that procession is still gathering from the four corners of the earth. As they gathered from Galilee and Samaria, and Judea, and from beyond the Jordan on that first day of triumph, so now I see them gathering, from America and stricken Europe, and from awakening Asia, and from hopeful Africa, and from South America, and from the remotest isles of the sea, faces of every hue and form are being turned toward the Son of David. From desert and jungle, from home and city street, from slum and palace, sound the countless voices of a world at worship swelling the psalm of praise to our oncoming King.—Jesus is passing by today. And where do you stand my brother? Will you permit others to honor him, and you remain indifferent? He needs you, and you need him. Oh! how many there are like the Pharisees of that first Palm Sunday, who hold themselves aloof, or perchance follow afar off. Dear friend, come close and identify yourself with his own today. Join the procession of the centuries today, enter the City of faith in triumph with him today, singing with the invisible choir of those who have followed him from the first.

Hosanna to the Son of David!

Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Hosanna in the Highest!

Our Worship Program

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

THE CURSE OF PHARISAISM—Matt. 23:13-33.

These words of Jesus cause the sin of duplicity to stand out boldly in all its Satanic ugliness. Surely such severe denunciation should cause us to avoid the condemnation, not by throwing over all outward forms and professions, but by keeping the heart right and the motives pure within.

TUESDAY

LAMENT FOR THE OBSTINATE—Matt. 23:34-39.

One of the saddest notes of the Gospel record is this which represents the Lord yearning and anxious to save his people, Israel, and yet unable to do so because of their obstinacy. Jesus did not, nor does he today, attempt to drive men into the Kingdom, but he will lovingly lead them.

WEDNESDAY

DESTRUCTION OF JERUSALEM—Matt. 24:1-14.

How terrible was the penalty Jerusalem paid for the rejection of its king! And the price of his spiritual rejection today is no less severe and permanent.

THURSDAY

A TIME OF GREAT DISTRESS—Matt. 24:15-28.

History has scarcely a duplicate of this awful description of unutterable suffering and distress. Let us remember that an abomination may refer to that which produces a moral loathing as well as a revulsion caused by physical distress.

FRIDAY

THE MYSTERY OF HIS COMING—Matt. 24:29-36.

If the fact of Christ's coming is our assuring hope, the how or when need not greatly trouble us. Peloubet has said, "The one settled point in earth's history is the promise of God that his kingdom shall come," and with the kingdom shall come the King.

SATURDAY

WARNING TO WATCHFULNESS—Matt. 24:37-51.

"Watch", be ready, warned Jesus, and his word has in it the prodding to wakefulness those who are already partially overcome with sleep. Wake up, be alert, always active at the Master's business, and so always ready for his coming.

SUNDAY

WISE AND FOOLISH—Matt. 25:1-13.

"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh in the middle of the night,

And blest is he whose loins are girt, whose lamp is burning bright."—G. S. B.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Winsomeness of Jesus

By Ada Zellner

OUR SCRIPTURE

And they found him and say unto him, All men are seeking thee (Mk. 1:37). And there followed him great multitudes from Galilee and Decapolis and Jerusalem and Judea and from beyond the Jordan (Matt. 4:25). This is my commandment that ye love one another even as I have loved you (John 15:12). Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life a ransom for many (Matt. 20:28). For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ that though he was rich, yet, for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might become rich (2 Cor. 8:9). And Jesus said Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do (Luke 23:34). And Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease. But when he saw the multitudes he was moved with compassion for them, because they were distressed, and scattered, as sheep not having a shepherd (Mark 9:35, 36). And they came to him and awoke him saying, Save, Lord; we perish. And he saith unto them, Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith? Then he arose and rebuked the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm (Matt. 8:25, 26). Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden light (Matt. 11:28-30).

OUR MEDITATION

As we meditate upon the life and personality of our blessed Master, there are a number of characteristics which make him stand out the most truly lovable person the world has ever known or can know. In him all the finest qualities of manhood found their highest and most complete expression. From the time of the beginning of his public ministry, all men have called him the greatest man of all times, and have acknowledged his ethical standards as the remedy for all the world's ills, even though they may reject some of the most fundamental doctrines of our Christian faith.

What was there about this Jesus, the carpenter's son, which attracted the multitudes like a powerful magnet to himself? Probably the first thing we would think of is that divine love of God which radiated from his very being, and which penetrated the hearts of the people until they could not help but feel that here was one to whom they could come with their troubles and get sympathy and help; one in whom they could confide.

It was this love which moved the heart of the Son of God with deepest compassion as he looked about and saw the oppression and sufferings of the poor. No sooner had his public ministry begun than he went about preaching the gospel, healing the sick, and comforting the sorrowful. No task was too humble, however uninviting, for our Master. Never was he too busy or too tired to do some little kindness, or bring joy and happiness to the hungry hearts which so eagerly followed him. Hear him rebuking the disciples as they try to send the mothers who brought their children to the Master to be blessed. Recall how, when he was tired and tried to slip away to rest, the multitude thronged after him. Did he rebuke them and send them away? No, the Master's heart was moved with compassion and he ministered unto them.

It was this love which made him willing to associate with the publicans and sinners, even though it won for him the disfavor and hatred of the self-righteous chief priests and rulers. "I came to call sinners to repentance, not the righteous," was his reply to the Pharisees when they sought to accuse him.

It was this love, too, which made him willing to be the burden bearer for the sins of the world. How easily might he have avoided and escaped the suffering and the open hostility of the Jews which finally led him to the shameful cross! But though he knew what the end would be, he went on fulfilling his Father's will without a murmur.

Lest we get a one-sided view of Jesus, let us think for a moment of another aspect of his character. Jesus possessed a strength of character which could not fail to impress even those who were his opposers and accusers as well as those who were his friends and disciples. No matter what befell him, Jesus was always master of the situation. When occasion arises he does not hesitate to assert his authority. Hear the astonished multitudes saying, "Who is this man, for he teaches as one having authority and not as the scribes. Is this not Jesus the carpenter's son?" Jesus knew wherefore he had come, he knew he had the stamp of divine approval and that all power belonged to him by virtue of that fact. It was in no uncertain tones that he condemned the sins of the time. "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, Ye serpents, ye offspring of vipers, how shall ye escape the judgment of hell?" is the way in which he addresses the self-righteous leaders of the people.

Then, too, Jesus possessed a calmness and serenity which nothing could shake. His source of strength was the omnipotent Father. He was master of wind and wave and all power was his. Why should he fear storm, pestilence, famine, or any other danger? Hear him rebuke his disciples when they are frightened by the storm, "Why are ye fearful, O ye of little faith." He offers us that same quiet assurance if we will but accept it. "But if God so clothe the grass of the field which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven; how much more shall he clothe you, O ye of little faith?" It is so easy to become so engrossed in the cares of life that we try to do things in our own strength, and when we fail we become discouraged. Why not accept our blessed Master's promises when he says "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"?

Finally, Jesus through his promises fills the hearts of all who believe on him with an undying hope in a reward in the world to come. 1 Peter 1:3, 4—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his great mercy begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you." Black indeed must be the future of those who do not have this hope.

How could we fail to love and try to serve such a Master? And all he asks in return for what he has done for us is that we believe, and that we try to follow his example in giving and sharing with our fellowmen the light of the gospel. May our prayer be as we go about our daily lives,

More like the Master I would ever be,
More of his meekness, more humility;
More zeal to labor, more courage to be true
More consecration for work he bids me do.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father in heaven, who hast given us every good thing, we thank thee, most of all for thy greatest gift, thy Son Jesus Christ our Savior. We thank thee for the joy and happiness he has brought into life. May we ever find in Jesus, the altogether lovely one, the pattern for our daily lives. Help us to consecrate ourselves anew that we may prove more worthy of the sacrifice he has made. This we pray in the name of him who loved us and gave himself for us. Amen.

Evidence of Intelligent Purpose

If a ship at sea is sailing strongly and steadily in a certain direction, not wafted hither and yon by the chance of wind and wave but holding its course, skilfully tacking in its use of whatever wind may blow and making port, you decide at once that there is a pilot aboard. There is intelligent purpose directing the course of that ship. The ship itself (matter and force, as represented by the material structure of the ship and the wind and the waves), would never do it alone. In like manner when I look out upon this world voyaging through time and space, making port after port in its resistless advance and onward progress, I, too, know that beyond a peradventure there is a Pilot aboard. There is intelligent purpose at the wheel. God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, worketh in this progress of advance until now, and will forever work.—Dr. Charles R. Brown.

The Creator and His Creation

God the Creator. Nature is not self-existent. It had a beginning. God is the first cause.

Created. Hebrew Bara. "The most important fact about this word is that it is used exclusively of divine activity."—Int. Crit. Com. "It expresses the origination of the of the absolutely new."—Delitzsch. "The word is never followed, like other words meaning 'to form', 'to fashion', and the like, by the accusative of the material out of which the thing is fashioned ... God called all that is into existence."—Perowne. It is always used with the accusative of the product, never of the material.

Create is used of but three products, in the story of creation:

(1) The creation of the material universe (v. 1) (2) The creation of life (v. 21). (3) The creation of man, that is the soul, the real man, his distinguishing element (v. 27).

Now it is remarkable that these are exactly the points where science and revelation agree. All human effort to originate matter or life or soul have failed, and are so acknowledged by all scholars to be failures.

"An autographic record has been kept in nature of all that God has been doing in the physical world since the beginning. Much of it has been preserved in characters which we may decipher. A fairly correct transcript of the history of the globe from the beginning." This history and the history in the Bible must agree, if we interpret them aright. What God does is an interpretation of what he says.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Creation of Man

The creation of man was in the image and likeness of God, which was a soul-likeness, a spark of the divine life. "Both 'image' and 'likeness' here evidently refer to spiritual resemblance alone."—Driver. It thus includes the moral nature, the emotions, the intellect, the will, and all that makes up our personality. Only by having a personality like God's can we understand God's nature, and learn to love and worship him and belong to the kingdom of heaven.

An Illustration

Two or three young men who were once visiting Washington, went into the National Museum. On one of the cabinets was a label with these words: "The body of a man, weighing one hundred and fifty-four pounds." "Where is the man?" asked one of the young men. No one answered him. In the cabinet were two jars of water; and other jars in which were phosphate of lime, potassium, sodium, and other chemicals. Another section held a row of clear glass jars filled with gases,—hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen. The materials in those cabinets are given in exact proportion as combined in an ordinary man. After looking at the assortment for some time in silence, one of the young men said: "And that is what I am made of. That is all that goes to make me?" "That is all," said a bystander, smiling, and walked on. But the young man did not smile. "If that is all that is needed," said one, "so much lime, so much gas, so much water, we should be exactly alike. There is something more which they cannot put into cabinets." "Yes," said another under his breath, "that added by God, who puts into these senseless elements that which makes a living soul." They passed on in silence, their souls and their God becoming real before those cabinets filled with all the material essentials for the making of a man.—Youth's Companion.

Men's Sunday School Class

First Church, Philadelphia

In order to stimulate again the interest and attendance of this class, the president, Brother Albert H. Postle, with the several past presidents arranged for a general gathering of men at the festive board.

The result was that seventy men met on the evening of March 11th at the Washington Hotel (within 3 squares of the church) and had a feast both material and spiritual as well as entertaining.

Now this class is known for the Culinary Abilities of quite a few of its members and the "Eats" could have been prepared and served by them as good as at any hotel. But as this was to be a general round-up of everybody, it was thought best to hold it at this hotel instead of at the church so that all could enjoy it and not have some of us tied up in the kitchen.

After a general all-around introduction of everybody and a joyous welcome to the strangers who had been invited; the gathering settled down to the spread before them. This was interspersed between courses with the singing of some twelve or fifteen of the class choruses. Far and near could it be heard that an assembly of men were having an enjoyable evening in a Christian way.

R. M. Webster who was the speaker of the evening, gave a practical and forceful talk on the "Saving Grace." While Brother Webster is not a member of the brotherhood, he has supplied our pulpit on numerous occasions during the absence of the pastor. He was at one time a practicing attorney; but is now connected with the Pennsylvania Bible Institute. His talk was very clear and convincing.

We were favored by several Gospel songs and violin solos by William Baumgarten; a new member of our class; several piano solos and several songs by our own male quartette which sang very well.

At the close "The Friendly Male Quartette" of the Messiah Lutheran church favored us with four selections which were ex-

The White Gift

The gifts are still coming in, but naturally not so fast as during the month of January. It would help your treasurer very much if all Sunday schools would attend to the matter at once. There seems to me, to be little reason for waiting longer either, since all schools must have received the offering at Christmas time, and the proceeds must be lying idle in the local treasuries. Will all who have not sent in their gifts, and who mean to do so, send them now, as you read this report.

The Dead in Argentina

By Eleanor Yoder

During this beautiful Easter season our minds are turned towards the tremendous significance of the cross and empty tomb of our Lord. For if Christ had not been raised, our faith would be vain and we would still be in our sins. And they that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished (1 Cor. 15:17-18). But because the undeniable truth of the resurrection is known to so many of us here, we can joyfully cry, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 15:55, 57). If we are victorious over death because we possess Christ, we should not be selfish, but should help those who are afraid of death, by making known to them our hope in Jesus.

In the Argentine, it is pitiful to see some of the customs in relation to the dead because there is so much despair, so much lack of hope. This is due to the erroneous ideas established by the Catholic priests and also to the ignorance of the truth.

If a little baby dies before it has been baptized and christened by the priest, he tells the parents that the child will go to the Limbo, and not to heaven. Then the expense for the parents is greater, for the priests demand a large sum of money by the time they have "prayed" a soul into heaven. (The Spanish dictionary says that Limbo is the place where the Old Testament souls went to await the coming of the Messiah, and also the place for dead children when they are not baptized).

If an adult person dies he goes to Purgatory for awhile until his final destiny is determined by the amount of masses and prayers in his behalf. Immediately following the death the entire family must dress in black. Neighbors and friends come and join in the weeping and wailing. Many have the custom of keeping the "novenario", which is a period of nine days in which the friends join the family in their grief. Then mourning clothes are worn for years, then half mourning, and at last the usual colors.

Those who do not believe in the priests are even worse off. Many are influenced by the prevailing infidelity among the educated classes who say that death ends everything; that there is no life hereafter. Some believe that as long as they have not stolen or committed any crime, as long as they were not immoral or uncharitable, they will reach heaven on account of their works.

On visiting a cemetery, one will see that all of the graves are marked with crosses; not with tomb-stones like up here. Yet what is the significance of the cross to them? It is nothing more to them than the picture of Saint Peter. The richer people do not bury their dead in the ground. They bury them in niches, or build family mausoleums. In Buenos Aires there is a cemetery called "The City of the Dead", (Chacarita). It covers several square miles. It is in truth a little city of the dead, for the graves are found by streets and numbers. The streets and sidewalks are kept scrupulously clean by the many care-takers which are there all the time. Some people pay them especially to keep candles burning always in the interior of the mausoleums. These mausoleums look like magnificent little houses. One may enter and descend some marble steps to a little anti-chamber richly decorated in velvet, silk, and brass. The picture of the deceased will probably be there, and many beautiful flowers. The Catholics have their images and burning candles. It would appear that they think that the soul hovers over the grave and appreciates these tokens.

The sad thing is that most of these people who sleep in these rich mausoleums, were dead while they were walking on earth. And the duty of him who loves the Lord is to show his interest in the reconciling of man with God, before it is too late.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for April 11)

Gideon, Whose Torch Led His People to Victory. Judges 7:2, 3, 19, 20

I wonder how many of you, my Junior boys and girls, remember and try to use our lessons about the torch? First, there was Abraham, the first torch-bearer. The qualities that made his torch burn brightly were faith, obedience and hope. Then, Joseph, the torch-bearer who carried the torch to Egypt. Do you remember the quality of forgiveness that made his torch a bright and shining light? Next, there was Moses, who held the torch high for his people. You remember that his quality that we liked most was his humility. Now for this time we have Gideon. If we can learn to understand the things that make other people worth while, the things that make their lights shine, then we can follow those things and learn to be boys and girls of whom our parents and our churches will be proud.

Gideon had a torch and he made it burn and even today we know about his torch for he did his work so well that those who wrote the Bible told us about him. You see there were lots of people living at the time Gideon lived but he was the one who was chosen to be a guide for them. We are going to talk about two of Gideon's qualities that made his torch a bright light. First, there was the quality of obedience. Gideon was tested by God to see if he would obey so that he could be given important work to do. He was told to throw down his own father's idols and to build in their place an altar to God, whom we worship. You see his father was worshipping an image and was not worshipping the true God. It took a lot of courage for Gideon to do this. Gideon probably loved his father a great deal but when he was told by God to break his father's idols he did it.

Once, a small boy was trying to get a job in a big store as delivery boy. The manager did not know if he could use so small a boy as Jimmy or not, so he said to him, "You go down to that little store at the corner of Seventh and G streets and get me a half a dozen pencils." Now the manager knew that in order to get to that particular store Jimmy would have to pass a playground where many boys of his age would be having a good time at all kinds of games. He wanted to see if Jimmy would yield to the temptation to stop and play or whether he would obey promptly. In record time Jimmy was back. The manager gave him some other tests and he found that this small boy knew how to obey and obey quickly. Then Jimmy was given the job he had asked for. If we get in the habit of fooling about and deciding to do the things we want to first and then obeying those who ask us to do work afterwards we may lose some really important job that

Attention! Endeavorers

Under date of February 8th cards were mailed to sixty Christian Endeavor societies calling attention to the fact that only one-half of the amount required to support our teacher (Miss Bessie Hook) at Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky, had been pledged.

We are very grateful for the replies received, the following pledges have been made: (N. B.—Lost Creek, Kentucky, the first received).

Pledge No.

24—Lost Creek, Kentucky,	$ 5.00
25—Milledgeville, Illinois,	10.00
26—Pleasant Hill, Ohio,	10.00
27—Lanark, Illinois,	10.00
28—Masontown, Pennsylvania, ...	10.00
29—Maurertown, Virginia,	10.00
30—Gretna, Ohio,	10.00
Balance previously published,	$324.26

Total pledged to date, $389.26

Now we do not want the societies which have made no pledge to think, just because the amount required is nearly reached, that they can "lie down on the job." You will remember we fell nearly $90.00 short of our goal last year, so surely the remaining societies can easily help us "go over the top" that much this year.

All in favor of so doing by (not merely saying "aye", but) getting busy and forwarding a substantial pledge in the next mail.

THANK YOU!

Intercessors for the Kingdom

Yaloke, Dec. 31, 1925.

Dear Prayer-Band Members:

On this the last day of the year, we would indeed "Enter his courts with praise." When we consider the land in which we live and all we have to fight against, we do indeed realize the keeping power of God. Words fail to express the joy and peace we find in just trusting our God to keep us from day to day.

'Tis so sweet to trust in Jesus,
 Just to take him at his word;
 Just to rest upon his promise,
 Just to know, "Thus saith the Lord."

Notes of Praise

1. We praise God because he is our God; because Jesus Christ is our Savior; because the Holy Spirit is our comforter and guide.

2. We praise God because his promises are sure, therefore we need have no fear or dread,—but just to keep abiding that we may bear fruit.

3. We praise God for the auto which has been such a blessing in spreading the Gospel, also for the necessary business trips.

4. We praise God because the way has been opened to commence a church building at Yaloke. We have our meetings out doors and sometimes it is anything but convenient. The foundation is under way at the present moment.

5. We praise God for the good health enjoyed by the missionaries. Though we have no protection from mosquitoes and very little from wind and dampness, yet God has kept in a wonderful way.

6. We praise God for the large number of souls who have come to our Lord Jesus this year.

7. We praise God for the faithfulness of our native evangelists.

8. We praise him for the four missionaries who are now in France preparing for this great work.

9. We thank God for our Board of Godly men and our churches in the homeland who stand back of us in prayer as we go forward in this great fight.

Requests for Prayer

1. Pray that this year may be a prosperous year in the Lord's harvest field, and that many precious souls may be gathered in. "The fields are ripe unto harvest."

2. Pray for the members of our Yaloke church as they are scattered here and there through the tribe with but little chance to hear the Gospel.

3. Pray for a school that native evangelists may be trained to read the Bible for themselves.

4. Pray for this great tribe which is almost impossible to reach until we do get our own native workers.

5. Pray for the up-building of the station with permanent buildings. The temporary mud buildings soon give way to the white ants, bores, and storms which abound here. Permanent, mosquito-proof, dwelling houses are needed for the missionaries, and God will meet the need if we are faithful in prayer.

6. Pray for the health of the missionaries—good health is needful to render good service.

7. Pray for Dr. Gribble that during the time spent in rest and recuperation her body may be sufficiently strengthened for a speedy return to the field.

8. Pray that God will give a vision of the great need here in French Equatorial Africa to the home churches. One glimpse is all that would be necessary, then the needs would be met; lives and money would be given with joy; nothing would be too much to give up; instead of counting it a sacrifice, it would be rather a joy. Oh! for a vision of these poor souls—dying, without even having heard the name of Jesus! Oh! for the vision of just one lost soul,—then who would hold back either life or earthly goods and bear the responsibility of this soul going to hell.

"The Love of Christ Constraineth Us"

"The Sky-Parlor," Long Beach, Cal.]

March 31, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S.:

Recently the Jewish people of Philadelphia had a "drive" to raise $3,500,000.00 for buildings to take care of the weak, the unfortunate, the aged and the sick. Their slogan was, "GIVE WHILE YOU LIVE!" One of the large Philadelphia department stores occupied a whole page of a daily paper advertising this campaign, and among other things, these words stand out: "Pity and sympathy are beautiful attributes. But it isn't how much you feel, but how much you give that makes God look smilingly down on you." We do not happen to have the final returns of the "drive" but only the report that in their initial mass meeting, the Jews of Philadelphia gave $2,818,500.00 of the $3,500,000.00.

Now, if those who know not our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who do not partake of his "unsearchable riches", who know not our Father God—of his love and care even for the sparrows that chatter and twitter in the trees and are considered by us as nothing but a nuisance—if these folks, I say, can give so cheerfully and ungrudgingly to relieve physical discomfort and suffering, what ought we Christians to be doing with our money?

Christ, looking upon the multitudes, was moved with compassion! Should his followers be less compassionate? He has given himself, the Bread of Life, "That you might have life, and that you might have it more abundantly," and he has given us the opportunity even as he did his disciples, of "feeding the multitudes" by passing on the glad news of a Lord and Savior who died for them and who rose again for their justification.

Millions are dying here in Africa without any knowledge of Christ. Are we doing our best? When Jesus said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel—", he did not excuse any, but rather the responsibility is upon all. Are we faithful to the trust the Lord has given us? God grant that there may be a real burden laid upon the hearts of each and all of our home church members for these great untouched fields!

The need for prayer is so great that it seems impossible to find words to express all that should be prayed for, but we trust that God will put a great burden upon the hearts of all the members of the prayer-bands and too of all the members of the home churches. God alone can make the need felt in the hearts of his children. Keep on praying, it is the only source of power.

We do want to thank you, dear prayer-band members, for the prayers offered to God in behalf of this work during 1925. May God increase your zeal and faith for 1926.

Faithfully yours in him,

MRS. J. W. HATHAWAY.

The Jews of Philadelphia gave of their substance that they might leave monuments in the way of buildings of cold, lifeless brick and stone—as this full-page advertisement ran, "To serve your children as reminders of their obligations and incentives to emulate their example."

We have even a higher calling. The Word of God says, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a high priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." But all the "lively stones" of this "spiritual house" are not yet "fitly framed together"—there are some still to be taken out of Africa, South America and the uttermost parts of the earth.

If the cries of the suffering move the hearts of the children of this world, surely "The love of Christ constraineth us" to do even more to save those for whom Christ died!

Yours in the Master's Service,
 THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

LIKE HIM

Jesus refers to himself as the Son of man, but he refers to far more. You, my brethren, are every one of you a manifestation of the Son of man. Insofar as you have ever had a noble thought, taken an upward look, sacrificed or suffered for the eternal good; insofar as you have ever felt yourself thrilled and inspired by the Spirit of God, and gone forth as his servant to do his will, you are the Son of man. It is abundantly clear that our Master meant this.—R. J. Campbell.

"I am not a Christian because so and so does thus and so" is as foolish as it is dangerous. God does not ask us to pattern after our fellowmen. He has given us a model, even Christ, who is our Lord and Master.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

Contrary to impressions created through some of the dark pictures painted in former articles, we desire to announce that Krypton Brethren church is not dead nor dying although silence in the Evangelist columns has been maintained for several months. The silence has been largely the result of—not "funeral"—arrangements—but unusual activity. The work our hands have found to do has been partially just plain physical labor, although we have tried not to let this interfere with the spiritual phases of our program.

One of the most crying needs from a material standpoint has been met and completed: That of another Sunday school room, which was promised to our young people's class a year ago. This is one of our most promising classes, and we felt it important that their class work have the advantage of a room such as is now their proud possession. By placing a partition across the front of the auditorium, back of the pulpit, a space once designated for choir loft (but not so employed), more than one purpose is attained. First, is the extra room for Sunday school purposes, and also easily heated for prayer meeting nights. The acoustics of the auditorium have never been good. This is improved the partition acting as a sounding board for the speaker. All say the appearance of the church is enhanced, also. Brother Arthur R. Baer, furnace man of Muncie, Indiana, kindly donated the heating extension for above room without cost to us. Others over the brotherhood, also, have shared in the expense, acknowledgment of which will be made at another time.

Another matter of material improvement is fencing for the mission property. The work is almost completed, being held up at present because of unsurpassed cold and snow for this section. The Krypton church property is nicely situated between the L. & N. Railway and Kentucky River on one of the few level parcels of land to be found near here. With a nice lawn (a rarity here) the property can be made a beauty spot amidst much that is sordid and unkempt. We encourage children and young people to come to the grounds here for play under our guidance and discipline. In absence of proper stock laws a good fence is quite necessary.

But through all these days of manual labor the one thing we have tried to keep in mind and for which we have prayed is that these material things might only be stepping-stones, only doors and gates, only foundation units, upon which eventually may be reared Christian character built up into a true church of born-again believers in the Gospel of Jesus Christ as Lord and King, living lives separated from the world hosts of sin and darkest wretchedness. The answering of our prayers has not altogether been deferred to the indefinite future, for slowly and surely the walls of prejudice and mistrust are crumbling. Certainly, there was a time last year when things here looked very dark and discouraging, but as we have taken a broader and saner view of the possibilities lying here within the grasp of the Brethren church, a certain conviction has fastened itself upon us that an important and strategic harvest field lies along the North Fork of the Kentucky River several miles of which is without proper evangelism or shepherding. Krypton is in the center of this area. We repeat, with unabated emphasis, the only method of properly establishing a permanent work here is via the boarding school. Space forbids any attempt to reinforce this statement with accumulative facts, but the need cries from the top of the loftiest of these wooded mountains: Every reasonable brother or sister of the church who has the welfare of humanity at heart and the kingdom of Christ uppermost in mind would give voice of approval after thorough acquaintance and first-hand information. To this end we work and pray, and we know the Lord is faithful.

Some of those who read may desire to know more in detail of our activities in behalf of spiritual attainments and soul winning. Some of these things have been mentioned before, but following is our program of services at present: Sunday school at Krypton at 9:30 each Lord's day, followed immediately with the preaching service. After dinner we walk the three miles to the Napfor mining camp, where Sunday school is scheduled for 2 P. M. Following this period Mrs. Kinzie holds her children for a Junior Endeavor, an entirely new departure for many if the otherwise bright-eyed, keenly responsive, but woefully neglected younger generation. Brother McClain's catechism and Philipps' Geography of Palestine are used along with exercises to stimulate self-expression. While Mrs. Kinzie is thus engaged the writer goes to another part of the camp where are settled a number of colored families and at 3:30 our "African" Sunday school is called to order with devotional exercises conducted by local talent in true Southern style. We then take up the lesson for the third time of the day and of all the three classes we have no apologies to make at this juncture when it comes to keen intellect and intelligent purpose. Yesterday, in the midst of the lesson exposition, one little "chocolate drop," a boy of about four years, jumped down from the bench where he was perched and made exit out the door. Very soon he reappeared with a huge piece of corn pone, eating as he climbed to his seat.

These colored children especially appeal to us, for the instruction we can give them during this hour on Sunday is all they receive. Although their fathers are charged for the support of the "free" school, under coal camp jurisdiction, yet the colored population is barred from its benefits.

At 6 P. M. we find ourselves again at the camp showhouse, the place of our Sunday school activities earlier in the afternoon. Preaching services are held at this time and place, which hour has been quite satisfactory during the winter months and permits our return to the railway to catch passenger train home, thus saving two miles of footsteps. Very soon 6 will be too early, as daylight advances, and then we will walk home after the night's service.

In addition to these Sunday services, prayer meeting is conducted on Wednesday night at Krypton. Thursday is usually devoted to visitation in the homes at Napfor. Mrs. Kinzie is working with the local girls along the Girl Scout line of activity. More and more are we permitted to minister in cases of sickness and other exigency.

This winter has been exceptionally severe, but despite this drawback attendance at services has held up splendidly and even increased. One cold, rainy Sunday in January a little girl of about eight years walked a distance of two miles alone over unspeakable "roads", leaping from rock to rock as she followed the torrential trend of Campbell's Creek. Others have shown equal fidelity, which makes us cry out, as we learn to see their worth and learn to love them more and more, "Oh, if they only had an opportunity!" When all is said and done, even though many men and women here ill-treat their Maker and abuse their own bodies, we must confess we have been treated with every reasonable consideration.

As yet we can only lay foundation stones and that is what we are attempting to do. We know the harvest must come eventually, if we faithfully persevere. Whatever we may have been able to accomplish or whatever may yet be done is not of ourselves. All glory be to the Father, our strength and stay. Praise his Name for victory and pray that we may be more than conquerors through Christ our Lord.

FRED V. KINZIE.

HENRY RINEHART,
Treasurer of the Home.

WAYNESBORO, PENNSYLVANIA

At a congregational meeting held on Sunday, March 14, the church definitely decided to build an addition to its present building this spring and summer. This action comes as a consummation to a movement and agitation started three years ago. During those three years it has become increasingly plain to the congregation that some such step was imperative if the present and future needs of the Sunday school were to be met, and the existing limited facilities replaced by an equipment and plant that was adequate to an expanding program.

The projected plans call for the erection of an addition to the present structure that will be approximately 50 feet square, and will occupy practically all of the unused portion of the lot owned by the church. It will contain 21 class rooms of various accommodations, and increase the present auditorium space to more than double the present capacity. The new structure will be brick, and in design and architecture complimentary to the present building. When completed, the whole will present an attractive appearance, and will house with comfort, and the convenience of all necessary equipage, the church, the Sunday school, and other auxiliaries.

The work of construction will begin in the very near future, and it is expected, will be completed by September. During most of the time of construction the congregation will be able to use the present building.

The initiation of this program of building is hailed by the membership of the church as the opening of an era of a larger and more vital ministry, and the promise of greater growth and greater usefulness in the challenging task of building the Kingdom of Christ upon this earth.

JOHN PERRY HORLACHER.

NEWS FROM LANARK

Brother M. A. Stuckey was with us Sunday, February 14, and preached two very good sermons. On Monday evening a workers' conference was held at which Brother Stuckey gave some helpful advice on general phases of Sunday school work. He also conducted a round table which brought out some good questions and answers. We feel that his visit to us was helpful in many ways.

Lanark church has been progressing under our able pastor, Rev. Mayes. He issues a bulletin for every Sunday sufficient in number to supply every one attending church on Sunday morning. The bulletins contain the church announcements for morning and evening services, and all the activities of the week. We believe these bulletins are instrumental in creating interest for church activities, and they are invaluable to file away as records of what the church is doing each week. They require extra work for our pastor as he is the sole editor and publisher, but he is willing to do what he can for the good of the church.

Recently, our young people organized a Christian Endeavor Society. They are putting forth a good effort to make the Endeavor a success. They have been forming the choir on Sunday evenings. They assisted in a special program on Sunday evening, March twenty-first, given in the celebration of the anniversary of the birth of Fanny J. Crosby.

A Junior Sisterhood has also been organized with Mrs. Mayes patroness, and Mrs. Clifford Rahn assistant. They are doing the required work of a Junior Sisterhood.

Lanark Sunday school is doing well. Our Superintendent, Brother Boyd Zuck, has something interesting for every Sunday morning, always something "different," and yet always helpful and uplifting. Some individual or class presents some special part in the morning program. Brother Stuckey highly endorsed this plan. Brother Zuck made a chart showing the record of attendance each Sunday as compared with the corresponding Sunday of last year. We are always anxious to see if we have gone over the top, and not fallen beneath. The average attendance for the year 1925 was two hundred one. We are hoping to make it better this year.

We will have a special program on Easter Sunday. We are making special preparation to pay our Foreign Missions on that day. Literature is being handed out every Sunday. To give our money to help save souls of those for whom our Lord died, is a splendid way to celebrate our Lord's resurrection.

MRS. HARRY GOSSARD.

GIFTS FOR THE HOME

Dear Evangelist Readers:

As we scan the pages of the Evangelist, eagerly looking for news from the field and different organizations, it dawned upon us that perhaps others are anxious to hear from the Home. We are now entering our third year here at the Home. Although we only have eight ladies now, we have grown and expect to grow more this year, possibly will have a waiting list at the close of the year.

I want to report and thank you for the gifts that have been sent directly to the Home. Money for the rug fund is as follows: Miss Alice Garber, Lanark, Ill., $ 5.00 Berean S. S. Class, Washington, D. C., 15.00 W. M. S., Eaton, Ind., 5.00 Geo. Berry, Los Angeles, Cal., 1.00 W. M. S., Goshen, Ind., 10.00 Dr. & Mrs. J. L. Warvel, North Manchester, Ind., 2.00 Dr. & Mrs. J. Autweirth, Ft. Wayne, Ind., 3.00 Teacher Training Class, North Manchester, Ind., 5.00 F. O. Kisch, Decatur, Ill., 10.00 Mrs. B. T. Burnworth, Ashland, O., 5.00 Henry Rinehart, Flora, Ind., 10.00 W. M. S., Sunnyside, Wash., 10.00

Other gifts—four sheets, pillow cases, towels, and wash cloths from Dorcas Sunday school class, Louisville, Ohio; One pair pillows, Mrs. Addie Munk, Louisville, Ohio; seven blankets, one comforter, one picture and cord, Mrs. C. M. Beachy, Wichita, Kansas; Staley Mfg. Co., Decatur, Illinois, three gallons table syrup Two towels and two pair pillow cases, Hazel Keiser, Bryan, Ohio; One barrel of canned fruit, W. M. S., Glenford, Ohio; One bushel oranges and kumquats, Dr. and J. L. Marvel, North Manchester, Indiana. At Christmas, two pounds chocolates, Rev. and Mrs. Coleman; Two dozen oranges, Jacob Catron and family; Apples and candy Mr. and Mrs. Emmet Eaton; one box of candy from Sunshine Girls, all of Flora. The Sunshine Girls are an organization in Flora High School and come here about every two weeks and play and sing for us, have violin, saxophone and cornet solos and duets, vocal solos and readings. Their programs are splendid and they are true to name. Rev. Coleman comes out every Sunday afternoon at three o'clock and holds a service for the ladies. So you see we have lots of good things to enjoy. Don't forget us and pray for us.

Yours in his service,
MRS. J. W. MYERS, Matron.

CONFESSIONS OF A SEXTON

(The former publication of this little article seems to have been widely appreciated. A second publication is requested.—Editor).

Most people think that the man who takes the position of a sexton, confesses himself to be poor, if nothing else, and it is not the fault of the church if he is not, and there are others who think that the name implies a low degree of intelligence.

A Presbyterian minister told the writer, that when his class in the seminary was just leaving, one of the professors in saying farewell, told them to "look out for the heating and ventilating yourselves and take it for granted that the sexton is a fool." No doubt if there was a college for sextons, some professor might counsel his graduating class to "look out for the preaching and praying themselves, and take it for granted that the minister is a fool" and both of the professors would be right some of the time. I have been a sexton for some time and I will confess that I know more than when I started, for I used to think that one could tell by the thermometer whether the air was hot or cold, but I have learned better. One sister complained of excessive heat when the temperature was sixty-four and she was a minister's wife, and a college graduate; and a brother was shriveled up with cold when the temperature was sixty-eight, and he was a deacon. Our minister preaches himself into a perspiration and then remarks, "You got it very close today" when all the time he was preaching I had my eyes on the thermometer. The choir, organist, and organ pumper all tell the same story, and would like to have a special atmosphere suited to their case. Warm when they enter—cool while they sing—and warm again when they get cooled off.

On a mild day sixty-six will suit most people, but on a zero day, when with great expense of labor and fuel, sitting up late and rising up early you have heated the building to that point, you cannot make the brothers and sisters believe that the church is just as warm as it was last Sunday. "I don't go by the thermometer, I go by my feelings," said a brother to me on such a day—and he was an editor.

I confess that I have not decided which is the worst, or the best—the chilly draft that carries pneumonia along with it, or the foul air that breeds consumption. I have concluded from observation that most ministers and evangelists, especially the last, prefer the pneumonia horn of the dilemma. I am sure that the air in a crowded church cannot be as pure as the outdoor air. I am sure that every church should have a ventilating fan system so that a current can be kept up through the flues whether there is much or little fire. I am sure that all users of tobacco should be pasteurized, and sterilized, and deodorized before they come in with those who try to keep sweet.—A "Sexton," in The Congregationalist.

"Jesus offers you a cross and a crown. No other leader has ever been so frank. Here's where he differs most from Satan. Satan is a liar and a cheat, or he would not get a single follower. He tempts with glamour and not with the consequences. Just ordinary arithmetic should be able to keep people from sowing wild oats. Jesus has no lying prospectus—it is absolutely true. He says, 'you're a thinking person. Sum it all up and decide for yourself.'—Prof. J. Raymond Schutz.

we want some day. Jimmy obeyed promptly, and that is the way to do.

Now let us think about Gideon some more. I think that we have already mentioned the second lesson that we can learn from Gideon, that is courage. It took courage for him to tear down his father's idol, but I think that that was just a test that God gave him to see if he would have courage for a still greater work. Gideon by his obedience and courage in his first job, showed that he was the man for the big job that needed to be done. For seven years, the people of Israel had been captives to the Midianites. Now, they were to be delivered from these people and they needed a leader. Do you remember the story of the way that Gideon and his people defeated the Midianites. At first, Gideon had a great lot of people with him but God told him that he had too many, so he told them that all who were afraid should go back. But there were still too many, so he tested them other ways and sent back a lot more of them. Finally there were only three hundred men left with Gideon, then Gideon gave these men trumpets to blow, pitchers to break, and torches to hold up in their hands. They surrounded the camp of the Midianites and broke their pitchers and blew their trumpets and held up their torches so that there was a great light and great noise and the people in the camp thought that there was a mighty host outside so they fled. Now, you

And in him we too shall triumph,
For our Savior lives again.

see why Gideon had to be a man of great courage. It took a man of great courage to go against a whole camp of people with only three hundred men. God picked Gideon because he was obedient and because he was courageous.

Now, we Juniors know two more qualities that we can use to make our torches glow. We want to let our lives show that we are servants of Jesus. We want to make our torches shine with these qualities. We want to be obedient and courageous and we can if we want to, let's do it.

ceptionally rendered. This quartette is one of the renowned quartettes of the city and the members are often heard from the large broadcasting stations. We were indeed fortunate to have had them with us.

Our program was so filled up that our pastor and our Sunday school superintendent were almost crowded off.

The gathering was brought to a close with the singing of several songs by the class.

Altogether we feel that the event came off the biggest ever; with the hope and the feeling that many of our guests will come again and partake of Christain fellowship at our regular services.

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 1:1 to 2:25

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HAYNES-AMBLER—Mr. Carver S. Haynes and Miss Ventura Ambler, both of near Garwin, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ambler, on Thursday evening, March 18, 1926. The bride has been employed, for some time, as a clerk at Marshalltown, Iowa. The groom is a farmer, and both are active members of the Carlton Brethren church. The happy young couple will make their home in this community, on the J. S. Haynes' farm, former home of the groom's parents. The best wishes of their hosts of friends bespeak for these young people happiness, contentment, and usefulness in their life together. Ceremony by the writer.

IN THE SHADOW

CASSEL—John Cassel had been a member of the Brethren church for many years and was a most careful and conscientious Christian man. He was loved by many though he was of a very quiet demeanor. His spiritual life ran very deep. A few weeks before he died he had been exposed severely and this exposure gradually developed into pneumonia, which with other complications resulted in his death. At the same time of his illness his wife, Elizabeth Cassel was also in the hospital with pneumonia, but God has graciously spared her to comfort the surviving son, Lewis. Mr. Cassel had many friends who sincerely mourn his passing. Services by R. P. Miller.

LANEY—Mrs. Ella C. Laney, a long time member of the Brethren church in Philadelphia, died in a ripe old age and was buried on February 27, 1926. Many people who knew her in the years of her active life remember her today for her great kindness and consideration for those that she befriended and helped. During the last years of her life she was confined to the house, being unable to go outside to attend Church. During the last few years she has lived with her son. Funeral services were largely attended by a large circle of friends, Brethren and relatives. She was the only member of the family who was a member of the Brethren church. Services by the pastor,

R. P. MILLER.

MANN—William Mann, another of the older members of the Philadelphia church, died of heart disease, Friday, March 12 after a short but acute attack of sickness. I dare say that few people have ever lived this life leaving behind more broken hearts and grieving friends and loved ones than did Mr. Mann. An active man working for the Reading railroad of this city. He had a host of friends among the employees of that company. Their grief at his loss was very marked. He is survived by one son, Edward, and one brother and one sister. His last words were these, "O Lord, do not let me suffer long." God answered that prayer in thirty minutes. Services conducted by R. P. Miller.

LUTHER—Mary Wingard was born in Richland Township, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, January 9, 1862, the daughter of Peter and Amelia Yoder Wingard, pioneer residents of that locality. She was married to Hugh M. Luther on March 8, 1894. To this union three children were born, who, together with the husband and father, and four grandchildren and two brothers remain to mourn her homegoing. Her death occurred on Thursday morning, March 11, 1926, at the family home in Scalp Level, Pennsylvania, at the age of 64 years, 2 months and 2 days.

Early in life Sister Luther united with the Mennonite church, until the organization of the Brethren church in Scalp Level, when she identified herself with that group, and remained true to that faith until her demise. At the time of her death, she was a member of the Second Brethren church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Funeral services were held in the Church of the Brethren, at Scalp Level, on Sunday afternoon, March 14, conducted by the undersigned, her pastor, assisted by Rev. L. S. Knepper, pastor of the Scalp Level Church of the Brethren. A vast concourse of people acclaimed the wide circle of her acquaintance and bore mute testimony to her character. Peace to her ashes, and God solace the bereaved hearts in the stricken home.

DYOLL BELOTE.

WOLFE—Annie Overholtzer, widow of John P. Wolfe, passed to her reward on January 20th, 1926 at her home in Covina, California. She came to California when she was but a girl. The Brethren of Central California owe much to her and Brother John P. Wolfe for the work they did in spreading the message of the Brethren in this part of the country. Her life of labor and her sacrifices made possible a large extension of the cause of the church. Brother Wolfe preceded her to the Spirit world a good many years. About fifteen years ago she moved to Southern California where she spent the remaining years of her life. Her body was sent to Lathrop, California for burial in the historic East Union Cemetery which now begins to hold many of the pioneers of this section of the state. The funeral services were held at the Lathrop Brethren church which in its reconstruction a few years ago, was named "The John P. Wolfe Memorial." The sympathy of the Brethren and friends of this district are extended to the bereaved family. Services by the writer.

J. WESLEY PLATT, Pastor.

WOLFE—Huber Lee, youngest son of J. Milo and Emma Wolfe of Lathrop, California, departed this life on Wednesday morning at 8:30 on February 17, 1926, at the family home. He was born March 22, 1899 and died at the age of almost 27 years. He had not been sick very long, but with an attack of Flu, and Bronchitis, and finally Meningitis, he gave up the fight and went home to his Father's house. On May 16, 1915 it was my privilege to baptize him and receive him into the fellowship of the Lathrop Brethren church. He was always faithful to the faith of the church. He had formed a wide circle of friends who were extremely shocked at what seemed to them his untimely death. But there is the hope of meeting him in the presence of the Lord by and bye.

He had a disposition that made everyone his friend. He was always ready and willing to help everyone who might ask it of him. The pastor feels the loss very keenly as there had been formed the closest friendship possible. He is survived by his father and mother, and two brothers, Harold M. and Wilbur, both of Lathrop. The sympathy of the entire community is extended to the family in this time of sorrow, and at the same time the hope of the children of God is also very effective to comfort them at this time. Services at the Lathrop Brethren church, by the writer. Burial at East Union Cemetery with the founders and leaders of Brethrenism in California.

J. WESLEY PLATT, Pastor.

MILLER—Simon Miller was born November 26, 1845 in Union Township, Knox County, and was married to Sarah Stillinger on November 15, 1868. To this were born four sons and one daughter. He departed this life March 13, 1926, aged 80 years, 3 months, 17 days.

Those left to mourn his departure are, Raymond at home, B. F. Miller, near home. Two sons died in infancy. Pearl, the only daughter, who was married to Rev. John Beal, died in January, 1918 in California.

Brother Miller's wife preceded him 3 years in the same month. He also leaves 11 grandchildren and one great grandchild.

He united with the Brethren church many years ago. Although he did not attend church very regular on account of physical infirmities, he was loyal to the church and earnestly contended for the Christian faith.

Funeral services by the writer in the Danville Brethren church, on the subject, "Thy brother shall rise again."

ALVIN BYERS.

SMITH—Melvin E. Smith, youngest son of Jacob and Margaret (Zabst) Smith, was born in Fulton County, Indiana, March 8, 1887 and died at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, Md., February 3, 1926, aged 38 years, 10 months, and 25 days. His boyhood and early manhood were spent in Peru, Indiana.

On October 5, 1910 he was united in marriage with Mabel Anderson at Winona Lake, Indiana. To this union were born two sons, Clement Earl and Medford Wayne. Three years preceding his death on the day before Christmas, he became a member of the First Brethren church at Mexico, Indiana. Since that time, he has been an active and sincere follower of Christ.

Besides his own family, he leaves an aged mother who made her home with him, and three brothers—John Smith of Portland, Oregon; E. A. Smith of Dallas, Texas; and George A. Smith of Norman, Oklahoma, and many friends wherever he was known.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. A. Stewart, Rev. L. W. Ditch, Rev. Davidson of the Baptist church, Rev. Rehney of the M. E. church of Mexico, Indiana. J. W. CLARK.

BARNHART—George Barnhart, son of Jacob and Mary (Fisher) Barnhart was born on the family homestead, one half mile south of Twelve Mile, Indiana, on April 14th, 1852, and departed his life at the home of his daughter March 1st, 1926, aged 73 years, 10 months, and 17 days.

The deceased was married to Martha J. Obenchain November 6, 1873. To this union were born five children. The wife preceded him in death February 10, 1904. Also the youngest son, Omer Clyde, on September 4, 1896.

He united with the Corinth Brethren church, November 16, 1891 under the pastorate of Elder W. C. Perry and remained faithful to his Lord to the end.

Those left to mourn his departure are three sons, Clarence E., Charles A., Walter J., all of California, and one daughter, Mrs. Edythe J. Murden of Twelve Mile, Indiana; eight grandchildren, one great-grandchild, and many other relatives and friends. Elder G. W. Rench of South Bend, Indiana, was in charge, assisted by the writer.

J. W. CLARK.

BAKER—Mrs. Lydia A. Baker, of Swanton, Ohio, answered the final summons to the flesh at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Brother and Sister Kelsey, March 14th, 1926, at the age of 82 years. She placed her membership in the First Brethren church at Bryan about 30 years ago. She loved her church and its doctrines, even though she was not privileged to come often as she lived 38 miles from Bryan. When she could not attend her own church, she took an active interest in the Christian Missionary Alliance church in her own town.

Sister Baker was a power in prayer. She sent many tracts, cards, and messages of Christ's love to friends. It was our privilege to anoint her according to James 5th chapter a few days before her spirit took its flight. She greatly loved to talk about the missionary activities of the church.

She leaves a son and daughter, Mrs. C. K. Kelsey and Mr. A. D. Baker both of Swanton, besides other close relatives and friends. Her funeral services were conducted at the home by the undersigned, assisted by Reverends Amstutz and Hoover, local pastors.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

FISHER—Irene Martin, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Laurin Fisher, was born March 3, 1926, and passed away a few hours after birth. The little infant leaves to mourn its early departure, its parents, one sister Gwendolyn, and one brother Gerald. The little body was placed in the family lot, in the Dobson Cemetery, besides its little brother Belmont, who preceded it in death, February 6, 1917. A brief prayer service was conducted at the grave, on Thursday afternoon at 2:30, by the writer.

The Constraining Power of Love

In the oil regions there are many wells which must be laboriously pumped to get even a little oil each day. But there are other wells that flow of themselves. So there are many people who have hard work forcing themselves to do duty, to serve Christ, to accomplish his will. But it not so with those who are constrained by love. Duty becomes a delight because the heart is enlisted. Let us do all we can to bring before our minds and press upon our own attention the fact of Christ's love in order that we may be led to live a life constrained by that love. The power of our church may be measured by the constraining power of the love of Christ. A church whose members are not yearning for souls is a dying church. The giving of tracts will start something every time, and the start will be in the right direction. Try it!

Rivalry Among the Denominations

Denominationalism has been much called in question of late and rivalry among the denominations has been the subject of much criticism. We are not among those who believe that denominationalism has no rightful place under the sun. We believe a denomination has a right to existence so long as it has a strong conviction of having a distinctive and worthwhile contribution to make to the kingdom of God. Any denomination that has not such a conviction, of course, has no reason for a separate existence, and ought to withdraw from the field and identify itself as quickly as possible with some church that believes it has a mission, so that it may become a positive force for righteousness.

As for denominational rivalry, it depends on the spirit that actuates and pervades it, as to whether it is right or wrong, a blessing or a curse, a help to the kingdom's progress or a hindrance. There has been much denominational rivalry that has redounded to the discredit of Christianity, and we thank God for the passing of that spirit of bitterness and jealousy between churches that took away their power and made it impossible for them to stand together and cope with common enemies and all the organized and destructive forces of the evil one. The spirit of brotherhood and cooperation that has taken the place of the strife and aloofness of former days is most encouraging and satisfying. Nevertheless the Christian world owes much to denominationalism and the right sort of rivalry is not a thing to be anathematized. When churches maintain the spirit of fraternity and prosecute their missions along high ethical standards, which excludes proselyting, a rivalry in zeal and efficiency in winning men to the Lord Jesus Christ and building them up in Christian character and service will add much to the growth of the Kingdom. Denominations, as well as congregations within a denomination, may provoke one another to greater zeal in good work and the cause of Christ is advanced by the process.

Moreover, popular though the fad is of decrying denominations and denominational rivalry, yet such rivalry is still indulged in by practically all the denominations, even by some who do considerable talking about church union. The "Christian Advocate" quotes the "Baptist," which in reviewing a world survey, said editorially:

As we survey the survey we discover that Baptists are now the largest Protestant denomination in the world in the number of actual church members. The Lutherans, who count the members of their churches by families and by national populations, are more numerous than Baptists in the world, but in actual adult communicants whose names constitute the bona fide lists of church members the Baptists head the column of Protestants. The latest reliable figures give the number of Baptists in the world as 11,000,000. This great increase of Baptists in recent years is due to the fact that the liberation of Russia from the yoke of the czar and from the domination of the State Church led multitudes of the Russian people to seek a New Testament standard of life and church organization, and they became Baptists. No one knows the exact number of Baptists in Russia at the present time, as they are growing so rapidly, but conservative estimates place the number at 2,000,000. All Europe is an open field for the democratic principles of the Baptists, and as the Orient catches the spirit of freedom and independence Baptist church polity will become more and more the norm and type of their national governments.

The "Lutheran" took exception to these statements and presented the membership claims of the Lutheran church as follows:

No doubt many of the "Baptist's" readers here in America will take their editor's word for their position among evangelical denominations. But how absurd his figures are to anyone who thinks twice about them! Of the 11,000,000 Baptists in the world, 8,000,000 are in America. Three million are scattered over Europe, most of them in Great Britain and in Russia. But there are fifteen million Lutherans in Scandinavia alone. We have two and a half million Lutherans in America. The Swedes, Danes, Norwegians, and Finns are enrolled, and they say they are Lutherans. Surely they might get a sixty-five per cent allowance of their own valuation. Germany, Austria, Poland, Latvia, Esthonia, Czechoslovakia, Roumania, Hungary, France, Switzerland, Holland, and Russia's million and a half certainly deserve counting. If out of some seventy million Lutherans of Europe the Lord cannot find eight million, the Christianity of that continent is in a bad way.

Then the "Christian Advocate" (Nashville) said with much pride but in an irreproachable spirit:

We Methodists have a word to say for ourselves. We too have gathered hosts of people into our fold, not all but let us hope most of them genuine Christians, and our members throughout the world number above 11,000,000. Our increases give us joy, and so do the gains of other and all denominations.

Now we see no particular harm in these denominational organs endeavoring to stir their people with denominational pride and to excite them to greater zeal and activity in behalf of the kingdom of God. The engendering of such a spirit of loyalty and devotion in the membership is a great help to the growth of any church, and consequently to the growth of the Kingdom, providing, of course, it is directed in truly Christian expressions. The history of the advancement of God's kingdom is recorded in the many Christian denominational and group efforts at extension and upbuilding, and the future growth is likely to be most faithfully promoted in this way.

We rejoice with these Christian groups in the great numbers which they are able to count for the cause of Christ, and while we cannot count numbers at all comparable to theirs, yet we are able to point to a proportionate growth that will equal the records of the largest. But after all, we realize that there is something of vastly greater importance of which to boast, and in which a denomination may well seek to excel, and that is in loyalty to the Word of God and obedience to its teachings. And if, in any thing the Brethren church has a right to take pride, it is in its implicit obedience to the instructions and commands of our Lord and its unrelenting effort to preserve the loyalty of spirit and practice so characteristic of the Apostolic church. That has been our plea and to excel in that is our highest ambition, which, we submit, is at least as worthy an aim, as to excel in numbers.

Let the Church Bells Ring

Fads have their way of dictating about the building of churches as well as in the making of ladies' gowns and men's trousers. Fad has eliminated the bell from many a modern house of worship, in fact, has left the church without even a place to put a bell if one were wanted. Good sense has eliminated much waste from modern church architecture of the average type, but it has gone too far when and where it has eliminated the bell. We have been contending for the church bell and we are glad to discover that there remain a few others who believe it has an important place to fill. When it seemed that the new and beautiful Ashland church was destined to go through this world without a bell, for the sake of economy, up arose a staunch friend of the bell and provided the church with a large, clear-toned bell, the peer of any in the city.

Now comes another champion of the church bell, having gathered unto himself a little group of defenders. The Editor of the Western Christian Advocate says with poetic enthusiasm:

Let the church bells ring. Send their sweet music out over dale and glen. Awaken the woodland and the pastures with their sweet tones, for it is the church of God which should have the air on the Sabbath, and by its bells, its ringing bells, its chiming bells, its deep-toned bells, acclaim the glory of God and the marvelous revelation of his love. Yes, we have asserted that the church bell is as necessary to the house of God as the altar where the gifts of worshipping mankind are received.

We have been commended by scores of letters for our contention. We have been commanded, we have been praised, we have been urged to ring the bells again. Now comes our friend, Charlie D. Tillman, announcing that our editorial gave him the suggestion for the writing of a piece of music, a vocal solo, "What Has Become of the Old Church Bell?" He surely had an inspiration, for he makes the bells ring. They sound forth in deep tones, carrying a melody far across the fields.

He rings the bells and they awaken memories long departed. He rings the bells and they come trooping out of the dim vista of the days long gone of sweet associations of childhood and youth. May the Christ for whom the angels came singing start again the joy bells ringing, not only in the hearts of all believers, but in the tall steeples of the churches that point the way to God.

So say we; let the church bells continue to ring. The members need its warning voice, the friends appreciate its cheery invitation, and the community enjoys its pealing tones and is influenced by its message.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Has the tract lost its power? Read Brother R. F. Porte's Tract Promotion Corner this week.

Brother W. C. Benshoff, pastor of the congregation at Berlin, Pennsylvania, announces the dedication date for their new church for April 25th. Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana, is to officiate, and preach for a few nights following, after which Brother B. T. Burnworth of Ashland, Ohio, is to lead in an evangelistic campaign.

Brother Edwin Boardman, pastor of the church at Waterloo, Iowa, informed us in a personal letter recently that the Publishing House had been put down in their church budget for $250 this year, and that they expect to begin paying on it in the near future. That is support with the right ring. It sounded especially good in the ears of the Business Manager when we passed the word on to him. We are grateful to Waterloo, and to other churches who have given similar evidences of their loyalty to the publishing interests of the church.

Dr. G. W. Rench has written a very thoughtful and faithful presentation of what the Brethren church offers to those who would join its fold. Its publication begun in this issue will be concluded next week. Brother Rench is well prepared to speak with authority on such a subject and we commend this treatise, which is to be published in tract form, as suitable for placing in the hands of new converts as a means of giving them a foundation knowledge of the advantages of membership in the Brethren church.

A number of very excellent Easter programs and announcements of sermons and cantatas, as well as beautifully written Easter greetings have reached our desk. The editor is very grateful for these personal greetings, and also to learn of the many good things that were enjoyed by the churches on Easter Sunday. The sermon subjects were all of a most reassuring nature and the musical programs pointed to the fact that Brethren churches need not be ashamed of their musical talent in the least. Indeed we think it is equal to the best.

We have a splendid letter this week from Miss Johanna Nielsen, missionary to the Argentine. She makes an appeal in behalf of the families of some of our native missionaries that ought to find a response in many a heart and well supplied pocket book. Also the suggestion she makes regarding writing to our missionaries who have gone from our midst ought to cause many a negligent pen to get busy. This is a means of supporting our missionaries in both South America and Africa that great hosts could engage in who can do little in the way of giving, and even the busiest persons and the biggest givers could find time for and would realize a joy in this kind of service. But don't expect the missionaries to reply to every one of you individually.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter reports his leave-taking from his former pastorate at Milledgeville, Illinois, and his taking up a circuit of churches in Indiana. Brother Teeter did a good work at Milledgeville and is getting hard into the work in the four country churches in Indiana. He has conducted successful evangelistic meetings at all points of his circuit: at County Line, five accessions are reported; at New Enterprise, thirteen converts, eleven of which were men; at Lapaz, two accessions; at Teegarden, three; making twenty-three additions in all to the kingdom. It seems evident that the work is going forward in an encouraging way at all these churches. This is especially worthy of note in view of the fact that these are all rural churches, which as a rule are having hard sledding these days.

Brother Sylvester Lowman closes his pastorate at Oakville, Indiana, after three years and seven months of splendid service. He has added to the membership in that time eighty-three, two having just recently been received. Also he led the congregation in the building of a new church house, which is very attractive, modern and adequate. Brother Lowman is wise when he lays stress on tithing as a means of financing the Lord's work. It would be well for our church in general if more of our pastors did this. And why not? The man who complains about the preacher "preaching money" and "begging" because the Lord's method for Christian giving is taught has no more right to receive consideration at our hands than the one who objects to Christian baptism or feet washing. Of course there will be some who will complain if tithing is persistently taught, even though ever so wisely done, but if it is right, let us not neglect it.

The Riverside Institute of Lost Creek, Kentucky, is rejoicing in the near realization of their hopes and prayers of years—a home for the homeless children of the surrounding communities. This is made possible through the will of the late Brother John W. Wheeler and wife of Nickerson, Kansas, all of whose property at their death went to the Home Missionary Board for the purpose above mentioned. This is a suggestion for more of our consecrated brethren and sisters, whom the Lord has prospered financially. There are many interests of the church in great need of funds more than can be gotten in the regular offerings. Why not put your money, when you are done with it, where it will continue to serve the Lord for many years thereafter. Even where there are children to inherit your property, why leave a fortune to them to quarrel over and to spoil them? Many a well-to-do parent would deal more wisely with his children and more justly with the cause of the Lord if he would, after giving his children a good education and every proper advantage for getting started in a life of service, give the bulk of his property to some phase of the kingdom's work, rather than leaving it to contribute to the luxury and indolence of his offspring.

President Jacobs reports that the will of the late Jesse Eyeman has been satisfactorily interpreted, as well as sustained, and that the various church interests will benefit according to the intent of the testator. That will mean approximately one thousand dollars of income annually to the College and a small amount to mission work in Ohio. He also states that Dr. Bell is about ready to begin his canvass in behalf of endowment for Ashland College. No more urgent and vital undertaking is before the church at this time and if the goal of $200,000.00 from the churches is to be reached, there will be need of much praying of the right sort; not the mumbled petitions that cost nothing, but the earnest, agonizing, blood-sweating prayers that set the heart so intently upon the desired goal that no sacrifice will be allowed to stand in the way of its realization. If the brotherhood could be gotten in that spirit and attitude, the task would be made easy and success would be more than assured. Don't look upon this as mere sentiment, unless you have no faith in the accomplishing power of prayer. It is a spiritual undertaking and must be spiritually achieved. Nothing is more essential at the outset than that the brotherhood shall realize this and shall get back of it with their most earnest, prayerful support.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Neglect. By George H. Jones

They have made me a keeper of vineyards, but mine own vineyards I have not kept. Song of Solomon, 1:6.

Without controverting any theory of interpretation of the book and its meaning, we have no argument against the plain teaching of the text. The writer was in love, his theme is love and his observation is one that concerns human nature in all ages and climes. Love is wounded more by neglect than design.

Here is a warning corroborated by human experience. To be chosen as one upon whom a great trust has been imposed, ought to awaken responsibility. Yet the experience is common, of men accepting a trust and then neglecting to discharge their duty. It is true of private life, as many a court record proves, and it is sadly true of public life. No better illustration can be given than that of modern law enforcements. So common and brazen have these violations become that citizens everywhere are losing faith in their courts, judges and prosecuting officers, because of the flagrant offences. We have made men the keepers of our vineyards (courts) and they have betrayed (not kept) their trust.

In these days of keen observation the workman in any field is learning the value of conservation and intensive labor. Instead of the distant field and its lure of greater possibilities that often prove chimerical we are learning the value of cultivation in the field we already occupy.

The story of the Golconda mines is a striking instance of this truth. The farmer who owned the fields was shown the rich find of a traveler and getting the fever of the miser, he hastily offered his farm for sale and began a long journey that resulted in the disintegration of his home life and family and their dissolution abroad. His wanderings continued until in the course of his pilgrimage, he traveled over the old home place which he had sold so cheaply. What was his astonishment to find that the treasures upon which he had set out to search for, were buried beneath the clay of his old farm land. Another had to come and buy the place to uncover and develop its riches. We can imagine his chagrin. Many a Pennsylvania farmer sold his farm underlaid with thousands of tons of coal waiting to be mined, and millions of gallons of oil waiting to be tapped, and shortsightedly emigrated to Canada and lost in its frosty winters the investment that might have meant the ransom of a king had he been patient and diligent in his boyhood home.

The text is filled with dynamite that might shatter many a dream, if men were as keen for the prospects at home as for those abroad. Our neighbor's business always looks more prosperous than our own. Our distant friends are the lucky ones. Any other position looks better than our own. The philosophy of our day has determined that our field is limited, the distant one has its horizon extending beyond the limits of our vision. The glamour of romance surrounds the profession that we know the least about. Apparently we have selected the most prosaic and the least interesting of vocations. Our state of mind too often causes us to neglect what afterward might have been the goal of our dreams.

Few men indeed are equally as careful of the performance of their obligations, as they are of their promises. Of too many it may well be said, "Rich in promise, poor in performance." After the point of vantage is gained few men are able to profit fully by their victories. Possession only too often paralyzes initiative. Seldom does the husband equal the lover in devotion and consideration. Seldom does the precocious child become the striking figure among men that he was among children. "Ye did run well, who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?"

The tragedies of neglect are more numerous than the tragedies of a criminal hand. In the one case we become liable to persecution as murderers, in the other we kill our usefulness and ruin our influence, until in despair we discover that our worst enemy is not the man that hates us, but our own carelessness.

More lives are ruined by neglect than by law-breaking. More hopes are blasted by carelessness than by design. If men had what they were entitled to by nature, there would be less poverty in the world and fewer disappointed misanthropes. But a man's habits may be his greatest handicap and often is the cause of his undoing. It is not only so personally, but it is true of our relationships. Many a wounded heart might have been cheered instead, if the habit of neglect had not grown upon an otherwise good child or parent. To be wounded more by our loved ones than by our enemies is a common experience.

And the sin is not always the sin of commission, rather the sorrows of life are multiplied by the neglect and indifference of those from whom more was to be expected. The sins of omission are the deadliest.

Much of the failure to attain to the higher realms of noble Christian experience where the baser passions and purposes are purified, is due to indulgence in carnal ease, rather than deliberate choice. The higher planes carry an atmosphere of sacrifice and unselfishness that few attain, because of neglect. Not deliberate choice, O no! only neglect.

Neglect in the Home

In no field of human life is there greater need than in the home, where the chief breakdown in national life has occurred. The entrance of labor-saving devices and the shortening of the standard day's labor from ten to eight hours, has in every city of the land, given more time to the individual to use for other purposes than labor. The pity is that in many cases the time so secured has been abused. Home has simply become a temporary resting place between work, excitement, and sleep. Our feverishness has taken a toll that is often more ruinous than long hours of labor. This lack of restraint and impatience has resulted in a lax parental relationship that everywhere gives room for anxiety. Whither are we going? Is the question in homes where the family has few regular meals together, seldom get to bed at one time, and never get any moral or religious instruction to safeguard health and happiness.

We have fallen upon an evil day in the neglect of home influence and character building. Parents seem more interested in children making a living and making a "match," than in making a life. The frenzy of license seems to have seized the sense of proportion and twisted it out of all religious semblance. To "get on" seems of more importance than to get right. Neglect of the spiritual has ever been the foundation of almost all of the breakdowns of life.

Neglect in the Schools

Perhaps the popular habit of shifting responsibility has thrown upon the schools a burden they are not prepared to assume. Their equipment and training is excellent for their purpose, but there never was the purpose to educate religiously. Cultural and vocational education has been and is their aim. However the modern neglect of the parents in the home has awakened a purpose upon the part of many educators to create a new purpose in the school curriculum. To add some kind of instruction that will help to stop the flood of immorality and lawlessness which has always been considered the particular province of the home and church.

Neglect in the Church

The church wrapped in the bondage of custom has heroically been trying to meet the great need. The work of the church depending largely upon the executive ability of the minister and the volunteer labor of the Sunday school teacher, has accomplished marvelous things when the field of labor is considered. To repair in one hour on Sunday morning, the ravages of a week of misguided and indulgent living; to build into the minds and hearts of the children that come more or less regularly, the needed aspirations and inspiration that neglectful parents have failed to inculcate; to put moral stamina and religious fervor into hearts and minds jaded and exhausted by school studies and movie excitement, becomes a superhuman task.

The miracle of modern life is the accomplishments of an organization that in one hour on Sunday morning, is able to transform life as it is doing in spite of wickedness, worldliness and neglect. The last and greatest is Neglect.

Membership in the Brethren Church

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

(Prepared by order of the Tract Committee, to be published in tract form, and published in "The Evangelist" by the kind permission of the author. In two parts. Part I.)

First Advantage

This is in the name, BRETHREN. In the year 1708 a handful of Christians led by the scholarly, and pious Alexander Mack, dug down through the rubbish of human traditions, human standards, and human creeds until their feet were planted upon the rock of Matthew 16:18. In 1882, through the decisions of councils on many questions foreign to the Scriptures, including a form of dress, all made a test of fellowship in the church, it was necessary to dig down once more in order to find that "rock." Through much anguish of soul, and the breaking of ties of brotherly love, which this generation will never understand, solid ground was once more found. These fine-spirited, loyal leaders, sacrificing so much of the joys of life, have gone to their graves; but their work was well done, if not appreciated; and they rest in peace.

Throughout the stress and strain of their faithful labors, they would hear but one name for themselves and followers, and that was the name "brethren." That name seemed to cover and soothe the heart-aches of a century of untimely discussion. It was enough; for had not the Master said, "But be not ye called Rabbi: for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren" (Matt. 23:8)? "Brethren", "saints", and "Christians" was the name "church" attached to any of these names. Indeed, it would seem that the Holy Spirit sought to hide any attempt to suggest a name for a church, lest it be perverted to a sectarian use. This was to be avoided. Brethren is as good as any; good because it is not exclusive. It is inclusive, and as such it embraces any and all of the Lord's people. "Therefore, my beloved brethren" (1 Cor. 15:28), was one of Paul's most charming salutations. May we be worthy of the name.

Finding the Rock

This is a second advantage. The Brethren not only found "the rock", but they recognized it, and its importance, after finding it. This is of great importance in the work of the kingdom. The Master said, "I"—"I will build." So few leaders have gone back far enough to catch a glimpse of what the Master built. Some who have, did not recognize the perfect Builder doing a PERFECT PIECE OF WORK. For weak and puny man to undertake to change a perfect piece of work, is too absurd to think about. Martin Luther, mighty man of God, did not go back far enough. He was a reformer, and spent his time trying to reform the papacy. Give him credit for what he did. The Wesleys were bent on reforming the church of their day, and never thought of founding the great denomination which honors them. The same may be said of many others. It is well to remember, however,

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of thee,
And thou, O Lord, art more than they."

Says one, "What was the rock spoken of by our Lord?" Let us put a little study on the context of Matthew 16:18, and see if we can not find the answer. What was the theme under consideration as set forth in that Scripture? What were they talking about? Why, that is easy to find. "When Jesus came into the coasts of Caesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?" There you have the subject of their conversation: the Lord of glory is the theme; not Peter, not the church. "Blessed art thou, Simon, son of Jonas, for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee." "Revealed it—it what? Without doubt, the confession which Peter had just made, 'thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.'" "And upon this rock"—this identical truth—"I will build my church." When he says, "this rock", the theme is not changed; this, refers back to what Peter had just said: "Thou art the Christ." Upon this great affirmative proposition of all Christendom, the church, —HIS CHURCH—is founded. There it will stand—must stand, or sink into eternal oblivion.

"For other foundation can not man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. 3:11).

"And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone" (Eph. 2:20).

The tremendous importance in the plan of Almighty God of THE foundation, is here set forth. Unto your dying day, make sure of the divine rock.

Brethren Have a Creed

Yes, their creed has just been pointed out: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." The word "creed" comes from the Latin credo—I believe. Jesus is the world's living Creed. That creed will never be revised. Councils and synods there will be, but not to change that creed. And more, if ever the different bodies of Christ unite, it will be around that divine creed. The Brethren will be right in line, then. They have always declared, "More than that is too much; less than that is too little; that, itself, is just right." It is all-embracing, spoken by our Lord himself; therefore, divine. There is no use wasting time on any other. Trying to add more to it dims it like a cloud passing over the sun. In Peter's preaching on the great day of Pentecost, when starting right was so essential, other things were not permitted to enter for consideration. Accepting fully this divine belief, a complete surrender to it with all that embodies, Jesus in his word will be permitted to map out other requirements as the soul needs them. But the divine belief comes first. If there is debate here, ifs and ands, and ah me's here, right at the supreme moment of making the surrender, what may not happen further on? On hearing one sermon, with the essential item made outstanding, men were ready to be added unto them that same day. Acts 2:41.

"For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation" (Rom. 10:10).

"Open, or close communion"; "once in grace, always in grace"; "predestination"; "the sleep of the soul in the grave"; "divine healing without medicine"; "articles of special dress", etc., are humanisms, pure and simple, invented by the devil to obscure the main issue in the salvation of the soul from sin. There will always be folks who will be attracted by the "side-shows." The Lord's "through train" moves right along on the main track. The little switch-engine often makes a lot of noise, but it never gets very far. Faithful ministers of God will never permit big truths of God's word to be obscured by petty side-issues.

"The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life" (John 6:63).

"I said therefore unto you, that ye shall die in your sins: for if ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins" (John 8:24).

"And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this book. But these are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is, the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name" (John 20:30, 31).

Here are big truths of God, revealed with the sole purpose of dealing with vital issues: how to become reconciled unto God. Can you pass the test

Bible Plan of Conversion

The fourth advantage is in adhering to this plan. Too many plans are made to order—what some body else has experienced, or said. New Testament conversion is the revealed plan as to how man can turn to God. The first thing to remember is that the term, "be converted", or "converted", is not found in the Revised Version. "Be converted" is passive, implying that the power to do so is from the individual. The scholars have long held that the passive form of that term is misleading: that the Greek form is active. The closer translation, therefore, of the Revised Version is rendered everywhere "turn", or "turn again", leaving the power to turn with the individual, where it belongs. If God gives us the light to turn, and we permit the will to stand in the way, the responsibility is with man, and not God. For a God to refuse to give man the power to turn, and then condemn him because he does not turn, is unthinkable. "They who seek shall find," the Lord says. "Whosoever will may come", is the divine dictum. The responsibility of turning to God, or becoming converted, is thus thrown upon man. See Acts 3:19, R. V. God stands pledged to do his part, always.

Now, conversion, or turning to God, has to do with the forgiveness of original sins. The passage referred to demands that certain conditions be met "that your sins may be blotted out." Being "born again", looks to the same thing. New Testament conversion, then, is the divine process of turning to God that "your sins may be blotted out." That blotting out takes place in heaven for us. The evidence of this blotting out of our sins is not in our feelings, but in the pledged word of God. He seems to say, "If you will comply, then will I do." No guesses here. We may know; and we may place our finger on the passage of Scripture where God assures us of what he will do. God has placed "saved", "shall be saved", "the remission of sins", "the gift of the Holy Spirit" at the end of the divine process of conversion, or turning. "Shall be saved" is God's pledged word, but found only after his own imposed conditions, like "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16). Read the many cases of conversion in the book of Acts, noting carefully in each instance what was presented to be believed, and what was required of the believer. Acts 2:36-39; 8:26-40; 9:1-20; 10:44-48; 16:29-34.

The truth of the gospel preached is divine truth; the belief of that truth "with all thine heart" is divine faith; this faith leading men to give up their sins is divine repentance; the confession with the mouth (Rom. 10:10) that "Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God," is the divine confession; and the obedience "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit", is the divine baptism. These steps in the divine process of turning to God bring man to God's part, where he says "blotted out"; "the remission of sins" (Acts 22:16); and the bestowal of the Holy Spirit. The laying on of hands is the beautiful service connected with the latter. And then, all put together, IT IS BUT THE FREE GIFT OF GOD. Reader, is your experience in conversion like the 3000 on the day of Pentecost, when Peter, an inspired apostle, was directing the meeting, or like the Ethiopian eunuch of Acts 8, or that of Saul as he narrates it in Acts 22, or Lydia, the seller of purple, as given in Acts 16, or the Philippian jailor, whom Paul led to Christ, baptizing him the same hour of the night? I had rather have the New Testament experience of these converts, than all the easy ways ever devised by men. Blind impulse is no safe guide for me.

Another Advantage is in Standing by His Orders

Matthew 28:19, is known as the Lord's great commission to his church. He says, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen." Since no one hesitates to properly stress the latter part of the commission, I shall give most attention to the first part. It is there that you find the excuses, the cavils, and the open, flagrant disregard. It is a shame that there is a pretension of holding our Lord in high esteem until you come face to face with these words—HIS WORDS.

In giving us his marching orders, he chose his own form of speech, evidently expressing just what he wished his followers to hear. Until he changes the form of language used, it will remain in force, and we shall have to reckon with it. To say that "the form of speech is unimportant" is like saying what Jesus said is unimportant.

But you know where such teaching leads to. Then, what does his language mean? He might have said, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost", as careless people often quote it, but he did not put his thought in that form. An honest way to find out what he meant by his saying, is to bring to bear on this passage the light of other scriptures; for the sum total of all scriptures is necessary to a full understanding of any subject.

Jesus says, "Baptizing them."

I. What is Baptism?

1. Matthew 28:18, 19. A positive, divine command.
2. Mark 16:15, 16. A positive, divine command.
3. Acts 2:38. A positive, divine command.

II. Who are Subjects for Baptism?

1. Mark 16:16. Those who can, and do believe.
2. Matthew 28:19. Those capable, and old enough to be taught.
3. Acts 18:8. Hearers and believers, and those who can obey.
4. Acts 8:12. Both men and women.

III. How the Scriptures Say it was done.

1. Mark 1:5. They went to the water.
2. John 3:23. They went where there was much water.
3. Acts 8:38. They went down into the water.
4. Romans 6:4. They were buried with Christ.
5. Romans 6:5. They were planted in the likeness of his death.

(Not burial. His death is described in John 19:30).

6. Matthew 28:19. They were buried "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy

Applied Power

By Edwin Boardman, Jr.

Scripture Lesson—1 Sam. 14:1-15

We pray for conquering power and, did we but realize it, all we have to do is to venture a real application of the forces at our disposal for the working of wonderful results. Many Christians are like frozen Niagaras. All the necessary factors are there for power—the river, the abyss and the feeding lakes—but zero weather has crystallized the power so that nothing results but a beautiful display of winter scenery. God Almighty has power sufficient for all needs. His lack is the finding of sufficient distributing centers in human life to give him the necessary contact with his needy world. But we are faithless and unbelieving, because we refuse to move ahead unless there are visible Pentecosts at every stage of the advance.

The church today might well contemplate some of Israel's experiences in given situations so that she might learn some lessons in applied power. In 1 Samuel the 14th chapter, we have a picture of such a victorious application of faith-infused power. The Philistines had spread themselves over the land of Israel like an inundating flood. They were warlike freebooters who delighted in waxing wealthy at the expense of weaker peoples. Israel, under Saul's dynasty, was just beginning to climb out of the period of disorganization and lawlessness which held sway under the Judges. The climb to power was difficult, made more so by the fact that the Philistine invaders had deprived Israel of offensive weapons. Consequently we behold Saul and a few hundred retainers holding Jewish court under a tree in the land of Benjamin and waiting for a favorable moment to strike the foe. This rustic king and his men had yet to learn many things about the God they were serving, and one of them was the present power of Jehovah. In the host, however, there was a prince who seems to have had real vision and power in his life. At any rate he was willing to help things to happen. This man was Jonathan. Growing restless at the inactivity of his father, and beholding his people daily becoming more impoverished and possessed of the slave mentality he concluded that the situation was ripe for an heroic and herculean effort. Across the valley, on the edge of a sharp declivity, was a Philistine stronghold from which robber bands were continually starting out on pillaging expeditions. To capture this hold was the goal of Jonathan's desire, so departing secretly from Saul's camp he and his armor-bearer started on their dangerous mission. Jonathan's faith in the God he served is found in the heroic words to his companion—"Come and let us go over unto the garrison of these uncircumcised; it may be that the Lord will work for us; for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few" (1 Sam. 14:6). Finally the bottom of the cliff was reached and here the test was applied—viz., if the Philistines ran out eagerly to meet the two soldiers, it was to be a sign that Jehovah did not want them to take the fort; but if the Philistines challenged them to scale the cliff to attack, then it was to be a sign of God's presence and power with them. When the garrison saw Jonathan and his companion they immediately hurled the challenge to them to scale the cliff. Eagerly the two Jews started forward and reaching the heights they immediately began to use their swords with terrible effect. So brilliantly did the two champions fight that the Philistines began to flee in dismay; the height was won and the pathway to splendid victory for Israel was opened.

This incident in a courageous man's life comes to us with singular force in these days of contradiction and fear. Philistine forces are at work in the church today. Such forces are deterrent, disruptive, and destructive of the best interests of the Kingdom. The Christian church is rich and increased with goods. Her membership rolls are filled with respectable people who profess faith in the Lord of Hosts. Each member is a potential powerhouse for the application of God's power, but somehow the church seems to be sitting under a tree waiting for something to turn up. Preachers are almost driven to desperation as they face congregations that can sleep blissfully on during the preaching of the Word. The studied indifference of the average professing Christian to Christian service is not only shameful, it is disgusting. Instead of finding "fishers of men" who toil at the nets, a lot of Isaak Waltons are to be found who sit contentedly on a grassy bank by the stream and drowse while their "cork" bobs in the water under the attentions of some nibbling fish. Then too, we find that professing Christians love nothing better than a fight, providing it is a church fight—where nothing more visible is broken than reputations. Such factors as these are Philistines, for they cause apathy and atrophy in the church of Christ.

The church needs people who will dare to let God's power work through them even as Jonathan and his armor-bearer did. Such daring souls will go quietly about their great task, earnestly, honestly putting Divine power to the test. In these days we seem to have the idea that to get souls to work for the Lord there must be noisy reconsecration; the hip, hip hurrah of a rousing revival meeting in which the whole membership takes a stand for the right and there is much testimony regarding what "we are going to do in the future." Mayhap this is all good and necessary but it appeals to me that the great movements of God begin majestically, quietly, deep down at the foundation of life, and quietly yet resistlessly work their way out into action. The natural laws governing this universe need no press-agenting; yet those laws are not deterred in their working for all their silence. The Bible was printed into the English tongue secretly; to make known its printing would have meant death to the printer and editor—as it afterwards did; yet for all its secrecy it has worked its way out in power in the English speaking world. So with all those who would really apply the power of God to modern life; they may be very quiet about their big undertaking, but as the power is applied the results become visible. No! Jonathan and his companion did not ask Saul's permission to take the hill fort. They trusted God and silently stole away into the big adventure. Quietly but resistlessly the power of faith and spirit was made manifest when applied.

Another noticeable factor in the lives of those who dare to apply God's power is that they are willing to make the severest tests the symbol of assured victory. It would have been easy for Jonathan and his man to have fought the foe at the foot of the cliff where an easy retreat was to be had in case of disaster, but nothing of the sort was done. The challenge to fight on the hilltop after sealing the cliff was the sure test to Jonathan that the power of God was leading them on. So often we Christian workers grow discouraged in the face of the odds arrayed against us—all the appeal of amusement; the pull of radio broadcasting; the general indifference to things spiritual. How often preachers are thrown by these tough foes. The factor that makes the situation more difficult is that church service of any sort is largely voluntary and ministers and church boards have no leverage by which to arouse much of the membership. These circumstances are hard to face, yet if we would apply God's power we will have to make the severest demands on our faith and move ahead. Saul with several hundred war-rriors could sit under the trees and wait while two were willing to venture ahead. There's a real lesson in percentages here to every modern progressive who would dare for God. Such courageous ones will always belong to the minority in Christendom. "There is no restraint to the Lord to save by the many or by the few" (1 Sam. 14:6).

You will note too, that those who dare to apply the power of God to their age are always willing to venture everything they have in the world on the rightness of their move. It was not demanded of Jonathan and his companion that they die as evidence of their faith, but there had to be a willingness to die in the venture if need be. Two men can't face tremendous odds in hand to hand conflict without recognizing the possibility of sudden death being their portion. Right here is where modern appliers of the power of God fall short. We don't believe enough in our venture of faith to die for it. We are ready to laud those who do not refuse to make the great sacrifice, but somehow life is mighty precious to us and we desire above all things to be able to live our three score and ten years. We like comfort, and the assurance of a bank account, along with gilt edged real estate holdings. We much prefer the safe job behind the lines that we do the danger of the battle front. No one is more conscious of these things than the writer and I often ask myself—"Am I really willing to die for the things I believe?" Are you? If persecution and death were to be my lot would I be a minister, or even a Christian? Here is the acid test of one's faith after all. It's nice to be positive in conviction, but is my positiveness an index to my real willingness to venture all I have in a splendid effort to conquer all opponents to those things that are true and right.

The second outstanding truth of this chapter is this: when the power of God is put to use the existing conditions are radically changed. Destruction and death came to the Philistines when Jonathan ventured ahead. The power he used was no gentle zephyr blowing softly over the face of the land. It was a destructive tornado that left a tangled wreck of Philistine power in its wake. Any servant of God has at his disposal the same dynamic power. It is called in the New Testament—"inherent might." We call it in the English—"dynamite"—and we use the Greek root Jesus used in Acts 1:8 when he said: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." When this dynamite is applied it does two things—it blows out the bad; and makes way for the building in of the good. Some years ago they wanted to clear a ledge of rock out of the channel leading into New York harbor. Dynamite was placed in the rock ledge and electric connections were made to ignite the charge of dynamite. Then at the given signal the button was pressed and the rock was blown into atoms, thus making way for the argosies of world commerce to enter and leave the harbor. God's power when applied is just as effective in the realm of the spirit.

Great expertness is needed if the applying of the power of God is to accomplish much good. We must handle aright these dynamic forces. We must not grieve the Spirit. We must be in absolute earnest with God in this venture. The kind of faith most of us exhibit as we tackle spiritual and temporal problems will never be that quality of dynamite that will remove mountains. It is generally the type that will keep us from venturing too much for the Lord. Perhaps this is well for we play with God's power too much and the Almighty is careful not to let children play with dynamite. Brethren, we need to increasingly come to the full stature of men of faith in this use of Divine Power. When that stage is reached we'll be able to apply power effectively. To reach that stage we'll have to develop our nerve, vision and energy along with our devotional life so that we'll be willing to attempt big things for God.

One last fact. Jonathan's name means: "Jehovah has given." It was a fact as well as a prophecy in Jonathan's experience. Physically, his very manhood was evidence to Saul, his father, that Jehovah had given life. In his spiritual experience Jonathan had to lay hold of the prophecy of his name and prove that Jehovah had really given him power. We too often ask for proofs of God's present power in our life while all we need to do to prove the fact is to apply the power, put it to active use. Electricity is a hidden power in its copper carrier until the button is pressed; then the hidden might becomes apparent. Do not ask for proofs of power. Apply your life to its God given purposes and the power will be there. "Jehovah has given."

506 W. 11th St., Waterloo, Iowa.

Among scores of reasons why you should say "today," and not "tomorrow," I want to give you one, Proverbs 27:1. "Boast not thyself of tomorrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." It may bring forth death. Two men die every second. But if tomorrow does not bring forth death it will bring a less favorable condition of heart and soul to settle this matter. One time in an audience of 4000 I found by a test that 3200 had come to Christ before they were twenty years old and about 400 between twenty and thirty. Of those converted between fifty and sixty there were only 17; between sixty and seventy there was one, and after seventy not one in all the 4000.—Biederwolf.

MONDAY

FAITHFUL SERVICE—Matt. 25:14-23.

"This parable turns on the moral quality rather than on ability," says M. R. Vincent. "Its key-note is not five talents, nor two talents, nor one talent, but faithfulness to all three. It is faithfulness, and not amount, which links the talents to the joy of the Lord, the 'few things' to the 'many.'"

TUESDAY

SINS OF OMISSION—Matt. 25:24-30.

There are sins of omission and commission and we shall be held responsible not only for the wrong we do but for the good that we fail to do, for the blessing that might have flowed from our lives, the opportunities of usefulness that we failed to take advantage of, the growth in character we failed to realize.

WEDNESDAY

SEPARATION DAY—Matt. 25:31-46.

There are but two classes of people, those who are the faithful and true children of God and those who are not, and while we cannot always distinguish between the two, "the Eye that seeth the heart can make no mistake" and will some day make the proper division.

THURSDAY

THE PLOT AGAINST JESUS—Matt. 26:1-5.

How often do the emissaries of the evil one make use of the most sacred religious occasions for the promotion of their evil designs! May the spirit of conviction and conversion free the church of the dead-weight of its spiritual hypocrites.

FRIDAY

THE FRAGRANCE OF GRATITUDE—Matt. 26:6-13.

"Her eyes are homes of silent prayer,
Nor other thought her mind admits
But, he was dead, and there he sits,
And he that brought her back is there."

—Tennyson.

SATURDAY

THE SHADOW OF TREACHERY—Matt. 26:14-25.

The depths of infamy to which he sank who eat from his Master's table and then turned traitor to him whom he was duty bound to defend with his life is hard for us to fathom and the revulsion of feeling which Judas himself experienced when he realized the disgrace into which he had fallen goes far to explain his passionate suicide.

SUNDAY

THE COMMUNION—Matt. 26:26-29.

Jesus took the simplest and most common things of daily life and freighted them with the most uncommon and sacred significance, so that the profoundest truths thus taught are easily understood by all. This makes the ordinances universal and typical of a kingdom that includes every color and race.—G. S. B.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Observance of the Sabbath Day

By G. M. Garland

OUR SCRIPTURE

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.

Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work.

But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates:

For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it.

OUR MEDITATION

Reverence of the Sabbath seems almost to have become lost. In this fast-moving Twentieth Century in which we are living one sees so much being said and done in utter desecration of the Sabbath Day that we are led to believe that the fourth Command of our Lord seems almost to have been forgotten.

Much has been said about the enforcement of the so-called "blue laws", both for and against. Much more remains to be said. Much more will be said by more able and learned writers, which will far surpass any feeble efforts on my part to discuss this subject, yet we are constrained to say a few words along this line.

This utter disregard of the Sabbath Day is not alone confined to the unsaved, and those out of the church, so-called. Christians and church-going people are likewise guilty and shall be held accountable in the last great day.

The Sundays of the present as compared to the Sundays of a generation ago seem to have fallen victim to the evolution of progress. Coming from a Christian home, and of Christian parents, the grandson of a minister of the old Dunkard faith, the writer has heard many times the strict observance of the command, "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy", that was practiced in those days. Then, Sabbath meant that even the visiting of the sick was not to be put off until Sabbath unless it were not possible to avoid it. Only the simplest meals were partaken of, just enough to merely satisfy the physical hungering, and as much preparation along this line being done on Saturday as was possible.

The Sabbath of today—what is it? To most people it has become merely a day of pleasure. Since the inception of the radio, one might perchance take time to listen to a sermon by that means, unless the Sunday newspaper has not been completely read. But in this present day and age, the vogue seems to be to keep such late hours on Saturday night that one has to lie in bed until noon Sunday. Of course, it is different if it is summer and one has planned to go on a picnic, or an excursion, or a long automobile trip, in which event one has to rise early. Then a round or two of golf must be indulged in in the afternoon. In the evening, in preference to going to church, one has to go out to the Amusement Park, or for a drive out into the country after a strenuous day's exercise. That is the writer's conception of the Sabbath of the present day compared to the Sabbath of a generation ago. Even the use of the word "Sabbath" has almost entirely been dropped.

The attendance particularly at the Sunday evening service in most churches is really pitiable. It seems the throng can only be attracted to church by the advertisement that some sensational discourse, such as the marriage or divorce questions, will be discussed by the minister. Not so very long ago the pastor of a large church of a large denomination in one of the residential sections of Pittsburgh gave a series of Sunday evening talks (such subjects are not worthy to have the name "Sermon" applied to them) on various sensationalisms. On at least one occasion, and no doubt on more than one occasion, the crowd was so great that it had to be turned away. A crowd turned away from church! More than a thousand people already packed inside. One can scarcely conceive such a condition existing anywhere, more especially in a large city. But that condition actually did exist. But, my dear readers, the Gospel of Jesus Christ was not being preached and taught. Those thousand or more inside and the many turned away had not gone to hear the Gospel preached. They had gone for the sensational thrill. Thank God, the Brethren church does not engage in such practices. We would rather close our doors than resort to such measures. In regard to the sensational sermons referred to: The story is told of two young men who set out to go to church one Sunday evening. One was a member of a church, the other was not. The member suggested that the two go and hear one of the sensational sermons. The non-member refused, saying that he would rather hear the Gospel a thousand times over. It would be better if there were more people like this young man.

One of the daily newspapers of one of the largest cities of the United States carries each day a column called "Letters from Readers." In some manner the discussion in this column has become centered on the so-called "blue laws." The writer has to some extent been following the discussions presented. The arguments both for and against have been varied. They have been pertinent and pitiful. One woman had the audacity to say that she did not believe in people always running to church and dragging other people with them. That woman certainly is laboring under a huge misapprehension. In that discussion, Sunday baseball, football and all those sports—the movies—the theaters—every conceivable kind of sport, entertainment or pleasure found its place, favored and unfavored. The thumb-worn argument of the hard-working mill man and the like who is too tired after a long, hard day in the mill or shop to go out in the evening, he having to look to Sunday as his only time to enjoy a movie or a baseball game, was advanced. I believe only one person—and that person a woman—made reference as her argument to the command: "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy."

The vast majority of the leaders, both men and women, of the past and present—the thinking men of the nation—the great leaders in state, diplomatic and financial circles—have been Christian, church-going men, and certainly not ashamed to admit. George Washington, the Father of our country, was a devout man of God. So was Abraham Lincoln, and, more recently, the late Presidents Roosevelt and Harding. Dozens of others could be named if space would permit. All of those men had cultivated the spirit of worship. They "remembered the Sabbath day and kept it holy." They could not afford to do otherwise. No one can afford to do otherwise.

Those in favor of abolishment of the "blue laws" say: "I can go to church in the morning and worship my God, if I feel so inclined, and still go to a movie or a ball game in the afternoon." They have not cultivated the spirit of worship. One cannot serve God and Mammon.

Thus it will be seen if these exponents of the abolishment of the "blue laws" could be convinced of the error of their way—if they could be made to realize that they should cultivate the spirit of worship, they would feel there was no necessity for further pleasure on Sabbaths, already overburdened with everything but thoughts of church and God, and this old world in which we are living would be a far better world in which to live.

OUR PRAYER

Our kind Heavenly Father, help us to better observe the command: "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy." Help us to realize that the Sabbath was made for thee, and not to be used in the pursuit of worldly pleasures and for satisfying the craving for questionable entertainment. Help us to cultivate the Spirit of Worship, for the Glory and the Exalting of thy dear name. In Jesus' name, we ask it all. Amen.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From Illustrated Quarterly.)

The Garden of Eden was a pleasure ground with trees, streams, flowers, and fruits in the land of Eden. The pleasure grounds and gardens of the Persian kings were called "paradises." Xenophon describes one belonging to them as a garden very large and beautiful, having all things which the seasons produce (Anab. iv. 10). It is impossible to tell precisely where Eden was situated. Delitzsch says that "Paradise is lost." We only know that it must be somewhere on the Euphrates. Some think it to be near the head waters. Perhaps the most probable site is on the lower Euphrates, near where the Tigris (Hiddekel) unites with it.

The Tempter

It is a worse denunciation of man's nature to assume that there is no definite evil spirit from without which tempts to sin. If all the evils in the world today and throughout history have come through the evil in the nature of man, then he is in truth the incarnation of evil. But throughout the Bible we find recognition of evil influences from without tempting men—usually in the form of fallen angels, or of their leader, Satan, or Beelzebub, or the Adversary.

The Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil.

It was not "the tree of knowledge," but only of the knowledge of good and evil. It was not to prevent them from knowing good and evil. Its purpose was to teach them that knowledge in the divine way. For there are two ways of knowing good and evil. One is Satan's way, by knowing evil through experience, and good by contrast. The other is the divine way of knowing good by experience, and evil by contrast. "The prohibition of this tree was to cultivate moral growth, for a man grows morally only when he is in the presence of a forbidden thing and restrains himself. There being a prohibition, he knows that there is a distinction between good and evil. He may choose either. This tree made him conscious of good and evil. The prohibition was a constant education by the law. The tree was named not for its fruit, but for the prohibition."—Dods.

Why Man Was Exposed to Temptation

Simply because there was no other way of opening the door to man's highest possibilities, his fullest development, his purest holiness, his greatest happiness, his largest usefulness, his nearness to God. "Why did God make Satan?" He did not make him. He permitted him, in order that there might be "angels excelling in strength." There can be no victories without battles.

(1) It was impossible for Adam to have been developed in character without temptation. (2) The tempter was not allowed to come in order to make him fall, but to enable him to resist, and in this way could he best gain character. (3) The tempter was not allowed to come in his own form, nor as an angel of light, but only as a beast, to make the trial as light as possible. (4) He neither threatens, nor persuades, nor compels, but only misrepresents that as to which Adam and Eve knew the exact truth from God's own words.

The Serpent

The two elements of temptation are, first, something wrong in that which is forbidden; and second, something desirable and attractive in that which is wrong. Temptation is always disguised. It is quite possible that the serpent, to prove his assertion, had eaten of the fruit of the tree, and had not been stricken dead; and Eve may have thought that the serpent's superiority in wisdom and intelligence over the other animals was due to his eating of the forbidden tree. If this did not kill him, why should it kill her? This is exactly the process by which mankind are led into sins today. They see the sparkle of the wine cup, the soothing qualities of deadly drugs, the riches and splendor and power which come from ill-gotten wealth. They see that others have partaken and have not yet felt the evils denounced against such things. Nevertheless it is true of multitudes that on the day they eat of this forbidden fruit, they begin to die, body and soul.

Whatever view we take of this chapter, it is a true picture of human life, so marvelously accurate, so divinely religious, and true to human nature and to divine. "It is a picture into which every man may look and see himself, and shudder at the terrible cost of sin. It is the greatest sermon ever preached to man as a warning against sin; a sermon which millions have read and millions more will read; a sermon which will never cease to be read so long as man is man and God is God."—Pres. W. R. Harper.

Salvation Through Exile

The driving of man out of paradise after he had sinned was not more for his punishment than for helping and training him toward a better life. The whole Bible is a record of the conflict of man with evil, and his redemption and spiritual education, from the fall to the holy city of God. After man had sinned, Eden was the worst place in the world for him; idleness, ease, and pleasure would have quickly completed his ruin. Hope for him lay in the necessity of labor. The very punishment was remedial. The rainbow of promise was over the exiled pair.

Illustration

A man once complained bitterly because he had to work so hard on account of Adam's sin. He knew that he would not have been so foolish. A rich friend offered to give him home and board so long as he would eat alone and not touch a certain covered dish that was on the table. It was not long before he peeked under the cover, when out leaped a mouse. He was told to go to work for his living for he was no better than Adam.

Spanish Sunday School Hymnal

When Rev. George P. Howard of Buenos Aires, Argentina, was in the United States on his recent furlough, numerous individuals and audiences were informed of the need for a Sunday school hymnal in Spanish. Special gifts were made for this purpose. Mr. Howard has just written the World's Sunday School Association, of which he is the representative for Argentina, Chile and Uruguay, that the much needed song book is ready for the press. The printing will be done by the Methodist Press in Sao Paulo, Brazil. Mr. Howard has had a final conference at Montevideo, Uruguay, with the committee that has had this important work in charge. Just one of the necessary processes is indicated when Mr. Howard says, "I am having to write the first verse in Spanish of every hymn between the music bars, and this is slow, tedious work."

PUCKER'S PERPLEXITIES

By Rev. William Osgood Rogers
Frivulus

Deer Skinny,

Our Preechur seams awful Frivulus to me. He doesn't take things Serious enough. He only Plays when he ought to be Scolding.

The Bibel class had a Quarrel or something and he found them Hating each other like the French and the Germans. One Set wanted the class run one way. The other Crowd wanted it the other way. And neethur would give up.

The Preechur said to Dad that something must be done about it Rite Away. And Dad looked for a Red Hot surman the next Sunday. But the Preechur never said a thing about it.

He even invited the Bibel class over to the Parsonage on Friday nite for a Party. Each side came to see that the other didn't put anything Over on them, and Dad thought that was the time for the Preechur to line them all up and tell them what wicked Sinners they all was, and give them Fitz.

But he didn't. He just started them to playing old fashioned games like stage coach and twerl the platter, and wound up with a Peanut Race.

The Peepul hung back at first, but pretty soon they forgot their troubles and got to laughing, and Dad says the rest of the evening was one long Scream of Joy.

After the refreshments they all sang songs Not church songs, but Nellie Gray and Old Black Joe, and when they started Hoam they all went out in one gang insted of the way they came in. They all declared they had a awfully good time, and from then on the Bible class has run as slick as pie.

Ain't it queer?

Yours,
PUCKER.

Master, Use Me

By Rev. Elisha A. Hoffman

Send me forth, O blessed Master! where are souls in sorrow bowed,
Send me forth to homes of want and homes of care;
And with joy I will obey the call, and in thy blessed name
I will take the blessed light of the gospel
there.

There are lives that may be brightened by a word of hope and cheer,
There are souls with whom life's blessings I should share;
There are hearts that may be lightened of the burdens which they bear:
Let me take the blessed hope of the gospel
there.

There is work within the vineyard, there is service to be done;
There's a message of salvation to declare:
Send me forth to tell the story to the homes of sinful men;
Let me take the blessed Christ of the gospel there.

Oh, I would not be an idler in the vineyard of the Lord;
With the Christ the vineyard labor I would share;

Into hearts that know not Jesus
I would speak the saving Word:
Let me take the blessed joy of the gospel
there.

Call me forth to active service,
And my prompt response shall be.
"Here am I! Send me;"
I am ready to report for orders, Master. summon me,
And I'll go on any errand of love for thee.

A "Sick" Committee

By Rev. Ernest Bourner Allen, D. D.,
Contributing Editor

I happened to sit the other day with a group of workers who were planning for the future, and the president read a list of committees who were to serve for the work.
Among others mentioned was a "sick" committee! My mind immediately went off on a tangent, and I reflected upon the fact that a great many committees are "sick" today. Some of them are sick of their job, and do not attend to it. Some of them are a little feverish, and attend to it in a rather excited way. Some of them are subnormal, and pay very little attention to their task. Their names are in the printed list, but one hears nothing of them throughout the year. Some committees are "sick" because of indigestion; they are not clear as to their task, and have not taken time to digest the facts available regarding it. I have known committees which were seriously "sick" because they had lost their head; the chairman was not a leader, and the members felt that it was not their business to call the committee together and indicate the work. Upon considerable reflection I am prepared to affirm that there are a great many diseases which affect committees, and there seems to be no known cure for them. I wonder whether we could not get some Rockefeller Institute for Religious Diseases to put a group of experts at work upon these diseases to which committees are subject.

And, in any case, what sort of a committeeman are you? Do you understand the task which you are expected to help in working out? If every member of the committee was as much service as you are, would the work be accomplished? When you permit your name to be mentioned on a committee, is it simply because you like the publicity or because you really expect to do your share of the work?

Probably we shall never get beyond the stage where committees are needed. I have a friend who says that "life is just one committee meeting after another." Some committees waste a great deal of our time, and this is due to a number of causes, the inefficiency of the chairman, the lack of cooperation by members, the tardiness in attending meetings, or a failure to realize the importance of the task. There are societies and churches where fewer committees would render better service. Some committees are too large to get real action in a reasonable time.
Let us look over our committee assignments and tasks, and see whether we are "sick."—

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for April 18)

My Favorite Motto. Phill. 4:13

Betty and Mary Louise got out of school early one nice sunshiny afternoon. These little girls were close chums and had many good times together. On this particular afternoon, Mary Louise wanted Betty to go home with her, but Betty did not have her mother's permission, so she said she could not go. But Mary Louise insisted until Betty changed her mind and decided that she would go and play until the usual time for school to be out and then go home so that her mother would not worry about her. They soon were having stacks of fun playing "Hide and go Seek" and the first thing that Betty noticed outside of her fun, was the whistle at a factory which always blew at supper time. Then Mary Louise and the other children saw Betty start up the street as fast as she could run. When she reached home, her mother had just returned from hunting for her and was so worried that she was about to call for Betty's father. Betty was so sorry that she decided that it would be nicer to never play than to cause her mother so much trouble.

Betty's mother loved her little girl very much and she knew that her child was feeling very bad so she decided that they should have a talk together. This is the conclusion that they came to: They decided that since they loved each other so much they did not want to worry each other. Betty's mother read her one of our scripture verses that we have for this week, and explained it to her.
This verse is, "Love worketh no evil." This means that if we love people we will not want to hurt them in any way. If we love our neighbors we will not want to be unkind to them, but how much more important is our love for our mothers. Surely then we will not want to do anything to worry our mothers.
Children are apt to forget how much their mothers love them and how much they really love their mothers. After their talk, Betty told her mother that there was something that she was going to do that evening as soon as she got through with her lessons.
Guess what she did. She took a long piece of card board and worked with her pencil and ruler and paints for a long time. When she was through, she had a motto to hang on the wall of her room. Do you know what her motto said? This is what she had printed upon it in large letters. "Love worketh no evil."

Some of the other mottoes that are given in our Bible references for the week are very good, too. I wonder if each one of you, Juniors, has a motto which helps you to live in the way that is best. That sentence that the apostles spoke to their master, one day, "Teach us to pray", is a good motto. If we take this for our motto we will try to look to God to guide us. This means that we want to live as though we were talking to God. If we want our Heavenly Father to teach us to pray, we want him to teach us how to live as though he was our constant companion and we could talk all our problems over with him.
All of us who are Christians should have this motto and think about it whether we write it on our walls or not.

Another motto that is somewhat similar to the last one is, "Your Father Knoweth."
This means that our Heavenly Father knows the things we need, that he understands our troubles and our problems as well as understands when we are happy. If we feel in our hearts that God knows all about us and try to live so that he will be pleased, we will be living as though we were talking to him.

In Romans we find a motto that is very helpful. The great apostle and preacher, Paul, used this sentence. He said, "I am ready." When he used this sentence he was speaking of one particular job that he had to do. But, I think he lived as though that was one of his mottoes. If we decide to

A Letter and An Appeal from Argentina

Rio Cuarto, Argentina, Feb. 22, 1926.

Dear Members of the F. M. S. and the Evangelist family:

Once upon a time I read or heard the story of a man who decided his home was not all that he desired and made up his mind to sell it. So, placing it in the hands of a local realtor, he waited anxiously for developments. Then one day he read an advertisement which this realtor had inserted in the daily paper describing this very property, and he realized for the first time what a wonderful property his was, and straightway took it off the market. I know now who wrote that ad.—It was "That Office Secretary."

When I read her introduction of "that missionary of ours in South America" in the last number of the Evangelist I was almost "sold" myself. But wasn't it sweet of her to concede this missionary "one fault"? That makes two that I know of.

I'll leave it to you if it is quite fair to take excerpts from letters written to one's own private family, during one of the busiest weeks of the year, and make that seem the normal round. Certainly I have not spent a great deal of time holding my hands since coming here (except last winter, when they nearly froze stiff), but, far be it from me to say that I have "not had time to write to the Evangelist."

It has been my experience that we usually find time to do the things we consider most necessary or the things we most want to do. I can not honestly say I have ever craved the chance to write things for publication. It is so easy to make things seem what they really are not, and beside it seems a sort of one-sided affair anyway and I never did like things with just one side.

"That O. S." speaks of "our missionary" and I like that, but I am almost inclined to think that another sign of her imagination. Perhaps she can explain just why all the mail should travel northward, when the same steamers that carry letters northward would bring some the other direction just as cheaply. You see this missionary does not have as nice a disposition as some of those that have been on the field for several years without ever receiving any sign that they are your missionaries except the monthly pay envelope, and the most heartless of corporations does that well by its employees. I have yet to see even Brother Yoder so busy that he does not have time to read the letters that come in the U. S. mail within an hour of their arrival.

I must qualify one of my remarks, for with the pay envelope almost always comes a fine letter from the Financial Secretary of the Board. I suppose he thus represents all the churches, for I find, on asking some questions, that the Sickels, who have been here for 6 years, and the Yoders, who have been here for 16 years have never had even so much as a Christmas greeting card from but one or two churches aside from their "home" churches. "Brethren, these things ought not so to be."

I hope, dear "O. S.", to see this missionary business more of a family affair. If we could feel that the whole brotherhood is back of us just as our home churches are, it would put new enthusiasm into our work and we could all rejoice together. But don't leave that all to our imagination, or we shall have to bring "That O. S." down here. We have a little room here in Rio Cuarto that we shall be glad to turn over as a Sky Parlor any time.

Now for the real reason for this letter. In the last mail I received a letter from a little girl, telling of the Junior Mission Study Class to which she belongs, and she says: "We thought you could tell us of some little fund that we could support or help support with our offerings"; and because I believe there are others that may be wondering the same thing I am answering Lea Belle's query through the Evangelist.

Two of our native pastors, fine, consecrated men, have large families, one has 7, the other has 8 children. You pay these men $65 a month and their rent. So far as I know of 3 things that are cheaper here than at home; meat, milk, and violin strings. To my knowledge everything else is as high, many things 25, 50 or 100% higher, cotton goods being well up on the list.

The Istuetas have 4 children of school age, the 3 oldest are girls. Now, providing books and other school equipment, besides suitable clothing, is no small matter and though I know that they live with the strictest economy, Brother Istucta says he is finding it impossible to keep from running a little behind each month. He does not complain, says the Lord has promised to supply the need and he is trusting him to do it.

The only alternative is to take these little girls, the oldest nearly 13, and send them out to service, and God pity the poor little servant children of the Argentine!. My heart aches every time I see one of them, for so often they are veritable little slaves, yes, even little "white slaves."

The Sotolas' oldest are boys, and as long as they have work they pay their own way through night school. Even at that they have a hard time getting along. There are 2 girls of school age, Lydia and Marta. At this writing Lydia is very ill, and you can guess that if it is hard to manage ordinary expenses, how it must be when sickness comes.

I believe that there are Sunday school classes, Endeavor Societies, Primary Departments, and individuals, that will be glad to have a part in keeping these "little ones" in their own happy homes, getting such education as is possible, fitting them for useful lives and for service later. 10 pesos ($4) a month will do it nicely. Will you help? To those who will undertake this responsibility for a year, we shall see that you receive a picture of your child, and bright little youngsters they are.

May I be your missionary? I'd love to be. For myself, I hope never to have to ask for a single penny, but I do covet your interest, your fellowship, most of all, your prayers for it is not always an easy life, and in spite of the years that are piling up, even if not weighing very heavily, this missionary often feels very much like a little girl a long, long way from her home and her daddy.

Yours (?) in the Master's Service,
 JOHANNA NIELSEN.

NOTE—Miss Nielsen sent the above letter to me as the treasurer of the Foreign Board for my approval before its publication. The matter of furnishing, or approving the furnishing of some sort of extra support to the children of the native South American missionaries will be placed before the Foreign Board at its next meeting, for it is evident from what we know, that something must be done along this line. With the present rate of income for this work, the Board does not feel that it can increase the present allowance for these native pastors. However, in the meantime, we await some action by the Board, any one who cares to answer the appeal of Miss Nielsen, and render support for a year for some of these children of the native pastors, may send the money therefor to me as Treasurer, stating just what you wish done, and we will see that Miss Nielsen gets it to supply where she deems the need to be greatest, and we will then have her put you in touch with "your child" in South America. You, or your Society, or your church, will be credited with such an offering just as you are with all other offerings to the foreign work.

GOOD MISSIONARY THOUGHTS

Selected by Dorrice Pressly

A Missionary Mother's Prayer

If the soul of my baby had happened to stray,
 And in coming from heaven had lost the right way,

Why, it might have been born under India's skies,

Or in Africa's jungles opened its eyes.

O Savior, who lovest the children of men,

What strong mother arms would have shielded it then,

Kept its wee, toddling feet ever safe and secure,

And the heart of my treasure unsullied and pure?

Would she take the dear toddler to rest on her knee,

And teach the dear story that "Jesus loves me?"

Oh, I pray, as my babe to my bosom I take,
 Heaven bless all the children for my baby's sake!

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Last Saturday I met Brothers Bell and Bowman at Washington C. H., to hear the will of the late Brother Jesse Eyeman construed. It had been upheld and only needed interpretation by the court. This was done in our hearing and everything relating to the College and church interests met with our approval so that the various interests will get in time what Brother Eyeman had in mind for them. The court seemed perfectly fair to all the various beneficiaries.

I also had a conference with Dr. Bell relative to the canvass and he is almost ready to take the field. I am expecting him here the week of the 12th for final work here before he leaves for the field work.

The Girls' Glee Club expects to make the following itinerary: Tuesday, April 20, New Lebanon, followed by West Alexandria on Wednesday, Gratis on Thursday, and Dayton on Friday. They will also appear before several high schools and a Luncheon club at Columbus.

Professor McClain spent the week before Easter with our church at Canton.

Miss Helen Price, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. M. D. Price, of Nappanee, Indiana, was recently elected May Queen for this year. Miss Edna Walters of Canton was May Queen last year and Miss Hattie Cope, now of Africa, the year before last.

Mrs. Pendergast, of Cleveland, whose daughter Margaret, is here in school this year, recently made a gift of $100.00 to the Girls' Chapel fund.

Walter Elliot of California, was recently elected Y. M. C. A. president for the coming year.

Miss Edith Garber was elected president of the Y. W. C. A. for the coming year.

Several hundred books were recently received from the library of Brother W. S. Young, late of California. The College acknowledges these with thanks.

FROM ILLINOIS TO A HOOSIER CIRCUIT

It has been some time since our last report to the Evangelist but the silence has been a busy one in the Lord's work. We closed a three years' pastorate at Milledgeville, Illinois, on October 1st. We held an all-day service on September 27th with a sermon in the morning and a farewell program in the afternoon. It was a day of unity and fellowship together. The church at Milledgeville knows how to show their appreciation to their pastor and a crowd was there to bid us God-speed. Brother Cone, the new pastor, was with us to get acquainted and to enjoy the hospitality of the people whom he shall serve. May the blessing of God rest on pastor and people in their work together.

When we left Milledgeville on Monday morning many were there to help us get started on our way and to bid us good-bye.

We arrived in Chicago and enjoyed a few days of city life and then with some short visits on the way, made our way to Huntington, Indiana to state conference, where we enjoyed a fine conference and met with old friends and some we had served as pastor in former years. We are serving at present four Indiana churches, County Line one Sunday each month, New Enterprise one Sunday, Lapaz two Sundays and Teegarden on the Sundays I am at Lapaz, preaching to them in the afternoon. We have held a revival meeting in each of these churches and there is still much to be done.

County Line

We began our meeting at County Line on November 1st. We had been told prior to our coming here that this church was dead but we found it a rather lively corpse. We witnessed old time crowds and the results were five accessions to the church. Brother and Sister B. H. Flora were with us one night and the Methodist church at Lakeville came in a body one night with their pastor. We made our home with Brother and Sister Charles Gillis and were entertained in many other homes. We found here a bunch of loyal Brethren.

New Enterprise

We began our meeting here on December 27th with the thermometer registering 10 below zero. There were 27 present in the morning service, some walked and some who could get their cars started drove, but the evening was a little warmer and the meeting started off with Brother Harley Zumbaugh leading the song service. The people were ready and rallied to the work, we were all busy working and praying in our secret closets and a revival of the church and the saving of sinners was the result. Nine have been received into the church, 8 by baptism and one by letter. Four are awaiting baptism in the river. The unusual feature of this meeting was that eleven were adult men, one boy about 12 years making 12 men.

We had fine crowds all through the meeting in spite of the weather. Brother George Swihart and family were with us several nights, also his congregation from Center Chapel. Brother Ora Lemert and the Roann church were in several services, also some from Huntington. We were glad for the spirit of these Brethren.

The New Enterprise church has taken on new life, they have organized a prayer meeting and have an attendance of 19 to 25.

Our home here was with Brother and Sister Horace Merritt and we were well taken care of. Many other homes were visited here also. The church has an active Sunday school, also a loyal W. M. S.

Lapaz

We began a two weeks' meeting here on January 17th, Brother Zumbaugh conducting the music. The crowds were all we could expect and we had a very good meeting here. We found a loyal people to work with, not very many families but they are in earnest. The work here is handicapped because of a controversy in regard to the church building but conditions are improving. The Sunday school has taken on new life. We have organized an orchestra composed of young people. They have played for church services in the evening, too, the last two Sundays. The immediate results of the meeting were two accessions. Our home at Brother Ben Smith's was much appreciated, also the entertainment in all of the homes.

Teegarden

Our next meeting was at Teegarden. Lapaz and County Line were kind enough to loan their pastor for the Sunday evening services. They will receive a blessing for showing this spirit.

We had a good meeting here and good crowds in spite of the weather. The church has a Sunday school and Christian Endeavor so they were preparing for the work. The W. M. S. is also active and doing good work. The folks from North Liberty, Lapaz and County Line were in attendance many times also.

We stayed at the home of Sister Lillie Peters, a very fine place and we called at every home in Teegarden. Results, three accessions and the future will show the rest. They are organizing a prayer meeting. This church has already supplied four recruits to the ministry.

We are enjoying our work, although it has meant much driving. Three Sunday mornings 42 miles to Sunday school and 27 miles the other Sunday of the month. We have decided that distance will not keep one from being on time if they have a mind to go.

We wish to recommend Brother Harley Zumbaugh to those who can use him. He helped with three of our meetings and is a fine Christian leader, always congenial and an efficient leader in song. His inspiring messages in song prepare the people for the sermon.

Pray for us, Brethren, as we go on in our future work at these places.

D. A. C. TEETER.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Through the years that this Mission has been in existence, there were many requests for a place where children, who had been left orphans through some circumstance, might be kept. Parents, i. e., one parent, the other dead, would ask for the privilege of leaving their children with us, they willing to pay for the keeping of the same. Others asked for the keeping of the children, with no funds to meet the needs of the child. Often were we pained to simply say that we could do nothing for them, that the boarding part of our work was only for the older ones who could take care of themselves. Other places similar to this one were building orphanages. Indeed, that was one of the burdens that the late Dr. Guerrant carried in his work. Today there stand many places which have been made possible through the prayer and work of that splendid man.

For such a building and place here we often prayed. It was made a matter for special prayer. About six years ago, from parties that we never knew anything about, came a letter. Imagine our feelings when on opening this letter, we found it to be from Brother and Sister Wheeler of Nickerson, Kansas. In this letter they stated that they wanted to will their property to Riverside Institute, for the purpose of helping the children of the mountains, and asked for directions for the willing of the same. They had no children. Directions were given as requested.

Brother John W. Wheeler and his wife, Sarah Wheeler, have now passed on to Glory. Below we quote from the copy of the will they left, this being an official copy of the same:

"THIRD, at the death of my said wife, Sarah Wheeler, I give, devise, and bequeath to the Riverside Institute of Lost Creek, Kentucky, operated and controlled by the Missionary Board of the Brethren church, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois, all of my property, real and personal, wheresoever situated, the proceeds of the same to be used for the erection of a home for homeless children at Lost Creek, Kentucky, under the supervision of the Board of Control of Riverside Institute, or as much thereof as the managers of said Board may deem necessary for the accommodation of homeless children, and the residue, if any, used as a fund to support a matron to care for the home, which, if deemed advisable by the Board of Control, shall be named the John and Sarah Wheeler Home, the said Missionary Board of the Brethren church to have and to hold the same for the use and purposes herein set out, to it and its successors use and benefit forever." The property amounts to somewhere between $5,000 and $9,000.

Thus our God answers prayer. Pray for the work that it may be wholly guided by the hand of the Lord, and that Satan shall not get the advantage.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

have for our motto, "I am ready", then, whenever there is an opportunity to do something, to take a part in Christian Endeavor, to help with some work, or to be kind to someone we can use our motto to reply with. I think that it would be very nice to resolve that whenever it is at all possible and we are asked to do some deed we will answer, "I am ready."

The motto in Philippians that is the topic for our next Christian Endeavor meetings prepares us to do hard things. If our motto be, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me", we will be willing to tackle big jobs and will understand that Christ will guide us. I think this motto is one of the nicest ones we have. If we take this for our motto we will be willing to say, "I am ready" and we will have faith in Christ to guide us in our work.

I think that all of us who are Christian Endeavorers should have a motto or maybe several mottoes by which we live. Let's pick some good mottoes that will help us to live as we should.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

To the Evangelist readers:

It has been some months since we wrote you from Oakville, Indiana, church, but our silence did not mean that we were idle or dead, for we have been very much alive. We received two into the church in February; and the interest in all the organizations of the church is alive and all are striving to make headway. In these days this is sometimes slow business, but we must keep on until the Lord comes.

Now we have closed our work with the Oakville Brethren after three years and seven months of very busy work. In this time we have taken 81 members into the church, helped them to build a nice new church house and the nicest part of that is that it is all paid for. This leaves Oakville with a nice new parsonage, new church with good equipment and everything in good running order, with street light thrown in. For

6. Acts 2:38. "For the remission of sin", and the "gift of the Holy Ghost."
7. 1 Peter 3:19-21. Saved, and "the answer of a good conscience."

It would seem strange, indeed, after all of these Scriptures, and many more not given, that Christian baptism is of so little importance in the sight of God as to have no place in the salvation of the soul. The first public act of Christ was his baptism, and the last command he gave to his disciples was to baptize. How do we know how much importance is attached to this sacred rite by the Lord of glory? It is safe to obey him, and leave the results with him.

Baptizo is the Greek word for Immerse.

Rantizo is the Greek word for Sprinkle.

Cheo is the Greek word for Pour.

Rantizo, or cheo, are never used in the New Testament to indicate the sacred rite of baptism. Baptizo, with its derivations, is always used. Here is what a few of the scholars say about the meaning of the word:

Thayer,—"As to the meaning of baptizo, all reputable lexicographers are now agreed that its primary meaning is 'to immerse', etc."

Prof. Humphreys of the University of Virginia,—"There is no standard Greek-English lexicon that gives sprinkle or pour as meanings of baptizo."

Prof. Tyler of Amherst College,—"I do not know of any good lexicon which gives sprinkle as a rendering of baptizo."

Prof. Flagg of Cornell University,—"I know of no lexicon which gives the meaning you speak of (sprinkle or pour) for baptizo, not even the lexicon of the Roman and Byzantine periods of Prof. E. A. Sophocles."

Likewise, scholars have scarcely a difference of opinion on the meaning of Romans 6:4, and Colossians 2:12.

Dr. Barnes (Presbyterian) says: "It is altogether probable that the apostle in this place had allusion to the custom of baptizing by immersion." Notes on Romans. Bloomfield (Episcopalian):

"There is a plain allusion to the ancient custom of baptism by immersion." Greek Testament with English Notes.

Wesley (Methodist): "We are buried with him. Alluding to the ancient manner of baptizing by immersion." Notes.

Conybeare and Howson (Episcopalians): "This passage can not be understood unless it be borne in mind that the primitive baptism was by immersion." Life and Epistles of St. Paul.

Lange (Lutheran): "Buried in death; an oxymoron, according to which burial precedes and death follows, as is illustrated in the immersion into the path of baptism." Commentary on Romans.

been made in the first six years of constitutional national prohibition than has ever been known in connection with any similar effort in enforcement of any other equally important federal constitutional provision in the history of the Republic.

"In fact the first great federal enforcement problem came in what was known as the 'Whiskey Rebellion' arising from the whiskey trade's refusal to submit to federal taxation and their questioning of the right of control by the national government. This 'Whiskey Rebellion' was suppressed by the federal government when that government was only in swaddling clothes.

"The next great problem of federal enforcement was the enforcement of the laws against piracy. The history of that effort to enforce those laws along the Atlantic and the Gulf coasts and on the high seas covers twenty-five years of difficult and trying efforts at criminal hunting and at the end of which, however, the government was successful.

"The next enforcement problem was deal-trade laws forbidding importation of African slaves, adopted after 1808. To solve that problem required the enactment of a number of laws, the making of international treaties with most of the principal foreign countries, a long, hard diplomatic crusade on the part of government officials, especially with European governments, and a most persistent and determined effort on the part of the federal government covering a period of more than forty years, to obtain adequate enforcement.

"The next enforcement problem was dealing with the 'law abiding' liquor interests during the administration of President Grant when one of the most appalling revelations of corruption in the federal government was made involving the great whisky interests of the United States and men high in political life at Washington reaching even into the President's official family.

"Following that, the next great problem of federal enforcement was that concerning the anti-lottery law. It will be remembered that undertaking required governmental efforts for an entire generation.

"Then followed the enforcement of the exclusion laws with respect especially to Asiatics. It is a significant fact that even today one of the government's most serious problems is that of dealing with the constant smuggling of aliens across the Canadian and Mexican borders.

"The problems of the enforcement of the prohibition laws today are not greater than the problems which have been faced repeatedly by the federal government in the enforcement of laws. Time may be required but there can be no question as to the ultimate outcome. The American nation, having once 'put its hand to the plow', is not in the habit of turning back."

ANNOUNCEMENTS

DEDICATION SERVICE

This is to announce the dedication services of the new house of worship of the Berlin congregation of Berlin, Pennsylvania, Sunday, April 25, 1926. There will be three services, morning, afternoon and evening. Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana will be the speaker of the day. Brother Beachler will continue with us for three evenings, after which Dr. B. T. Burnworth of Ashland, Ohio, will conduct a series of evangelistic meetings.

The Berlin congregation hopes to make this one of the greatest days of its history. A cordial invitation is extended to you to come to this historical place and enjoy the services of the day with us. Here Brethrenism may be said to have been founded. You may be possessed with a desire to have a part in the erection of a modern church at this historic spot. If you cannot be present and wish to send a dedicatory gift it will be highly appreciated. Contributions may be sent to the writer.

The Tract Still Has Power

The question has been raised whether the tract has not lost its appeal. Yet the American Tract Society is doing a larger business than ever. A tract is a humble messenger, blowing no horn, but carrying on a quiet, unobtrusive and wholesome propaganda; it falls silently into thousands of hearts as softly as leaves in the forest. But as leaves fertilize the soil and spring up in richer vegetation, so these quiet, unassertive bits of literature gain access to many minds which might resist a bolder approach.

Is not the Bible itself simply a bundle of tracts? It is bound up as one volume, but it falls apart into sixty-six pieces of literature, every one of which, like a tract, was produced for a special practical purpose. When God would send a revelation to the world for the salvation of men he scattered a magnificent handful of tracts on the winds of the centuries; they fell upon the earth as leaves for the healing of the nations. These Scriptures are now being published in whole or in parts in nearly eight hundred languages; they are read in their own speech by the people of every race and tribe and tongue. Yes, the tract still has its day.—The Continent.

The BRETAREN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

The Parted Shadow

SUDDENLY we come face to face with Christ, and it is as if the sword of God had cleft the clouds and let light in upon our darkness, as if the shadows departed and the reality were before our eyes. Here is the one life and death in which the sacrificial principle was fully accepted and embodied. We may not separate his life too much from his death: all through the long years of obedience he was giving himself. We may not separate his death too much from his life: his death was the evening sacrifice of a day which had been sacrificial since its sunrise. That was what God received from him: that was what he had come to offer on behalf of humanity.

Seeing Jesus

Being just a little way this side of Easter our minds are still fresh on the evidences of the resurrection. It is well that we have this annual occasion on which to review the many indubitable proofs of the actuality of this most stupendous miracle and most faithfully attested event of all history. By this means many a soul who has become disturbed by the ever-present criticisms, doubts and unreality of religious professions has received re-assurance and satisfaction. But there is one evidence that has been supremely effective and convincing and without which all others have been of little worth, and that is a vision of the risen Lord himself. That, we remember, was what convinced the disciples who had gathered in the upper room on the night of the first Easter; Jesus' sudden appearance in their midst dispelled their gloom and despair. That was what caused Thomas a week later to cast away all doubt; when he saw Jesus it was enough, he did not wait to examine the wounded hands and side, he cried out in joyous assurance, "My Lord and my God." And seeing Jesus continues to be the most convincing and satisfying testimony of the resurrection of him who came declaring himself to be the Son of God and Savior of the world.

And Jesus has not ceased to show himself unto his people. To those who have eyes to discern spiritual things he is still revealing himself in many and wonderful ways, if not with the same physical manifestation, yet with just as much certainty and reality as during those forty days immediately following the resurrection. Seeing Jesus and being keenly conscious of his overshadowing presence and ever-sufficient power is the daily privilege of every soul who will look unto him in faith. He is not far away and unapproachable, but is a vital, living presence, whose life is in us, whose love is over us and whose power ever seeks to be exercised through us. And it is the constant realization of this fact and the demonstration of the genuineness of such an experience that is the most powerful and incontrovertible evidence both of the resurrection and of the divinity of our Lord.

Giovanni Papini, whose widely circulated "Life of Christ" caused us to think of him as a reverent scholar, but whose later publication showed him to be a Catholic of the bigoted, intolerant type, has recently announced that he has unearthed "positive proof of the divinity of Christ" and will publish this conclusive evidence in the near future. An exchange says, "We do not know what sort of evidence Papini thinks he has unearthed, but doubtless it will be something theatrical in his accustomed manner." It is not likely that he will give us anything new bearing upon the divinity of Christ; we need nothing new. We already have "positive proof", as certain as anything can be, in the sensing of the living, active presence of the Son of God in the lives of men and in the affairs of the world today. And another has said, "The only evidence which will ever amount to 'positive proof' of the divinity of Jesus and of his resurrection is a life which has experienced his presence and power." No archaeologist or historian will ever be able to unearth any more positive or convincing proof of the living reality of Jesus Christ than that which is "unearthed" and is daily manifest to all who rejoice in his saving and keeping power. And nothing is more important than that during these post-Easter days our consciousness of his living personality shall be more keenly experienced, that we shall feel his power afresh in our lives and shall be newly convinced that he lives and moves among men.

Seeing Jesus will make religion a real and vital factor in daily life, and that is the crying need of Christendom. Everywhere men are aware of it and are calling for it. The world is troubled with many ills, and many and divers remedies are being recommended, but more and more the repeated failure of every substitute is driving men to a new reliance on a genuine application of the religion of Jesus Christ. This has proven effective wherever tried and the men of clearest vision and keenest soul are telling us that the sooner we place full dependence on this remedy and really give it a trial in all the relations of life, the sooner will relief come to the distressed conditions which prevail in the world today. In fact, there is no other cure, they are telling us, for the ills that are afflicting the social, political and business as well as the religious life of our day than the principles and spirit taught and exemplified by the Lord Jesus. It is to the discredit of organized religion that it has been so ineffective and to the shame of the professors of religion that their influence has so belied their profession. Christianity has been too much diluted to have exercised the savoring influence that might rightly have been expected of it. There has been too much sham and unreality in the lives of Christian people for them to have been the clear and shining light of the world that they were divinely authorized to be. They have not kept their eyes upon the great Light of the world from whom all human lights receive their brightness. Jesus has become dim and indistinct, a vague, indefinite personage of history that holds something of interest and attractiveness but little of positive power and directing influence. We are daily in need of something that will intensify the reality of his person and make him a positive and moving power in our lives. Nothing will do that like a clear vision of Jesus Christ.

Seeing Jesus will make us more aggressive and zealous in evangelizing the world and in winning souls for the Kingdom and building them up in the knowledge and grace of God. Seeing Jesus brings us more in line with his vision and in harmony with his compassionate attitude toward the world. And once we understand the sympathetic beat of his loving heart for sinful men, we are moved to intercession and service in their behalf. Besides we cannot see him without hearing him say, as he said to the disciples to whom he appeared on the first night after his resurrection, "as the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." We cannot behold the Lord high and lifted up in the glory of his exalted life without bearing the divinely imposed responsibility, "Ye are witnesses of these things." Nor will we want to, for to behold him is to love him, and the love of Christ will constrain us to do our utmost to bear his message to the ends of the earth, to win souls unto his name, and to build up his kingdom by every means possible at home and abroad.

Seeing Jesus will make spiritual verities more real and highly prized and the fellowship of the saints will become very precious and earnestly sought. The great truths of the Gospel are so little appreciated because we have so little of the mind of Christ. We are inclined to be ill at ease in an intensely spiritual atmosphere because we share so much the spirit of the world. We shrink from a contemplation of the future and what it holds in store because it is all so strange and unreal; we are so little in touch with Christ and have cultivated so slight an appreciation of the foretaste of heaven which all the children of God may enjoy here and now, that the future is little understood or coveted. He who lives so, lives far below his privileges, and denies himself the life that is spiritually enriched and the joy that is full and abundant.

Burbank is Dead

It sounds harsh to put it so baldly, and yet in view of his own late assertions which grated so cruelly upon the ears of the godly people of America, it is difficult to put the announcement of his death in gentle and consoling terms. We could wish it had been different, that we had not heard him close heaven's door with such a bang in his own face, and that he had left us at least some glimmer of hope regarding his eternal welfare to which we might cling. But the newspapers say, "As his life ebbed away he did not falter in his convictions." He was such a great and noble man in many respects that the world had a right to expect more of him than such bold assertions of disbelief in God and a life after death. This makes the sorrow of the world doubly painful, because we sorrow as those who have no hope, if he spoke the sincere convictions of his heart.

Aside from this unfortunate side of his life, Burbank was one of the greatest benefactors of this generation. His contribution was to the race and not to a favored few, nor did he enrich himself by his wonderful plant-life developments. One of his most noted accomplishments was the development of the world-famous Burbank potato, for which at the time he received neither fame nor fortune. This potato has spread to the ends of the earth and is said to have exerted a greater influence on the food supply of mankind than any other food plant. His next important achievement, and which first brought him fame, was the spineless cactus, by which this worthless growth of the desert was transformed into a valuable forage and fruiting plant. He also gave to the world several fine varieties of spineless blackberries developed from a worthless wild variety; a large variety of rhubarb with stalks the size of a man's wrist developed from the stems the size of a lead pencil; a perfect canner's pea which matures its crop, retains its uniformity and ripens at the same time. Not only so, but flowers, fruits, grasses, grains and orchard and forest trees were greatly improved and given to the world in new usefulness through months and years of painstaking experimentation. It is said that he made more than 100,000 experiments, involving the planting, polination, observation and propagation or destruction of more than 1,000,000,000 individual vegetable growths. He selected from this vast number, however, only 385 which he recommended as useful to humanity.

So remarkable has been his success with plants that he has been called the "plant wizard." His name will be immortal in connection with plant culture. But his name will also be a constant reminder that one may gain the respect and admiration of the world and yet lose his own soul. Men will long continue to marvel at his genius for changing the nature and developing the life of plants, but they will also, as they give thought to the higher and abiding things of life, wonder still more that he who understood so well God's laws for the culture of plants could have failed so completely to discover God, or to understand his laws, for the culture and development of the soul.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Our readers will be interested in the good letter we are passing on to them from the Long Beach, California, church calendar, written by Miss Mary L. Emmert, of our African Mission.

The church at Berne, Indiana, rejoices in the recent visit of some college students, one of which was Brother E. J. Rohart, who conducted a week of meetings, also the visit of Brother M. A. Stuckey. This church maintains its characteristic missionary zeal by making an offering on Easter Sunday of $800.

Brother O. C. Starn, General Conference Secretary, explains this week that the designation "Uncertain List" in the Brethren annual, which has caused some "uncertainty" as to its meaning, has reference merely to the address of ministers thus classified, and no reflection on their standing in any way.

Brother A. E. Thomas is engaged in union evangelistic work and reports two campaigns recently held in Pennsylvania, one at Pitts-town when 36 responded to the invitation, part of whom Brother Thomas baptized by triune immersion, and another at Marion Center, where Rev. J. A. McInturff is pastor of one of the cooperating churches, and where 65 took a stand for Christ.

We can think of few things more worth while remembering just now than one sentence which Miss Alice B. Longaker repeats in her letter this week, which is, "The Lord who notes the sparrow's fall will certainly note every mis-spent dollar." If the Lord could only get a tithe of our mis-spent dollars and we should keep the rest, I doubt not that neither he nor we would be suffering from lack of funds.

Brother L. G. Wood states that the work at Fort Scott, Kansas, is setting its face forward, with the various departments in an encouraging condition. A two-weeks' meeting was held preceding Easter, during which time the pastor sought to more thoroughly indoctrinate his people. We are wondering if this is not a thing to which our pastors generally ought to give more attention.

We appreciate the good letter from Brother T. C. Lyon, who is now established as pastor at Lydia, Maryland, where the good people have given him a warm welcome, and expressed their good will in a very substantial way. That is a splendid thing for churches to do occasionally, it does the members good as well as the pastor. Brother Lyon will be remembered as the efficient writer of Christian Endeavor notes in "The Angelus."

The secretary of the Superannuated Minister's Fund, J. J. Wolfe, of North Manchester, gives a report of receipts that is most encouraging taken as a whole, and some individual gifts are quite commendable, while some, well, it may be that additional gifts are yet to come. Brother Wolfe requests us to say that he would appreciate a prompt response on the part of any who contemplate sending in an offering for this cause, and surely every church and individual member will want to have some part in it.

Brethren W. C. Benshoff the evangelist and Lester V. King the pastor, engaged in a very successful evangelistic campaign at New Lebanon, Ohio, where, a total of 35 will be added to the membership as a result. The pastor and his people made splendid preparation for the campaign, which is always an important factor in success. The evangelist, a former pastor of this church, was greatly appreciated for his faithful and convincing proclamation of the Word. Brother King and wife are to be congratulated on the arrival in their home on March 19th of their second pair of twins—two little princesses.

Dr. C. F. Yoder writes concerning the work in South America, and his remarks about Sunday carnivals, elections, drunkenness and other handicaps makes us appreciate our own United States, which with all its faults and imperfections is far ahead of the South American countries in these respects. We do not appreciate Prohibition in this country as we ought; we are so busy complaining about the leaks that we do not realize how prohibitive the regime is. The extreme poverty of the great masses and their miserably cramped home conditions on the one hand and the aristocratic, exclusive attitude of the wealthy and educated classes on the other hand works a hindrance to the advance of the Gospel that it will take long to overcome.

A bill has been introduced into Congress to secure for Washington City and the District of Columbia what they do not have—a Sabbath law. A number of public hearings have been held by the Sub-Judiciary Committee of the District of Columbia and it is reported that hundreds crowded into the large room where the hearings were held. Opponents of the bill were the Seventh Day Adventists, the Religious Liberty Association, the Anti-Blue Law League of America, some labor associations, representatives of theatrical and movie interests and others. The opposition was led by the Seventh Day Adventists who attended the hearings in great numbers and who have been untiring in their efforts throughout the country to flood Congress with petitions against the bill. Among those advocating the passages of the bill are the following: the Lord's Day Alliance of the U. S., officially representing eleven of the leading Protestant denominations of America; the W. C. T. U.; Boy Scouts of America; Federation of Churches of Washington, D. C.; Barber's Union; and Bible Classes. This is a matter in which Christian people throughout the nation should be interested, and remember that a flood of petitions from his constituents will make a difference with any Congressman.

Damascus and Syria

By Herbert H. Tay

It was a beautiful day for the trip. The azure sky was flecked by a few fleecy clouds, and a gentle breeze was blowing in from the blue Mediterranean. It was in the spring of the year, when all nature was springing to new life after the sleep of winter, and the by-ways were blooming with verdant loveliness.

We began our trip into Syria, from Haifa, the passenger seaport of Palestine, a sizeable village nestled at the base of historic old Mount Carmel. We were delayed over two hours at the start because of native procrastination and eupidity, but any feeling of resentment were quickly forgotten, as we began our trip. Brother Kent and I were two of eight persons, in a seven passenger Buick automobile. This is not counting the cat, hothouse plants, and other heterogeneous paraphernalia carried by, and adhering to the other members of the party. Speaking of this variegated crowd, compels me to digress somewhat to mention an incident that "takes the cake" as far as the variety of occupants of an automobile is concerned. We had become accustomed to riding in trains, automobiles and carriages with all sorts of human, animal, and entomological companions, but we were hardly prepared for the shock which we received while returning from a trip to Hebron. We were getting along very well with four of us in a five passenger Dodge, when the driver stopped at some sort of "Ain" to take on two men, two chickens, a basket of eggs, and a sheep. We spent the rest of the trip sitting on our imagination, and trying to decide whether we were riding in an automobile, a cattle car, or traveling by parcel post.

But as I was saying when I was interrupted, it was a beautiful day for the trip, and we enjoyed every moment of it. The distance between Haifa and Beirut, the metropolis of the Syrian seacoast, is about one hundred and ten miles, and we negotiated it in six hours, including about a dozen stops, nine of which were for customs, passports, auto passes, etc. The principal points of interest on this trip were the cities of Tyre and Sidon. In passing Tyre, we saw the causeway built by Alexander the Great when he captured the Island city, and notices many of the stones of the old mainland city which were used in constructing it. The city on the mainland has entirely disappeared, while the city on the island is only partly rebuilt. Much of the site of the old city is used as a place to spread fishing nets upon the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea. Sidon is situated in a small, flat valley, at the mouth of a perennial stream. It is surrounded by luxurious groves of a perennial loquats, and mulberries. The remains of the old harbor of Sidon can still be seen, and they recall to our minds, the glories of that mighty city in ancient times.

The city of Beirut, though of little historical importance to the Bible student, is nevertheless the principal seaport of Syria. It has a population of about 160,000, of which two-thirds is Christian. The point of interest to the American, is the American College, which occupies the best site in the city. It is upon a headland that juts out into the sea, and which rises to a height of about five hundred feet. It affords an excellent view of the city, harbor, and sea. Its grounds comprise several hundred acres of land, and it has a score or more buildings which are most modern in construction and equipment. We had a most pleasant visit here with Prof. Day, with whom we traveled on our expedition to the Cities of the Plain.

There is one point of interest in this vicinity, especially to archaeologists and historians. Just a few miles up the coast from Beirut, is the mouth of the Nahr el Kelb, or "Dog River." At this point the rugged mountains rise directly from the sea, and the only passage for a large company of men, is around the face of a rocky promontory directly above the sea. Along this road swept the armies of the mighty empires of the past. The hordes of Babylon, Assyria, Egypt, Greece and Rome all passed that way. Roadways for these armies have been cut in the solid rock, and the ruts worn by the passing of thousands of chariots are still plainly visible in the rocky roadway. But most important of all, are the inscriptions.

It seems that every conquering monarch who passed this way, returning from a victorious military campaign, had the details of that campaign inscribed as an everlasting memorial, in the solid rock at this promontory. Here we find panels carved in the rock, bearing the inscriptions of Shalmaneser, Tiglath-Pileser, Sennacherib, Rameses the Great, Marcus Aurelius Antoninus Pius, and even the British and French expeditions of the late war. One stands here with the history of almost four millenniums looking down upon him, and the experience is one not soon to be forgotten.

We cannot stop to describe the trip to Baalbek, that mighty temple of antiquity, nor the trip across the beautiful Lebanon. We must hasten on to Damascus, the stronghold of Mohammedanism, and largest city of Syria.

Damascus has been called the "Pearl of the East." If we consider this to be a description of its natural beauty it is most appropriate. One may walk for miles along quiet lanes beneath the overshadowing limbs of walnut trees, and between fields of verdant clover. Everywhere is the sound of water. It runs, clear and sparkling along almost every byway. The River Abana, which runs through the entire city is as clear when it emerges as when it enters. When standing upon the hill back of the Kurd section of the city, and looking out over Damascus, it seems to be an enormous sapphire in a setting of emerald. No wonder that Mohammed, when viewing Damascus from the arid desert with which it is surrounded, refused to enter, saying, "Man has but one Paradise, and that is above." No more appealing picture of Paradise could be painted for the Arab of the dry, hot desert, than that of a place where there is an abundance of water, cool shade, and where one can rest and be refreshed to his heart's desire. This is a picture of Damascus.

Aside from the beautiful surroundings of Damascus, the visitor is also interested in the Bazaars. One cannot think of Damascus, without thinking of the Bazaars. They are its greatest asset and advertising feature. We can travel hour after hour through dusky, covered streets, lined with little shops. It seems that those of the same trade keep together, for one may walk for a considerable distance through a street, the shops along which are occupied exclusively by coppersmiths. Along another street one sees nothing but workers in leather, and on still another, we find the Bazaar of the Silk Merchants. Practically every trade of the Orient is represented here, and one may get a comprehensive view of Eastern life and work, simply by walking through the Bazaars.

While the population of Beirut is largely Christian, the population of Damascus is just the opposite. Fully four-fifths of the people here are Moslems. Damascus is the stronghold of Mohammedanism. Fanaticism reigns supreme. The Moslems are jealous of their city, and this characteristic has led to the resentment of foreign interference, which no doubt was largely responsible for the recent difficulties here. There are over three hundred mosques in the city. Chief among them is the Omaiide Mosque. Aside from being one of the largest mosques in the Mohammedan world, it is also one of the most important—from the viewpoint of the Mohammedan. One can enter at any time of the day, and find a great company of Arabs praying toward Mecca. In a far corner may be seen a venerable old shiekh, instructing a circle of young men in the Koran. The floors, to the extent of almost a city block, are covered with rich Turkish rugs. The walls are highly decorated. Like the Mosque of St. Sophia in Constantinople, the Omaiade Mosque was formerly a Christian church, and by a strange coincidence the upper beam of the south door bears an inscription in Greek, "Thy Kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations." This is indeed a strange inscription to be seen over the door of one of the most famous Mohammedan mosques.

We arrived in Damascus at a time when we had an excellent opportunity to observe native life and customs. It was at the close of the Month of Rammidan. During this month, the Mohammedans are not allowed to eat or drink during the daylight hours. It is a custom which outdoes the Lent of the Catholics. One may imagine that at the end of this month there would be a time of wild revelry and celebration. And indeed there is. Being in the largest Mohammedan city in Syria, we were able to see the revelry at its height. The streets were crowded with people dressed in their very best, and seeking a good time. The lemonade sellers, ice cream vendors, and amusement purveyors were all doing a rushing business. The children were enjoying rides on merry-go-rounds, and in little wagons, just like children in this country. It was a time of great hilarity, and though we were in the Holy Land, yet we found that people there acted about the same on holidays as they do in this country.

We returned to Jerusalem by rail, through the great plain of the Hauran. We passed through the ruins of the cities of the Decapolis, where all that remains are the ruins of black basalt houses, without roofs. One may walk through the deserted streets, looking through the windows of deserted, roofless houses, and the memories of the past in the times of Christ flood the mind. There are many of these deserted villages, and they present a weird appearance in this bleak and barren land.

Military Service in Argentina

By C. F. Yoder, Ph.D.

People who live in the United States know little of the curse of war compared with those of other countries. They have the burden of taxation and the memory of loved ones lost in the war but they do not have their minds constantly directed to war as people of many countries do.

Argentina is one of the many which has compulsory military service. All the young men of twenty years of age, with the exception of a few who are exempted by lot or as unfit, are expected to spend one year in military training in some barracks, or two years in the naval service. For this service they receive their keeping during the time of service and five pesos ($2.00) a month.

It cannot be denied that for some, perhaps many, of the young men the strict military discipline is a good thing. They have never been governed in the home or the school and have grown up with the criminal spirit and need to be subjected to some kind of government. But where the military service has made one boy better it has made several worse. As is always the case in a crowd the evil instincts, like bad weeds, are the quickest to propagate and the strongest to dominate. Many young men lose the last of their reverence for God or respect for womanhood and home in their contact with brutalized companions.

The very object of military training in preparing men to kill other human beings is debasing and deadening to the conscience. The type of patriotism inculcated by military training is hard to reconcile with the universal love that Jesus taught. The army has its chaplains, but in this country they are priests, and if there is a priest of clean moral life in this country I have yet, after sixteen years of residence, to hear of him. The priests of this country are considered the most immoral men of the country and instead of serving as inspiration to a good life they are used as an excuse for atheism and immorality.

Just at this time the conscripts, several thousand in number, who were called to Rio Cuarto to be redistributed among the several barracks of the district, are awaiting their orders. While waiting about the barracks they amuse themselves by throwing stones at passing people whether afoot or in vehicles. In the streets they insult the women and girls they meet and do other shameful things. One of the sergeants is being punished for bad conduct.

Of all these conscripts there are only three that are evangelical Christians. Two of these are members of our missions, one from Deheza and the other from Huinea Renanco. Their conduct is very different from that of the other conscripts. We tried to secure exemption for the one from Deheza, Luis Siccardi, because he was engaged in our Bible Coach work, but could not get it. We trust that in some way these boys may yet be exempted, or if not, that they will be faithful witnesses among the rest.

The government has recently secretly voted seventy million dollars for military equipment, and this when it has been securing loans for its ordinary running expenses in time of peace. Such folly will bring its sad harvest in due time. The world is preparing for another tribulation that is needed to sober it up before it will be ready to practice the better way of the kingdom of our Lord. It is thrilling to watch the rapid movement of events in preparation for the final scenes of this dispensation. May God help us all to redeem the time that we may not appear empty handed when our Lord shall come.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

III. John H. Worst

By Martin Shively, D.D.

The third and last surviving member of the ministerial group in attendance at the Dayton Convention, about whom I shall write, is the man whose name appears at the head of this paper. He had already proved himself in the ministry, both as a preacher and a leader. He is a son of Elder George Worst, and having thus grown up in a minister's home he had the advantage of a devout environment, through which he was early led to make choice of Jesus as Savior and Lord. He was born in Ashland County, Ohio, December 23, 1850, and is thus no longer a young man, in spite of the fact that he seems so, both in appearance and alertness. He united with the church of his father during the winter of 1877, and was chosen to the ministry two years later. Feeling that the time was at hand when the church must provide itself with trained leaders, he joined with Elders E. C. Paeker and S. Z. Sharp in the raising of funds for the building of Ashland College, continuing the effort until the opening of the School, when he became first on the list of those who matriculated for study in its halls. During his school work and immediately thereafter, his active soul found expression in editorial writing, for the Gospel Preacher, then the organ of the progressive wing of the Tunker fraternity, and also in the pulpit, for he served as pastor of the Brush Creek church, in Fairfield County, Ohio. Numerous booklets were written also during these years, two of which I remember well—"Weighed in the Balances, and Found Wanting" and "Where is Holsinger"? being their titles. During these troubled days, his was a voice that never faltered, and his a pen that never failed, for he was at the forefront, among the leaders of those who stood for "The Gospel, the whole Gospel, and nothing but the Gospel." With his trenchant pen, his fearless heart, and his ringing messages of Gospel truth, he held such a position in the church, as would have enabled him to go far as a leader in its ranks. But his advanced position on matters of polity, made him a marked man, by the reactionary element of the church, and in spite of what he was, and what he might have become in the united brotherhood, he was expelled from the body in 1883, and cast his lot with the Brethren wing of the church, taking an active part in the conference by which it was formally reorganized. Many a soul was sorely tried during the dark days of 1880 to 1883, and as a result, sought fields in which to serve, outside the paths which had earlier attracted and held them. Serve they must, for the spirit which God had breathed into them, could find no peace outside the realm of active service, in a world so full of need.

Brother Worst emigrated with his family, in the spring of 1884, to North Dakota, where he took up a homestead, and at once found opportunity to work for the common good. He was elected County Superintendent of Schools, which office he held until the fall of 1889, when he was elected to the state senate, where he served until 1894, when he was elected Lieutenant Governor. In 1895 he was chosen president of the State Agricultural College, a position which he held for twenty-one years, until 1916. Then followed a year of service as editorial manager of a state daily paper. Later he was appointed Commissioner of Immigration, a position in which he served four years. He has at last decided that younger men may carry the loads, and he has settled contentedly in the home of a son, where he and his wife find the peace and quiet which their exceedingly active lives have earned. The new home is at Fairview, Montana, from which vantage spot, he watches with interest, as the world goes by. Brother Worst is by no means a worn out man, and as he appears before us here at the college, for he comes occasionally to visit his brother, E. J. Worst, who has long lived in Ashland,—when he thus appears before us, full of vigor and mental alertness, no one would believe that he was born in 1850. God has used him widely, and preserved him wonderfully, and this, his servant has not forgotten his Lord, nor will he, according to his recent testimony here.

I met Dr. Worst first, during my school days, here at Ashland, forty years ago, for he had come east to visit his aged father, and came over to spend a bit of time in his alma mater. In an address which I heard him make at that time, I was at once convinced of the fact that in him I had met a real leader of men, and one whose wit and powers of description entitled him to a high place among the intellectual light of the day. He told us about the new land to which he had gone but a few years earlier,—a land which then seemed to most of us so remote that it was almost out of the world entirely, but he told his story so well, that after all these years I have still a fairly workable outline of it in my memory. I have met him a number of times since then, and the earlier opinion I had formed of him has not been modified in the least,—he is an exceptional man and one who has served widely and well. When I last saw him, which was but a few months ago, I expressed to him my keen regret that he had not served in the ministry of preaching, instead of the ministry of service. Knowing him as I do, I shall continue to regret it, for with such talents as he possessed, the ministry of the church would have been greatly enriched. In a communion service which he attended here a year ago, he testified to the loyalty of his heart to the cause of Brethrenism, and declared that he would be a Brethren until the end. Thus his forty-two years of separation from the church has not led him to compromise his faith, which speaks volumes for his steadfastness.

I have never doubted the wideness of the field in which God's children can serve acceptably, and am quite ready to believe that the faithful teacher in the public schools, or those who have ought to do with the great field of instruction of youth, have a place, or may have it, in the Kingdom activities, as honorable and as full of possibilities for good, as the ordained minister of the Gospel. And I also believe that the man who serves in a legislative or executive capacity, may serve his Lord quite as acceptably and efficiently, as the men who stand behind the sacred desk. And the man who helps to make two blades of grass to grow where only one could have been grown before, has made a real contribution to the well-being of his fellow men, and may have his place among the folks to whom the great Judge of all will say,—"I was hungry and ye gave me meat." The subject of this sketch, is such a man, and while I stand gladly among his many friends who delight to honor him for the good he has done, I am still profoundly sorry that he did not see his way clear to spend his life in the preaching of the Gospel, from the sacred desk, because he could have done it so much more effectively than I. And so much more acceptably. But, at least he has served, and served widely, and honorably and well, and to all such, who have been actuated by the spirit of our Lord, he will say at last, "Well done, enter into the joy of thy Lord."

Membership in the Brethren Church

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

(Prepared by order of the Tract Committee, to be published in tract form, and published in "The Evangelist" by the kind permission of the author. In two parts. Part II.)

All Classes Accede Her Baptism is Valid

Therefore, the 6th advantage mentioned, is that any church will receive her members on its baptism. In practice, Brethren baptism is not questioned, while other modes are. That fact is worth while. Our Lord's explicit directions are to baptize "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost"; and that language requires more than a mere immersion to comply with its conditions. "And of the" is repeated before each of the names of the Trinity. Pleading that "the wording is unimportant" does not get rid of the Lord's specific instructions as set forth in his form of language. How is that language to be obeyed, by one act, or by three? No other sentence of precisely the same grammatical construction can be literally obeyed short of three acts. Try it, and see. With the candidate in the water, a submerging at the naming of each person of the Trinity, honors each alike; and that is what the language requires. But, if I should say to my applicant, "I baptize you into the name of the Father", but do nothing; "and of the Son", and again do nothing; "and of the Holy Spirit", and then submerge the candidate, the action terminates upon but one person of the Trinity—that of the Holy Spirit—and the requirement of the sentence has not been complied with. Thus, water baptism in the name of the Holy Spirit only, is a very common occurrence, and, doubtless, with good intentions; but it, nevertheless, misses the mark. While in the water, why not follow the Lord's directions as he gave them. No one uses the formula, "I baptize you in the name of Jesus Christ." Where you find that expression in Acts, the preposition is "en." In the commission, it is "eis." Besides, if you follow the commission form, you will get action in the name of Jesus Christ, and without leaving the Father and Holy Spirit out. The one course obeys him; the other, does something else.

Acts 19:1-7, is a good passage to study in this connection. Apollos is described as "mighty in the scriptures", instructed in the way of the Lord. The record says, "and he spake and taught diligently the things of the Lord, knowing only the baptism of John." This last expression gives rise to a situation. Was John's baptism valid, since the Lord gave his baptismal formula in Matthew 28:19? Since the twelve who received it were evidently sincere, would it not hold? Many a modern preacher would have passed up the situation "as of no material consequence." But that kind of a program could never stand with St. Paul. Since Pentecost, A. D. 33, with Paul, "There is none other name"; Finding disciples at Ephesus as the result of Apollo's preaching, who had not heard "whether there be any Holy Ghost", he asks immediately "Unto what then were ye baptized"? They replied that they had received John's baptism. Now, John's baptism is conceded to be an immersion; but the formula of Jesus, preceded by his "all authority" had since been given. Apollos, evidently did not know that only after the death of the testator is the will in force. (Heb. 9:16). Some others have forgotten that, also. Since the great day of Pentecost the WILL of JESUS has been in force, and though these twelve men had been immersed, believing on the Lord, the Trinity in the commission had not been honored. When they heard this they were baptized by the authority of the Lord Jesus. Immersion, a Latin term, is one thing; But Christian baptism requires a triune act, one in three, and three in one.

Paul's "One Lord, one faith, one baptism" of Ephesians 4:5, is in evidence. The word Paul used here was baptisma;—"dipping"—the scholars say. Why did not Paul use bapto,—"dip"—if that was what he meant? He passed right by bapto, and selected the word baptisma, a word which admits of repeated action. What Paul said was,

"One Lord, one faith, one dipping." And dipping is in perfect harmony with the action required in obeying the commission, while dip is not. Nor is the dipping three baptisms, as some noisy critics charge; for Brethren people go into the water but once, and they come out of the water but once. Their baptism is, therefore, one in three, as the great Godhead is one in three. It is the one universal baptism acknowledged and received by any denomination under the sun.

The testimony of the Church Fathers, and the scholarship of the world support the three-fold action in baptism. Here are a few of them:

William Cathcart, D.D.

"Trine immersion was the general practice of Christians from the end of the second till the close of the twelfth century. The proof of the above statement is overwhelming." The Baptism of the Ages and of the Nations.

Basil,—A. D. 329-379. "As our Lord Jesus Christ was corporeally buried three days and three nights, so man, in imitation of this sacred mystery, is by trine immersion buried, and then by emersion resuscitated again."

Cyril of Jerusalem,—A. D. 315-386. After these things ye were led to the holy pool of divine baptism, as Christ was carried from the cross to the sepulcher. And each of you was asked whether he believed, etc., and ye made that saving confession and descended three times into the water, and ascended again; and that water of salvation was a grave unto you."

Monulus, Bishop of Girba,—A. D. 200-270. "The true doctrine of our Holy Mother, the Catholic church, has always been with us, my brethren, and the trine immersion wherewith it is celebrated."

Chrysostom,—A. D. 354-407. "Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism in three immersions of the body, when he said to them, 'Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'"

St. Jerome,—A. D. 360-397. "We are all thrice dipped in water, that the mystery of the Trinity may appear to be but one; and, therefore, though we be thrice put under the water to represent the mystery of the Trinity, yet it is reputed but one baptism."

John Wesley,—"When Mr. Wesley baptized adults professing faith in Christ, he chose to do it by trine immersion, if the person would submit to it, judging this to be the apostolic method of baptizing."

Moore's Life of Wesley, Vol. 1, p. 425.

Religious Encyclopedia by Philip Schaff,—Page 2395, Vol. 4, under "Triune Baptism", says: "Its meaning is striking; and its origin from the apostles, or at all events from the second century, can not be doubted. The Arian Eunomius introduced baptism by single immersion, and this form was adopted for a short time in Spain during the Arian ascendancy (7th century); But trine baptism still continued to be the usual form of the sacrament throughout the church."

Brethren Insist on Growing in Grace

When one is converted by taking the necessary steps in the program of God, he has become "reconciled to God" (2 Cor. 5:19). He is ready for that "walk with God" which characterized the patriarch of old. Through the blood of his Son, reconciliation has taken place, and the prayer-life begins. He must put on the whole armor of God and fight the good fight of faith. (Eph. 6:10-18 Don't fail to read.) Joseph Cook says, "Conversion is the surrender of the soul to God." Good; but in the great program of God, the soul not only surrenders, and quits fighting God, but he also enlists as a "good soldier of Jesus Christ" (2 Tim. 2:3). The beautiful, Christian life proves all but disappointing to many because of failure at this point. Don't miss it. Paul surrendered; but, oh, the beauty of his enlistment! "What wilt thou have me do, Lord"? That's starting right. Not, what will I have to give up; and many times it's whom. To undertake to walk in the new way with the old self is out of the question.

Plutarch tells us that nothing contributed more to Rome's greatness and glory than the fact that when any people were conquered, instead of being destroyed, they were incorporated with her, and partook of the same privileges, and in time were allowed to share her honors. Christ conquers that he, too, may incorporate the conquered into his army. Are you fighting for the Lord, or much of the time skulking in the camp of the enemy?

"If he is not crowned Lord of all,

He is not crowned Lord at all."

There is a significant passage of Scripture in Paul's first letter to Timothy, 3rd chapter: "But if I tarry long, that thou mayst know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and the ground of the truth."

The Seventh Advantage of Membership with the Brethren

This verse gives us the language to be used better than any other form I could employ: TO KNOW HOW TO BEHAVE THYSELF IN THE HOUSE OF GOD. In Titus 2: 10, Paul puts it thus: "Not purloining, but showing all good fidelity; THAT THEY MAY ADORN THE DOCTRINE OF GOD OUR SAVIOR IN ALL THINGS." Now, to adorn "the doctrine of God" is to make it appear beautiful; to place it in the proper light before a scoffing, God-hating world. Oh, the power of a Godly example; to know how to behave yourself in the house of God.

Before the nation of Jews had entirely broken with God, and their ultimate dispersion among the nations of the earth, every year they came up to Jerusalem to their national feast—the Passover. This feature in their national life had more to do with cementing their interests together than any other one thing in their entire polity. But the Jewish Passover, like animal sacrifices, circumcision, and Sabbath keeping, were distinctly Jewish. In "the way into the holiest of all" (Heb. 9:8-14), Jesus fulfilled them, nailing them to his cross. (Col. 2:14). Instead of these annual feasts, the Master has left for his followers the ordinances of his house, known by many as the communion service. Brethren observe these ordinances, just as our Lord instituted them, even in their same order; For, who has a right to change them? Change what our Lord instituted? Perish the thought!

These ordinances are plainly set forth in Mathew 26: 20-30; Mark 14:17-26; Luke 22:14-26; and John 13:1-30. Please inform yourself; that is what the Lord expects of all who call upon him. There is beautiful harmony here, too, if we master the scenes, types, and teachings. The Bible is harmony, for there can be no discord in God's leading. In these passages, properly harmonized, we find:

(1) Jesus and his apostles sat down to a supper. This was called by Paul, the "Lord's supper" (1 Cor. 11:20); by Peter, and Jude, "love feasts."

(2) Jesus arose from supper and washed his disciples feet and told them to do as he had done to them. John 13:14.

(3) As they were eating, Jesus took bread, blessed it, and gave it to them; "likewise also, the cup after supper" (Luke 22:20). This was the Holy Communion. After Paul corrects the abuses of observing the love feasts, (and the communion) in the Corinthian church, he leaves the subject with this parting message: "Wherefore my brethren, WHEN YE COME TOGETHER TO EAT, tarry one for another" (1 Cor. 11:33). This and the practice of the early church, proves that Christians were expected to keep the love feast. History shows the early church did not keep it. And the idea of feasting together is so inwrought in our souls that every great movement is launched around some banquet table. We, too, can "adorn the doctrine of God" in the love-feast.

Then, There is the Lesson of the Towel and Basin.

Jesus says, "Ye call me Master and Lord; and ye say well; for so I am. If I then, your Lord and Master, have washed your feet; YE ALSO OUGHT TO WASH ONE ANOTHER'S FEET. For I have given you an example, that you should do as I have done to you" (John 13:13-15). Now, language can not be more explicit. To intimate that the service of the towel and basin is coarse, without refinement, or lacks dignity, is to cast such dirt in the face of our Lord. Will you do it? If you wish to quibble over the binding force of the verb ought, listen as Moffatt translates: "Well, if I have washed your feet, I who am your Lord and Teacher, you are bound to wash one another's feet." Is that binding enough? No wonder Prof. J. W. McGarvey said in his department of "Biblical Criticism" in the Christian Standard, September 5, 1903.—"It is much easier to raise a laugh at the expense of those earnest souls who preach and practice feet washing as an ordinance of the church, than to answer their arguments by which they defend it." Raising a laugh is the only argument some people have. That argument does not dispose of the plain words of Jesus; his teachings have been laughed at many a time. It will be different when we stand in his presence. But many of us have been in his presence while using the towel and basin as a church ordinance. Methinks when he comes for his own, he will be one of us again.

The third great event of the evening was when Jesus "took bread, and gave thanks, and break it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body which is given for you: this

MONDAY

WARNING UNHEEDED—Matt. 26:30-35.

Jesus realized, as Peter did not, how much he lacked that strength-plus, at this stage of his spiritual development, that would enable him to stand firm in a crisis. But not even being forewarned enabled him to be forearmed; he was too self-confident.

TUESDAY

SEEKING GOD'S WILL—Matt. 26:36-46.

No man knows enough, nor can he see far enough to insist on his own will and way. Submission to God's will is best even though it leads through the shadows.

WEDNESDAY

BETRAYED AND ARRESTED—Matt. 26:47-56.

Grieved at being betrayed by an intimate and trusted companion, and wounded by the disgrace of being arrested like a hunted criminal by a mob armed with clubs and staves,—who but the Sinless One could have held his poise steady and his purpose aloft, and even restrained a rash defender in the midst of it all?

THURSDAY

THE STRENGTH OF SILENCE—Matt. 26:57-68.

In the conscious strength of his innocence and high purpose Jesus held his peace in the face of false accusations, and was the more justified thereby. Oliver Wendell Holmes once said, "Controversy equalizes fools and wise men", and John Wesley declared, "Silence is often the best answer to abuse."

FRIDAY

PETER'S FALL—Matt. 26:69-75.

"O thou child of many prayers, Life hath quicksands, life hath snares."

SATURDAY

TREACHERY'S END—Matt. 27:1-10.

Judas, having once opened the door of his heart to Satan, gave way so rapidly and completely to his influence, that, like the swine of Gadara driven over the precipice into the sea, he rushes headlong into the depths of crime, infamy and ruin.

SUNDAY

JESUS OR BARABAS—Matt. 27:11-26.

"Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side."—Lowell.

While we criticize Pilate and the Jews for throwing away life's greatest opportunity, let us remember that there are many today equally blind and perverse.—G. S. B.

do in remembrance of me. Likewise, also the eup after supper", (Luke 22:19, 20). "LIKEWISE ALSO THE CUP AFTER SUPPER", don't you see? The bread and the wine of the communion service was one thing, and the Lord's supper is another. Why under the sun insist on changing the Lord's program? There are more people following the Catholic leaders in changing the Lord's sayings to suit their fancies than many would suppose. The same Lord the same night, and before the same disciples while surrounding the same table engaged in three services. Why throw two out, and maintain the third? Who gave puny man such liberties? Yes, who? "Now I praise you, brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you" (1 Cor. 11:2). Praise for those who keep his sayings, condemnation for those who have a mind of their own.

There's a reckoning day coming, when we shall stand in the presence of HIM who hath redeemed us with his own precious blood. His church he placed upon the Rock. In his church are the rites and ordinances instituted by his own blessed example and teachings. He certainly had no other purpose in view, other than the happiness of all who will march with him. His nail-pierced hand is extended in loving support to all who will mount the steep road with him. He knows the rough places in that road. He sees that ugly rent in the earth called a grave; but with his hand to steady us, we shall be able to land on the other side. Over there he points the soul to "the many mansions." "And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there." Rev. 21:23-25. Now you have the object of this tract.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Jesus Feeds Five Thousand

By Mrs. Harry L. Berkshire

OUR SCRIPTURE

And his disciples came, and took up the body, and buried it, and went and told Jesus. When Jesus heard of it, he departed thence by ship into a desert place apart; and when the people had heard thereof, they followed him on foot out of the cities. And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick. And when it was evening, his disciples came to him, saying, This is a desert place, and the time is now past; send the multitude away, that they may go into the villages, and buy themselves victuals. But Jesus said unto them, They need not depart; give ye them to eat. And they said unto him we have here but five loaves, and two fishes. He said, bring them hither to me. And he commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass, and took the five loaves and two fishes and looking up to heaven he blessed, and brake, and gave the loaves to his disciples, and the disciples to the multitude. And they did all eat, and were filled: and they took up of the fragments that remained twelve basketsfull. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, besides women and children. (Matthew 14:12-22.)

And great multitudes came unto him, having with them those that were lame, blind, dumb, and maimed, and many others, and cast them down at Jesus' feet, and he healed them. Inasmuch as the multitude wondered when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see: and they glorified the God of Israel (Matt. 15:30, 31).

OUR MEDITATION

Feeding the multitude is one of the few events recorded by all of the four Gospel writers. There was a period of about fifteen months in the life of Jesus between his conference with the Samaritan woman at Jacob's well and the miraculous feeding of the five thousand, by the Sea of Galilee. The intensive training of the twelve had already begun. It was about the time of the Passover.

Previous to this time John the Baptist, had been beheaded by Herod. The disciples had claimed his body and buried it. Now that they had told Jesus, he departed thence by ship into a desert place apart. But when the people heard of it they followed on foot from out the cities. Jesus was then in the midst of his year of popularity, and the people were always seeking him, so they hastened around the lake and interrupted the schooling he was giving to the disciples. Great throngs of people were traveling the roads leading to Jerusalem, that they might take part in the Passover. Therefore they took the road which led by the lake, to seek him out.

Could anything, other than the eyes of the soul, picture so much love and beauty as was revealed when the dear Savior lifted his kindly eyes, to behold the throng. Very much the same as a mother receives her child, who insists on clinging to her alone.

Some of the travelers were not physically able to withstand the long journey but would make unusual efforts to do so in hopes of physical benefits, while in the midst of a spiritual duty. They knew that at sight, Jesus would have compassion upon them, and possibly their minds were upon the Pool of Bethesda, and hoped that this time, there would be an opportunity for them to be the first to reach the water.

A Great Physician was he. Those that had need of healing, he healed, and he loved to do it. Meanwhile he taught them of the Kingdom of God.

Now when the evening shadows began to fall, the disciples and Jesus seemed to have the same thought concerning the comfort of the crowd. The disciples however, seemed to think the easiest way to disperse them by, "Send them away," while, Jesus seemed, according to John, to have had in mind at the beginning to feed the bodies as well as the souls, of all who so diligently sought him.

While surveying the crowd, Andrew, came upon a lad, whose thoughtful mother had prepared a basket of lunch, consisting of five barley loaves and two dried fish. When Jesus heard of this he called the boy to him and taking the basket, commanded the multitude to sit down on the grass. Jesus then turned his face heavenward, to his Father, in dedication and prayer. After blessing and breaking the flat barley cakes, and the small fishes, he gave to the disciples, and the disciples in turn gave to the multitude. "And they did eat, and were filled and they took up the fragments that remained, twelve baskets full. And they that had eaten were about five thousand men, besides women and children" (Matt. 14:22).

The people may have wondered but all were filled. There was plenty of bread. There had not been better bread in all the history of Palestine than that the people ate that day. What a wonder came from such a small nucleus, "five barley loaves and two fishes," when placed in the hands of the Lord. What a wonder can come from a life with but even a small bit of the "love of Christ", for a nucleus. He can bless us and use us in a most marvelous way.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Father: We thank thee for the beautiful lessons thou hast taught us, through thy word. May we yearn to study them more and more, that we in turn may impart to others. We thank thee for life and all the necessities. Use us and make us presentable, in thy sight and on that last great day. For Jesus' sake we ask it. Amen.

The Story of Cain and Abel

Scripture Lesson—Gen. 4:1-26.

Printed Text—Gen. 4:1-12.

Devotional Reading—1 John 4:16-21.

Golden Text—Am I my brother's keeper?
Gen. 4:9.

LESSON LIGHTS

Cain and Abel are all that are named as the sons of Adam and Eve until after the death of Abel and the exile of Cain was born another son, Seth, who became the ancestor of those of the human race who are named later in the Bible. But there is nothing to contradict the possibility that God may have formed other men for the peopling of the world, or that Adam and Eve, during their long lives might not have had many children. It seems, however, most probable that Cain was the first child born into the world. He seems to have had a strong physical personality, but little of the spiritual. Abel was, apparently, of a milder and more refined nature. Their natural tendencies would be strengthened as they grew in years. There is nothing to tell the ages of these men, save that they were mature men, and offered sacrifices on their own behalf.

Cain and His Offering

The difference did not lie in the offerings, but in the men, and in the offerings only so far as they represented the character of the men. Note that in the account the man is put before the offering. "Abel and his offering," "Cain and his offering." The difference in the men is seen in what came from them. Anger, envy, hate, murder, and lying came from Cain, and proved that he was no true worshiper (see 1 John 3:12). He offered the shell, not the meat, the purse, not the jewels, the body without a soul, the form without the spirit. The author of Hebrews (11:4) tells us, that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent (a more complete) sacrifice than Cain." Faith implies here a heart of obedience and love, a right disposition toward God. Some one has said that "the best part of a sermon is the man behind it." It is equally true of every act of worship. Even Plato says, "It would be strange if the gods looked to gifts and sacrifices, and not to the soul" (Alcib. ii, 149).

"Am I My Brother's Keeper?"

It was a far cry from the question of Cain as to his responsibility for the welfare of his brother to the question of the young lawyer who once asked Jesus "Who is my neighbor?" In the least civilized times, and nations, all outside the family were outside of the number of those for whom the family should care. Cain even queried if a brother who was no longer a child was supposed to be under the protection of an older brother. But Jesus puts, in his Parable of the Good Samaritan, with which he answered the lawyer, an entirely different view. No longer is it merely the members of one's family to whom one should show loving care when necessary; not even is this kindness to be restricted to one's own tribe, or even one's own nation. One's neighbor is the one to whom one can himself be a neighbor. We are all our brother's keepers; and our brothers are no longer to be considered merely the children of our earthly father and mother. Our brothers are all the children of our heavenly Father, and this means everybody with whom we come in contact, or with whom we can come in contact in order to bring them help when needed.

Murder

It is not right to confine the term "murder" to the killing of the physical body. It is likewise murder, and the worst sort of murder, to kill a soul—to kill the fine qualities which might make a man develop into one of whom his country would be proud, so that instead he is a menace to all he meets. The saloons murdered more men than those who died a physical death for any reason which might be traced to them. The Prohibition Amendment, if carried out as we ought to carry out a law of the land, would prevent us from witnessing so many of these soul-murders. And it is no matter what our own opinion is of the matter; it is no matter if we ourselves want to use liquor, we are still, and shall always be, our brothers' keepers. God has made the circles of family, friendship, acquaintance, race, humanity, so that each of us has an influence in them, and we are responsible for that influence. No one lives or dies to himself. And God gives us wealth, position, intellect, not for ourselves alone, but that we may be better keepers of our brothers. (1) We are keepers of our brothers, not by dictating to them, but by brotherly love; (2) by helping them, as the Good Samaritan, or as the righteous in Matthew 25:31-46; (3) by considering their welfare in all our business relations; (4) by using every influence for their good, doing to others in all relations "as we would that they should do unto us."

"Every man should be the keeper of his brother man. That means, that whatever may be the care which a man takes of his own life, however he watches it and tends it, he has not done his duty, he has not filled out his existence, unless he also has, just as far as he possesses the ability and chance, watched and protected and helped the lives of other people."—Phillips Brooks. "Our brethren are everywhere. On every human life has fallen from the Cross, where it be recognized or no, a ray of divine compassion. All have been objects of the world-embracing guardianship, and when we have learned the first lessons of the gospel we understand that, in some sense, each of us, like the divine Redeemer, is his brother's keeper.—Dean H. P. Liddon.

The Temperance Application

Our Lesson Committee suggests that this lesson may be used with temperance applications. Of course they had in mind the murders and other crimes that must be charged up to the demon drink. Impulse and action lie close together. A man (or woman) whose brain is befuddled by spirituous liquor, who has lost control of self, when angered may at once commit deeds which when sober revolt his very soul.

"Maybe you don't know the ways of a man when he's drunk," said a long-suffering wife. "For ten years of married life I never before had any furniture that wasn't broken or in pawn. Mike smashed 'em. Man always will when they're that way. An' there was worse than that he smashed. He almost killed Johnnie. One night I had to go through his pockets to get some money for the children's food. 'Twas only fifty cents I found. He heard me and he cursed me and said he'd have it back. I wouldn't give it to him. He got me down in the corner. Then he put me out in the snow in my nightgown and bare feet. When I came back, he only threw me down stairs again. Before I could get the cop on the beat he was smashin' everythin' that night. It was the stovetid he threw at Johnnie broke his leg. It's a different world since the Pub is closed."—Tarbell.

"THE CHRISTIAN AND HIS MONEY"

In connection with the Seventh National Sunday School Convention of the Philippine Islands Sunday School Union which was held in Manila February 3-7, a pageant was presented entitled "The Christian and His Money." Some of the participants impersonated such characters as President of the Church Board, Pastor, an Old Shoemaker, a Teacher, Church Secretary, an Old Farmer.

The synopsis looks very suggestive for a similar pageant whether at home or on the so-called foreign mission field. The aim of the play was to show how a church can organize, prepare for, and carry out a financial campaign. Scene one showed a meeting of the church officers in the home of the pastor. The second scene was in the church at the close of the Sunday morning service. It represented a business meeting of the congregation. In the third scene the Church Board has again met at the pastor's home to select the canvassers. The fourth scene showed the final meeting of the canvassers in a training class. The pastor had been meeting them once a week for six weeks. The last scene was in the church about five o'clock on the Sunday afternoon of the canvass. The pastor and the church secretary were awaiting the return of the canvassers to receive their reports.

The themes for the different days of the Convention were "The Indigenous Church," "Stewardship and Self Support," "A Unified Program of Religious Education in the Local Church."

A Warless-World Campaign

A warless-world campaign programme for young people's organizations has been adopted and is being promoted by the Christian Endeavor society of the South Salina Church of Christ (Disciples), Syracuse, New York. The campaign has been devised by William Fenton Crane, an earnest student of international affairs.

The first feature of the programme was an inter-society debate between the South Salina church and Westminster Presbyterian societies, the question being, "Resolved, That the United States should enter the World Court with the Harding-Hughes reservations." Members of both debating teams were Syracuse University students, and it was truly a live contest. A new hymn, by Dr. Ernest Bourner Allen, entitled "The Son of God goes forth for Peace," was sung by the audience. "These Things Shall Be—A Loftier Race," was a solo by Miss Esther Everson. Dr. Fosdick's "Prayer for the Spiritual Union of Mankind" was repeated by the audience in concert. Peace literature, buttons, and auto-stickers were distributed at the close. Flags of the nations now in the Court were used in a special decorative scheme.

The programme to be developed during the year includes a six weeks' class to study Daniel A. Poling's latest book, "Adventuring in World Cooperation," a public educational drive on the horror of war and advantages of peace by means of posters placed on the church bulletin-board, and correspondence with the proper public officials, urging non-partisan Christian action on the World Court, League of Nations, Japanese Exclusion Clause, and other world questions. An International Friendship Committee will oversee the development of this programme.—C. E. World.

Young People's Camp Dates are Announced

Summer Conferences for Boys and Girls at Lakes Geneva and Winnepesaukee

The International Council of Religious Education has announced the dates of the young people's camp conferences for 1926.

These conferences are approved by 35 Protestant denominations and are open to approved young people of ages 16 to 22. They are held at some of America's beauty spots.

The dates are:

Lake Geneva, Wis.: Girls' camp, August 10-23; boys' camp, August 24-September 6.

Lake Winnepesaukee, N. H.: Girls' camp, July 27-August 9; boys' camp, August 24-September 6.

INCANDESCENT TEACHERS

"He was a burning and a shining light," said our Lord of his forerunner.

Men have sought—practically, in vain—for a way to produce light without heat, in the material world. We have been no more successful in securing heatless spiritual light.

When we read Jesus' eulogy on the Baptist, we are reminded of the great missionary to the Parsees, Henry Martin, who, on reaching his last mission field, wrote: "And now let me burn out for God!"

Teachers in the pulpit and in the Sunday school, how may we hope to set other lives aflame for God when we have not yet submitted to Christ's baptism with the Holy Ghost and with fire?

Jesus promised satisfaction only to those who hunger and thirst after righteousness! There must be an all-consuming desire to know the truth that makes free. And there must be a passionate desire to impart saving truth.—The Christian World.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for April 25)

Radio Messages from New Americans. Hebrews 13:1, 2.

Dear Junior Christian Endeavorers:

I am writing this letter to be read over the radio to you because I can not talk the American language distinctly enough for you to understand me. I am a Japanese boy and I live in California. I have been in this country just half of my life. I am now ten years old. I go to school with American children and soon I shall be able to talk easily in your language. I want to tell you the story of my first few years in America.

I remember the day that father came home from his work over in Japan and told mother and me that he had gotten all the arrangements made so that we could leave on the next big boat for America. For a long time he had worked to get permission and we were so excited when he finally got it. I was sorry to say good-bye to all my friends but father told me that I would find lots of new friends in your country. On the big boat on the way over, I had a nice time. I liked the big ocean. The boat was like a nice big house. My parents got up with me early one morning and we watched the sun rise over the water. One day, it was stormy and I had such a nice time watching the waves. I was not scared because father and mother were with me. Some of the people were frightened. The waves were all rough and white caps were on the tops of each of them. When I grow up and have money of my own, I am going to live along the shore so that I can watch the water.

When we arrived in America we landed in a big city called San Francisco. We went to the place where all the Japanese of that city live together and father talked to some friends of his that had come over long ago. Then we decided to go up to the fruit country. It was summer time, so mother and father both picked different kinds of fruit.

We lived in a small house near some other Japanese families so I had a nice time for the first year until I was old enough to go to school. When I was old enough to go to school, my parents made arrangements for me to go into a nearby town. I like school, though it was pretty hard at first when I started to learn to talk American words. The thing I did not like about school is that I do not have many friends there. The school that I attend has mostly American children in it and those children do not like us. We study hard so that we can know our lessons as well as they do and we learn to play the same games that they do so that we could play with them if they would let us, but for some reason they do not like us. There are just a few of us in the school, so we try to have good times together. My father and mother try to make me happy by telling me that soon they will earn enough money to get me everything that I want. Yet, that does not make me happy, for I want to have friends to play with and I should like to go to the churches on Sunday like other children do. I wish you, Junior Endeavorers, would tell your friends out here in California that we want to be liked and we want to be Junior Christian Endeavorers, too.

This summer, I am going to start picking fruit like my mother and father do. Some boys and girls make quite a lot of money that way. Maybe I can earn enough money to go to college like a few of the Japanese people that I know have done, then I can go to your churches and maybe I will meet some of you. I wish that American children liked us little Japanese children, but mother and father tell me that the reason that you do not is just because you do not understand us. I hope that you will send us friends that understand us sometime.

From a boy that wants American children to like him, KAO.

Junior boys and girls, do you know that in our big cities as well as in some of the smaller ones and the country of some sections, there are just lots of boys and girls who want your friendship and who need to know about Jesus? There are little Italians, little Chinese, little Russians, little Japanese and many other foreign children, who come to our United States and want friends and help. Do you know what is said in Hebrews about being kind to strangers? This is it, "Forget not to show love unto strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." So let's remember to be kind to any children we meet that need friends and try to do something for the foreign children of our country.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

It is unfortunate for the Gospel work in Argentina just when the heat of summer is passing and it is time for special efforts to increase attendance at the meetings there should come five or six Sundays in succession which impede our work. First the two Sundays of carnival when water is thrown on people in the streets, and then several Sundays of election when on account of the furious driving of autos on all sides, bringing in the voters, many fear to allow their children to go into the streets. Yesterday, according to reports, four were killed by automobiles and several in drunken fights, and a number more were wounded, all in Rio Cuarto. Next Sunday there will be other elections and then the Italian and Spanish "romerias" or Sunday frolics with dancing, drinking, etc., draw the crowds. Of course our faithful members come always, but the people who are only slightly interested are drawn away by these difficulties and attractions. Our greatest hopes for a stable church are in the children who are growing up in the Sunday school.

In Rio Cuarto we have reason to be thankful for the success of the vacation Bible school conducted by Sister Nielsen. The children did good work and were much interested. Now Miss Nielsen has organized a Junior Christian Endeavor Society which will meet at the same time as the senior society. We have also begun cottage prayer meetings on Friday evening, but there are very few homes in which there is room for such a meeting or seats with which to have it outside. Many families have to live in one room, using it as kitchen, dining room and bedroom. We hope to continue open air meetings when the elections are over.

Just at this time also, not only in Rio Cuarto, but in all our missions, except Buenos Aires, many of our men leave town to work in the corn fields. Corn is husked and thrown into large sacks which the husker drags along. It is slow, hard work, but the people do not care to change even though we show them how it is done so much more easily and rapidly in North America. We will miss several entire families and several more young men from three to four months in this work, but they will be giving their testimony wherever they are.

We have sold our old horse and sulky which for seven years has done good service and now make our more distant visits in the new Ford car, thanks to the kind gifts of friends in the homeland. We appreciate this convenience very much. We are having the big Bible auto repaired and are praying for workers and money to be able to send it out again to reach the towns without missions. In view of the manifest closing up of this dispensation we feel like pushing the work of evangelizing our territory more than ever and plead for the constant prayers of the Brethren everywhere.

Miss Emmert's Letter to Long Beach

(NOTE—Miss Mary L. Emmert, one of our missionaries in Africa, and whose home is Dallas Center, Iowa, is being supported by the First church of Long Beach, California, to whose members she has written the following letter published in the weekly calendar of that church. This church is also supporting two missionaries in South America, Brother and Sister Percy L. Yett. We are taking the privilege of re-publishing this informing and inspiring letter for the benefit of the Evangelist family.—Editor.)

Yaloke par Boali par Bangui,

 Afrique Equatoriale Francaise
 Africa, January 2, 1926.

Members of the Long Beach Brethren Church, Long Beach, California.

Dear Brothers and Sisters in the Lord:

Brother Bauman has kindly invited me to write to the church and get acquainted. It is rather long distance, but there is oneness of Spirit, I am sure, and I trust it will not always be a long distance acquaintanceship. I want to thank you again directly this time, for your kindness in taking me as your African missionary. I know that it is the love of the Master only that prompted it, but there is something about the personal touch and the knowledge that some one church is praying and working for and sharing in one's work that is dear to the heart of us missionaries.

It is seven and a half months since my arrival here at Yaloke, but it doesn't seem nearly so long and when I think that it is a year and four months since I left home it surely doesn't seem possible. The missionaries who have been here longer say that the longer one is here the more quickly time flies and the less they like to see the date for their furlough approach. In other words, we are in love with our work and with our Master who has called us and prepared the way before us.

I won't say that in this length of time I have learned the language by any means, but we new missionaries are taking our turns at giving the gospel messages in the daily services for the workmen, and we have also been privileged to take one itinerating tour of two weeks to preach in the distant villages. There is a real joy in preaching to those that have never heard the good news before, that is hard to explain, and we are praying that the way will open again soon for another such trip. Meanwhile we are trying to learn the trade language, as the tribal language is scarcely sufficient on this station.

Perhaps you would like to hear about the chief, Yaloke, and his wives. He only has 34 wives and 36 children, so he says, and he claims that he knows all their names. No one has taken the time to test him out on this statement. He is quite an old man and was once a slave dealer, so the officials say. He is counted to be the biggest chief in the tribe, and, of course, the richest, for his wives and children are his wealth. At home it would take a millionaire to support that many, but you see, THEY support him. He seems to be a kindly old soul for the most part and I believe that he sincerely loves his wives and children and it is partly for this reason that he won't give them up to accept Christ. Of course he also hates to lose so much wealth and prestige. We have found out recently that the chiefs of this whole tribe have formed a league not to accept the gospel. They seem to feel that it would mean the end of the old regime. Won't you pray that this alliance may be broken so that not only they may be saved but that many other "near great" may follow after them?

Just recently one of Yaloke's wives has been very sick with tuberculosis and a grievous ulcer. The old chief was very anxious for Miss Tyson to dress it every day and he even went to the extreme length for Africa, of providing a chair for his wife to sit on. You will think this is a joke, but he had to break a custom to do it and even the woman objected, saying that black women never sat in chairs. She was so much relieved by the treatment and so much happier especially after Miss Tyson talked to her about accepting the Lord and she yielded. But much to our surprise soon afterward, Yaloke said he was going to move her out in the brush to live without a shelter. He said that was the black man's custom (although the missionaries had never heard of a case before in West Africa), and that after she recovered he would move her back into her house. He was persuaded to allow her to be brought to the women's home here, where she was made very comfortable. Later, however, he stole her out again unknown to us and has hidden her in the bush by the creek side. It seems likely that the medicine man has influenced him to do this as they say he fears him.

Some of our evangelists had an experience with a witch doctor just lately. They were in a village preaching and were interrupted by the witch doctor, who finally cursed them after the native fashion of blowing on his fingers and foretelling when they would die. He also took a coin and drew a line in front of the door, saying that if they crossed it they would die before noon. They said they were children of God and that his strength was greater than that of the devil. They knew he would keep them so they stepped across the line, much to the amazement of the spectators and proceeded joyfully on their way. This really shows more strength of Christ.

character and more knowledge of the Lord than might appear, when one thinks that only a few short years ago they firmly believed in these superstitions.

We only have three or four evangelists, but are very thankful for them. Pray for them that they may not fall into sin, but that they may continuously grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord, Jesus Christ. We have almost daily classes for their instruction and they are praying earnestly to learn to read the Bible for themselves. I begin to realize what a wonderful privilege we that can read have in reading God's Word. Isn't it a shame that more people don't take advantage of it in our enlightened country?

One of the most faithful evangelists, named Yolo, was the heir to the chieftainship in a far away village. But he heard that the white man had come with good news from God, so he came to find out about it. Later he was converted and when his father died he refused the chieftainship, choosing rather to stay here, hear more of the gospel, and now he is preaching and may soon be ordained. Having given up an extra wife and all claim to worldly position and power he has grown marvelously in the year or more that he has been here. Will you pray that many more like him may be raised up to take the gospel into all tribes? When one sees the vast number of villages unreached, it seems really consecrated natives will be one of the best approaches as the blessed day rapidly draws near.

In closing, may I ask for an interest in your prayers personally. Knowing the missionary zeal of the Long Beach church one can not fail to know that you are a praying church. May the Lord bless you in this ministry, for the prayers of the church are what we need more than anything else.

May I sign myself your missionary.

MARY L. EMMERT.

Another Letter from "The Sky Parlor"

"The Sky Parlor," Long Beach, Calif.

April 3, 1926.

Der Members of the F. M. S.

'Tis Easter Eve, and in "The Sky Parlor" there is a between-the-acts lull, so to speak! Gone are all the letters to the pastors, the thousands of missionary tracts and the Easter Offering envelopes, and the letter to each member of the F. M. S., and now there is nothing to rush one. And as we apply the brakes and clear up the debris, the thought enters one's mind: "It wonders me (as some folks out here say) how it will all turn out! Will our Easter Offering be worthy of our Lord and of the work he has entrusted to us?" From every quarter there have been reports of hard times, scarcity of work and money. Will the Brethren church fall short of the expectations of her Lord?

A dear friend has called attention to a sentence that appeared in the columns of "The Evangelist" a few months back: "The Lord who notes the sparrow's fall will certainly note every misspent dollar!" And it wonders me how many spent more dollars this year on an Easter hat than they did on the Easter Offering. In the light of the all-seeing eye of our Father God, did you ever count up how much you spend in a year on candy, or silk stockings, or moving pictures (?) or a new dress (that you simply had to have, even though you had a half dozen hanging in your closet—and then compare the sum total with the $5.00 you gave in the Easter Offering to save from present suffering and misery, and future perishing and eternal loss, the souls for whom Christ died? "The Lord who notes the sparrow's fall will certainly note every misspent dollar!"

That Office Secretary knows that it is a little late to bring up the Easter Offering that might have been, but she has been too "careful and troubled about many things" to stir up before your remembrance along this line. And it is not too late. If you still want to invest in jewels for your "crown of rejoicing" for the Coming Kingdom, and lay up treasure for that Great Day of Christ, it is not too late. If you will forward your gift at once to the Treasurer, 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, California, with your name and address and the name of the church to which it should be credited, it will go in the Easter Offering of 1926 just as nothing had almost happened!

Yours serving the Lord Christ.

THAT OFFICE SECRETARY.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

SAINT JAMES, MARYLAND

Inasmuch as our successor at the Fairview church (Washington C H., Ohio), has already written a news letter for the "Evangelist," we feel that we should let the brotherhood know that we have not perished from the work, but are located at the above place in the Master's work.

We find here a field that is large in more ways than just the amount of territory it covers, and—as usual—we find that there are plenty of problems and difficulties to be met with. But we do not despair: hitherto hath the Lord helped us, and we believe he will continue to help us in these as well.

Although a little off the main road here, we have not lacked for "excitement." Not so long after we arrived here (which was the fifteenth of January), we were surprised one evening by a goodly number of folks coming in with well-filled bags and baskets. As we told some of them later, they brought so much that they "made an awful mess of our kitchen, but we surely appreciated it. It was of no little value in dollars and cents, but was of still more value to us as an expression of confidence and helpfulness. This same willing spirit may also be seen in the fact that they installed a fine new heater in the parsonage just before our coming, at a cost of about $100, in spite of the fact that they were already carrying some indebtedness.

Then about a month ago, the Saint James (Episcopal), School for Boys, not far away, burned to the ground one night; the loss was estimated at about $100,000, and only partly covered by insurance. We must confess, however, that—like many church-members—we were sound asleep at the time.

More recently our whole community was saddened by another fire. This time it was one of our own families who lost their home when the fire was discovered already well under way, in the middle of the night. It was almost a total loss to them, as there was no insurance and they were able to save but little from the flames. God bless them in their time of misfortune and testing!

We realize only too well that our work here is hardly begun as yet. There had been no prayer meeting here for some time; we have tried to re-establish this most vital service, and have been having some very good times together, spiritually, though the attendance has not been very large as yet. We still hope for a revival of interest in this service. We also hope that it may soon be possible to organize a young people's society here. We have done our best to boost the Easter Offering here, in spite of local needs; we do not know the results as yet, but must be satisfied to leave that with him.

Pray for us and our work here, as we are glad to remember the needs of others.

T. C. LYON. Lydia, Maryland.

NEW LEBANON, OHIO

(In the Center of Brethren Churches)

Our short four months' ministry with these good people have been such a delight to us that we want to share it with the brotherhood the victories that have already been ours. Since our last report, two months ago, we have indeed been blessed by our heavenly Father.

Our evangelistic campaign began March 2nd and continued till the 21st, with Rev. W. C. Benshoff as evangelist. Pre-prayer services were held prior to the coming of the evangelist. A group of personal workers were sent out in the community inviting the unsaved to the services and impressing the claims of Christ upon their lives. Pre-prayer services were held each night of the campaign in one of the Sunday school rooms.

The weather was ideal for March. There were no conflicting services at the other churches of the community. All was in our favor and the Lord greatly blessed us. We did not lack an audience during the three weeks' effort. Several evenings saw the house packed to its limit. No other appeals were used than that of good Gospel singing and straightforward preaching of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The meeting has demonstrated the fact that true preaching wins with thinking people.

Brother Benshoff was at his best. He preached with courage and yet with love and sympathy the great riches of the love of God. No sensational methods were used but he portrayed with winning effect the great fundamental doctrines of our Lord Jesus Christ. Not one word of criticism did the pastor hear of the meeting or of the evangelist. All spoke very highly of the ability of Brother Benshoff as a true preacher of the Word of Life. I wish it were possible for Brother Benshoff to give his full time to the work of evangelism. Had there been no confessions the good rendered to the church alone would more than have paid for the efforts put forth. The free will offering given was some indication of the appreciation of the people here of Brother Benshoff's efforts.

We had but two goals for the meeting. The one dealing with the Christian and the other with the sinner. We asked that each Christian take at least one "forward step" during the campaign. This will mean much to the church. Following are the items we set before them:

MY FORWARD STEP

1. I acknowledge and confess my sins and I accept Jesus Christ as my Personal Savior and the Lord of my life, and I will strive to do his will
2. To unite with the church at and attend its services regularly.....
3. To reconsecrate my life to service of Christ
4. To give up a certain bad habit which weakens my Christian life and influence.
5. To pray and read my Bible every day.
6. I will join our Young People's Society.
7. I will strive to give at least one-tenth of my income to the work of the Lord.
8. To teach a S. S. Class or accept some definite task in the S. S. or church.
9. I will attend my prayer meeting whenever possible
10. I will earnestly and prayerfully try and lead at least one person to Christ during this meeting.
11. To give my life to Christ for full time service as a Missionary, Minister or other worker.

(Mark with an X the decision you have made.)

Name Date.

As to the visible results, 25 have already been received into fellowship with the church. The majority of these making the confession for the first time. We believe they are of the class who will "stick", and they will be a great help to the church. Up to the writing of these notes nine others have signified their willingness to bring their membership with us here. Several of these will be rebaptized. These will be received into the church as soon as their letters reach us. One is awaiting baptism which will bring our total up to 35. Others are thinking seriously of the claims of Christ upon their lives and have expressed a willingness to make the good confession in the near future. We have faith to believe they will. Many of our own members who had not been coming to church are now coming. In all it was a great meeting. We believe seed has been sown that will bring forth fruitage for some time to come. Many are thinking our way. Delegations were present from other churches of the community including our own good people from Dayton, Salem and Gratis.

The Sunday school started with an attendance of 148 on our first Sunday in this field. It has been growing gradually yet rapidly until the record showed 290 on the last Sunday of the campaign. This was the largest attendance in the history of the Sunday school. Our next problem will be the enlarging of our present building if we are to care for our Sunday school. And I believe the people here will show a willingness to do this in the very near future. In fact, plans are already under way by the W. M. S. to raise money toward this end. They will have the main lunch stand at the Old Order Conference which will be held some time in May. This should net them a large sum which will go toward our building fund.

We feel that a wonderful field has opened up to us here. Pray for us that we might be equal to the added responsibility that is ours.

It seems that the Lord never blesses us but what he blesses us doubly. On Friday morning, March 19th, a pair of twin girls arrived at the parsonage. Bernice Marie and Beatrice Mae are their names. It appears now that there will be five King girls attending Ashland College at the same time. If they are as slow of comprehension in their studies as was their Daddy the teachers' patience will surely be tried. We hope to have a King orchestra in our church ten or fifteen years hence. We need your prayers in the added responsibility in home and church.

L. V. KING.

MEETING AT NEW LEBANON

Beginning Tuesday evening, March 2, it was our privilege to spend three weeks with the Brethren at New Lebanon, Ohio in a special series of meetings. While the meeting will be reported by the pastor, we wish to say a few things about the work in general and the revival in particular.

Brother Lester V. King is the efficient and faithful pastor here. He has served this charge but a few months, but in this time has won for himself a large place in the hearts of the people of this community. The Brethren church being the only one in New Lebanon, Brother King felt free to call upon people regardless of denomination. He has called on every family in and near the village. Through his keen interest in the individual and his genial personality this was done without offense to any one. This work of the pastor was augmented by similar work on the part of the Christian people. This visitation and personal work, plus special messages, prayer meetings, etc., constituted adequate preparation. Results are practically assured in any community where such preparation has been made.

To go to New Lebanon was like getting back home. Here we had once served as pastor for a period of three years. Our church here is the center of a group of Brethren churches, and three others with New Lebanon constituted the charge fourteen years ago. We felt at home in the midst of old friends, and it was an inspiration to meet with former parishioners and to see them night after night in the services. We were much encouraged by the presence in the services of our ministers. Brethren Hoover and Kinzie are a part of the local work and gave valuable assistance. Others came with their delegations, as did pastors of other denominations. Words fail in an endeavor to express the meaning of this Christian fellowship.

Entertainment was in the home of Brother and Sister Fred Wyson. These good people were strangers to us but not for long. We cannot speak too highly of the kindness and hospitality found here. Many homes were open to us and in these visits we renewed old friendships and made new ones. It was our privilege to appear before and address the high school students. The schools are now centralized in this community and are housed in a new and adequate building.

We may, perhaps, be pardoned some conclusions. First is, that pastor King will have to provide himself with something larger than the Ford, since another set of twin girls has come to his home—date of birth March 19. Another is, our people here must enlarge their church building. Many new homes are being built each year. We have here one of the most promising of our rural churches. Provision must be made to care for the increased numbers, the Sunday school must be properly housed. Another conclusion is that the fruits of evangelism are permanent. It was here more than fourteen years ago that many came into the church through special evangelistic efforts. To return and find a large number of these active in the work of the church leads to this conclusion, that the Holy Spirit does preserve his work. And still another conclusion is that the Word of the Lord has the power to draw. In these meetings there were no special features, no "stunts" were pulled off to attract the crowd. But the crowds did come and it is proof that the "Gospel is the power of God unto salvation." May the Lord continue to bless and preserve his own.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

RADIOGRAMS IN EVANGELISM

The Lord has been very gracious to us since our last report and is honoring his Word through our efforts to exalt Christ as the Savior of the world and the only hope for this lost, troubled world. We are reporting two more meetings held in Pennsylvania where most of our work has been this year.

The first one which began in February was a union meeting held at Pittstown, Pennsylvania, midway between Connellsville and Scottdale. We spent three weeks and over two Sundays in this place, and was ably assisted again by Walter B. Camlin, our son, director.

The interest was good throughout and the Spirit of the Lord prevailed in a marked way. We preached every evening excepting Monday and three times on Sunday, having special nights and special afternoon lectures the last week which kept us very busy. But we enjoyed working with the different people and while we differed on forms we were united in the great big business of present ing Christ who has power to save. The net results were 36 confessions and numerous others who came to renew their covenant and pledged their lives for service. Of this number I baptized by Trine Immersion 16, while the Church of God minister baptized by the backward action. Word has come to me that others united on Easter Sunday at the different churches around Mt. Pleasant and Scottdale. We praise God for victory.

We closed our campaign here on Friday, March 19, and left immediately for a pre-Easter campaign at Marion Center in a co-operative meeting of the two churches of the city.

These meetings began on March 21 and continued until Easter Sunday, and a gracious time we had. The Methodist church's large auditorium was filled on the Sundays and well filled during the two weeks. My old friend, J. A. McInturff, is the pastor there and this was the fourth campaign I have held with him. He is a very fine yoke fellow in the work of Evangelism.

We feel very deeply the honor he conferred on us in being invited through him to conduct this meeting since I was unknown to the folks there and Methodism has some mighty men engaged in evangelism. Nevertheless he asked us to come and we accepted.

Marion Center is a town outside of Indiana and has a very strong Methodist following. We enjoyed every minute spent with this people. We visited the high school and spoke in all the grade schools, besides delivering my lecture on a Sunday afternoon in a neighboring town, so you see we were kept busy. One of the high spots of the meetings was the splendid high school night. What a privilege it was to preach to such a live bunch of young people. We were glad to tell them that we have faith in the modern youth and that Jesus calls them to higher service for him.

The Easter service was very impressive, in all it was the best of the year for us, all things considered; 65 at the altar took a stand for Christ. It was a wonderful sight to see so many of them received into the church on the morning which was the anniversary of the Risen Lord. They who were risen with Christ were received into relationship with him. We shall always hold the people of Marion Center in high esteem. The wonderful spirit displayed by them toward their pastor and family and their appreciation of the work of the evangelist will long linger in my memory.

We are home for a much needed rest, and leave next week for another series of meetings in the east. We speak at our church at Masontown, Pennsylvania, on the 18th; from there proceed to hold Bible conferences and evangelistic meetings. May God bless the brotherhood everywhere.

PORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving alone in the usual order with nothing discouraging, and yet nothing that would indicate normal growth. We conducted a two weeks' Pre-Easter revival for doctrinal teaching especially for the membership. This resulted in some good and will yet bear fruit, we are sure.

The Bible school and the Woman's Missionary Society and the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, are doing good work and making steady growth. We have held two business meetings and business has been transacted in a very fine spirit.

We need more consecrated workers, and we are asking our heavenly Father to select and send them forth. We have added a Cradle Roll and a Home Department to our Bible school and this promises to tie up some homes to the school. We have lettered out several non-resident members and we have also enrolled several resident members who had been members before, since our last report. We ask your prayers, that we may know how to do our best for the Master.

BETHEL CHURCH, BERNE, INDIANA

Brother Melvin Stuckey, who works in behalf of the Sunday schools of the brotherhood, spent two days with us, about the middle of March. We feel that his work with us was worth while. Last week we had with us some students from Ashland. E. J. Rohart spent the full week with us, while on Wednesday evening we had four other young men. One is from South America and another from Japan. They were going to Indiana to spend their Easter vacation, so they just stopped off as they went through. The weather was bad that evening or the men would have had a larger audience.

On Easter Sunday we had a program. It would have made you revert your mind back to the resurrection as the children recited their parts if you had been present. Brother Rohart gave a solo which we all enjoyed very much. 156 were present for Sunday school on Easter Sunday. And our offering was near $800. We are expecting to make a definite report later. Some folks live at a distance and did not get out on Easter.

EXPLANATION

This is an answer to the Chinese puzzle appearing in the last Annual published. I have felt it necessary to make this announcement because if articles in the Evangelist as well as some not very courteous letters I have received. It has to do with the seemingly ambiguous statement "Uncertain list" in the Ministerial list in the Annual. Allow me to say that I am now hoping it will bring about the correction of an existing negligence on the part of some ministers of the Brethren church, although I did not have this in mind, to be faithful in reporting there whereabouts each year to their District Secretaries.

Be it first remembered that your National secretary has absolutely nothing to do with the addresses and charges of respective ministers. He is dependent upon the state secretaries or statisticians. If they fail to make a report he must do some tall guessing and this guessing at addresses is all right if it happens to hit but if not—well I received so many opinions as to my carelessness that two years ago I began to note "uncertain addresses." I am not laying the blame wholly on the state secretaries but more so on the different ministers. If every minister would spend one cent per year and use one minute of time all this trouble would be corrected. Let each one write thus to his district secretary and then the secretary send me his list. This is simple and easy to do but it seems some will not do it but continue to find fault and wonder what is wrong with the National secretary.

Be it further known, that practically all whose names appear in the enigmatical "uncertain" group are there because the reports sent me from the various districts did not record their names. So, I took last year's Annual and gave the addresses contained therein of these names and in order to escape criticism for the wrong address I put them in this "uncertain list" as a sort of a "beware, for this may not be the proper address of 'so and so.'" I tried to escape from drowning on the one hand and fell into a fiery flame on the other. Brethren, criticize yourselves and not me and become so angry that this year every one of you will send your district secretary your proper address along with your best wishes.

Be it finally known, that all whose names appear in this Chinese puzzle be absolved from all suspicion that by "uncertain" is those who are thought to be unfit for the ministry or doubtful as to Brethren loyalty. The secretary takes the blame for not making this statement read, "Address Uncertain" list. We trust that next fall all the state secretaries will have a complete list of all ministers in their districts to send to the National secretary. We had a hard time getting accomplished what we placed in the last Annual and even then one whole district is omitted because of "no report."

Yours for less "a priori" conclusions.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

BAKER-SMITH—On the evening of March 10, 1926, about seven o'clock, George R. Baker and Mary K. Smith were quietly married at the Brethren Parsonage, Saint James, Maryland, by the writer.

Brother Baker is well known and respected throughout the community, and is an active member of the church; his bride is a member of the Church of the Brethren. That God's blessing may rest upon them both is the wish of their many friends.

IN THE SHADOW

SPRECKER—Daniel Alex. Sprecher was born November 23, 1858, and went to be with his Lord in the early morning of April 2, 1926. Though Brother Sprecher had not been in good health for some time, his condition lately had seemed somewhat improved; hence his sudden death, by apoplexy, found his family and friends unprepared for his going, though we believe it did not find him unprepared.

It was ten years ago that he came to know his Lord as Savior, under the ministry of Brother H. W. Nowag; though we have known him but a few months we found him a man of prayer, and his last Sunday in this life found him in attendance at the services of his church. May his sorrowing wife and family find in HIM their peace and consolation.

Services by the writer, assisted by Elder McKinley Coffman, of the Church of the Brethren, at the Manor church, interment in the cemetery adjoining.

T. C. LYON.

DERR—William Derr was born in Hawkins County, Ohio, January 27, 1869, and died at Cerro Gordo, Illinois, March 8, 1926. Brother Derr was a member of the First Brethren church of Cerro Gordo. His good wife preceded him just four months to the Spirit world. Grief and loneliness caused his death. He was a willing worker in the church, and had many friends. He was kind, amiable and cheerful. I learned to love him. Funeral services were held in the Cerro Gordo church, conducted by the writer.

D. A. C. TEETER, Warsaw, Ind.

LEIDY—Henry Leidy was born near Sumner Hill, February 25, 1858. Died March 31st, 1926, aged 68 years, 1 month and 6 days. Brother Leidy was almost a lifelong member of the Pike Brethren church. I think he was baptized and married by Elder William Byers of blessed memory. He was never demonstrative in his religion or his life. He was quiet, earnest and faithful. His place in the church will not be easy to fill. He was of a class of citizens of which every community has too few. On March 12, he married Sarah Jane Mahan of Somerset County. This union was blessed with one daughter, a teacher in the Nanty Glo schools. He is survived by his wife and daughter. Brother Leidy was one of the board of deacons in the Pike church for a long period of time. He had taken his hatchet and gone into the field to do some work, and later was found dead. It was in all probability a case of heart failure. The funeral services were conducted in the Pike Brethren church by his pastor and was very largely attended. Brother Jones of Cone-maugh church rendered valuable assistance in the services. Sister Leidy and daughter have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

Emotional and Practical

Religion of the genuine and vital sort must not be lacking in either emotional experience or practical service. Some professed Christians pride themselves on the practical nature of their religion, saying that it is simply a matter of obedience, of activity, of doing unselfish and noble service, and that there is nothing of the weak, emotional and impractical about it. On the other hand, there are those who place great emphasis on intense emotionalism, on religious thrills and on high pressure experiences that cause them to break forth in moving and ecstatic utterances, and that fairly carry them away from this mundane sphere. They look with disdain upon such common, matter-of-fact and earthly qualities as helpfulness and service.

Now, both these types have much that is noble and commendable, but neither is wholly right nor worthy of unqualified praise. Religion that is all emotion soon effervesces and is gone, and that which is all activity and no feeling, is cold, unsatisfying and lacking in motive power. The mystical certainly has a right and proper place in the lives of Christian people; it is essential to spiritual penetration and understanding, to depths of devotion and power of conviction. It does not occupy large enough place in the average Christian's life. In fact, the Christian experiences of most of us are too dry and lifeless. We give ourselves too little to meditation and contemplation, to yearning after a contact with God and a sensing of spiritual realities. We need more of those deep and vital experiences that stir our souls to their depths. We need to feel more keenly the mighty movings of the Spirit; we need more transfiguration scenes; we need to press our way more often into the holy of holies where we may see through the rent veil the Lord high and lifted up. Such experiences will tend to more truly hallow, inspire and spiritualize our lives.

On the other hand, there is need also of a more perfect blending of the practical with the mystical. There are those who cultivate the spiritual sensibilities so exclusively that they come to lose their sense of relation and responsibility to the common, work-a-day affairs of life. Religion to them is wholly a matter of the proper adjustment of the individual soul toward God; the upward look is their only look; their heavenly citizenship is their only relationship and concern. Such an individual has grasped only half the content of Christianity. He could more truly call himself a Buddhist than a Christian. The religion of Christ had the outward look as well as the upward; it was concerned about others as well as self; while he held his citizenship in heaven, he also recognized his relationship and responsibility to things terrestrial. And so his life was full of service; he continually went about doing good; to that end he mingled among men, for he said, "I am among you as he that serveth," and "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." And this he made a very essential part of his teaching and a vital test of fitness for the Kingdom.

The true Christian must therefore not separate the two—a deep spiritual experience and practical helpfulness. Service is not to be considered a thing so common and unheavenly as to desecrate our holy hands. Nor is emotion to be looked upon as a weak effeminate something, unworthy of a strong Christian character. Paul was a man of great religious experience, and throughout his life he was surcharged with a mighty emotion. The keenness of his spiritual experience fairly bore him down. It was he who exclaimed, "Who shall free us from the body of this death?" "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? . . . I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, . . . nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Such depths of feeling is seldom met with. Again his exultant soul cries out for joy, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" It was Paul who said, "Whether in the body, or whether out of the body, I know not," so strongly did the mystical stream flow through his great life. Yet who will call him a weakling? Who will say he was effeminate? Far from it, if we are at all acquainted with his strenuous life. He was as strong in character as the rock-ribbed hills of Palestine, as courageous as a Cromwell, as unyielding as granite when a principle was at stake, and the flow of his life in service was as constant and powerful as the Niagara. The strongest are always the tenderest; the most inflexible feel the most deeply. He is most attractive and Christlike whose strong sinews of service are covered with the warm flesh of deeply felt devotion.

Roman Catholic Propaganda

The situation existing with reference to the present difficulty between the United States and Mexico is one of general concern. The strained relations, so far as they are strained, are due to the influence of the Catholic church, which is protesting to our government because the Mexican government is trying to free itself from the throttle-hold that church has long held on our southern neighbor. We are being told through the secular press that there is religious persecution in Mexico and that religious leaders in vast numbers are being banished, but it will help us to interpret these reports if we remember that ninety percent, or thereabouts, of the secular press, is Catholic controlled and that these reports are Catholic propaganda. The Methodist church, the strongest denomination in Mexico is not disturbed by the situation. Here is what "The Western Christian Advocate," a leading organ of the Methodist Episcopal church, has to say about the situation:

Our own bishop, George A. Miller, does not hesitate to speak out on the subject. He is perfectly familiar with the situation in Mexico, since that country is part of his area. He says there is no persecution, and that there would be no trouble if some of the religious leaders would obey the law. Therein is contained a long story of the Roman Catholic domination of the Mexican people. This story runs back as far as 1857, when the liberals of the nation, realizing the hold the hierarchy had on the nation, sought to free the people.

At that time the Catholic church held nearly one-half the taxable property of the nation; but belonging to the church, it was not taxed. Moreover, this is not half the story. The present administration is seeking to further and force the laws and the constitution. As a result, the Roman Catholic church and its leaders are being squeezed. They are the ones who are doing the howling. They are bringing pressure to bear upon our country to come to their defense. This should be guarded against in the public mind.

That last sentence is wise counsel. It is just such little disturbances as this that play into the hands of the militaristic and enable them to convince vast numbers of people that it is quite necessary to continue to struggle on under heavy tax burdens to maintain large armaments and preparations for war. And it is just such selfish, moneyed interests, whether of commercial or religious institutions, that cause wars. Let us hold steady and think straight at such times. And at present we may be thankful that our government does not seem disposed to help draw the Catholic chestnuts out of the fire.

The Vice of Scandal-Mongering

There are few sins more despicable and more harmful than scandal-mongering, and yet it is one that is very commonly indulged in, even in the church of Christ. How common it is for one person to give an imaginary interpretation of another's conduct or words—an interpretation that is discrediting and harmful! And how common it is for one to whom such a story is told to tell it to another and to add something to it. That person then tells it to another together with an additional touch of his own. And so it goes from mouth to mouth and it grows as it goes, until there results an outlandish, grossly outrageous tale that blights reputation, sets the whole community at odds and does injury beyond repair. Or the tale may start with an ounce of truth, which is distorted and enlarged and retold and exaggerated and passed on and on, twisted with each repetition, until it ends in an unimaginable monster, no more resembling the truth than darkness resembles light.

Every day and everywhere, there is to be found these gossiping tongues, that rest not until they have mouthed every scandal, corrupted every tale and evilly interpreted every leader or worker in the church. Many a church has been rent in twain, many a hopeful field has been ruined and many a leader in the Lord's work has had his leadership discredited and his usefulness nullified by some vicious, wagging tongue.

Who can escape the harm of an evil-minded tongue? And how can its poison be counteracted? It is like the very spirit of evil itself—it is everywhere present, and its destructiveness is beyond calculation and irreparable.

Some one tells us how that old worthy, Udall, who preached in London in the seventeenth century, made a sermon against the scandal-mongers of the court.

He told a story of scorpions—how that men, fearing to be stung, would set their beds into water pans; but the scorpions, climbing to the ceiling of the room, would let themselves down, one clinging to another, and that one to a third, and the third to a fourth—until finally the venomous chain reached the sleeper and injected the poison of death into him.

So, he narrated, scandal-mongers made their wicked chain of destruction. One whispered an inquiry; and the second a conjecture; and the third an assumption; and the fourth a positive declaration—until the poor sleeping victim was stung to death by the poison of scandal and never knew his murderer.

Scandal-mongering is a most disreputable habit among any people or group, but most of all it is to be deplored among professedly Christian people. May God so stir the hearts of all who wear the name of Christ, that this vice shall come to be so loathed that it shall be banished from mere shame.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Henry Rinehart, treasurer of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, makes another report of contributions, which speak the continued interest of the brotherhood in this worthy institution.

Our readers, whether young or past that age, will enjoy the great story of African native customs, the first chapter of which is printed in this issue, and written by Dr. Florence Gribble. It is a short story of three chapters and is both interesting and informing.

From Masontown, Pennsylvania, comes a little farewell message written in honor of their pastor, Brother J. L. Gingrich, who has closed his work there and has taken the pastorate of the Third church of Johnstown. Brother Gingrich has accomplished a good work at Masontown and we are informed that he has been appreciated.

Our correspondent from the Pittsburgh church writes an interesting letter, informing us of the excellent manner in which they celebrated Easter. Four were baptized into the church on that day, two deacons were elected, besides the congregation was inspired by the preaching of their pastor, Brother A. L. Lynn, and the rendition of a cantata by their splendid choir.

One outstanding weakness of the church lies in the fact that the vast majority of church folks, like men and women of the world, are more concerned about riches and luxury than giving and service.

You may not agree with all that your preacher says, but you should be big enough to grant him the right to say it without taking offense at it. It may do your soul good to listen to something different from what you have been accustomed to think or something that takes issue with your accustomed conduct.

An error occurred in Brother L. G. Wood's newsletter of last week so that he said: "The work is moving along in the usual order with nothing discouraging, and yet nothing that would indicate normal growth," whereas the word "abnormal" should have appeared instead of "normal", so that he meant there was nothing to indicate abnormal growth. We regret the error and are glad to make the correction.

Brother J. L. Kimmel's notice of change of address arrived too late to get in the "Announcement" column, so we pass on the information here that his address is 918 East Rudisell Boulevard, Fort Wayne, Indiana. He requests that if any one—minister or layman—knows of any Brethren people living in Fort Wayne, please write him, giving names and street numbers if possible. Brother Kimmel has accepted a difficult task as pastor of the Fort Wayne Mission, and should be given every cooperation possible.

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the Pike church in Pennsylvania, reports the outlook bright, and one confession received on Easter Sunday, though they have recently been hindered by the presence of contagious diseases in the community. Brother Bowman has been retained for an indefinite term and is entering upon his twelfth year as pastor.

The Warsaw, Indiana, church is responding to the able leadership of Brother C. C. Grisso, the pastor, in a very encouraging way. The Sunday school under the superintendency of Brother F. E. Robbins ranges about the 200 mark. A profitable series of pre-Easter services was held with various preachers holding forth behind the sacred desk. Brother Grisso is now engaged in an evangelistic effort at New Troy, Michigan.

Brother R. F. Porte, pastor of our church at Louisville, Ohio, reports the work going steadily forward. Two members have been received by baptism since the first of the year, and the pastor made use of Passion week for the instruction of the membership in matters relating to that sacred season. Brother F. E. Clapper, who has long been a pillar in the church, and is an accomplished musician, led the choir in the presentation of a splendid Easter cantata. Under the wise pastoral supervision of Brother Porte and with the Sunday school headed up by Brother L. P. Clapper, an essential cog in the Louisville machinery, the outlook of this splendid church is bright.

Read the Tract Corner. Brother Porte mentions the very ably written tract recently published in the Evangelist on "Membership in the Brethren Church." Dr. G. W. Rench has made a real contribution to the church in the presentation of this treatise. Brother L. G. Wood of Fort Scott, Kansas, recently wrote us expressing his appreciation of the article. It should be placed in the hands of every Brethren church member, new or old, and a supply should be kept on hand by the pastor so as to present each applicant for membership with a copy. It will be printed in narrow column, convenient size for enclosing in envelope.

Brother A. E. Whitted is eternally right when he says "worth-while advancement and unselfish service travel hand in hand"; it is in the accomplishment of such service as Christ can bless that new power is generated and growth is realized. He and his people were recently led in an evangelistic campaign by Brother B. T. Burnworth, and though the work was held back by the breaking out of smallpox in the town, yet there were eight confessions, besides some reconsecrations, and others are reported likely to make the decision. The work at Beaver City, Nebraska is in good condition and Brother Whitted has been retained by unanimous call for his third year as pastor of this church.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Instinct for Immortality

By L. S. Bauman, D.D.

ELDER L. S. BAUMAN
Pastor First Church of Long Beach, California

Nearly thirty-five centuries ago, in the oldest of the Biblical writings, it is recorded that the patriarch Job asked the question: "If a man die shall he live again?" That question has probably occupied the mind of man more than any other that ever was asked. It was probably the first question that fell from the lips of Adam and Eve after sentence of death was passed upon them. Who among us has not had to stand at the graveside of some one dearly beloved, and ask with tear-dimmed eyes, "If a man die shall he live again?" Men have greatly differed in their reply to that question.

Caesar declared in the Roman senate: "Beyond this life there is no place for either trouble or joy." Pliny exclaimed: "What folly it is to renew life after death! * * * Let us find in the tranquility which preceded our existence, the pledge of repose which is to follow it." However, as they were thus giving expression to their belief that the darkness of endless non-existence settles upon man at death, others as great or greater than they were expressing quite a different belief. Seneca was continually referring to the body as but an inn for the spirit of man, and was calling the day of one's death the "birthday of eternity." Cicero was declaring to his fellowmen: "After death we shall for the first time truly live!"

It may be said that in all ages, in all climes, and among all conditions of men, the atheist, who believes that death ends all, is the great exception. The instinct unto immortality is an instinct that is universal to all mankind. All the oldest literature of the human race is pregnant with the hope of immortality. On the oldest mummy cases in Egypt the lotus flower is pictured as opening to the morning sun,—emblematic of the resurrection. The Egyptian phoenix, the embodiment of the sun god, Ra, after being consumed by fire, is seen to arise in youthful freshness from its own ashes. The old Vedic hymns of the Hindus constantly proclaim eternity for the soul of man. The archeologist tells us that far back in the age of ice, men were buried with their tools and trinkets that they might have them for use in the world beyond. The Chinese from time immemorial have placed food upon the graves of their ancestors to be consumed by them beyond the "Great Divide." The American Indian was buried along with his favorite pony and his bows and arrows that he might have the same for his use in the "happy hunting ground." Never has there been found on this earth a tribe of men so low, so savage, or so degraded that it was not possessed with an instinct unto immortality.

Nature and Nature's God has gareiously provided for some answer to every instinctive longing that throbs in the bosoms of men. If a man hungers for food, Nature and Nature's God has provided bread for the satisfaction of that hunger. If a man thirsts for water, Nature and Nature's God has provided for the wells and springs to quench his thirst. If a man calls for warmth, fire is the response that God gives thereto. If a man peers through the darkness for light to guide his steps, the sun bursts forth at the command of the Eternal Satisfier. If the human heart calls out for love, children are born and sweethearts step forth, created in the image of God. There is not a pure desire that can enter the heart of man to which Nature and Nature's God does not respond with complete satisfaction.

Now, and then, the greatest of all the instinctive longings of the human breast, the instinct unto immortality, is an instinct higher than all these that we have named. And is it possible that Nature and Nature's God has provided a satisfying response to all the lower longings that crowd within the human heart, and yet go utterly deaf to the greatest of all longings,—the longing for life clothed with immortality? That cannot be! It would be utterly incongruous if true!

It is not necessary that the world of science or of human philosophy should be able to prove or to comprehend the resurrection or immortality, to the end that our faith may be firmly fixed in it. There are some things that men understand to be true that are beyond all the comprehension of men. And the world of science itself is constantly dealing with such things. It was fifteen centuries and more before the resurrection of Jesus Christ that Job answered his own question, "If a man die shall he live again?" He cried: "I KNOW that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God." We may well ask, How could this old saint, long before ever the broken grave in old Judea proclaimed the Easter hope to the world,—long before ever a single word of the Holy Scriptures flowed from the pen,—how could Job say with such assurance, "I KNOW that my Redeemer liveth, and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet IN MY FLESH shall I see God!" Ah! It was this very instinct within him that caused him to burst forth with that glad exclamation of hope. Now Webster tells us that instinct is "Natural inward impulse; unconscious, involuntary, or unreasoning prompting to any mode of action whether bodily or mental." Reason, a thing almost deified by men,—indeed, has been deified by some men,—reason must step aside when genuine instinct leads the way. And if reason can lead a man to his home, much more can instinct.

Job cried, "I KNOW!" How did he know? How does the bee, far away from its hive, in the tangled jungle, when loaded down with wax or honey, arise from its task and travel unerringly the "bee-line" for home? Let the wisdom of this world explain that if it can. They may theorize as they may. But finally every honest investigator will admit that he stands in the presence of a profound mystery.

Some months ago, my son, Paul, took two of his homing pigeons, and we took a trip which led us far up into California's desert, above Barstow. Neither of these pigeons had ever been more than thirty miles from home before. And up in that desert, upwards of two hundred miles from home, after traveling there in a box with several holes punched into it to admit air, those two homing-pigeons were released into the desert. Instantly they arose high in the air, circled about a few times, and then traveled the road over desert waste, mountain fastnesses, orange groves, over city after city, and descended only when they were above their humble little home in our back yard. Let the intellect of man, if so vain as to refuse to believe nothing that it cannot explain, or so vain as to travel no road unless charted by men of science,—let the intellect of man explain that? There is some unexplainable thing in the breast of the homing pigeon which for want of a better word, we call instinct. It simply impels the bird on its homeward flight. There is something within the breast of man, call it what you will, that simply impels him toward life and immortality. It leads him homeward. And shall the inward impulse that leads the humble little bird safely home, shall not that same impulse lead back to God and heaven and home the children of the Almighty who trust in him? Surely! Surely!

Doubtless there is some one listening to my voice tonight that knows the sorrowful path that leads to some "God's Acre," some city of the dead. You have often asked yourself the question, "Will my darling live again?" "Woman, why weepest thou?" "Dry those tears!" Let no vain reasoning of unbelief destroy within your breast the instinct unto immortality. Let not your wings of faith droop and leave you to perish by the wayside! Follow the homeward impulse within you that leads to God. You will arrive home, and there you shall press to your bosom again your beloved! But you must keep alive your faith in God.

Your flight home is along the line of faith and not of sight; You will only die provided you refuse to hear the voice that calls to all the sons of men, "Arise and go to thy Father!"

Nineteen years ago this Easter, my own first-born, a little lad of but six and a half summers, stood before the Sunday school of the First Brethren church in the city of Philadelphia, and spoke with voice clear and strong, one verse of the Easter exercise. We shall never forget it, for it was a prophecy! For he passed out of that church that day, to fulfil his own words. A few days later, and the black diphtheria laid its terrible hand upon him, and he was gone. I leave his farewell message of glad hope with you tonight:

But there's a land that shall ne'er know decay;
"Soon we will fly from your sight far away,
Where reigns the Risen One, new life to bring Unto his own in Eternity's Spring!"
Long Beach, California.

The Why, When and How of Ashland College Memorial Endowment Campaign

By W. S. Bell, D.D., Campaign Secretary

The year 1928 will be the GOLDEN JUBILEE ANNIVERSARY YEAR of the College. This institution was given birth in the year 1878 and we desire to celebrate its 50th anniversary in having it in the front ranks of the colleges of America, fully endowed and equipped and received into the membership of the conference of colleges of first rank.

When Does the Campaign Begin?

The Memorial Endowment Campaign will begin the 15th of April, 1926 and will close when all the churches have been canvassed. This work will be pushed to completion as rapidly as the Endowment Secretary can canvass the field.

The Endowment Field Secretary

The Collegé Board has secured W. S. Bell as Endowment Secretary, who resigned his pastorate at Dayton, Ohio in the interest of this campaign. He will endeavor to visit every church in the Brotherhood to present the work and needs of the College and canvass the membership for subscriptions and gifts for the Endowment.

Why Called Memorial Endowment

A large memorial bronze tablet will be placed in the entrance of Science Hall at the close of the campaign. On this tablet will be inscribed the name of every church that has fully cooperated in the campaign. Also the names of the HONOR GIVERS. In front of the Tablet there will be placed a memorial receptacle with a glass top, that will contain a book in which will be recorded the name of every giver and the amount given, with the names of organizations and churches and their respective gifts, also the total gifts by Districts. This will remain for all time as a memorial to the givers and the campaign.

Honor Givers

The HONOR GIVERS whose names will appear on the Memorial Tablet, will be those who have given $1,000.00 or more to the endowment. This will include a family group, or two individuals to recognition whose total gift is not less than $1,000.00. The name of the family in such instances will be placed on the Tablet and where there are two individuals, the names will be coupled together on one line. Also the names of organizations, or local church Societies will be given like recognition, whose gifts are $1,000.00 or more.

In case a memorial gift is made, in memory of another, the name to whom the memorial is made will be inscribed on Tablet, provided that the gift is not less than $1,000.00.

Terms of the Endowment

Cash, notes, pledges and annuity gifts will be received. All sums under $25.00, a pledge will be received and the maximum time given for payments will be one year.

All amounts given from $25.00 to $100.00, notes will be received bearing 5 per cent interest and maximum time given will be three years. All amounts over $100.00 given, notes bearing 5 per cent interest will be received and the maximum time given will be five years.

Annuity Gifts and Annuity Bond

There are those who desire to leave a portion of their estate after death, for the maintenance of the Church, but do not feel able to make a large gift during life time on account of their dependence on their income from money saved.

In most instances where wills have been made favoring the church interests, it has been the cause of legal proceedings by the heirs to break the will and in the end the church usually receives nothing and those who expected their requests carried out have failed.

In order to protect such, in that their wishes may be carried out after death and at the same time guarantee to them a good rate of interest and income during life—The College has provided a GUARANTEED ANNUITY BOND for any amount that may be given, which will be an absolute safe investment for life (as safe as the best bank in the world.) This ANNUITY BOND will guarantee a regular annual income and at the death of the giver, the bond becomes the property of the College.

Dayton, Ohio.

MEDITATION

We need to be still in order that we may meditate. Meditation makes strong Christians. No man can maintain a strong spiritual life who takes no time for meditation. He needs to stop to consider what he is and where he is. He needs time to search his foundations and see if they are secure. David said in the First Psalm of such a man, who meditates "in the law of the Lord day and night" that "he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water that brings forth fruit in his season, his leaf also shall not wither and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." There are people who are so busy ministering to others that they take no time to look after themselves. They starve spiritually while waiting on the tables for others.—Selected.

Jewish Colonies in Palestine

By Herbert H. Tay

One thing which invariably impresses the tourist to Palestine, who has been there before, is the remarkable increase in the number of Jewish colonies, and in the Jewish population. Dr. Kyle has been to Palestine many times, the last time being but two years previous to the time we went with him, yet he was forced to exclaim over the remarkable progress made in that short time, in the establishment and growth of Jewish colonies. The increasing immigration of Jews to Palestine is one of the wonders of the age. Thirty out of every thirty-one immigrants to Palestine is a Jew. While in Jerusalem, I was speaking to Dr. Jago, the head of the American Mission in Palestine. We were standing at a point about two blocks from the northwest corner of the wall of Jerusalem.

"Do you see all these houses out here?" he said, indicating with a sweep of his arm the portion of the city which extends outside the walls for about two miles to the northwest. "All of that has been built in the past twenty years, and it is nine-tenths Jewish."

I was talking upon another occasion, to a monk in the Church of St. Anne, at the Pool of Bethesda.

"Twenty-five years ago," he said, "there were less than one hundred houses outside the walls of Jerusalem. Today there are several thousand, and nearly nine-tenths of them are owned by Jews."

What is true of Jerusalem, is true of the entire land of Palestine. Jewish colonies are springing up everywhere. Wherever one goes, he sees these groups of stone houses with tile roofs, with trees, flowers, and shrubs growing in profusion.

To many people, there is nothing significant in this remarkable influx of Jews to Palestine. But to the devout student of the Word of God, it is only that which must come to pass, in view of the prophecies. Just one verse chosen at random from a multitude of a similar tone, is Ezekiel 36: 24: For I will take you from among the nations, and gather you out of all countries, and will bring you into your own land. Here Jehovah is speaking to Israel, and prophesying his future restoration.

The Jews who are settling in Palestine are coming principally from Russia and Poland. Coming from such a country, one would not expect to find religious life at a very high pitch in them. Such is the case. After living in an environment of atheism for many years, those Russian and Polish Jews who are coming to Palestine have no religion whatever. Contrary to the beliefs of many, Zionism is not a religious, but a national movement. It is not their religion that is causing the Jews to return, it is their nationalism. Again, this is according to prophecy. One among many on this subject is Romans 11:26: There shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. The Jews are ungodly, not in the sense that they are wicked and immoral, but that they have no God. When their King comes again, he is going to find a people without any religion and will turn away their ungodliness.

That the Jews are not wicked and immoral, is shown by the many pleasant relations which we had with them. At one time we were walking from Galilee to Hermon. We had walked about twenty-five miles one day when we came to a Jewish colony. I saw one of the young men standing in front of a house, and in broken German asked him the road to Baniyas (Caesarea Philippi). He politely told me the way, but insisted that it was too late for us to continue our journey that night, but that we should stop with them in their colony. This we were not loath to do, seeing we had walked a long way in the hot sun, so we stopped. They took us into the kitchen and gave us something to eat. That was about five o'clock in the afternoon. We were shown about the colony afterward, and then about eight o'clock the men and women came in from the field and we had a large dinner. There were no vacant rooms where we might sleep that night, so two of the women and two of the men, including the leader of the colony went down and slept in the dairy house, and let us have their beds. In the morning they gave us breakfast and also some lunch, and sent us on our way rejoicing. Yet for all this kindness they would not take a single piastre. We were travelers, and they were glad to entertain us. This is only one of a number of instances where we were treated most royally by the Jews in their colonies.

One remarkable feature of this return of the Jews, is that the land is being acquired by purchase and not by conquest. Every other time it has been won by war. Now the Jews are buying the land, and are paying a good price for it.

This is according to the prophecy of Jeremiah 32:44, which says: Men shall buy fields for money . . . for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the Lord.

While the Arabs have been using antiquated methods, and have been receiving a meagre return from the soil, the Jews are introducing modern machinery and methods, and are meeting with remarkable success. In the Philistine Plain, fruit raising is the principal occupation. Oranges, apricots, and peaches are raised with great success. In the Plain of Esdraelon, grain is grown in abundance. North of the Sea of Galilee tobacco is being cultivated with considerable success. Wherever the Jew has set his hand, vegetation has begun to grow. It seems that the land is being prepared for that time when The desert shall blossom as a rose;—and—A handful of corn upon the mountain-tops, the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon. The Jew is being helped a great deal by the change in the rains. Brother Cobb says that when he visited Palestine about twenty-two years ago, the average annual rainfall was six inches. At this time, according to the government reports, it is twenty-six inches. The remarkable thing about it is, that the increase is due principally to the rains of March and April. These are the "latter rains" of Scripture. Joel, in speaking of the restoration of the land says, And he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain and the latter rain in the first month. God is even preparing the climate and rainfall for the regathering of his people Israel.

The fact that the Jews who are returning to Palestine are taking up farming, is quite unusual. One usually thinks of a Jew as synonymous with merchant or money-lender. But that is not God's will for the Jews. In Micah the fourth chapter, it is predicted that when the Jews return to their land in the last days, that they shall sit every man under his own vine, and under his own fig tree. Also, that they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks. This latter is prophesied of the nations, but it is none the less true of the Jews. In the last regathering, they shall be an agricultural people.

Illiteracy among the Jews is very rare. Whereas nine-tenths of the Arabs can neither read nor write, the proportion is just the reverse among the Jews. They have the best schools in Palestine and the new university which is being organized, and is located upon Mt. Scopus, is in time to be the equal of any similar institution on earth. It is significant that the Jews are learning the ancient Hebrew language. Perhaps not so much the ancient Hebrew, as a modernized form of it. This is made necessary by the great variety of languages spoken by the returning Jews. They need some common tongue, and what language is more appropriate than that of their fathers? Again they are fulfilling prophecy, for Jeremiah says, As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity.

One sees on every hand, the fulfillment of prophecy in the return of the Jews, and it brings to our minds the words of our Lord, who said, So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand.

The Thinking Aristocracy

By Dr. David H. Fouse

There are plenty of brains in the world. Every man has a skull full of them. Intellectual power, however, is not measured by the quantity of this material stuff. With 9,000,000,000 brain cells, one may use but a few millions. The unused billions are of little more worth than those in the head of a calf. Entirely apart from the mere automatics of the brain which we have in common with all men and most of the animals, is that rare activity which is known as thinking. A man of much discrimination, having made a careful survey, finds that there are twenty-one thinkers in the entire municipality. This, of course, includes the reader along with twenty unknown others. No man would dare to be specific in naming such findings. Edison is more charitable even if he is less just. He declares that as many as as two out of every 100 think. There may be some among the 98 per cent who have not been discovered. No thinker, however, can keep himself concealed. He must come out from the crowd. "Beware," said Emerson, "when God lets loose a thinker." He is always a storm center. He lives in a din of protest. His thinking leads him out of the beaten tracks. When one gets out of the ruts it jars every one around him. Folks love inertia and they become angry with anyone who disturbs their intellectual slumbers. A man is not a thinker because he is an omnivorous reader of other men's thoughts. All in all the man who peruses columns of daily papers and loads of magazines has a thinking handicap which few can overcome. To get in the habit of thinking other men's thoughts over after them is paralyzing. It leaves billions of brain cells useless. A book, however valuable as the expression of another's thinking, is worse than useless if it does not set its reader to new and further intellectual excursions on his own account. He must go where he seeks no other man's tracks. He must be a pioneer in the infinite realm of truth. This takes courage and a vast strength. Few there be who will pay the price. Twenty-one or two per cent is only another way of saying that not many are willing to think.—Reformed Church Messenger.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Historical Events and Practical Beliefs of the Brethren Church

By W. R. Deeter, Minister

(A preparatory sermon to the Mid-winter revival at the First Brethren Church, Portis, Kansas, February 7, 1926.)

In the year 1708 a little band of God's own came together in a land across the sea touched by an instinct of freedom to worship God unmolested and unafraid. The first impression that comes to me is that 218 years is a long time. Many changes have come, and will come. This span of years gives time to do a good task. They stood for the doctrine that all declarations of faith outside the Word of God were to be rejected and the Gospel alone to be the rule of faith and practice. This has always been the basis of common belief among the Brethren.

In the year 1719 the first group of Brethren came across the vast expanse of water to a new country—a new world—America.

In 1723 others came, and they established a church at Germantown, Pennsylvania. This place and church has become a historic spot in the makeup of Dunkard activity through all the years.

The "Dunkard" people have always been a peace-loving denomination, and their motto has always been "The Whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." Our church's aim has always been to promote the Kingdom of God from that standpoint. No denomination need die if she sticks to her aim and purpose—to extend the Kingdom. We believe the Brethren church will ALWAYS exist, because it was founded on BIBLE PRINCIPLES. We have a noble and a Godly heritage, and we must carry on; we need to make and HOLD it sacred NOW.

I. The Dunkard people (Brethren, and Church of the Brethren) pioneered in many of the moral and religious movements which we today enjoy.

The year 1738 marks an important place in Christian Education, not only for our church, but for ALL churches. That year the first Sunday school in America was established—and to the Brethren peoples should go the credit for this new epoch in religious education. At Germantown, Pennsylvania, in the home of Christian Sower, the young folks gathered on Sunday afternoon for religious instruction from their elders,—almost forty years before Robert Raikes gathered the boys off the street for similar teaching in that city in England. It was Christian Sower who printed the first Sunday school cards containing verses from the Bible. The Brethren had the first printing press in America. They printed the first Almanac.

a. The Dunkard Brethren have always taken advanced steps on the question of Temperance. In the days when distilleries were common, no Brethren were allowed to own one. They were also forbidden to sell strong drink. And WE are STILL ADVOCATES OF PROHIBITION.

b. In Peace. From the beginning we have opposed war, though none ever raised a hand in rebellion against his country. In the Civil War, and the World War, we tried to bear our part in the peaceful work of reconstruction and relief. We have maintained a Peace Committee in our Conference for a number of years. We still seek to maintain peace and good will among men.

c. In Slavery. Here again, the Brethren took advanced grounds. None could own slaves. In the long debates on the question, the Brethren never wavered from the decision, neither was there any division in the church because of it as was the case in both the Methodist and the Baptist). If all Christian denominations had done as the Brethren there would have been no war.

d. In Oath-Taking. We, in common with all the leading churches teach against the use of profanity, and we are not true to our heritage which the church has brought us, if we use it; and besides it is not right in the sight of God. We Brethren go farther . . . we do not believe in the civil oath that is so commonly used, believing that the words of the Master positively forbid it:—Matthew 5:33-37.

e. On Marriage. The church has endeavored to maintain purity of life and the marriage relation. Fornication and adultery have always been looked upon as grave sins.

It is upon this one question only that we feel the marriage relation should be broken.

f. In Public Worship. This has always been emphasized by Brethren. It is a means of grace to help us live the GOOD life. We long for fellowship with one another and with God. The method of worship has always been marked for its simplicity and the lack of formality. The hour of praise and worship is a welcome one. It is a time of rejoicing together. We observe Sunday—the first day of the week, as the true Christian Sabbath. Acts 20:7; John 20:19. Family prayer and worship were more common at one time than now. The home and mid-week services were looked upon as a divine means of grace, and were feasts of fellowship creating a fine spiritual influence with seasons of blessings to Christians.

All-day meetings were held which left impressions never to be forgotten. These services also had their social value, and they do yet today. They believed and we still believe if we "keep the ordinances we shall live" and grow in grace. To go to church and be ACTIVE is yet a stimulus which helps us appreciate its VALUE in Christian experience. The out-and-out church member will not be invited to drink and gamble or do a hundred other things that the world man will be invited to do. Even worldly people respect the person who lives for Christ. But the one who refuses to do so opens the gate for the enemy to come in with all the fiery darts of the wicked one. Who is so STRONG he can afford to risk the loss of the protection which the church affords?

II. We believe the first steps into the Kingdom involve faith, repentance and baptism—the acceptance of Jesus as Savior and Lord.

1. Faith is commanded, Heb. 11:1; Mark 11:22. "Faith is the substance of things hoped for . . . it will remove mountains." Many miracles are recorded that were performed by faith. "Thy faith hath made thee whole" (Matt. 9:22). This is where the woman touched the hem of his garment, and was healed. Faith brings the believer pardon. "Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10:43). Faith enables the believer to stand; faith makes the believer accepted " . . . he hath made us accepted in the beloved" (Eph. 1:6). Faith brings the believer reward; "He that believeth on me shall never hunger . . . or thirst" (John 6:35). Faith brings a crown of life.

2. Repentance is a "turning round" and going in the opposite direction. The Lord Jesus came to call sinners to repentance. John preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins.

3. Baptism. Baptizo, in the whole history of the Greek language, has but one meaning—to dip; to cover up; to plunge; to immerse. The manner of baptism should correspond with the significance of baptism, that it may show a certain and plain sign of it. "And he commanded the chariot to stand still, and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him" (Acts 8:38).

The Command. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen" (Matt. 28:19, 20). This he said just before he went away. He wanted the things which he commanded to be perpetuated. At one time Martin Luther baptized a virgin in a large tub of water, immersing her three times forward. The great Talmage, while traveling in Palestine, asked one named Huss-ton, to baptize him just like Christ was baptized in the Jordan river, as they sang "On Jordan's Stormy Banks I Stand. . . ." When Jesus began his ministry, he was baptized of John, and then John's disciples began to follow Jesus. Jesus preached and they baptized, presumably in the same manner as John.

Jesus preached the Kingdom as John did, except he gradually explained the spiritual nature which John could not do. When he finished his work he commanded the disciples to go and preach and baptize, as in Matthew 28:19, 20, above quoted.

That this commission meant immersion in water and not merely a gift of the Spirit, is shown by the practice of the early church—Peter preaching on the day of Pentecost (Acts 2:38, 39); Philip and the eunuch; (8:36:38); the account of Paul's conversion and baptism (9:18).

It is a symbol of regeneration, and represents the passing of the believer from the old life of sin, into the new life in Christ—from the world into the Kingdom (John 3:5). Baptism is the initiatory rite into the Christian church.

4. We believe and practice the Lord's Supper. John 13:1-7. This ordinance is three-fold, embracing feet-washing; the Supper and the Eucharist (communion of bread and wine): Jesus washed the disciples' feet, and he commanded them to wash one another's feet (John 13:14). He sent them to make disciples of all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever he had commanded. They went forth preaching the Gospel, making disciples, and teaching them to observe the "all things"—feet washing, the Lord's Supper, and Communion; baptism, repentance, etc. John 13:1-ff.

The Supper—He riseth from supper . . . That is, he riseth from the table; preparation had been made.

A Devotional Reading of Matthew's Gospel
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience.)

MONDAY

MOCKED OR MOCKERS—Matt. 27:27-31.

Some of the greatest people, the noblest causes and the most abiding truths have been mocked and derided at the outset, but later have been exonerated, exalted and crowned with glory, to the shame and humiliation of the mockers. It is better to be mocked than to be a mocker.

TUESDAY

CALVARY—Matt. 27:32-44.

How much meaning is gathered up in that word! Hitherto Calvary was an insignificant and inconspicuous knoll, but henceforth it is the center of the world's interest and history and the guarantee of human redemption.

WEDNESDAY

THE GLOOM OF DEATH—Matt. 27:45-56.

Jesus is dead upon the cross; an awful scene! The sun is veiled in blackness, the earth trembles and graves shudder as the Son of God enters their dark abode, but those who look upon the scene in the light of faith see the veil is now rent in twain and heaven is opened.

THURSDAY

ENTOMBED AND GUARDED—Matt. 27:57-66.

Jesus buried in the tomb of a cowardly friend, the disciples and the women rest in sadness "according to commandment" on the Sabbath, but the enemies of Jesus do not rest. They are disturbed at the strange things accompanying the end and fear lest even in death they may not have wholly gained the victory and they have the tomb sealed and guarded.

FRIDAY

THE RESURRECTION—Matt. 28:1-10.

" 'Tis the spring of souls today;
Christ hath burst his prison,
And from three days' sleep in death,
As the sun, hath risen."

SATURDAY

THE GREAT DECEPTION—Matt. 28:11-15.

Just what might be expected from such "bitter-enders," with hearts sealed against the truth! Baffled at the last there was nothing left for them to do but to foist a clumsy deception upon the people, a saying "commonly reported among the Jews to this day."

SUNDAY

THE FINAL COMMISSION—Matt. 28:16-20.

As Max Mueller has said, "The very soul of our religion is missionary, progressive, world-embracing; it would cease to exist if it ceased to be missionary, if it disregarded the parting words of the Founder."—G. S. B.

"And as they were eating Jesus took bread" (Matt. 26:26).

"And as they did eat, Jesus took bread," (Mark 14:22).

"Communion of bread and cup," (Luke 22:19; 1 Cor. 11:22).

The Eucharist. Consisting of unleavened bread and wine. This is emblematic of the broken body and shed blood of Christ. Reference above, and also 1 Corinthians 10:16; 11:24-25. Why accept the latter, and reject the other two? Jesus laid more stress on feet-washing than ALL the rest, and the pattern was given the same night. He wanted these things to be perpetuated. If he did not, then he was doing some of the most FOOLISH things the last twenty-four hours of his life that any man ever did. If they are to be done in his name, they should be carried on, and not lost sight of. It meant MORE than just the performance of the "act". The world needs the TEACHING of the BOOK, and CAN'T WE SEE THE DEEPER MEANING?

5. Laying on of hands. Paul was at Ephesus, and he finds certain disciples (12 men, Acts 19:1-7). He lays hands on them with prayer that they might receive the Holy Spirit.

6. Anointing and prayer in sickness—James 5:14, 16. This has been a faithful practice of the Brethren through the years of activity, and many rich blessings have come to those who had faith in the ordinance. Even miracles of restoration to both physical and spiritual health have been recorded on the annals of time.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Walk of a Christian

By Mrs. Laura D. Wheatcroft

OUR SCRIPTURE

"Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's highway, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders" (Numbers 20:17).

OUR MEDITATION

The people of Israel were on their way to the Promised Land. Their path through the wilderness led them through the country of Edom. Moses, their leader, sent a message of the king of the Edomites, requesting that they be permitted to pass through their country. This request was refused, but in the message that Moses sent is found a description of the walks of a Christian. And by a Christian is meant one who has been born again through the precious blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. We, in these days of sin and pleasure-loving, would do well to examine ourselves and see if we measure up to the standard we find in this verse.

In the first place we see the Israelites were "passing through," that is, they were pilgrims. Are we not pilgrims journeying on our way from earth to heaven? We have here no continuing city. Peter says, "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Peter 2:11). Being pilgrims they were also strangers in the country of Edom and so are we in this world. The Israelites were passing through the enemy's territory. The Edomites had always been their enemies and after this occurrence continued to be. Formerly we were friends of the world but now, being in Christ Jesus, we are no longer united to the world but to Christ and friendship with the world is enmity against God. This world is under the control of our enemy, Satan, and we too are passing through the enemy's territory. They, the people of Israel, were on a journey—so are we. It is important to remember this, else we will become entangled and occupied with the things of this world instead of the things of God. Notice, too, that they had a certain path that they were to follow as they passed through the king's highway. No turning to the right, nor to the left. So we too should follow the path he has made. He says, "Follow me" (Matthew 4:16).

In the second place we see this was to be an independent walk. The Israelites did not wish to take anything from the Edomites. "We will not pass through the fields or through the vineyards." The Edomites had nothing that the Israelites wanted. Their sustenance could not nourish God's people, for did he not himself provide for them each day with the manna he sent? Did he not supply them with water from out of the Rock? No, the food, the husks of the world cannot nourish the children of God. He has given us his Word to feed our hungry souls. As we feast at his table our hearts are satisfied. They said they would not drink of the water of the wells. Why? It did not quench their thirst. The Christian's thirst cannot be quenched at the broken cisterns of this world's pleasure. "Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation" (Isaiah 12:3). The one who is Christ's has said, as did the woman at the well, "Give me this water that I thirst no more," and has drunk deeply of the water of life. Israel said they would not pass through the vineyards. Here, we know, grew the grapes that were used for wine, and wine, we are told, maketh glad the heart of man. No, it is not the joys of this world that make us glad but "in his Presence is fulness of joy and at his right hand are pleasures forevermore" (Ps. 16:11).

In the third place notice it was a steadfast walk—"we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left." Did not our blessed Lord "set his face as a flint" (Isaiah 50:7), and should not we his followers, do likewise? Be determined to do God's will as he reveals it at any cost. The Israelites were not going to be allured by any pictures the Edomites might paint of life in the land of Edom. They were not going to be enticed to turn aside by stories of the luxuries and pleasures that the Edomites enjoyed. They were not, either, going to be discouraged by tales of the hardships of the journey before them. No, they would not turn. Oh, if only Christians had such fixed minds that they would not be attracted by the pleasures of the world nor discouraged by the testings and trials of the way. Set your face like a flint, make up your mind to go through.

What a picture indeed of the journey of God's children—

A Pilgrim Walk, wherein they go as a stranger passing through the enemy's territory on a journey.

An Independent Walk, in which they find no sustenance in the husks of the world, no quenching for their thirst in the wells of pleasure and no joy in worldly enjoyments.

A steadfast Walk, as they are not turned aside by the allurements or discouragements of the enemy.

No, theirs is a better portion. Being pilgrims and strangers, they, or rather we, journey on the King's Highway, our souls fed on the Bread of Life, our hearts refreshed with Water from the Well of Salvation and our joy to do his will and be in his Presence. We are steadfastly following our Lord not being influenced by the happenings of this life, knowing that of the Lord we shall receive our reward, and looking forward to the day when our journey will be ended and we shall see him face to face.

OUR PRAYER

Our Father in heaven, in Jesus Christ we pray that thou wilt enable us to walkworthily, circumspectly, in the fear of the Lord, knowing that here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come. May we keep our lives free from the contaminating influences of this world and may we hold our course steadily forward unto the end for Jesus' sake. Amen.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Development of Worldly Civilization

Genesis 4:16—5:32. The story of the development of man moves rapidly over centuries. We move on to the seventh generation in the line of Cain, and find Jabal, "the father"—originator—"of such as dwell in tents, and of such as have cattle," the wandering herders who must go from place to place to find pasture. Jubal, his brother, was the father of all such as handle the "harp"—stringed instruments, and "organ"—wind instruments, pipes, combined together—the beginning of the fine arts, music, and song. Tubal-Cain, a half-brother of the others, was "an instructor of every artificer in brass and iron." The finding and working of metals made a long step toward civilization.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Development of a Godly Line

Gen. 4:25, 26; 6:1, 2. Seth, a younger brother of Cain, took his place in the home family, and in the days of his son Enos began men to call upon the name of the Lord Jehovah, the true God who was in later times revealed as Jehovah the ever-living God. This public worship of God was essential for the preservation of the true religion as the numbers of people increased. "The human soul withers without prayer and worship and contemplation of God fully as surely as the body weakens without light, air, exercise, and food." Here began the clear division of men into two lines of development,—sons of God and children of men." Ibid.

The Righteousness of Noah

"Noah began his life when it was growing harder to be a good man. A man had to guard himself everywhere against poisoned air; and Noah kept himself securely by walking with God (Gen. 6:9). He was a just man and perfect, says the record in Genesis; he became a great priest of intercession, says Ezekiel; he was a preacher of righteousness, according to the witness of Peter. The solemnity of his theme as preacher—'moved with fear' (Heb. 11:7)—sent him home each time to pray more earnestly for those who listened and mocked."—Ibid.

The Deluge

Tablets containing a part of the deluge stories have been found in many of the ruins which have been uncovered in Mesopotamia. "The account of the deluge is a universal tradition in all branches of the human family, with the sole exception of the black race. And a tradition everywhere so exact and so concordant cannot possibly be referred to as an imaginary myth ... It must necessarily be the reminiscence of an actual and terrible event ... near to the primitive cradle of mankind, and previous to the separation of the families from whom the principal races were to descend." Lenormant. It is also interesting to know that the account as given in Genesis is the most simple, and entirely free from the unlikely or bizarre statements found in others.—Ibid.

The Ark

"In the beginning of the 17th century, says J. D. Michaelis, a ship was built with a

The Teacher's Temple

A builder builded a temple,

He wrought it with grace and skill;

Pillars and groins and arches

All fashioned to work his will.

And men said as they saw its beauty,

"It never shall know decay,

Great is thy skill, O Builder!

Thy fame shall endure for aye."

A teacher builded a temple

With loving and infinite care,

Planning each arch with patience,

Laying each stone with prayer.

None praised the unceasing efforts,

None knew of the wondrous plan,

But the temple the teacher builded

Was unseen by the eye of man.

Gone is the builder's temple,

Crumpled into the dust;

Low lies each stately pillar,

Food for consuming rust,

But the temple the teacher builded

Will last while the ages roll;

For that beautiful, unseen temple,

Was a child's immortal soul.—Selected.

rounded hull, after the proportions given in Genesis 6, and it was found, to the astonishment of all, that these proportions, given in the oldest book in the world, were precisely the most advantageous for safety and for stowage. Peter Jansen, a Mennonist who lived at Hoorn, in North Holland, was its builder, and his ark differed from Noah's only in size. When launched it proved to be able to bear a third more freight than other ships of the same measurement. The Dutch at once built others like it, calling them Noah's Arks, and they ceased to be used only because they could not carry cannon."—Geikie.

The Rainbow Token

"I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth." Dr. S. R. Driver has said. "The Hebrew perfect tense is ambiguous; and may express either I have set, viz., long ago, from the beginning, or I have just set, I set now, or even I will set. The appearance of a rainbow depends, of course, upon the laws of refraction and reflection of light; and it is incredible that these laws did not exist, as a fact, till the time of Noah... If... his (the writer's) meaning, is rightly expressed by the margin of the Revised Version, the all that is future is and it shall be for a token, etc., and the writer may have regarded the phenomenon as occurring before that and he merely represented it as invested now with a new significance as the sign or symbol of mercy."

"Very beautiful is this idea of God giving us something to look at, in order to keep our faith steady. He knows that we need pictures, and rests, and voices, and signs, and these he has well supplied. We might have forgotten the word, but we cannot fail to see the bow."—Joseph Parker.

The rainbow as a sign of God's promise is peculiarly appropriate and beautiful. (1) It is formed on the rain itself, the rain which produced the flood. (2) "After the appearance of an entire rainbow, as a rule, no rain of long duration follows." Indeed, the rainbow is a proof that the storm is partial, not covering the whole sky. The sun of God's mercy is shining on the rain. (3) The darker the storm, the brighter the rainbow. (4) "As it lights up the dark ground that just before was discharging itself in flashes of lightning, it gives us an idea of the victory of God's love over the black and fiery wrath."—Delitzsch. (5) "It is just in its conformity to natural law that the rainbow is a pledge that the order of nature shall continue."—Denio. (6) It can be seen everywhere in all parts of the earth; it is all embracing. (7) It is very beautiful and attractive. God gives a winning beauty to his angels, to his messengers of mercy, and to his promises, in order to attract men and show his love. (8) It forms an arch, wide as the storm, and binding earth and heaven, God and man, together in peace.

Daily Vacation Bible School work is being developed in Japan by H. E. Coleman, representative of the World's Sunday School Association, in cooperation with the National Sunday School Association of Japan. A number of schools were conducted a year ago this last summer and there were more this year. A forty page pamphlet was prepared in Japanese which describes the working of Vacation Bible schools. These were sent to all the Branch Associations of the National Sunday School Association in Japan. Special attention was also given by Mr. Coleman to work for boys in which Boys' Clubs were featured. A book on Boys' Activities has recently come from the press.

What a beautiful sight to see the lights in a house streaming out and making paths of gold in the darkness of night. So do those in whom is lighted the torch of love shine forth light into the dark world of sin and reveal paths of righteousness for wayward feet.

Plans for the Junior Committees

Something Simple and Just a Little Different. Try These Plans.

By Rev. Robert P. Anderson

Missionary Advisors

For Missionary Committees

In many societies the missionary committee depends absolutely on the help and advice of the superintendent. This need not be so. Let the members of the Junior missionary committee go to the chairman of the missionary committee of the Senior society, and ask her to act as advisor for the Junior missionary committee. Tell her that the Juniors need help in their planning. She will be expected to be present at the Junior committee's meeting. The Juniors themselves will conduct these meetings and suggest what plans they can think of; but the advisor will be expected to make suggestions too. This will give a new piece of work for the Senior missionary committee to do, and it will be a great help to the Juniors, besides taking a burden off the shoulders of the superintendent.

Memory Hymns for Music Committees

One of the finest things a music committee can do for the Juniors is to choose each month a memory hymn and get the Juniors to memorize it. The help of the superintendent should be secured in selecting the hymn to be memorized each month. To make the work interesting the committee should be able to tell why each hymn is chosen and to give the life-story of the author of it, or tell how the hymn came to be written. A book like Dr. Amos R. Wells's "Treasure of Hymns" (published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Mass., at $2) will be a great help, as it tells the story of a large number of hymns.

An Indian Festival for Social Committees

Juniors always enjoy playing Indian. Those that have Indian dresses or suits may wear them, and Indian headaddresses may be bought or made. Use Indian phraseology in writing the invitations and announcing the social. In one corner of the room make a camp-fire by means of electric lights covered with crepe paper. Give the Juniors "wampum," which consists of grains of corn (previously soaked in water to soften the core), and let the Juniors string the "wampum" on a thread, using a needle to do this, as in stringing beads. The Juniors may wear these necklaces. Divide into several groups or tribes, and in games and contests let the sides play against each other. Have a hunt of animals cut out of paper. On each animal a score should be marked, those hidden in difficult places being given the highest score. One game is, while blindfolded, to pin a feather on an Indian head. Another is to have picked members of the tribes hop from one end of the room on one foot to the blackboard, and make a cross there. Other games may, of course, be played.

Numbering the Juniors for Lookout Committees

One duty of the lookout committee is to keep a record of the attendance of the Juniors. It is by doing this that we see who the absentees are. Here is a plan for making up the record weekly. It is easily worked. First of all, write in a book the names and addresses of all the Juniors. Then write a number opposite each name. Now give to each Junior a slip of paper, his number, and ask the Juniors to memorize their own numbers. The chairman of the lookout committee will be at the door of the meeting room at each meeting. As the Juniors come in they give him their numbers, and he writes the numbers on a pad. It is an easy matter then to mark the attendance in the record-book, using

What Shall We Do On Sunday? Matthew 12:9-13

Beatrice arose on Sunday morning with a happy heart. Beatrice always liked Sundays because on Sunday she could rest from her usual work. Breakfast was a little later than during the week, for father did not have to hurry off to his work. At the breakfast table each member of the family said a Bible verse before eating. Beatrice liked that, too, for she could always use one of her verses from the string of pearls that she was learning or some new verse that she had learned. Beatrice had a Scripture verse calendar in her room and whenever she liked the verse on it she learned it when she dressed in the morning.

After breakfast, Beatrice and her sister washed the dishes while mother got little brother ready for Sunday school and soon they were all ready to get in the car and have a nice little drive to Sunday school and church. Dinner, too, was a happy meal on Sunday but the part of the day that Beatrice liked best was the afternoon. As soon as the work was all done the family all gathered together around the fireplace and enjoyed a story hour. Sometimes the stories were Bible stories, sometimes they were stories about fairies, and sometimes they were stories that father told about things that happened at his work. Later in the afternoon, the three children took a toy, that they had bought with some of their money that they had saved, to a little sick boy. This boy always was happy when Beatrice and her brother and sister came to see him for they told him stories and made him laugh. Often they took toys to him, either new ones that they had bought or some of their own that they wanted him to have. Later in the day the children attended Junior Christian Endeavor for they liked that, too.

Do all of you, Junior boys and girls, like Sunday? I think that we should do the things on Sunday that will make the day a happy one for us, and a happy one for those around us. Would you like to think about some of the things that Jesus did on Sunday? Some of our scripture references for the week tell about him and his Sundays. For one thing he went to church. We would naturally expect that, wouldn't we? Then he read the Bible. I think that Sunday is a good time to read the Bible and Bible stories. It is a good time to read other stories, too. On Sundays when we lay aside our school work and other work and when we do not play our noisy games, it is pleasant to read good books or other good short stories.

Another thing that Jesus did on Sunday was to heal the sick. That was one of Jesus' ways of making people happy. We can not always make people well but sometimes we can help them to feel better just by remembering them, being kind to them and going to see them as Beatrice and her brother and sister did. Let us remember that this is one way that we can spend our Sundays or a part of them, that is in remembering those who are sick or who need friendship. A little girl that I know said one day, "How does it help sick people to give them flowers?" The young lady who was asked this question had just been sick, so she knew what to tell the little five year old girl who asked the question. She said to her, "It makes the person who is sick feel better when he or she receives flowers, because flowers make them realize that they have friends that like them."

A little girl once went to see her grandmother. She had never been there before and when she arrived she found that her grandmother lived in a big stately house that made the little girl feel that she must be quiet and stately too. I think that it is nice to feel that way when we go to God's house, our church. It is pleasant to feel reverent and worshipful in our heavenly Father's house. In God's house, when we feel reverent and quiet we can think of the things that he would like to have us do. He can guide us better when we visit his house and talk to him there. Do you think that you can remember that next Sunday when you go to his house? Let us try to remember these things so that we can make our Sundays both happy and helpful.

"The Children Who Were Thrown Away"

A Story of Life among the Aluru— [A Tribe of Nilotic Negroes]

Ex. 21:6. But if the servant shall plainly say, "I love my master, I will not go out free, then his master shall bring him unto God, and shall bring him to the door or unto the doorpost, and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever."

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Hotel des Mimosas
 Costabelle-Hyeres, Var. France.
 March 15, 1926.

Dear Evangelist readers:

It has been a pleasure to me to pen these few words while resting in South France, hoping that they will prove at least of interest to the younger readers. The customs described are not universal but apply to the particular tribe herein named.

Umgo, the missionary (the bird) was Miss Edith Harland, my co-worker in the days before my marriage to the beloved founder of our present work.

The story is frankly fiction, but the customs and characters are true to life.

Sincerely,

F. N. GRIBBLE.

CHAPTER I

Akana busied herself about the hut. It was a strange sort of home, not at all such as your children live in. The framework of the little building was in one piece, like a basket. Built of reeds, with high peaked roof the poles of which extended nearly to the ground, and thatched in a series of picturesque flosses, you might have thought it a huge, round bee-hive. A little porch of mud and wattle twigs appeared in front. Akana was busy at the grindstone just within. Now and then she crossed the hut to replenish the fire in the narrow, semicircular trench which served as a fireplace and cookstove combined.

One after another, the jars of grain arranged in an orderly way at the rear of the hut, and just beyond the fireplace, were brought forth to be ground. It was evident that some great event was soon to take place. She was weary with her labors, and examining the red flour which had been produced by her toil, she stored it in one of the empty jars, which she put in its accustomed place. Taking some specially prepared wood from the platform of stout poles under the roof and just above the grindstone, she prepared the red porridge known as bel, which was to serve for her own and her husband's supper. Setting it to one side to cool, she went out to bring in the goats, which always slept in a little pen in their own hut. Just back of the goat pen was a little raised sleeping-dais of hard wood, about one foot above the level of the floor. Tonight when her heavy work was done, Akana would there lay her weary body down to rest. And weary she was, and more than that, wondering. For today in the gardens she had heard a strange new story, told by a white-faced lady who had recently come to live among them. And therefore she must have time. Perhaps tonight on her bed of skin on this little sleeping dais, she would await her husband's coming from the palaver house, and as she gazed once more at the dreary walls of her little hut in the dim fire-light, she would ponder.

Yes, dreary walls they were, though she had, with the help of her brother, Onou, done her best to brighten them. In the dull glare of the fire, which was always kept burning in the hut at night, she liked to look out through the little aperture which formed the entrance to their sleeping apartment at the walls beyond. For though they were simply daubed with black mud, yet they were smooth. Here and there, done in red, white, or pale gray clay, appeared geometrical patterns, or conventional figures of men and beasts. That figure of a man above the giraffe's head was her husband, who was a great hunter, and that giraffe had been killed by his skillful bow. Strange that he should be skillful, for was not his very name, Otolo—a snake—unlucky?

But tonight, when all should be accomplished, she would not think of these things alone, but of that Wondrous Story. Dared she hope that it might be true? That little one that was soon to come, how she longed that she might pray as Wingo (the bird) had told her, to a loving Father, instead of propitiating Jok, the devil! But the omens were against the child's living. Only today as Otolo was upon the path, he had heard a bird singing on his right. A very bad omen indeed in time of peace. And had not Onou, her favorite brother, told her that only last night an unona (cat) had crossed the road in front of him, from left to right. If only it had been from right to left! And had not her brother-in-law, Oumbourou, told her that yesterday, only yesterday, a rat had appeared on the road in front of him, and instead of running straight ahead of him, had unluckily crossed the road before his very eyes. And yet she hoped. How she longed to call her expected little one Lokwaru, for that would be a lucky name, for is not a lokwaru a dove? But her husband had already said it should be called "Ozwoko" a dog! Was not he himself Otolo (a snake) and was not her favorite brother (Onou) a hyena, and she herself, was she not Akana (a donkey)? And had she not proved to be lucky in spite of her unlucky name,—lucky to be the wife of the great hunter, Otolo?

Thus she mused as she worked. At last, all accomplished, she made her meagre toilet for the night. Otolo was strangely late tonight, but she was weary—yes, ill—she would leave his porridge by the fire. She was hungry, but she was only a woman, and must not eat first. Perhaps, after Otolo had returned and supped, she would rise and eat that which remained. It did not take her long to prepare for bed. Her abundant hair already hung in strings or plaits 12 inches long, being periodically, but rarely, dressed. Her teeth were brushed during the day with a succulent twig, and white and pretty they would have been had not her lower incisors been knocked out, according to the inexorable custom of her tribe. Her lower lip was pierced, and through it inserted a piece of polished quartz, three inches long, the inner end resting on the toothless portion of the lower jaw. This she removed, as well as a similar piece of quartz from the upper lip. Her dress consisted simply of a tail of string behind, and she could not yet remove it, for she could not serve her husband's supper unless she wore this tail. To place it on a little projection of the wall at night with utmost caution was her careful custom, for no man, not even her husband, must ever touch this tail of string—under penalty of forfeiting a goat and being tried for sorcery as well. Three lines of tattooed dots about her waist completed her meagre dress.

And so she lay down on the rude floor and meagre bed of skin, but until her husband's arrival she dared not sleep.

Wonderful Words of a Saintly Man

Selected by Dorrice Pressly

After the Rev. Horatio Boner, long an invalid, had gone to heaven, a poem was found, written during the last days of his illness. We quote three of the six verses.

"Long days and nights upon this restless bed,

Of daily, nightly weariness and pain!
 Yet thou art here, my ever gracious Lord,

Thy well known voice speaks not to me in vain—

"In me ye shall have peace!"

"Sleep cometh not, when most I seem to need

Its kindly balm. O father, be to me
 Better than sleep; and let these sleepless hours,

Be hours of blessed fellowship with thee!
 "In me ye shall have peace!"

"Father, the hour is come; the hour when I Shall with these fading eyes behold thy face;

And drink in all the fullness of thy love;—
 Till then O speak to me words of grace:—
 "In me ye shall have peace!"

Let us be reminded by every token of Providence, by every peal of laughter from baby lips, from every injunction of the Holy Word of God, by every impulse of our hearts to redeem the time by faithful stewardship of our all to him who died to set men free.—George W. Truett.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

PIKE CHURCH, CAMBRIA COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA

Perhaps a line from this part of the Master's vineyard may not be wholly out of place. I am glad to say we are moving, and I think we are headed in the right direction. Our attendance and interest has kept up very well in both Sunday school and in the church. Recently some of our folks had the diphtheria, and some others of our families had scarlet fever which in the nature of the case reduced our attendance but now the quarantines are all down and the folks are back in Sunday school and church services with a determination to regain all we have lost. We are expecting to entertain the Home Circle Sunday School Association in the early part of May and already plans are being laid that will insure its success. We lifted our Foreign Missionary offering today (Easter) which will be reported by the Secretary in due time. We are back on two Special collections. One is the Superannuated Ministers' collection, the other the Benevolent collection for the Old Folks' Home. On the Sunday the one fell due, the pastor was sick, when the other was due, we were stormed out. Both will be taken care of later.

On Easter morning one soul made the good confession, and will be received into church fellowship by baptism soon. Recently the pastor was unanimously asked to remain with this people for an indefinite period of time. Today he preached his first sermon in the twelfth year in all of his pastorate, and so nearly as the pastor is able to judge, the outlook for church work is better than at any previous time.

J. L. BOWMAN.

Mineral Point, Pennsylvania.

BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

Almost a year has gone by since the Evangelist readers have been given a report of the work at this place. In that time we have been pushing ahead, not in any marked degree but with a steady upward trend in every department of our work.

In October it was our privilege to entertain the District Conference and it was a week full of inspiration as well as work and I am more and more convinced that worthwhile advancement and unselfish service travel hand in hand. Suffice it to say that we yet feel the effects of the good things brought us at that time.

Soon after conference we enjoyed another special service when some 55 men and boys banqueted together in the church dining room. Brother A. T. Nickerson, who is our efficient Sunday school superintendent acted as toastmaster and in his usual way guided those present through a very enjoyable and helpful evening. This was the second such gathering of the men and boys and we hope to make it an annual affair. A committee chosen from the W. M. S. prepared and served the meal.

At the Christmas season the choir assisted by the orchestra presented the pageant, "Christmas at the Little Brown House," using it in connection with the white gift service. This proved to be one of the most beautiful services the church here had ever given. The White Gift amounted to near $120.

Immediately after the holidays we began to plan for the coming of Brother B. T. Burnworth whom the church had secured to hold our evangelistic services in February. Only a few weeks prior to his coming on February 21, the smallpox broke out in town and we were fearful that the meeting would necessarily need be postponed, but we pressed ahead and when the 21st arrived, began the services, though under difficulties. Owing to this condition the crowds changed every few nights making progress and any definite work very hard indeed. Brother Burnworth gave most excellent service, bringing the good old gospel story night after night in a very forceful and pleasing way. I have never worked with any one where the team work was any better or more pleasant, perhaps Brother Burnworth will not be able to say as much, as I was ill through the entire meeting and not able to carry very acceptably my part of the load.

The visible results were not what we had hoped but very good considering the handicap under which we labored. There were eight confessions, aside from the reconsecrations and the whole membership was revived and brought more definitely to see the need of whole-hearted, full-surrendered service. Five or six others who were not able to attend the services the last week also expressed their intentions of lining up with the church when opportunity afforded, so everything taken into consideration, we were quite well pleased with the meetings and press on with a greater determination to do his will.

At the regular annual council meeting held April 7, we were given a unanimous call to the pastorate for the third year with a very neat increase in salary, which call we have accepted, so the Lord willing you will find us on the job at Beaver City until the fall of 1927. At this meeting our treasurer brought a most excellent report. It showed that all bills had been paid, leaving a neat sum in the treasury. Though we have some difficulties we are troubled but little with financial problems, due, I feel, to the fact that so many of our folks are tithers. May we all become more and more willing to spend and be spent in the service of the King.

A. E. WHITED.

Farewell to our Pastor

Dear brothers and sisters, the time has come to say good-bye to our pastor. The word that wrings our hearts. For he has been a faithful minister, through all his six years' stay. How sweetly the hours have passed away when we have met to sing and pray. As friends on earth we met with gladness; there never came the thought of sadness, that we must say good-bye.

We well remember when with your bride you came, a bright and smiling youth, with all the promise of hope and all the cheer of truth. We hailed you then with merriment, shout, and clasped your friendly hand. With him we started on the upward road, with newer conquests planned. Neath sunny skies we labored on together to beautify and make our church more spiritual and a brighter place to worship. And he was ever at our side in all our joys to share. Through days of toil and days of rest, we always found him near. A loyal minister and true with purpose ever clear. When skies were dark, and rough the way, and grief and trouble came, he through misfortune to us clung. His friendship to all was ever the same.

Through summer's heat and winter's cold, gladness, doubt and fear, he steadfastly remained a loyal pastor.

A new flock now is calling for him. They need a good shepherd and the cheer of the Gospel Word. He desires to go to them. We cannot keep him against his will. So it is with a sigh we clasp his hand tonight and say good-bye.

(Written in honor of Rev. J. L. Gingrich.)

MISS MELVINA WILLARD.

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

The work of our church here has been going on steadily in spite of a rather hard winter. Our country roads have been shut or impassable during most of the winter and for that reason country members could not attend regularly.

On New Year's day we held our quarterly business meeting and elected the officers of the church and Sunday school. These officers were formally installed on Easter Sunday morning and began their year's work. There have been two accessions to the church by baptism since the first of the year. Offerings were received for the various institutions of the church during this quarter.

During Holy Week we held nightly services. The pastor did the preaching, using the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah as our text for the week. The attendance and interest of the members of the church was good. Our choir under the direction of Mr. F. E. Clapper, assisted by Mrs. Harry Holloway, soprano of Canton, rendered the Easter Cantata entitled, "The King Eternal." A large audience which completely filled the church listened with great appreciation to the rendering of this fine piece of music. Easter Sunday morning began with a sunrise prayer meeting led by our Sunday School Superintendent, Brother Louis P. Clapper. The morning service was largely attended and a good offering was received for the Foreign Missionary cause.

We are very hopeful that the church will continue to achieve greater things in the future than we have attained in the past. The pastor and the superintendents of our various organizations are planning for big things. The interest manifested by representative people of the church makes us quite confident that we are on the verge of a greater advance.

R. F. PORTE, Pastor.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH OF PITTSBURGH

Once again the Pittsburgh church wishes to join with the other "Evangelist" correspondents, and acquaint the readers of that paper with the fact that we are doing things. We do not want the readers throughout the motherhood to forget that the Pittsburgh church is still on the alert.

The glad Easter day was observed last Sunday in appropriate form throughout the day. In the morning, to a large crowd, Rev. Lynn, our pastor, delivered a beautiful Easter sermon. In the afternoon the Holy rite of baptism was engaged in, when four boys, who that morning had given their hearts to God, were buried in the baptismal waters unto the remission of their sins.

In the evening a chorus of 22 trained singers, members of our own choir and some others, rendered the Cantata: "Eastertide". The main auditorium was filled, and it was necessary to use the balcony to seat quite a few people. The rendition of the Cantata was superb,—thrilling, impressive, awe-inspiring. It was grand beyond the expression of words. The writer has knowledge of the remark being made Sunday evening that our Cantata was far superior to one rendered Good Friday evening by one of the large down-town churches of our city, with a chorus of over 100 voices. Unto our own faithful choir members and those visiting singers who participated in this cantata, we publicly acknowledge, with grateful appreciation, the rendition of this beautiful cantata. Many hours of time were expended, else it would not have enjoyed the unusual success it did.

Easter Day saw the church decorated with many beautiful ferns and flowers, thus adding to the beauty and dignity of the occasion, particularly the cantata in the evening.

Pursuant to an official board recommendation adopted in January, the church elected two new deacons at the Easter morning service. This subject has been talked about, thought about, prayed about, preached about, for several weeks past, and Easter morning the membership was given an opportunity to vote for these deacons, when Brother Harry Schultz and Brother Clyde A. Garland were called to fill these important offices. Both are devout, Christian, God-fearing men, and we believe will acquit themselves creditably. The latter is General Superintendent of the Sunday school. They will be ordained in a week or two.

In regard to the Sunday school: The attendance of late has only been fairly good. Easter, the attendance of 160 was the largest attendance under the present administration, which has been in office since October 1st. It is to be hoped that this increase in attendance may continue.

The church is looking forward to a visit from Dr. W. S. Bell on Sunday, April 18th, to stress the Ashland College Endowment Fund.

The Woman's Missionary Society held an unusually successful supper in the church on Washington's birthday. Some 250 persons were served. It is the intention of the Woman's Missionary Society to purchase a much-needed carpet for our church home.

WARSAW, INDIANA

We have been blessed with spiritual prosperity in a very marked degree during the past year; and especially during the last few months we have had cause to rejoice by reason of better attendance and a renewed interest in the Lord's work, on the part of many people. Until the observance of Passion Week in our church, we had held no services of a special nature since last fall, when Rev. F. G. Coleman conducted a very profitable series of meetings for us. The church was greatly strengthened at that time, and we will long remember the good work which Brother Coleman did while in our midst. Following our revival the attendance at all the services, and the interest in the various auxiliaries of the church, continued to grow. Brother C. C. Grisso, our faithful pastor, is giving his best to us, in the pulpit and in all other pastoral work. Through the loyal co-operation of the pastor and the Sunday School Superintendent, F. E. Robbins, together with the help of an efficient group of teachers and officers, the school has grown so that our attendance often exceeds the 200 mark.

A contest was recently held between the Men's Bible Class and the Ladies' Class, in which the women were the victors. As a result the men entertained the women at a six o'clock dinner in the dining room of the church. A total of 118 attended this function. The interest manifested on this occasion reflected the enthusiasm which characterized the work of the classes during the contest. We feel that the benefits derived are of a permanent nature.

During the week preceding Easter we had the pleasure of listening to inspiring messages from several of God's faithful ministers. Rev. Greenfield, of Warsaw, an evangelist in the Moravian church, Rev. B. H. Flora, and Rev. D. A. C. Teeter were among the speakers. On Friday night we observed the Lord's Supper and Communion Service which was very well attended. On Easter Sunday the morning service was greatly enlivened by special Easter music furnished by the choir, and at the evening hour a musical program was presented under the auspices of the Christian Endeavor Society. An unusually large crowd was present at these services.

Brother Grisso departed a few days ago for New Troy, Michigan, where he is engaged in an evangelistic campaign. We trust that his work there will be rewarded by the salvation of many souls, and that his efforts may be crowned with blessing to the church at New Troy. We are now looking forward to the coming of Brother M. A. Stuckey who plans to be with us on April 25th and 26th. We anticipate with joy his visit to us, and pray that we may be blessed and strengthened through his coming.

Pray for us, that we may continue steadfast in the work of the Kingdom.

ALBERT G. HARTMAN.

7,000 BIBLES FOR NEW YORK HOTELS Making a Total of 77,000 Bibles Placed in City Hotels

The NEW YORK BIBLE SOCIETY has arranged with a number of the Hotels of New York to supply the transient guest rooms with Bibles. These Bibles were delivered on Sunday afternoon, April 11th, to the various hotels from the Marble Collegiate Church, Fifth Avenue and 29th Street, through the assistance of the New York Federation of Churches. The Federation conducts the Young People's Conference held every Sunday afternoon in this church at which Dr. Daniel A. Poling gives the address and answers questions, the service being broadcasted by W. E. A. F.

At the close of the afternoon service a thousand young people, who are registered "Boosters" for the Conference, carried the Bibles, marching up Fifth Avenue under police escort and accompanied by the Salvation Army Band and the Otilie Orphan Band of Queens. On the way up the Avenue, groups of the young people having Bibles for a particular hotel turned aside and made the delivery.

The names of the hotels which received the Bibles and the number furnished are: Hotel Alexandria, 175; Albert, 400; Alpine, 30; America, 32; Anderson, 50; Ansonia, 400; Arlington, 50; Belmore, 86; Brook, 150; Carlton Terrace, 50; Continental, 225; Cumberland, 180; Earle, 100; Empire, 200; Flanders, 200; Fulton, 50; Gregorian, 135; Grenoble, 50; Hampton, 44; Hermitage, 180; Holley, 100; Iroquois, 100; Judson, 25; Knickerbocker, 400; Latham, 50; Lexton, 6; Lucerne, 25; Manhattan Square, 100; Majestic, 60; Marguery, 60; Marie Antoinette, 100; Mayfair, House, 100; Navarre, 150; Olga, 36; Park Avenue, 200; Park Chambers, 100; Pennsylvania, 300; Princeton, 73; Saint Paul, 50; St. Regis, 25; San Remo, 50; Senton, 25; Seville, 300; Seventy-First Street Apartment Hotel, 75; Standish Arms, 130; Stratford House, 75; Sulgrave, 50; Shelton, 1,200; Touraine, 40; Van Rensselaer, 25; Wentworth-Paterson, 3; West Shore, 15; York, 200.

Many of these hotels have already received Bibles and the number delivered is simply to supplement those that are lacking. That Bibles in hotel guest rooms are of value and appreciated may be seen from the many letters received by the New York Bible Society from hotel managers and guests in hotels, extracts from which read:

"We congratulate you on your good work" ***

"I am indeed sure that these Bibles are appreciated and are a great spiritual help to many people, as it is a very common occurrence to hear remarks by guests on how much your good work is appreciated."

"I just want to say Thank-You—upon finding a Bible available in my room here. The reading of passages in it this morning has been strengthening and refreshing"

"Fifteen years ago I was leaving the Hotel on a trip. Having no Bible with me I borrowed this one, intending to leave it on my return. Unfortunately I never came back to the Hotel so the book has remained with me ever since. I have never felt right about keeping it, although I feel sure you would gladly consent to my doing so. I am returning it with many thanks and the hope that it will do some one else as much good as it has done me."

A stranger from across the sea writes: "On my way home I stopped in New York at the — Hotel and enjoyed immensely reading from the Bible I found in my room. I am writing to obtain a similar copy. I never had the opportunity of reading the Bible before and I certainly shall appreciate having a copy of my own."

The New York Bible Society carries on its work from its new Bible House at No. 5 East 48th Street, New York, N. Y.

The Bible

The strangeness of the Bible is like this: It is a pathway that you cannot miss On a May morning, when the woodpaths lead Where little children stray or cattle feed, Up to the spring. The satin hoof marks are Printed in delicate mud, and many a star-Like blossom, tangled, trampled, lives there still Deep-rooted happily in the dark rill.

I wander in the Bible. It is cool And sunlight dappled as that childhood pool; Its little verses clap and cry: "Oh, look Up to the hills!" There is no other book But is a glass you drink and drain or set One side to dally with and to forget.

The Bible bubbles up to each man's thirst, For the last traveler full as for the first, A thousand times I read. Each time the Word Is a far tune that I have never heard Before; is clothed with shining newness like The sudden green of willows on the dike.

—Bridget Dryden, in the New York Sun.

the pad. If a Junior forgets his number, a list of names and numbers may be placed on the bulletin board or the wall, and the Junior may find his number by referring to this list. When a Junior has been absent for two weeks, he should be visited to see whether he is sick.

A Big Job for Juniors for Whatsoever Committees

All over the world Juniors as well as Seniors are memorizing certain Scripture verses. This is so important a task that it should be put in charge of a definite committee, one duty of which will be to see that the Juniors get a list of the verses to be memorized, and another duty of which will be to hold contests to see which Juniors have memorized the verses best. I give here the entire list. Two years are given in which to memorize it. Do not try to do the whole thing at once, or in too big a hurry. Make this an addition to the Five Years' Memory work. Set the Juniors the task of learning, say, ten verses a week. Write on the blackboard the Scripture references each week, and call attention to them. Also write them on slips of cardboard and give them to the Juniors each week. Here is the list to be memorized in two years: Matt. 6:19-34; Matt. 7:1-8; Exod. 20:1-17; Rom. 12:1-21; 1 Cor. 13:1-13; Ps. 91:1-16; Ps. 1:1-6; Ps. 100:1-6; Ps. 23:1-6; Ps. 103:1-22; John 3:14-21; John 14:1-14; John 15:1-10; Num. 6:24-26; Rev. 7:9-17; Rev. 21:1-7; Isa. 53:1-12; Matt. 25:31-46; Luke 10:25-37.

A Check Meeting for Prayer Meeting Committees

You know the checks used in restaurants? Down one side are numbers that show the amount of your purchase, and the waiter punches the number showing the amount you must pay. Make for this meeting a lot of these checks. Use strips of thin cardboard for them. Print numbers down the left-hand side. Now prepare a programme for the meeting, writing the names of the Juniors, and placing a number opposite each name, together with a note of the things the Juniors are to do in the meeting. (It is better also to write this on the back of the checks also, thus: "Sentence prayer," "Talk," "Give out hymn number,——" and so on.) Punch the numbers on the checks according to the programme you have made out. In the meeting tell the Juniors to watch their checks and be ready to speak when their numbers are called.—The Junior C. E. World.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

Plain Mary

Promptly at five o'clock Judy returned from the doll's party, bringing only "Plain Mary," the rag doll.

"Mother," she said, in explanation, "I was the only girl there who had two dolls with her, and Emily had invited that little girl down at the end of the street, whose father is in the hospital. You know, her mother comes to wash for Emily's mother. She hadn't any doll, and she looked so lonesome that I gave her Gloria."

"You gave her your beautiful Gloria?" her mother asked, in surprise.

"But, mother," said Judy, "if you could have seen her and seen how happy it made her, you would have been glad, and you know, I never cared for Gloria the way I do for Plain Mary. I could never give Plain Mary to anyone. I've had her so long that I could never be happy without her. She's so plain and good."

"Well," said mother, "if you feel that way about it, I guess it is all right. You know which doll you love the best."

"But, mother," said Judy, "everybody thought that I was so brave and unselfish to give Gloria away and keep Plain Mary, and they made such a fuss that I was awfully ashamed, because really I gave away the doll I did not love so much and kept my favorite. That is why I didn't want to be praised. It was not very hard to part with Gloria."

"Well," said mother, "those things will happen sometimes, and then sometimes you will give something away that is a real sacrifice and nobody will realize it, and you will not get no credit for it. So you must remember that God knows the truth, and that is really all that matters!"

After that Judy felt better about it.

"Now," said mother, when supper was over, "we are going down to the dock to visit that tramp schooner. I am on the boat-visiting committee this month with three other ladies, and we have just learned that that boat leaves in the morning, so we must go tonight."

Judy loved to visit the boats. Some of the sailors were so lonely because they could not have their families with them, and they liked to have callers.

So, with Plain Mary in her arms, Judy went to visit the tramp schooner. A tramp schooner is one that goes any place where its owner can find a cargo to carry, and sometimes it is a long, long time before it gets back home again.

"Oh, mother," said Judy, "there is a little girl at the back of the ship. I'll go and talk with her."

The little girl was very glad to see Judy, and Judy learned that she had always lived on the ship and that she had no one but her daddy, who owned the ship. She said that on this trip they were going away over to Japan.

"What a lovely doll you have," she said to Judy, as she looked wistfully at Plain Mary. "Could I hold her for just a moment?"

Judy laid Plain Mary in the little girl's arms.

"Do you really think she is beautiful?" asked Judy, so pleased to have someone admire Plain Mary.

"Oh, I think she is beautiful. I had a doll once a very, very long time ago, when I was quite small. I left her on the deck one night, and the poor thing was washed away. I guess I will never have another, as daddy says that everything goes wrong nowadays and he has no money at all."

So they talked on about Plain Mary and the poor doll that was washed away years ago, until it was time to go.

Then Judy saw the little girl's eyes fill with tears as she laid Plain Mary back into her arms, and, in spite of her great love for Plain Mary, she was too tender-hearted to take her away from her.

"Wouldn't you like to keep her?" she asked, offering to give Plain Mary back.

There was no need for words. The little girl's face was enough for Judy.

"I know you will be good to her," said Judy.

Then one of the visiting ladies came up to them.

"It's too bad you did not have a better doll with you to give her," she said. "That is not much of a doll."

Judy's heart was too full to speak, and she walked away with the lady. As she was about to leave, she turned back to the little girl.

"I shall always watch for your ship to come back, and I will come and see you and Plain Mary. Goodbye."

She walked silently home beside her mother.

"Anyway, God understands," she said to herself. "God and mother."—Florence Isaacs, in Junior World.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

MORRILL, KANSAS

The Morrill Brethren church will observe Holy Communion and the Lord's Supper, Sunday evening, May 9th. All of like faith are invited to share this blessing with us.

AUSTIN R. STALEY, Pastor.

The Safety of One Depends upon the Safety of All

The meanest, most contemptible animal that runs wild is the sneaking coyote. But sometimes he becomes a formidable enemy. In Grant County, Washington, last year the coyotes became afflicted with rabies and immediately the whole county was up in arms, for not a horse, cow, dog, or man, woman, or child in that county was safe until the treat of those mad coyotes was stamped out. So we are learning socially that we cannot treat with contempt the humblest man or woman or child. The boy or girl goes wrong through neglect may turn to rend or poison the whole community. The safety of the highest depends upon the safety of the lowest. We are our brother's keeper. Jesus did command all his disciples to preach his Gospel to all the world. Watch for Brother Rensch's latest tract and get a supply to distribute among the members of your church and among your neighbors. If we are to have a great church use this strong Brethren tract as your message. Every Brethren member should be a Brethren missionary.

Director of Tract Publicity.

The Mothers We Need

By George Stanley Baer

'Tis mothers our days our needing,
Those of prayer and Bible reading,
Whose lives are true
As skies are blue,
And whose souls are God-ward leading.

For mothers the youth are pleading—
Such mothers as show good breeding,
Whose lofty ways
Are all of praise,
And whose minds on truth are feeding.

'Tis mothers our homes are needing,
Their holy office aceding
With heaven-sent grace
And love-lit face,
And ne'er from faith receding.

For mothers our land is bleeding
With crime and sin's misleading—
For mother's sway
That leads the way
To the Throne with intereeding.

On mothers who know God's leading Hangs the key to the kingdom's speeding;
As the child is taught,
Their work is wrought,
Thus hastening or impeding.

Thank God for motherhood's heeding
The myriad voices pleading;
For her love and care
Wrought everywhere,
May glory be her's exceeding.

Failure of the Modificationists

Contrary to the impression that has been spread abroad by the anti-prohibition forces and newspaper wet propaganda, it has been shown by the hearings before the Senate Judiciary sub-committee on the modification of the Prohibition enforcement act that the modificationists are not only still a decided minority, but a steadily decreasing minority. They failed utterly to give force or conviction to any point they made. Their claim that public sentiment was swinging away from prohibition was not only wholly unsubstantiated, but made ridiculous by "the great mass of telegrams, letters, and other appeals to Senators, Congressmen and other executives, from all parts of the nation protesting against the weakening of the enforcement act in the least. Moreover Congress is not disposed to lift its finger toward modification, except perhaps to put more teeth in the enforcement machinery. In fact, Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington, General Secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism, declares that "The present Congress is drier than the Congress that submitted the eighteenth amendment."

Neither did the wet forces prove that Prohibition could not be, or is not being, enforced. To be sure it is not being enforced perfectly; neither are other laws; there is much room for improvement in the enforcement of all laws. But considering the short space of time Prohibition has been the law of the land, the revolutionary nature of it socially and the part politics has played in the enforcement, the results are very creditable. It also showed that the vigorous squealing that is going up from the liquor forces indicates that enforcement is all too effective. Violation is becoming decidedly uncomfortable and in the long run unprofitable. So unanimous was the testimony that Prohibition was both enforceable and being enforced that the few enforcement officials who gave a discordant note created a decidedly unfavorable impression for themselves. And incidentally the demonstration revealed some much needed improvements in the enforcement personnel. When officials charged with the enforcement of Prohibition of the liquor traffic plead for the sale of beer or beer and light wines as an aid to enforcement, their sympathy for the law and fitness for enforcing it may justly be questioned.

On the whole it has proved a benefit to prohibition enforcement that this hearing was staged in our national capitol. Many good people had been misled by the great noise raised by the little wet group, a noise out of all proportion to their numbers, and had become fearful lest the predominant public sentiment had weakened in its support of the policy. They had forgotten that noise and booze had always gone together. Now that the atmosphere is somewhat cleared the groundless and characteristically deceptive nature of their contentions is become all the more evident. To be sure the battle is not over; the demons of greed and thirst are not so easily vanquished. But their false garb has largely been torn from them and they are made to stand out more distinctly in all their old-time baseness, treachery and lawlessness.

Religious Press in Troubled Waters

The religious press of the country is passing through troubled waters at the present time, as is evidenced by the inability of a number of religious papers to maintain a separate existence. "The Continent", a very ably edited Presbyterian paper of Chicago is merged with the Presbyterian Advance of Nashville, Tennessee, the last issue of The Continent having been April 22. The paper has had the financial support of Cyrus H. McCormick and Mrs. Nellie Fowler McCormick, but as they made no provision in their wills for the continuance of the publication, it is compelled to discontinue. Also on March 27 the "Christian Work", an interdenominational weekly, suspended publication and merged with "The Christian Century", a liberal religious weekly of Chicago. The editorial policy of these two papers is represented as being much the same, and yet they have at times clashed sharply in their editorial views on certain questions. It has therefore been somewhat surprising that these two papers have merged, but the Christian Work has been waving the financial danger signal for some time and finally went down. Moreover, it has been only a few months since the "Herald and Presbyter" merged with the "Presbyterian" of Philadelphia, two conservative papers of the Presbyterian church. Papers of all types and classes, unless they enjoy a subsidy of some manner, are finding the struggle for existence a severe one, especially is it true of general religious papers, and denominational papers which have a number of competitors in the field. We have but one paper; we could not support more, and it requires our very best efforts and most loyal cooperation to maintain that one. But we are glad to say there are few people who have showed a finer loyalty to their denominational organ than Brethren people.

More Light on the Mexican Situation

We recently pointed out that the widely advertised religious persecution supposed to be going on in Mexico was Roman Catholic propaganda pure and simple and cited the Methodist bishop in charge of that area as authority for the statement. We meant to say with regard to the Methodist church that it was the largest Protestant body in Mexico, but an omission made us say it was the largest church, which is not true, as the Catholics have had practical monopoly on the country until recently. And in this connection it will be of interest to hear a note of authority on the subject. The following statement appeared in the United Presbyterian under date of March 25:

"Charles A. Frueauff, of New York City, is a member of a firm of attorneys for the Mexican consulate. He recently returned from Mexico City, where he was in conference with President Calles. Mr. Frueauff declared that there was but one principal church in Mexico, and this church until recently had been successful in preventing the establishment of other denominations or religious organizations in that country. He said: 'The Roman Catholic church has consistently taught that all government enactments must first be approved by the church before they were binding on the people. In this way the clergy has influenced a large part of the populace, so that they would retard, and sometimes upset, progressive plans that threatened to unseat this church as the dominant power in the country. In short the clergy endeavored actively to exert the veto power, and then advised the people to oppose any legislation which they vetoed. Hence, when the government, in fulfillment of its obligations, enforces laws that prevent interference of the church in political and governmental matters, the cry of religious persecution, started by the clergy becomes prevalent. Many American people are liable to be misled into believing that it is religious persecution, since our country has had no experience with a church thus interfering with legislation and law observance, and the thwarting of progressive plans. We cannot understand a church which counts herself superior to the government.' "

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The second chapter in this issue of Dr. Gribble's story of the tribal life among the Aluru Negroes of Africa.

Endeavorers should not fail to read the good message from their Stewardship superintendent, Brother E. M. Riddle, appearing on page 11.

"Much depends on the atmosphere in which you live," says Brother Porte, and he makes the point that you can help improve the moral atmosphere. Read the Tract Corner.

The Ashland church of which Dr. Charles A. Bame is pastor, has set the date of May 23 for the dedication of their beautiful new building, and Dr. W. H. Beachler of South Bend, Indiana, has been engaged as master of ceremonies for that day.

Prof. and Mrs. J. A. Garber have returned from the great Sunday school convention at Birmingham, Alabama, where they were sent by the Ashland county organization. We have been promised a report of this great gathering in the near future.

We learn that Brother E. L. Miller, pastor of the Maurertown, Virginia, congregation, who is serving his second year, has been called to remain at his post for an indefinite period. During his stay there he has become highly esteemed both by the church and the community.

A new church building will be dedicated at Winchester, Virginia, on May 23, according to announcement by members of the district mission board. The outlook of this new mission church seems quite promising and reflects credit upon the mission board and those ministers who have been contributing to its upbuilding. Special services a week preceding and a week following the dedication will be held.

The Ministerial Association of Indiana are to have a meeting for the study and discussion of some very suggestive themes. The meeting is to be at Denver, and is to be open to the enjoyment and inspiration of the local membership. A gathering like this should prove most helpful to all, not the least important benefit of which will be to the ministers themselves from the fellowshiping together.

We are pleased to pass on to our readers a good letter from two missionaries to India, who are graduates of Ashland College, Rev. and Mrs. Bryan S. Stoffer, both of whom were in the service of the church before they sailed for India. Brother Stoffer was pastor of the Elkhart church and Mrs. Stoffer was National Junior Endeavor Superintendent.

Brother Charles H. Ashman gives us a splendid report, which indicates commendable progress at the First church of Johnstown, of which he is the capable pastor. Eleven accessions are reported since the first of February, some having been received during pre-Easter services. The attendance at regular services is said to be excellent and the Sunday school has experienced a marked growth. It is to be noted that the social life of his people is not being neglected, but at the same time is being supervised. Brother Ashman is to be in California engaged in evangelism for three months, during which time Prof. A. L. DeLozier of Ashland is to serve as supply pastor.

The College Endowment campaign is starting off with great enthusiasm, as you will note by President Jacobs' report of Dr. Bell's reception at Pittsburgh, and the challenging pledge of the Senior class of the college. Former classes have something really worthy of their attention and effort in this challenge, and surely those who are now in their various remunerative positions, ought to give even more than these students who are still struggling under the financial burdens of college life. Judging from this optimistic beginning, it must be that many are indeed praying, as the Evangelist has urged upon its readers, and let earnest prayer continue that God's Spirit may move upon the hearts of all his people, and especially those with whom he has blessed with material prosperity.

Dr. C. G. Carpenter, pastor of the church at Hagerstown, Maryland, sought to make the most of the Lenten season by preaching a series of appropriate sermons. He reports six new members received since last report, five of which came at Easter time. The steady increase of foreign missions which is pointed out doubtless does indicate a steady and healthy growth. Brother Carpenter celebrated his twenty-five years in the ministry by preaching to his Hagerstown congregation his first sermon preached at South Bend, Indiana, while a student in College. Doubtless those twenty-five years seem short as Dr. Carpenter says, but he has filled them with most successful and consecrated service. We congratulate him on reaching this milestone with so much of credit and honor.

General Bramwell Booth, head of the Salvation Army, and son of William Booth, the founder, has arrived in this country from England to conduct territorial conferences in New York and Chicago.

The season of conventions is near at hand and many of national and state scope are in the offing. For the benefit of Ohio churches, we pass on the announcement just at hand that the Ohio Sunday School Convention, or Council of Religious Education, will convene at Tiffin, June 15-18. Those in charge are hoping it will be the greatest such convention in the history of Ohio.

May 18 of each year is being observed by the school teachers of our own and other lands as "Good-will Day." In the class rooms the world over on that day exercises stressing international good-will are held. The suggestion has come that our young people of the churches might well observe the preceding Sunday in a similar manner. This year, therefore, International Good-will Sunday" will be May 16, when it is hoped that the young people, and older ones as well, will gather in their own churches or in union mass meetings and conduct programs calculated to promote the spirit of international understanding and brotherhood. Where it is not feasible to hold special services, the regular young people's meetings may be devoted to that purpose. The United Society of Christian Endeavor, the Baptist Young People's Union and the Epworth League have endorsed the project.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

IV. Elder Henry R. Holsinger

By Martin Shively, D.D.

The man about whom I am writing, was born at Morrison's Cove, Pennsylvania, May 26, 1833, coming from a long line of Tunker stock, being a direct descendent of Alexander Mack, head of the movement which led to the organization of the church in Germany, in 1708, and who became its first pastor. Like his great ancestor Brother Holsinger was a man of deep religious convictions, and was absolutely without fear in the advocacy of them. He was also a man of great natural ability, a deep thinker and reasoner, always eager in his quest for truth. To a much larger extent than many of his friends know, or his enemies will admit, the great Tunker fraternity owes its present standing, both intellectually and spiritually, to him, and it furnishes his most enduring monument.

He was baptized in the spring of 1855, at Clover Creek, Pennsylvania, by Elder George Brumbaugh, and was called to the ministry October 28, 1866. In most things, he was always in harmony with what was then called, The German Baptist church,—now The Church of the Brethren, of which he was then a member. The fundamental doctrines and teachings of the church, have never had a more faithful adherent, nor a more fearless exponent than he. But he could not, and would not join in the prevailing opposition to education, Sunday schools, and missions, which was common in the church of fifty years ago, neither could he remain silent in his conviction that these things were enjoined by the church, by the very spirit, as well as the positive teaching of the Gospel of Christ. He thus became, somewhat early, involved in the controversy which naturally developed between the spirit of progress, and that spirit which was opposed to any change in the polity of the church. In fact, he was the recognized leader of the so-called "Progressives." Since the days of Christopher Sauer, the church had been without a literature, until 1851, when Elder Henry Kurtz launched a monthly publication, called the Gospel Visitor, with office and press room in the loft of his spring house, at Poland, Ohio,—and here Brother Holsinger came to serve an apprenticeship of a year, to learn the printer's art, and thust o prepare himself for the work he had cut out for himself. Here he dreamed dreams of future work for the church of his choice, and on January 3, 1865, he sent out No. 1 of Volume 1 of the new, and first weekly publication, entitled The Christian Family Companion. Brother Holsinger was editor and publisher and it was sent out from Tyrone, Pennsylvania.

He was then a young man of 32 years possessed of intelligence, and fearless in his utterances. He preached great sermons through his paper, and gathered to his support as contributors, the very best talent of the church. Naturally the paper became the champion of reform, and God knows it was needed, for the church had drifted from her moorings as a preacher and exponent of a positive Christianity, to a position of negative goodness. The new journal plead for a better prepared ministry, one which would be able to cope with any opposition,—a ministry educated and supported, and the editor was profuse with his citations of Scripture, to prove the righteousness of his cause.

He stood for Sunday schools, prayer meetings and missions, and because of this, he very soon became the storm center of the church. These were positions on exceedingly advanced grounds, so far as the church of that day was concerned, and their advocate became the target for an ever increasing criticism at the hands of the general conferences of the church, until 1873, when he withdrew from the paper, but the heaven had been placed, and it continued to work, both in him, and in the church. Appeals became so numerous and so insistent, that he reentered the lists as editorial champion of ecclesiastical progress, that in 1878, he and Brother J. W. Beer, sent out first numbers of a new paper,—The Progressive Christian, which was published at Berlin, Pennsylvania. Its influence was immediately felt, since it attacked fearlessly, the unscriptural practices of the church, but it also exposed its editors to merciless grilling at the hands of the ruling body of the church. This body began at once to lay plans for the sacrifice of the man whom it believed to be the chief offender against its traditions. The Annual Conference, held at Ashland, Ohio, in 1881, appointed a committee to visit him at Berlin, Pennsylvania, and it was given secret instructions to disfellowship him. This committee came to Berlin on August 9 of the same year, and in the most high handed manner, carried out its instructions. Its action was ratified by the conference of 1882, held at Arnolds' Grove, Indiana, in a most sensational session, and this resulted in immediate division of the fraternity. Some hundreds of people at once withdrew from the conference with him, and several thousands more were ruthlessly expelled from the church because they persisted in fellowshiping him. This led, of course, to the organization of the Brethren church, with which his name and his deeds are inseparably linked. And rightly so, for he was moderator of its conferences, editor of its publications, and its historian.

The last serious work to which he gave himself, was his writing of the History of the Tunker and the Brethren Church. This would have been a heavy task for even a strong man, but Brother Holsinger was far from being such a man when he undertook the task. He had gathered not a little material for the book, from such sources as were available, but by far the larger part of it was the product of his own brain. He had been so intimately connected with the historic periods of the church, or at least such later periods, and had acquainted himself so thoroughly with its traditions, that none was better prepared to write such a history. But he was a sick man throughout the whole time given to the work, and had been for many months previous, so that it is nothing short of astonishing to those who saw the work in process of completion, that it was ever finished at all. He was not able to write even a word himself, but dictated the entire book, in whispers, for his voice was too weak for audible expression, and Brother J. W. Beer, wrote in long hand, the message as it came from the lips of the author. Sometimes there would be a forced rest for several days, and then the work would proceed again, perhaps with the sick man lying face down, on a couch, with a pillow beneath the diaphragm, so that his voice might have the greater expulsive power. I have already said that this book was the last real work of Brother Holsinger, and now, I must add, that it was, perhaps, the greatest disappointment of his life. He had hoped that it might have a large sale in the Church of the Brethren, and he also hoped to have it published by the great publishing house of that denomination. But those who had the decision to make for the publishing house, insisted that the manuscript must first be submitted for their approval, a demand to which he would not yield. After the book had been published elsewhere, he sent a copy to the Gospel Messenger for review. After waiting for some mention of it, for some weeks, he insisted that some public recognition be given, and then there came a few lines of review, printed in small type, and obscurely placed, and even the review was not friendly. His spirit was badly broken by this matter, though he might have anticipated it, because he had gone too deeply into the issues which had led up to the division, and being the chief sufferer in it, as well as in the events leading up to it, his grievances were stressed to the hurt of those who were chiefly responsible for them, and they could hardly have been expected to offer any help in the circulation of the story. And adding to his hurt, was the fact that our own people did not buy the book as it deserved, and the edition of 2,000 copies was not nearly all taken. This led to financial embarrassment, and his last days were not what such a man deserved. These last days were spent in the home of his daughter, Mrs. Nowag, in Johnstown, Pennsylvania, where he died in 1905, at the age of 72 years. His body lies on the highest spot in the beautiful cemetery at Berlin, Pennsylvania, and at his head is reared a splendid monument of granite, placed there by his friends, as a mark of their appreciation for what he was and what he did. Some years ago, the Pennsylvania conference, then in session at Berlin, had a session at his grave. As I stood there, high in the Allegheny mountains, looking in every direction, I seemed to see at all points of the compass, the church of which he once was a part, flourishing and strong. Its missionaries were preaching the Christ in faith of whom he lived and died. Its colleges were dotted here and there, all the way across the continent. Its Sunday schools are manned as good as the best, and their enrollment is large. Its ministry is highly trained, with ever elevating standards. It pours its millions at the feet of the Lord, whom we too are trying to serve. All these things have come since 1881, and they have come because he dared to champion them, and persisted in such championship in the face of the ecclesiastical ostracism which such activity imposed. He never recovered from the pain, incident to the dark days through which he passed, from 1881 to 1883, but "his soul goes marching on," in the results of his agitation.

I first met Brother Holsinger during the summer of 1885, and for the next 15 years, I saw much of him. It was my privilege to be his pastor during the time the manuscript of his history was being prepared, and for a year thereafter, for he had come to Lathrop, California, so as to have the help of Brother Beer, who was to be hands to him in the task. I spent some time, every day, in his office, during this arduous period, and know whereof I write, when I speak of the difficulties under which he worked. His good wife, who had been Susannah Shoop, herself far from being a well woman, did all that faithful wife could do, to bolster up the wrecked body, to enable it to finish the task. Now she too sleeps at his side, her tired hands, like his own, at rest, awaiting the coming of the Lord, who brings his reward with him, for all who, like them, have wrought for him, and in him.

"Go Work Today"

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

Jesus commands it and reminds us that "The night cometh when no man can work." The Great Commission defines the task, the completion of which has long been delayed by the shortage of laborers, by the laziness of some professed workers and by the reception, antagonism and opposition of Satan and his agents.

One of Wesley's young preachers had a sermon on the cry of the Thessalonian rabble about Paul and Silas. "These have turned the world upside down have come thither also." His points were three, first, the world is wrong side up; second, it must be turned right side up; and third, we are the chaps to do it. His sermon may have done much good, but that is a questionable way of approaching the task of improving a sinful world.

One preacher announced six sermons on "What's the Matter With—" and then followed movies, newspapers, clubs, young people, home, church. Doubtless there is something the matter with all the things mentioned, but there is more about most of them to be commended than to be condemned. We are inclined to think that the preacher offered due criticism and then followed with a constructive and helpful program.

There is however a literature of despair but the Christian ought to prefer the literature of hope. Jesus was an optimist, though he did not fail to condemn and criticize. "He uttered more blessed's than woes." Someone has well said that taking a long view of events, and a loving view of people the sincere Christian must recognize evil and help to put it away, but the sincere Christian believes that God and Truth are marching on, and that the Lord Jehovah will come out victorious over sin and death and Satan and hell. As we enter another year may we have our Lord's vision and faith and then we will "Go work today" with great courage and faith to help our Lord complete the great task of world evangelization.

A man, unmistakably a laborer, was smoking thoughtfully (if that is possible), and watching a large building in process of construction. Being short of help the foreman approached him and asked: "Hey, you, want a job?" "Yes," was the reply, "but I can't work mornings." "Aw, why can't you work all day?" "Well, every afternoon I got to carry a banner in the unemployment parade." No positions of that kind in our Lord's vineyard! Our Lord has work for all to do. Church-member, go to work and win souls.

The greatest blessing rendered by an evangelist in revival campaigns is often not the number of members added to the church, but the number of members who got the soul-winning vision and the passion for souls and were put to work. Lord Rauligh the scientist, discovered a new element, but could find no use for it, so he named it "Argon", from two Greek words meaning "Without Work." The Lord does not want "Argon" folks in his church and surely they cannot get into his kingdom. He says, "Go to work."

The warning of Jesus, "The night cometh when no man can work" inspired the writing of the hymn, "Work for the night is coming."

"Work till the last beam fadeth, Fadeth to shine no more.
Work while the night is darkening,
When man's work is o'er."

This may be the last year of your life. Bishop Quayle said: "I take my my hour glass and put it down before me many an hour, just to remind me that Time is in a hurry and won't stop." He said, "We haven't much time, we cannot stay here long. Pretty soon we will be gone. Work hard and thank God that you have a chance to work for him and with him."

"Pretty soon it will be time to stop, and a strange visitor will come by and say, 'Quit work.' And you will say, 'It is not night.' But he will persist, 'Quit work'. And you will say, 'It is only two o'clock and I have only begun for the afternoon.' But he will say, 'Quit work.' And you will lay down your hammer on the anvil, with your hands black with the smithy, and you will go out with him.

"And you will say, 'Will I be back in the morning?' 'No, not in the morning.' 'Will I be back tomorrow?' 'No, Not tomorrow.' And you will ask, 'Where are you taking me?' And the answer will be, 'I am taking you to a land very far off, from whose bourne no traveler returns; come along—this is the way'."

"Blessed is that servant whom his master, when he cometh, finds watching and working and ready for his master's return."

Let every member of every church "Go work today" and be always ready to give an account of a faithful stewardship.

The Brethren Church in Relation to War

By Landis R. Bradfield

The World War ended with the signing of the Armistice. With the signing of that document, many people expected a never ending era of peace to be ushered in upon the world. But alas for hopes builded upon the "hand-outs" of the militarists. They (the militarists) had us believing that we were fighting to, "make the world safe for Democracy." But seven years this side of the Armistice we realize the absurdity of such propaganda.

Today the great nations of the world are more completely militarized than ever before. France is straining every nerve of the national sinew to maintain a monstrous war machine. England, Italy, Russia, Japan and the United States are following suit, or taking the lead in some cases. In the United States we have instituted a nation wide system of military service. Citizens' Military Training Camps have been established. Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained in one hundred and twenty-four colleges and universities of this country; and of this number eighty-three institutions make such training compulsory.

In 1915 there were no summer camps, no R. O. T. C., only 119 officers detached to military schools. In 1920 a National Defense Act was passed, legalizing a military drive upon civil institutions. In 1925 Congress appropriated more than $5,900,000 for schools and camps combined; the War Department assigns 768 officers and 1064 enlisted men to carry on training with the result that at least 160,000 young Americans come under direct army influence in this way. This is 15,000 more than the total membership of our active army, including reserves on active duty. In 1914 the United States had a regular army of but 92,482 men, recruited without any R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. at all.

During the school year of 1924-25 military instruction was given in more than 226 educational institutions in the United States. The exact number is difficult to obtain, because some schools give military training which do not have R. O. T. C. units.

Of the 226 R. O. T. C. institutions in 1925, 124 were of College or University rank, 63 were high schools, and 39 were what are known as, "essentially military schools."

The facts just presented do not indicate that we are becoming a Peace loving people at a very rapid rate. I am not unmindful, however, of the arguments advanced by the militarists that, "our preparedness is for use only in case America is attacked by some enemy, or for defense purposes." Peace loving people see in this progressive military educational program a real menace to our country. The truth of the matter is that nations are loath to admit they wage war except for defense purpose. Even the World War cannot be cited as the exception to this statement. If you desire the facts concerning responsibility for the World War, read Harry E. Barnes, "Assessing the Blame for the World War", in Current History, May 1924.

Of course you are wondering why all this preliminary when my subject is, "The Brethren Church in Relation to War." Well, this is the reason. I have presented the foregoing facts in order to bring before us somewhat the problem of militarism that we are facing in the United States today. Having presented these things I want to raise the question, What is the Brethren Church doing about this problem? Further, what are we as Brethren individuals doing to advance the ideals of Peace and frustrate the insidious and treacherous methods of the War Department?

Historically as Brethren we have a background by which we are known as non-resistant people. Brethrenism had that as one of the cardinal principles in its foundation. Through two centuries we lived up to Peace principles to a fairly high degree, until the World War caught us and almost swept us off our feet as a distinct Peace people. It was during those trying days of 1917 and '18 that many Brethren ministers preached from their pulpits the righteousness of the war then being waged by the Allied Powers, and some of those ministers actually advised young men, Brethren young men, to "go to battle." Under the strain of heated public opinion it was exceedingly difficult to go contrary to the will of the majority. In fact, it was so difficult for us as Brethren that we almost failed to stand out against the war at all.

Our non-resistant sister denominations made a more definite stand against the war than we did. Rev. J. W. Swigart of the Church of the Brethren says, "A few of our members enlisted, some with the agreement that their services should be limited to forestry or something of the sort that would require the bearing of arms. I think one eighth of those who were drafted accepted regular military service. Probably three eighths accepted non-combatant service of various kinds, the remainder one half, refused all service, and went to the detention barracks." Some of them too were sent to Fort Leavenworth prison because of their unyielding stand against war.

The Society of Friends, all branches, was probably the most active non-resistant religious body during the war. Their efforts in behalf of their own conscientious objectors resulted in many of them being released for reconstruction work and furloughed for agricultural purposes. Many Mennonites and some Church of the Brethren young men worked with the Friends in their Reconstruction Units.

The stress of the war period was the occasion for several of the non-resistant denominations to re-declare their position against war. The Inspirationists of Amana, Iowa, re-published their belief in July, 1918. The Mennonites likewise reaffirmed their ancient testimony in the General Conference of 1917, and the various branches of the church united in addressing a signed, "Appeal to the President", in which they say, "Because of our understanding of the teachings of Christ and the New Testament generally against war in any form, we can render no service either combatant or non-combatant, under the military establishment, but will rather be amenable to any punishment the government sees fit to lay upon us as a penalty."

The Friends too tried to make clear their attitude toward war by statement of their belief.

In all the statements and re-statements of belief by these denominations the object was to make as clear and as reasonable as possible, their grounds of opposition. But in none was there manifested a disposition to retreat before the astounding growth of military conscription. But the Brethren church is not listed among those denominations taking so definite a stand for Peace. When we look over the roll of committeemen of the various organizations working for world peace, we see no names of Brethren. Nor do we see the name Brethren church among the listed organizations, but we do find the Church of the Brethren there listed.

Why is it, Brethren, that we are not doing anything in a definite progressive way to assist in the great movement for world peace? Have we forgotten the peace tenets of our denomination? Are we willing to shut ourselves in from other peoples and disclaim responsibility? Are we so busy in our own little sphere, with our petty differences that we are blinded to the fortunes of oncoming generations? Are we organizing our young people to support other young people in standing fast to Christian ideals? Are we attacking the problem of war in our National Conference? Other non-resistant denominations are conducting conferences for their young people and distributing literature in the interests of peace, but we are doing nothing of the kind.

The militarists are out with the determination to get our boys. They will get them in high school if possible, if not there, then in college. Mothers, do not be misled into thinking that your son is going to receive unheard of benefits from the physical training offered in the military camps. Equally good and even better physical development can be secured in regular forms of athletics, without the objectionable features of military life. The courses of instruction in the R. O. T. C. are laid down by the War Department. Throughout the three years of the Junior R. O. T. C. unit a grand total of 40 hours is devoted to physical training, as against 248 hours for military training and instruction. In the four years C. M. T. C. course a total of 52 hours is devoted to physical training, citizenship training, and hygiene and first aid, as against 468 hours military training and instruction. These figures just given are taken from the official courses of instruction for R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. issued by the War Department.

Now one more question I wish to ask,—Brethren, are we really the Christian in our attitude toward War? My idea of being a Christian is living the ideals of Christ. Certainly to do this means that we must be distinctly a peace loving people, and willing to help secure peace. If we are not willing to live the ideals of Christ, let us deny our claim as an organization to the principles of peace, and state our position in favor of war. At least let us be honest about the matter and let other people know where we stand. Let us not try to hide our disinterestedness behind the cloak of non-resistance of our fathers, but rather let us receive it as Elisha did the mantle of Elijah, and march on to greater victories for peace.

Even the military people respect sincerity in the non-resistants' position. It was frequently said to Rufus M. Jones, a Friend, during the war, "You are doing what you ought to do. We need to have in the world, especially now, some people who believe in the conquering power of love and who express in deeds the conviction that Christ's Kingdom of God is something more than a dream or an illusion to be surrendered at every hard pinch. Some day we shall be glad that you stood out, held on, and would not yield to the mighty appeal of the hour."

Can as much be said of the Brethren church?

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

An Affirmative Answer

By Samuel Kiehl

TEXT: If a man die, shall he live again?—Job 4:14.

The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten, also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in anything that is done under the sun. For there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest (Ecc. 9:5, 6, 10). There is neither hope, nor promise for future life in the preceding Scriptures.

To Job's question, If a man die, shall he live again? Jesus replies with an emphatic affirmative, saying, I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live, and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die (John 11:25, 26). God is not the God of the dead, but of the living (Matt. 22:32); for all live unto him (Luke 20:38). He that hath the Son hath life (1 John 5:12), shall never die (John 11:26), shall appear with Christ in glory (Col. 3:4). Wonderful! By grace are we saved through faith (Eph. 2:5, 8).

The words soul, and spirit sometimes have the same meaning. Concerning Rachel's death, Genesis 35:18 says, As her soul was in departing, (for she died). In her case the body without the soul was dead. James 2:26 says, the body without the spirit is dead. In these two Scripture statements the words soul, and spirit are practically synonymous terms. Ecclesiastes 12:7 says, Then (after the dissolution of the spirit and the body) shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it. Praise the Lord! the spirit is not buried with the body according to the preceding Scriptures. Future life is assured in the following, and many other Scripture statements:

Jesus on the cross, addressing God said, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit (Luke 23:46). To the thief on the cross he previously said, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise (Luke 23:43). After the departure of the spirit Jesus' body was laid into Joseph's tomb (Matt. 27:59, 60); the thief's body was buried elsewhere. And, since the spirit is not buried with the body, the spirit of the repentant criminal on the cross (Luke 23:40, 41) according to promise (verse 43) was the same day with the spirit of Jesus in paradise.

We have had fathers of our flesh which corrected us; and we gave them reverence; shall we not much rather be in subjection unto the Father of spirits, and live? For they verily for a few days chastened us after their own pleasure, but he for our profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness (Heb. 12:9, 10). Praise the Father of spirits for his chastening hand. Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. If we be without chastisement, whereof all are partakers, then are we bastards and not sons (Heb. 12:6-8). Let us be faithful to Christ who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us from this present evil world (Gal. 1:4); for the time will come when our body shall return to the earth (unless he come), and the spirit shall return unto God for a purpose, viz., Every one of us shall give account of himself to God according to (Rom. 14:12). To some it shall be said, Well done, thou good and faithful servant, * * * enter thou into the joy of thy Lord (Matt. 25:21), to others, I never knew you, depart from me (Matt. 7:23). Unto the members of the church of God at Corinth (and to us) Paul, speaking not with flattering words, but in sincerity and truth, says, We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad (2 Cor. 5:10). We must all appear. Are we ready?

"Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation." No promise for tomorrow.

It is written, the just shall live by faith (Gal 3:11). According to Ecclesiastes 7:20 there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not. Nevertheless "the mercy of God endureth for ever"; for it is written, If we (Heb. 10:38, 39) confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness (1 John 1:9). Forgiven and cleansed, the spirit (in due time liberated from the faithful believer's body by dissolution), peacefully returns unto God his heavenly Father; in his presence is fulness of joy (Psa. 16:11). "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" for the promise of a happy future life to be realized and enjoyed by the faithful through the merits of Christ and the love and mercy of God. Glory and honor be to the Father and to the Son for ever and ever.

Incense and Myrrh

By Bishop Frederick B. Fisher

In "Garments of Power"

Myrrh in its natural state is a little crystal berry about the size of a teardrop. It exudes from the leaves and stems of wild Oriental shrubs along the streams and in the oases. As a pearl is formed by the living oyster covering the irritating sand grain with saliva to ease the pain of friction, so the myrrh drop is formed by the plant covering with its sap the wounds from piercing insects. It is the blood-mixed salve of a wounded life. It is a teardrop crystallized. Shepherds gather these crystal tears by a strange and interesting process. The flocks are turned into the bushes to graze in the morning and to rest by the stream at noontide. At twilight when the fold is reached the shepherd's family busy themselves with large, coarse, wooden combs—dragging the myrrh drops from the wool. When the berries are dried and crushed their fragrance is as the sweetness of pine.

What means this sacred poet when he speaks of a garment carrying everywhere the smell of myrrh? I think he means hot tears of sympathy. And herein is a wholesome truth. He who would be clothed in garments of power must have them dipped in the tears of a suffering world.

This age is characterized by the intense suffering on the vastest scale ever known in human history. He who is not touched with a feeling for the infirmities of the stricken millions has no message for this hour. Every man with a sense of God in his soul must lie down to bed every night with an aching heart and arise each morning with a passionate intercessory prayer on his lips.

MOTHER MINE

I love each furrow in thy face,
The silver in thy hair;
There's naught but beauty I can trace,
There's none that's half so fair.
The love shines out from those dear eyes,
How well I know the sign
Of kindness, sweetness—all that's good—
Dear mother—mother mine!

And now, when those dear eyes grow dim,
And pain clouds that dear face,
The love that you still have for him,
Who oftentimes fell from grace,
Will yet bear fruit a hundredfold
In love, dear heart, like thine,
More precious than virgin gold,
Dear mother—mother mine!

A Symposium

OUR SCRIPTURE

Can a woman forget her child (Isa. 49:15)? And the man called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living (Gen. 3:20). Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when she came up with her husband to offer the yearly sacrifice (1 Sam. 2:19). Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshiping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand and the other on thy left in thy kingdom (Matt. 20:20, 21). When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and in thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also (2 Tim. 1:5). Render therefore to all their dues, . . . honor to whom honor (Rom. 13:7).

A DEVOTIONAL READING OF ROMANS
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

The APOSTLE'S GREETING—Rom. 1:1-7.

Paul, a divinely chosen apostle, sends greeting to the church at Rome, itself divinely called, finds the bonds of union in the Messiah and Son of God, whose gospel he is commissioned to preach. He is the one and only bond of a world brotherhood.

TUESDAY

PAUL'S GREAT DESIRE—Rom. 1:8-13.

Paul's daily prayer was for the church at Rome and his long cherished desire was that he might visit them and add to them something of the fulness he had received of Christ, for should not the Christian "become a centre and abounding source of spiritual influence and blessing to others"?

WEDNESDAY

THE GOSPEL THE POWER OF GOD—Rom. 1:14-17.

Paul declared that even in proud and imperial Rome he was not ashamed of his message, though some features of it seemed repellent and humiliating, and with good reason, for it was the mighty agency of God for the salvation of man through the exercise of faith in his Son, Jesus Christ.

THURSDAY

STIFLING THE TRUTH—Rom. 1:18-23.

The Gentiles, though without this Gospel of Christ, yet had a knowledge of God, which they ignored, and profaned his likeness with idolatry. Who but needs to implore God's mercy for stifling and suppressing the truth, revealed in many varied ways.

FRIDAY

GROSS WICKEDNESS—Rom. 1:24-32.

Seldom is sin pictured blacker than here, but the worst of it all is the statement that God does give a man up to his wilful, persistent wickedness.

SATURDAY

THE HYPOCRITICAL CRITIC—Rom. 2:1-10.

It is unbecoming for a man from a plane of lofty superiority to criticize the sinner of low degree (as does the Jew the Gentile) who follows his own example. Nor should such an one be deceived by God's longsuffering and forbearance; it is not that he may escape punishment, but to lead him to repentance.

SUNDAY

THE BASIS OF JUDGMENT—Rom. 2:11-16.

As the Jew will be judged by the Law of Moses and the Gentile by the law of conscience, so will all men be judged by the light which they possess, and be assured that the hidden workings of the conscience God can see—G. S. B.

many times her child will disobey her, she is always ready to forgive the wrong and teach the child the right way to live. She knows what the child needs and will persevere in the face of great opposition to supply its every need.

A mother's love is a perfect love. Isaiah 49:15 says, "Can a mother forget her sucking child, that she would not have compassion on the son of her womb?" Though he commit many crimes and even be sentenced to prison, that mother will not forsake him, but will eagerly await the day of his release. Her's is a perfect love.

A mother's love is a powerful love. One day, one of the gigantic eagles of Scotland carried away an infant from its mother's cottage, perching itself on a lofty aerie. After a sailor and an experienced climber had failed to reach the height, a poor peasant woman slowly climbed the ascent and brought the babe to safety. She succeeded where others failed because she was the mother of the babe. The love in that mother's breast was powerful enough to conquer all in the task of reclaiming her child.

ROBERT D. CREES.

"A Mother's Care"

There is a name that strikes deep into the hearts of men, a name that all men love. Mother! What sacrifices she has made for us! What care she has bestowed upon us when we were too small to care for ourselves! She would lay down her life, if necessary, to protect us from harm. When we have done wrong, she is the first to forgive us. Day by day her love surrounds our lives. A typical example of such tender forethought is found in the mother of Samuel who year after year made little coats and took them to the tabernacle where he was ministering. All motherhood is beautiful where he was ministering. All motherhood is beautiful, loving and circumspect, but Christian motherhood is more than that; It expresses not only concern for the temporal but also for the spiritual welfare. It is the God-fearing mother who teaches her children at her knee to utter their first prayer. It is the Christian mother who leads her little ones to definitely know and accept the Lord Jesus Christ. We may each thank God for giving to us a solicitous mother of tender compassion, but if he has given us a Christian mother, we are twice blessed.

EVELYN M. COONS

"Mothers' Ambitions for Their Offspring"

Ever since the world began and woman has had the blessed opportunity of motherhood, mothers have had a zealous desire hidden in the deep recesses of their hearts, for their children to succeed. They are anxious that their children shall surpass those of other mothers. They are eager to see their children go out into the vast sphere of God's and serve mankind. They pray that their children might become the bright and shining rays in the light which supplies mankind with life and happiness. They covet suffering and pain if they can heap some benefit upon their children thereby. In Matthew we have the account of Salome, the mother of James and John, requesting Jesus to place her two sons on his right and left hands in his kingdom. The best is none too good for their children. Wealth, fame, power, success, careers, happiness and love are but a few of the attributes they strive for their children to have. Many a one has found success because of his mother's ambitions for him. O! thanks be to God for the great and wonderful gift of motherhood!

RUTH AUSTIN.

A Mother's Influence

A mother's influence is a special and divine gift from God; it is permanent, stable, unfailing, unfading, inviolate and persistent.

"They say that man is mighty,
He governs land and sea,
He wields a mighty scepter,
O'er lesser powers that be;
But a mightier power and stronger
Man from his throne has hurled,

For the hand that rocks the cradle
Is the hand that rules the world."

A mother's influence is a medium through which God perpetuates this Holy Spirit in the breast of his children. It is a well known fact that, when the home-life declines, when mothers fail to use this divine gift, then the nation declines also. What would this world be without a mother's influence? Ah! One hesitates to think. Consider: would there be any great men? That still small voice that speaks to men eaten with sin, and lifts them to pinnacles of splendid manhood, where would it be? The influence of a mother has ever been an omnipotent and dynamic force spurring young men and young women onward to success and at the same time it has been a vantage ground in compelling the erring into paths of righteousness.

BERTRAM KING.

Our Debt to Motherhood

Our precious Lord hung upon the cruel cross. One great thought was master of his mind,—the fulfillment of the plan of God for the redemption of the world. No time for earthly things, his whole being centered upon the final act for which he came into the world. Yet he paused long enough to give thought to one other matter—His debt to mother. Turning to his mother he said, "Woman, behold thy Son," and to the beloved disciple, "Behold thy mother." He had been all a son could be yet was conscious of his mother's welfare. Each of us owes a debt to mother which we can never repay in dollars. Let us not try! Our real debt is the debt of love which we owe. Mother has loved us with a love second only to the love of God, and that love cries out for its rightful share of affection in return; that above all will repay mother. Mother has entertained hopes of great ambitions and attainments in our lives, also hopes of seeing us develop into God-like men and women. It is a great part of our debt to her to bring these hopes to a complete fulfillment. By the Grace of God and the leading of his Holy Spirit let us make our love to mother manifest and her hopes realized, for it is all of the debt we can ever pay.

THOMAS PRESNELL.

OUR PRAYER

Father of all mankind and Giver and Sustainer of life, we bring thee in the arms of our faith today, with all their loves and longings, the mothers of our race. Let them not struggle unsustained up the steep of motherhood. Soothe the pain of their travail and fruit their longings in loving ministries from those to whom they have given life, and on whom they have lavished the largess of their love. Grant them patience and wisdom during the daily discouragements, the clash of ideals and the fret and care of life. Let not the anguish of bereavement destroy their trust in thy love; help them keep faith that thou canst mend even the broken lives that stab them with a sorrow worse than death. Company with them in the lonely hours when their children pass from the home-roofs to build homes of their own. Reward their sacrifice with love returned and the consciousness of having helped their sons and daughters to find God, their heavenly Father and a worthy life. We ask through Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior. Amen.—Rev. Joseph A. Vance, D. D.

LOVE AND PEACE

He whom the Master loved has truly spoken.

The holier worship, which God deigns to bless,
Restores the lost, binds up the spirit-broken,
And feeds the widow and the fatherless.

O brother man! fold to thy heart thy brother;
For where love dwells the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other;
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.
—Whittier.

LESSON LIGHTS

Abraham, the Hero of Faith

Abraham stands in history as the father of the faithful. His faith was very great, and stands out like a mountain peak. His faith was the source of his obedience (Heb. 11:8-19). "It was the faith, not of a mystic, a recluse shut out from outward temptation, but of an active, prosperous business man, with a clear sky-line, with 'practical good sense, insight, genius, energy, and enthusiasm.'" The greatness of his faith can be seen by the difficulties which stood in his way.

Abraham's birthplace was Ur of the Chaldees, the ruins of which are now called Mugheir, a mound on the western bank of the Euphrates, 120 miles north of the Persian Gulf; though in Abraham's time it was situated on the Gulf. "This land was of no great extent, being little if at all larger than Scotland, but it was the richest of Asia." The city was a great maritime emporium, a walled town, with a high civilization and a large commerce; situated in "a marvelously rich country, said to be the original home of the wheat-plant, and famous for its dates and other fruits."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Lot's Character

Lot was a good man at heart. We are told in 2 Peter that "righteous Lot" was "sore distressed" by the lascivious life of the wicked (2 Pet. 2:7, 8).

Not only had Lot less character and fewer and weaker virtues than his uncle, but he fell into serious errors and temptations, from which one of Abram's character and piety would have escaped and passed on unharmed. A man who deliberately goes into temptation, and lives among vile men and women, unless it be to give himself to making them better, is sure to be contaminated. Abram would have built an altar in Sodom.—Ibid.

"It is clear that Lot ought not to have been found in Sodom at all. He was attracted to it simply by the chance of wealth, and was willing to turn a blind eye to the vices of its people if he could profit by association with them. Do you ever ask whether your business is the best kind of business for the development of your soul? Do you allow any spiritual ideal to govern your choice or use of temporal opportunity?"—Dr. W. J. Dawson.

Loyalty to One's Own Family

In two ways Abram manifested the loyalty we all should show to our own family. First, he made every possible effort to avoid a family quarrel. He ignored the fact that he was the head of the family, and for that reason entitled to the largest and best share of all its good things; he ignored the fact that he was the older man, to whom the younger should show deference; he ignored the fact that it was to him the land had been promised, and to his descendants. He ignored everything which might prove that he was entitled to the first choice of a home, and gave that first choice to his nephew.

Second. After that nephew had by his own foolish yielding to temptation been involved Shall I tell you where and when?

On the maps of the world you will find it not—

'Tis fought by the mothers of men.

Nay, not with cannon or battle shot,

With sword or nobler pen?

Nay, not with eloquent words or thoughts

From mouths of wonderful men.

But deep in the walled-up woman's heart—

Of woman that would not yield,

But bravely, silently bore her part—

Lo, there is that battlefield!

No marshaling troop, no bivouac song,

No banner to gleam and wave;

But O! their battles, they last

From babyhood to the grave.

Yet faithful still as a bridge of stars,

Then, silent, unseen, goes down.

O ye with banners and battle shot

And soldiers to shout and praise!

I tell you the kingliest victories fought with his fellow-citizens in the loss of property and even freedom, Abram, forgetting everything else, hazarded his own life as well as that of his retainers in the swift stroke, which, through the perfection of his strategy and the help of Jehovah, defeated an army far outnumbering his own, and saved all the booty which had been carried off.

And for this last he refused to take any reward. He had not done it for reward, but to save his nephew Lot.

Abraham and Melchizedek

And Melchizedek, king of Salem, later Jerusalem, brought refreshment for the soldiers. He was priest of God Most High, and he blessed Abram, giving the praise for the victory to God, and not to Abram. Abram gave him a tenth, as priest, and from the spoil, as a king with right to a share. This king-priest is one of the most mysterious figures in the Bible. He is mentioned only three times, at intervals of a thousand years: here, in Psalm 110:4, and in Hebrews 6:20-7:21.

Abraham's Generosity

The king of Sodom then asked Abram to let him have the persons, but to take himself all of the spoil. This was a splendid offer, and would have appealed greatly to any other than Abram. Lifted up my hand. The gesture of an oath. He had sworn to Jehovah that he would go to war not for booty nor for glory, but solely to rescue Lot. He refused the offer, for if he had accepted the heathen would think he had made war for gain, and had come down to their level, and that his prosperity was not the result of his service of Jehovah.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Sunday School Paper in Argentina

Where scarcely any mention of the Sunday school is made in the secular press, it is important to have a Sunday school publication which will circulate among all who are especially interested in that great department of church work. The Argentina Sunday School Association has just completed arrangements to issue a monthly paper which will be especially for the teachers and officers. It is possible for the Argentina Association to care for this publication from its own funds and send the periodical gratis to its constituency each month. There is great need for additional literature in Spanish that deals with the great subject of religious education. Right now there should be adaptations of Betts' two books: "The New Program of Religious Education," and "How to Teach Religion." A book is also needed for the superintendents.

On a recent Sunday school trip made by Rev. George P. Howard, the representative of the World's Sunday School Association in Argentina, he was accompanied part of the time by a young national who is very greatly interested in Sunday school work. Ten years ago he attended the first Sunday school institute which was held in Rasario. He has since consecrated himself to the ministry and promises to be a pillar of strength along Sunday school lines.

TRUE PROSPERITY

They tell me thou art rich, my country; gold
In glittering flood has poured into thy chest;
Thy flocks and herds increase, thy barns are pressed

With harvest, and thy stores can hardly hold
Their merchandise; unending trains are rolled Along thy network rails of east and west;
Thou art enriched in all things bought and sold!

But dost thou prosper? Better news I crave.
Oh, dearest country, is it well with thee
Indeed, and is thy soul in health?
A nobler people, hearts more wisely brave,
And thoughts that lift men up and make them free—

These are prosperity and vital wealth.

Stewardship Department

By E. M. Riddle, Superintendent.

Superintendents of the several departments of Christian Endeavor have spoken through these columns, so at the request of our President, I shall do the same.

Young people! your life is a stewardship. It has been said, "Your best gift to the world is the gift of yourself." We are stewards of the manifold grace of God. The thought of stewardship lies in the fact that we must recognize the gift of life, all we possess and the world in which we live as coming from God. As we are the recipients of his bounties day by day, for he constantly sustains all; WE HAVE A DEBT, WE BECOME DEBTORS. This debt and our love for the kingdom and his supreme sacrifice ought to be and is the basis for Christian Stewardship.

We are stewards of our minds. Our real GIVING begins in our thinking, and first of all in our prayers. When we become nobly when we become nobly generous in our praying, the spirit of stewardship will become manifest. We have just passed the impressive Easter season again. Surely our emotions have been touched. They belong to God also. Christians dare not be afraid of the shadow of the cross. In the words of James Montgomery, may we think:

"When to the cross I turn my eyes,
And rest on Calvary,
O Lamb of God, my sacrifice,
I must remember thee."

God owns us because he sustains our lives, LOVE makes this a joyous companionship of spontaneous appreciation. Our appreciation for his redeeming gift is in a measure being expressed in our efforts to support a teacher in the mountains of Kentucky. In the light of Biblical teaching and the cause of Christian Endeavor, which likewise stresses stewardship; what a rich privilege we have in bringing our gifts to such a worthy cause as helping to win young life for Christ among the mountain people!

Reflect in closing upon this epitaph on Gordon's monument, which powerfully illustrates our thought of genuine stewardship—"He gave his strength to the weak, his sympathy to the suffering, his substance to the poor and his heart to God."

Bryan, Ohio.

A Gambler Converted by Christian Endeavor

(Extracts from a letter of Mrs. George B. Hammond, Mexico City, to the Northern Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.)

Maurice is only nineteen or twenty, but in those few years he has been in turn a gambler, professional card sharp, and a dancer in all kinds of low places of amusement as well as some better ones, and made his living in all sorts of ways. You can imagine the life he has led and the people with whom he has been associated. Some nights he would stop playing with enough money to last him a month; but of course he never saved it, and perhaps the next night he would have almost nothing. As a dancer he saw all the lowest side of life, and there was nothing of vice that he hadn't at least heard or seen, and a good share he had experienced. Somehow through the leading of the Holy Spirit he came to a meeting of the Christian Endeavorers in Mexico City, and was led to accept Jesus as his Savior. Can you imagine just what this step meant? It meant that everything in his old life had to go, even his means for earning his food. The missionary in charge of the social center had been inter-

The Right Spirit. Ephesians 6:1-3

Out on the school lot, one sunny afternoon, the boys of the second grade of the school at Winston played the boys of the third grade a game of baseball. All of them had been practicing hard for several weeks and wanted very much to win. The rest of the children in the lower grades were allowed to come out to see the game and one of the high school boys was referee. Everyone was very excited. The players went to their places and the real excitement began. The children cheered at the top of their voices for the side that they wished to have win. For a while the score was almost even, but toward the end of the game, the third grade boys got ahead. The game ended with the boys of the third grade victorious and they were so happy over winning that at first they started to say unkind things to the children whom they had beaten. Suddenly one of the boys, who realized that it was not very nice to hurt other people's feelings, called the victors together and told them what his Christian Endeavor Superintendent had said about being good sports. This boy, Jimmy, told the other boys that when people play games everyone wants very badly to win, but someone has to lose. The person who loses is very apt to feel badly about it, so if the winners want to show the right kind of spirit, they should be kind to the losers. Jimmy said, too, that they should remember that if they themselves were the losers instead of the winners, they would not want to be jeered at.

But how about the boys on the losing side? Well, this is what had happened on their side. When they found that they had lost, they began to get angry at the winners. They, too, said things that were unpleasant. They felt like they would just like to fight those boys who had defeated them when they had practiced so hard to win. The pitcher for the losing team was standing to one side when the rest of the boys were talking and overheard just a little of what Jimmy was saying to the other boys, so he decided to follow Jimmy's example. First, he told the gang that the other boys were going to try to be good sports and that they surely wanted to be as good sports as the rest. Then, he told them that being good losers was harder than being good winners, so that they would have to work hard to show their best spirit. They decided that the best way to show the other side that they knew how to be good sports was to give a yell for them. Soon they were yelling lustily their very best yell in honor of the third grade boys who had won. Immediately, the third grade responded with a hearty cheer for the second. Then they got together and talked things over. They found that all of them liked each other pretty well after all and soon they were planning for another game and were leaving for home as happy as could be.

Children and grown folks need to learn to have the right kind of spirit. If we have the right spirit we are happy ourselves and make other people happy too. The spirit which we have is so important that it affects every bit of our lives. Do you know, Juniors, that even when you are just walking down the street you have a chance to help others by having the right spirit? If you smile happily or whistle merrily as you go along the way, someone else is very apt to catch the spirit and be happier. While just the opposite is true if you frown. Someone else is just as apt to catch that spirit of unhappiness and feel worse than they did before.

The spirit of anger is one of the worst spirits that one can possibly have. When one is angry he is bound to feel very bad himself and to make others feel that way, also. Do you know, boys and girls, that if you do not learn to control your temper and keep from getting angry while you are still young, the habit of getting angry will grow upon you and when you grow up you will be so unpleasant that people will not like you. Then, too, the spirit of anger is hard on your physical bodies and weakens them so that you will not be as well as if you knew how to keep yourself from getting angry.

Then, let us cultivate the spirit of love and good sportsmanship and learn to keep far away from the spirit of anger. If we can do we will be happy in our homes, we will be kind to our loved folks and to the people that we are with, and we will be better workers for Jesus.

From the Stoffers in India

(The following excerpts from a letter received by Brother Vern L. Stoffer, member of our church at Roanoke, Indiana, from his brother, Rev. Bryan S. Stoffer, a missionary to India, will be of wide interest both because it informs us concerning a mission field with which we are little acquainted, and also because the Stoffers have a large acquaintance among Evangelist readers. Mrs. Stoffer will be remembered as formerly Miss Frieda Price of Nappanee, Indiana.)

Union Theological Seminary,
 Pasumalai, February 1st, 1926.

Dear Friends:

It almost seems impossible but more than two years have passed since we arrived in India. Those two years have been most busy ones for us. They have been crowded, yes, literally jammed, with new experiences. These contacts with many races and cultures have broadened our vision and deepened our interest in the many peoples of the world. When we first arrived in this land which has been the scene of many contending forces, especially in the religious experience of men, everything appeared strange yet exceedingly interesting.

Almost all of our first year was spent in Kodaikanal, the beautiful hill-station of South India, which is only eighty miles from Pasumalai. Here for ten months we gave all our time and energy to the study of Tamil which is the vernacular language of the people of this section of India. The surroundings were ideal for such study. Although many times the work seemed very much of a grind yet such concentration was necessary. These months also were a sort of transition period. The semi-temperate climate was a great help in making a gradual adjustment to the intense heat of the plains at certain seasons of the year.

The first few months in 1925 found us located in an out-station called Batlagundu. Here we gained our first real contacts with village life. This brief experience opened up to us many of the problems which the district missionary is constantly facing. On the surface the problem of making a scant livelihood appears to overshadow all others. India is a yet largely an agricultural nation. Her people are attached to the soil yet that soil often refuses to yield even the physical necessities of life. As a consequence physical suffering is often quite evident.

But in the care-worn faces which meet one as he journeys among them there are evidences of a hunger of mind and heart which is much more difficult to analyze and understand. And even if you feel that you understand many times the barriers are such that they seem almost insurmountable. It is to these millions who are without a shepherd that our hearts go out in sympathy. They have resigned to their fate and when misfortune comes they say, "It is God's will." Today due to the impact of Christian missions and a growing sense of national consciousness, even the villages are seething with new ideas and thoughts which they only dimly understand. It is to be hoped that they may be guided aright during the next quarter of a century. There will be great changes even in the village life.

Since coming down from the hills in June of last year we have been located in Pasumalai. Most of you have probably heard very little about the work which we have in this missionary center. I shall briefly relate a few things about our institutions here. In the first place we have a well organized Trade School. Mr. Dickson a trained engineer is in charge of this work. At present about 35 boys are studying printing, blacksmithing, engine-driving, motor car cleaning and carpentry. These boys after finishing their courses go back to their own villages to ply their trade. A few years ago it was extremely difficult to get the boys to enter these trades. As you probably know manual labor has been frowned upon in the East. It was considered a disgrace to work with the hands. The past of India reveals the effect of this belief and custom.

Today, however, things are changing. India is indeed on the march. Boys are anxious to enter these classes and prepare themselves for some useful trade. Those of us who work here rejoice greatly for we believe implicitly in the dignity of hand labor as well as in the dignity of mental effort. This is a great gain for the economic side of India's life.

The largest institution in our midst is the High and Training Schools. In these schools we have about 900 students. Of this between 60 and 70% are Christians. Many of the boys become Christians during their course. These students and teachers are sent out into the district schools to become the leaders of their respective communities. Each year we give diplomas to about 200 boys. To be able to supply the leaders for the village communities is a great privilege. Many times our teachers are the only Christians in the villages.

The other institution here is the Union Theological Seminary. It stands out as the best known seminary in South India. It is in this institution that I have been teaching during the past six months. It is my privilege to teach the men of college grade their courses in Theology and Church History. This is called the Licentiate in Theology course and is open to those who are high school graduates. A number of men have had several years in College which gives them an even stronger foundation for the work. They pursue this course of study for three years. These men generally become our pastors.

There is also a 2 year course for teacher-catechists. These men have the equivalent of our 8th grade education as necessary for entrance. After their training they go out to take charge of our village schools and congregations. They work under the pastors who generally have from five to ten and sometimes more schools and churches under their supervision.

We require all of our men to have experience in evangelistic work before coming to the Seminary. Most of them are married while working in the villages. Some of their wives are untrained. Hence the Seminary gives courses for the wives of the students in order that they may be able to render a useful service to the communities to which they go. While the mothers study the children are cared for in a nursery. Without this little building it would be practically impossible for them to attend classes.

As the institution is a union one we have students from Jaffna Mission in Ceylon and from all parts of South India. In a very large way we have been able to supply leaders for many Missions in South India.

The Seminary also conducts Institutes for the workers on the field. Hence that flame of spiritual life which we all feel is so valuable is kept brightly burning in the hearts of our fellow-workers who are laboring in the villages trying to encourage the most ignorant and spiritually feeble to seek the higher things of the Christlike life.

Also, along this same line, through the help of American friends we hold a yearly Conference of Church leaders. This is one of the most valuable meetings of its kind I have ever attended. It reminds us of Lake Geneva and Northfield. Here for four or five days the religious leaders of South India discuss the problems of the Christian church in India. This conference brings men together from widely different denominations to discuss the spirit of Christ our common problems in winning India for Christ.

In connection with these large conferences we usually render some Biblical Drama in our large Arangasalai (open air theatre). These are written by one of the Seminary teachers and given under his supervision by the Seminary students. John the Baptist and Saul of Tarsus have been given in this way. It is an unusual sight to see 1,500 people sit in the sands for hours to listen to one of these presentations.

This description I hope will give you some idea of the work which we are trying to do in Pasumalai.

During the past year Mrs. Stoffer and I have continued our study of the Tamil language. In June she passed her first examination and in November I completed my second and hence became a fullfledged member of the mission. As a result the mission at its January Meeting decided that I should have more work to do and hence elected me principal of the Seminary for the coming year. This is rather a heavy responsibility for such a newcomer to the mission but we hope we may be able to carry on the splendid work so well developed by Dr. Banninga who is now in America on furlough.

This letter will arrive just a little late for a New Year's greeting but we wish for all of you a most happy and prosperous year.

Very Sincerely Yours,

MR. AND MRS. BRYAN S. STOFFER.

"The Children Who Were Thrown Away"

A Story of Life among the Aluru— (A Tribe of Nilotic Negroes)

Ex. 21:6. But if the servant shall plainly say, 'I love my master, I will not go out free, then his master shall bring him unto God, and shall bring him to the door or unto the doorpost, and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him forever.'

CHAPTER II.

There was a strange commotion in the village. A crowd of women gathered in and around Akana's hut. The men were strangely absent, and the women seemed under the authority of a fierce looking old woman whom the others seemed to fear, and whom they called by the strange name of Akwato (the leopardess). A goat was being killed, a feast was being prepared with the bel-flour that Akana had so laboriously prepared the day before. For was it not a rare occasion, and were not the women to have a feast? For Akana, under the fierce supervision of Akwato, had borne to Otolo his first-born son, and he was to be called by his father's previously expressed wish, Ozwoko—a dog. Unlucky name, to be sure, but was it not with unlucky names that one must propitiate Jok? Lokwaru—a pigeon? Akana had only timidly mentioned the name to Otolo when last night, in spite of her beginning pain she had arisen and served his porridge, too ill to herself partake even of its scanty dregs. Lokwaru, a pigeon? Did not all the Aluru know that 'twas a lucky name? Did she want the child to die?

And now the child, Ozwoko, was named. The women were feasting. Otolo would not be allowed to enter the hut until the fourth day, nor would any other man be tolerated, and the women had a peculiar liberty—and Akana, in the midst of her utter weariness, wondered about the wondrous Story. If she only dared call the missionary, the sweet singer whom all the tribe called Wingo, the bird. Though she dared not, yet all unknowing the missionary came. She was pleased to know of the advent of the child, but shocked to find it already ill and suffering. She ministered to the child, neglected from the moment of its birth, and told once more the old, sweet story to the mother's hungry heart. The next morning Ozwoko died. Infant mortality is surprisingly high among the neglected children of the tropics. The little corpse was buried, lying on its left side with its pale, delicate hand carefully placed under its head. Akana was carried to another hut, and the little shelter which had been her bridal home stood empty. Nine days after the birth of little Ozwoko she went to dig in her garden. Three weeks from the day she commenced to dig, a concourse of neighbors gathered, and in the midst of wild carousings, meanwhile partaking of kief, a honey made from native beer, they tore down the house. Was it not unlucky? The men had mourned incessantly for one day at Ozwoko's death. The women mourned unceasingly for three days, and for fifteen days they wailed at dawn. Then all forgot, except hungry-hearted Akana, still pondering, but still failing to understand, the Gospel story. Her husband had no sympathy with her, but Onou, her favorite brother, had recently accepted the Gospel, and daily answered her many questions concerning the way of salvation. One thing concerning her child comforted her. She had not named it Lokwaru, and was therefore not to be blamed. Vaguely she wondered that no one had thought of blaming her husband for calling their child a dog in order to propitiate the devil.

A new hut was built, the exact counterpart of the one which had been torn down. Stolidly enough Akana continued her work, groping slowly as Aluru women do for the high. Two years after Ozwoko's birth a little girl came to the young parents, whom the father called Oizo, the pig, a name far more unlucky than Ozwoko's had been. But even Oizo's name did not propitiate Jok. Evil omens followed her birth, even as they had preceded Ozwoko's. For did not the father start that very day upon a trip and meet a man first? All the tribe knew that it was unlucky not to have met a woman, since his eldest child had been a boy. And to make the matter worse, on retracing his steps (for who would continue a journey when the omens were unlucky?) he stubbed his little toe. Now if it had only been his great toe what a fortunate omen it would have been! And so it was expected that the little girl would sicken and die. And she did. She was buried with less ceremony than accompanied Ozwoko's funeral, for neither was she the firstborn, nor a boy.

Established again in the third hut, some way or other she scarcely knew how, Akana's heart found peace with God through the Lord Jesus. With loving, hopeful prayer looked forward to the coming of her third child. A happy thought struck her about its name. She did not wish to choose. The coming of the little one was to be her greatest trial of faith, for according to their superstitions it must be cast out. It was not fitting that the third child should survive the first, or the second. But in her simple, childlike faith she prayed that there might indeed be found for it a saviour. For among the strange superstitions of the Nilotic Negro is one which permits the rescue of the third child, and even its redemption by the father, if he so wills. God does not tempt his children above that which they are able to bear, and fortunate indeed it was that the poor young mother was to be tested along lines of her previous experience—for in her weak faith she need not pray that God would work a miracle—that he would do the unthinkable, but simply that he would raise up a rescuer for her little one. But she rejoiced when Otolo consented not to name it. "Why name a child that must die?" he had roughly said. The long-looked for day came at last, and the anxious, nearly heart-broken mother presented her husband with twins.

(To be concluded).

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

"The Gateway to the South"

A series of Lenten sermons was used during the past two months. The booklet, "The Fellowship of Prayer," was placed in the homes of the church and was used by many for daily reading and prayer during Lent. It ought to help build permanent family altars.

Five new members were received at Easter time, making six since last report, two by letter and four by baptism. The Easter offering for Foreign Missions will be the largest in the history of the church, amounting to $553. It is interesting and encouraging to note the gradual increase of the offerings of this church for Foreign Missions since 1922, the amounts ranging as follows: $2.60, $310.

0, $465, and $553. Does this record indicate increasing health of the church and growth in grace as well as in numbers? Let us hope so.

The Easter communion was the largest ever held by this church. At that service Dr. J. M. Tombaugh spoke helpfully of "The Meaning and Value of Symbols" and the pastor gave seven rules to help live a successful Christian life.

The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, with a membership of 35 rendered an Easter Cantata in an impressive way, under the direction of Mrs. W. H. Beachley, Patroness, and Miss Mildred Long, President.

The Men's Bible Class (Crusaders), with their wives and sweethearts as guests, recently enjoyed a special program of music, readings and an able address by Rev. J. P. Horlacher of Waynesboro. M. B. Ridenour was elected President of the class.

On the evening of March 21 the writer preached again his first sermon on its twenty-fifth anniversary, a large audience being present. "God's Plan for the Temple of Character" was the subject of the sermon. The sermon was the preacher's first effort just twenty-five years ago in his home church near South Bend, Indiana, then known as "The Fairview Church", but since torn down and rebuilt at Ardmore.

At that time Dr. W. D. Furry was the pastor and he very unexpectedly requested that the writer preach in his absence. It savored of a command more than a request and like a good boy obedience was tremblingly rendered. Then a student in college, but at home among friends, the youthful preacher had a very sympathetic audience and much encouragement was given. Some who read this may remember the occasion and may think that "long-suffering" would be the proper adjective to apply to the audience. Nevertheless a true friend at a time like that is a friend indeed.

Some people are quite wary of those first sermons. When announced recently to be preached again, but this time in Hagerstown, one of our church officials of long and honorable standing asked the preacher, "What have you against this congregation, that you are going to afflict them with that first sermon?" However, such an anniversary is an important milestone in the life of any minister.

Dr. W. D. Furry's early boyhood home was with his aunt who lives at Tighlmanon, a few miles south of Hagerstown and near the Antietam Battlefield. It was the writer's good fortune in boyhood and young manhood to have the spiritual leadership of such able and faithful ministers as Rev. Laura Grosnickle (Now Mrs. Hedrick), Dr. C. F. Yoder and Dr. W. D. Furry. The Lord used them to help lead a young life into the Christian ministry. How important is the work of God's ministers! How far-reaching! What words of instruction and encouragement and lasting inspiration and guidance God sends through them!

A few weeks before the call came to preach that first sermon the writer heard Dr. Russell H. Conwell give his famous lecture on "Acres of Diamonds", a lecture he delivered over 5,000 times. Thanks to that good man for the lasting impression made upon a young life and for some material and inspiration that fitted into that first sermon.

Twenty-five years! It seems a brief day!

A few years in college and three short pastorates! A stumbling but honest effort to please the Lord and Master! To him be all the glory and honor!

A precious and assuring verse through the years has been Romans 8:28, "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose."

Yours in his service,
G. C. CARPENTER.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Campaign

This has taken much of my time here and I have not had time to write the usual college items.

Dr. Bell was here and prepared for his initial efforts in the coming canvass. Among other things, he finished the Faculty subscription and made an appeal to the students of the College. His plans created much enthusiasm and resulted in some subscriptions. After he had left the various classes effected organizations and are now in the process of making the class canvasses. The Senior class is the first and as yet the only one to make their subscription public. They desire to offer it as a challenge to any class of any date to meet or pass them.

THE PRESENT SENIOR CLASS HAS SUBSCRIBED OVER $5,000.

I regard that as a real challenge to all givers. It means that they have faith and loyalty and giving this way right at the very outset of the campaign, it is doubly valuable.

Word has just reached me that Dr. Bell met with the most enthusiastic reception at our Pittsburgh church, where he went first to start the campaign. I knew Pittsburgh would not fail in its duty and I can not say how we feel about it here. I read part of the report to the Chapel with the results that the other three college classes are hurrying up with their work.

It seems to me that when you read Dr. Bell's first word from the field, you will all feel that we are going over big with the campaign. And what is more, the bigger it goes over in the church and at the College, the bigger it will go over here in the city and county. It is not a time for shouting, exactly, but one for anxious prayer and thanksgiving.

I am glad to acknowledge some bedding for the Dormitory from the Florence Gribble Class of Conemaugh. Also some from Miss Hill of the same place.

I recently returned from near Richmond, Indiana, where I gave two commencement addresses.

Professor Anspach gave the commencement address at Red Haw recently.

The Girls' Glee Club returned from the Southern Ohio, trip with a very good report. The several churches did splendidly and we all feel very proud of them. They were under the direction of Miss Mohn, teacher of Voice. Mr. Leslie Lindower, '26, acted as business agent and accompanied them. Among other things, they sang at the National Cash Register dining room at Dayton, for which they were entertained, including lunch.

The Men's Glee Club has some local dates, one especially at Mansfield high school. The school is constantly being called upon to furnish all sorts of talent, the latest being a call from an adjoining county for four men to act as judges of the county field meet.

The baseball team has won its first encounter and promises well.

I will soon be able to announce the selection of a Coach and Director of Physical Education, as Mr. Meredith is not expecting to be here next year.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

INDIANA MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION MEET

The Indiana preachers have scheduled a meeting for May 4 and 5. This is a revival of the old custom of the ministers of Indiana, to meet in the spring. The meeting will be held at Denver, which church is pastorless at the present time. One object being to give this church the advantage of the influence of the meeting. The preachers of Indiana are quite enthusiastic about the meeting and a good attendance is expected. The program is as follows:

Tuesday Evening, May 4

- 7:30 Devotions. D. A. C. Teeter.
- 7:45 Lecture, "The Pastor and His Ministry Among the Young People." Frank G. Coleman.
- 8:15 Sermon. C. C. Grisso.

Wednesday Morning, May 5

- 9:00 Devotions. J. W. Brower.
- 9:15 Exposition. C. A. Stewart.
- 9:45 "The Value and Place of Doctrinal Preaching in the Ministry of Today." Lecture. G. W. Rench.
- 10:15 Lecture, "Pastoral Leadership, in its Relation to Congregation, Loyalty to District and General Interests." J. L. Kimmel.

10:45 Discussion.

Wednesday Afternoon, May 5

- 1:45 Praise service. W. F. Johnson.
- 2:00 Exposition. B. H. Flora.
- 2:30 Lecture, "The Pastor and His Contacts with the Auxiliaries of His Church." N. V. Leatherman.
- 3:00 Lecture, "The Present Day Demand for a Changed Type of Evangelism." G. L. Maus.

- 3:30 Lecture, "Study, in its Relation to the Freshness, Growth and Strength of the Minister." W. I. Duker.

4:00 Discussion.

Wednesday Evening, May 4

- 7:30 Praise Service. J. W. Clark.
- 7:45 Lecture, "The Church as it Faces the Challenge of a Changing World." H. F. Stuckman.

- 8:15 Sermon, O. C. Lemert.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH Johnstown, Pennsylvania

This report covers four months of activity since January 1. It chronicles only the most prominent features of our program. There are many events, important in their place, which we cannot mention and yet which have contributed much to this period of success. During the month of January, we were with the Dayton church in evangelism. The pulpit here was ably supplied by Rev. Belote and Rev. Baker. But, the pastoral work of visitation, leadership, and detail arrangements suffered loss as it always does when the pastor is absent. During the latter part of February and the first of March, we assisted Brother Belote in a short meeting in Moxham. Between us, we supplied the pulpit of the First church. We did our pastoral work in addition to the preaching in Moxham. It was a strenuous period for us with double responsibility. We could not give the Moxham meeting the attention it deserved. But, the Lord gave us victory in it both in numbers and arousing and deepening of the spiritual life of the church. Brother Belote is doing a splendid work in Moxham. The church is rallying to his leadership. Everything is most favorable to the erection of a new edifice for them during this summer.

Evangelism

Although our most successful evangelistic campaign gleaned the field in November and December, there have been 11 accessions to the church since the first of February. Part of these were received during the week of Pre-Easter services conducted by the pastor. These were well attended. They were devotional and evangelistic in nature, not following any Catholic program of so called Passion Week. This church has been led out of the unscriptural error of "Good Friday", believing the Bible that Christ was three days and three nights in the tomb, hence could not have been crucified on Friday. So, although we had a week of services preceding Sunday, they were not a relic of Catholic superstition and error.

Attendance

Now, the last three months have witnessed the largest regular church congregations during our ministry here. They have filled our spacious auditorium at almost every service. At several, it was somewhat crowded. The Bible school has increased in average attendance during this period almost 100. The audiences at practically all the various gatherings of the church have been correspondingly larger. We have enjoyed prosperity in numbers in every department of the church.

Missionary

Two mission study classes have been conducted. Two missionary offerings have been received. Inasmuch as our evangelistic campaign was covering the Thanksgiving period, we could not receive our Home Mission Offering then. It was received during February. The postponement of the time doubtless decreased the amount somewhat. Plans are already made to increase it next Thanksgiving. Our Easter Offering for Foreign Missions was a pronounced success. Three weeks before, we delivered our missionary sermon. Each Sunday for these three weeks, literature was distributed. The Sunday before, we conducted a "Radio Missionary Exhibit" service. We may take the space, if granted, to explain this service to the Evangelist readers some time. All we can report here is that, although everyone knew it was to be a missionary service, instead of the proverbial dryness and sleeping, we had the largest, most wide-awake, enthusiastic audience we have had for months. At this writing, our offering is very close to the $2,000.00 mark.

Sociability

This church has discontinued money making schemes and is giving God's method of the tithe and free will offerings its proper place. But, we believe in clean, Christian sociability. Six organizations of the church have regular monthly social evenings, with a varied program followed by a "social hour". Three times a year the entire church meets in this way in "Brethren Night." As one big family we enjoy Christian fellowship. These gatherings have gone beyond the 500 mark several times. Now, our Young People have held three of the cleanest, most successful Christian Endeavor Socials of which we have ever heard. If interested write to Arthur Brant, rear 330 Horner, Johnstown, Pennsylvania for descriptions. We are seeking to give sociability its proper place, but no more than that.

Music

With one of the best of pipe organs, one of the most talented and consecrated of organists, and a choir director second to none in the city, we can report that our music is always good and of a devotional nature. Much is made of music, in a varied way, in our social gatherings. But, the big success is our volunteer choir of 45 voices. Not one of these choir members receive one penny for their services. All but 2 are members of our church. Our Easter Cantata was the best yet. The audience filled both auditoriums.

Three Months Ahead

We have been granted three months' leave of absence from May 1 until August 1. We will conduct evangelistic meetings with Kimmel at Whittier, California, Cobb, Los Angeles, California, and Bauman, Long Beach, California. We will give a series of Bible Lectures at the Bible Conference, Long Beach, California. Prof. A. L. DeLozier will be the supply pastor here during this period. With the church in a prosperous, spiritual condition and with so able and consecrated a supply, we feel perfectly safe in being away from our responsibilities here for these months. So, after enjoying the blessed Communion with the Brethren here on Sunday evening, April 25, we will start on our journey across the continent.

A STORY FOR OUR LITTLE FOLKS

When Peggy's Shoe Ran Away

It was not one of the shoes that Peggy wore every day, but the dearest little Japanese shoe which Aunt Marion had sent her from far Japan, and it had been worn by a real Japanese lady. It was a tiny cloth slipper, intended to wear in the house. Peggy took it with her to the missionary meeting at her friend Katy's house, and all the girls crowded around to look at the tiny thing and wonder how a grown woman could possibly have worn it. What a dainty little lady she must have been!

Miss Lee, their leader, read a pretty story of Japanese life, and the girls listened with interest, while the tiny shoe passed from hand to hand. By the time it came back to Peggy she was so much interested in a book of Japanese prints that she did not notice when it was placed in her lap. On the way home she remembered the shoe, and then no one could recollect anything about it.

"I must go right back and hunt for it," said Peggy, and she ran back to her friend's home.

Katy met her at the door. "What is it?" she asked.

"Oh, Katy, have you seen my Japanese shoe?" asked Peggy eagerly. "I thought I had it, but I can't find it. I thought it might have fallen on the floor, so I came to see if you had found it."

"Come and look," said Katy. "No one has been in the room since the meeting was over. It must be here."

But search as they would, no shoe could be found.

"It is very odd," said Peggy, reflectively. Then she began to cry. "I don't know what Aunt Marion will think of my losing it!"

"It can't be lost! It must be here somewhere," said Katy.

But though they searched for a whole week, they could not find the little shoe. It seemed to have vanished from the face of the earth.

"Perhaps the ghost of the Japanese lady came for it and took it away," suggested Katy.

"But what would she want with it? No, it must have been somebody else," said Peggy shortly, and Katy flushed suddenly.

"Surely, Peggy, you don't suspect—" she began

But Peggy burst into tears and ran away.

For a week longer the two friends were very stiff when they met. Then one day Katy ran to meet Peggy before school. She had a little parcel in her hand. "It's your Japanese shoe, Peggy! Where do you think I found it? In the garden buried under a rosebush. I know how it got there. My naughty Fluff must have been in the room while the meeting was going on, and you know how he runs away with everything and hides it. He must have picked it up on the floor and run off with it. So he was the thief. Will you forgive him, Peggy? He didn't know any better."

"Why, of course!" said Peggy, warmly. "It will clean. Aunt Marion is going to send me some more curiosities, and I'll try to take better care of them and forgive me for being so cross about it, Katy. I almost quarreled with you, but not quite, and now I'm so glad, for we are as good friends as ever."

"Of course we are," said Katy, "and we'll both forgive Fluff."—G. L. Glover in Christian Advocate.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA DEDICATION NOTICE

The new building at Winchester, to be known as "The First Brethren Church of Winchester", will be dedicated on Sunday, May 23, 1926. Special services in connection with the dedication will be held one week before and one week after the dedication Sunday, from May 16 to 30, every evening except Saturday.

All members and friends of the Brethren Church within reach of Winchester are invited to attend these services, as many of them as possible. There will be three services on the dedication Sunday at 10:30, 2:30, and 7:30. The new Sunday school will be launched on Sunday, May 30.

The preaching will be done mostly by a number of the Shenandoah Valley ministers, among whom will be Brethren J. I. Hall, G. A. Copp, J. M. Tombaugh, E. L. Miller, E. B. Shaver, the writer, and perhaps others.

PUT GOD FIRST

H. C. Morrison says:—Dr. Burke Culpepper has just brought out a book of thrillingly interesting sermons. It will have an immense sale and be read with profit and delight. Young people will be greatly entertained and impressed with the contents of this book, its many striking sayings and powerful illustrations.

George S. Slover, President of Clarendon College, says:—These sermons are replete with apt illustrations. The matter is vital to the Christian life. The manner of presentation is all his own, unique and forceful. These sermons are from a heart and mind all aglow with the holy enthusiasm of a divine call to preach a great gospel to a lost world. They breathe with a passion to save men from sin.

A picnic dinner and supper in the basement of the church will be a part of the dedication day program. Therefore bring full baskets. The latest word from "Brother Ed" is that Maurertown is coming over "en masse." A great day is anticipated. The future of the work depends in no small measure upon the successful launching of the new church during those two weeks. Will you pray earnestly and lend a helping hand if you can?

Much Depends on the Atmosphere in Which You Live

They have been having great anxiety in England lately caused by the rapid decay of historic and famous public buildings such as the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral and the houses of Parliament. A modern atmospheric condition of London is playing havoc with the ancient structures. Cleopatra's Needle has deteriorated more during its forty years on the banks of the Thames than during 2,000 years it spent on the banks of the Nile.

Much depends upon the atmosphere in which a building or a man lives. A spiritual atmosphere will make it easier to live a noble life, while a sensual atmosphere will eat into the walls of character. A wide distribution of religious literature will go a long way to improve public thought. The one who distributes tracts will likewise know the joy of worth-while service.

A Father's Day Too

The Evangelist has frequently been commended for its efforts to encourage the observance of a Father's Day in the churches. And we believe the more our Christian leaders are brought face to face with the puzzling problems of the home and youth, the more they will see the wisdom of it. Mother's Day has been found a wonderful opportunity to re-enforce Christian ideals of motherhood and home life. But that is only one side of the problem, and until we recognize the great responsibility and duty of the father toward the making of the right kind of home life and the moulding of the right sort of young people, we shall not begin to solve the problem.

We are not unmindful of the observance of Fathers' and Sons' week in November and the commendable purposes being sought thereby, and we pray a blessing upon it and urge cooperation in it. But its scope is too narrow to achieve what a Father's Day might do. It emphasizes the relations between fathers and sons, which undoubtedly is sorely needed, but the Father's duty is not fully discharged when he has sought conscientiously to fulfill his obligations to his boy, nor is the honor due him adequately recognized when he has received the praise and gratitude of his son. His obligation is fundamentally to the home, to be the leader and counsellor of it, the strong arm of it, and also its chief instructor and priest. His duties are as essential to a perfect home as mother's, and yet we have confined ourselves almost wholly to a consideration of mother's duties and responsibilities. While we have talked eloquently about mother being the home-maker, throwing practically the whole responsibility upon her, we have had very hazy ideas about father's place and responsibility. We have vaguely imagined that he has discharged his duty when he has provided for the physical necessities of life. Mother is indeed the maker of the home in a sense that father never can be, but father likewise has a duty in the home which mother cannot be expected to accomplish, if the home is to be all that it ought to be. And it is time we were more fully recognizing this fact and placing greater emphasis upon it. It is time we were bringing father in from the outside, in our thinking, and placing him really in the home with a large and vital place to fill and generous recognition to receive.

And let us remember that the father must be a father to the daughter as well as to the son, even as we expect mother to be mother to the son as well as to the daughter. It is true, doubtless, that the father finds his largest opportunity and most natural contact with
